(4.) They are gathered out of the air, in a manner; while the prince of the power of the air is flying away with them, they are gathered out of his claws. Some that are Satan's captives, they are flying in the air, as it were, with the wings of pride and vanity, exalting themſelves above all that is called God. They learn of Lucifer to be proud and lofty; looking down upon others, as if they were the dregs and offſcourings of the earth: when God gathers any ſuch, he hath them to bring down from lofty elements, and airy vanities, that he may humble them under his mighty hand, and make them ſtoop to Shiloh. Others are, as it were, building caſtles in the air: ſuch are theſe, who being ignorant of God's righteouſneſs, and going about, to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, will not ſubmit to the righteouſneſs of God, Rom. x. 3. This is a high and lofty building; but it is like a caſtle in the air, having no foundation, but the high and airy imagination of theſe that build it; which the Lord will bring down, when he gathers them out of their heights and altitudes, as you ſee he does, 2 Cor. x. 5. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God, to the pulling down of ſtrong holds, caſting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalts itſelf againſt the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt. There you ſee high things, high thoughts, high imaginations, all high and airy buildings exalted againſt Chriſt, and his righteouſneſs; yea, ſtrong holds, ſuch as nothing but the mighty power of God can pull down: ſuch are all the falſe hopes, and legal dreams of poor ſinners. They hope they will mend before they die; they will turn a new leaf, and live a new life, and ſo pay their own debt, and do their own buſineſs themſelves: thus they build in the air a refuge of lies, which the hail muſt ſweep away. And indeed God raiſes a ſtorm in the air, that he may gather his remnant from thence. As in a dangerous ſtorm, the mariner will caſt ſilk and ſattin over board, and the moſt valuable things, rather than periſh; even ſo God raiſes a ſtorm of conviction in the man's conſcience, that threatens everlaſting ſhipwreck, that he may caſt away his confidence, and legal righteouſneſs; that what things were gain to him, theſe he may count loſs for Chriſt.——Thus, I ſay, there are ſome airths from whence they are gathered. And this leads me to,

4. A fourth remark, viz. that there are ſeveral things ſuppoſed and imported in this gathering of the people to Shiloh. To mention ſome of theſe,

(1.) It ſuppoſes ſtraying and imports converſion. It ſuppoſes STRAYING; and indeed the natural ſtate is a ſtraying and wandering ſtate. The man is wandering away from God, wandering from his commandments, wandering in a wilderneſs, wandering he knows not where away; for the devil hoodwinks him; The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not: and ſo they wander in the dark; in the darkneſs of ignorance, unbelief, error, deluſion, and confuſion; and yet, in the darkneſs of deep ſecurity, never imagining but that they are in the right enough way, though it be the high way to hell, thinking that God is altogether like unto themſelves, and approves their way, and allows them in all theſe things, wherein they allow themſelves. Hence it is impoſſible to bring them off from their carnal thoughts, and wicked ways, where they are wandering, unleſs God himſelf gather them by his converting grace.—This gathering imports CONVERSION, wherein God ſays with power (as he made the world with an omnipotent LET IT BE, ſo here,) Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return to the Lord, Iſa. lv. 7, 8. But this power of God, whereby he converts ſinners, rides in the chariot of grace, ſaying, as it follows, I will have mercy on him; I will abundantly pardon. And here is the cord of love and mercy, with which he draws. The goſpel of grace is the power of God to ſalvation, the power of God to converſion; without the faith and apprehenſion of this mercy, there is no goſpel repenting, nor return, no effectual converſion; Let him return, for I will abundantly pardon. There is the motive, which muſt be viewed, before any can be moved thereby. But when this mercy of God in Chriſt, in multiplying pardon where ſin hath been multiplied, is once viewed, then the ſoul is melted and moved. What! is there mercy for the like of me? Pardon for the like of me? And abundant pardon, where ſin hath abounded? O! will I, for great ſins, get great pardons, and for a multitude of ſins, a multitude of pardons? Will the mountains of mercy overtop and cover all the mountains of my ſins? O! ſays God this, even to wicked me? This makes all my bowels melt, and all my bones to ſay, Who is like unto the Lord? Thus he gathers in converſion, ſaying, Wicked man, turn; for I will abundantly pardon: and, O that is a powerful FOR; like a loadſtone, that hath a drawing virtue upon the hard ſteel; ſo will this draw the hard heart, and diſſolve it. This for is backed with another, For my thoughts are not your thoughts, nor my ways your ways; q. d. With reſpect to the proud ſecure ſinner, do you think that I am altogether like unto yourſelf, and that I approve of your ways, as if they were my ways, and your thoughts, as if they were my thoughts? Becauſe you allow yourſelf in that way, you think I allow you alſo; and your thought is, that you ſhall have peace, though you walk after the imagination of your own heart: nay, my thoughts are not your thoughts.—Or, with reſpect to the ſelf-righteous ſinner, what are your thoughts? You think that your way is a very good way, and ſo that it is God's way: and you think that God will accept of you, becauſe you ſay you do your beſt, and do as well as you can, and no-body can impeach you, or ſay black is your eye; you are a good neighbour; you are honeſt in your dealings: and ſo you think you are every way right; and that God thinks as well of you, as you do of yourſelf; and that his thoughts are your thoughts, and that your way that you are walking in is his way: Nay, nay, ſays he; My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither my ways your ways; for as the heavens are above the earth, ſo are my thoughts above your thoughts and ways. O do not meaſure God's thoughts and ways by your ſinful or ſelfiſh thoughts and ways: if you would not run into a miſtake, man, woman, look to the clouds, and ſee how far they are above the earth; yea, look to the heavens, and ſee how far they are above the clouds; yea, look to the God that made the heavens, and ſee how far he is exalted above the heavens: and if the heavens be ſo far above you, that you cannot reach them, or meaſure them; O how far is God above you, that you ſhould attempt to meaſure his thoughts and ways by yours!—Or, again, with reſpect to the humbled ſinner, that is like to be moved and melted with the view of mercy, but yet is tempted to doubt and deny it, ſaying, O my thoughts are, that God will never have mercy on the like of me, ſuch a God-provoking ſinner; and I fear God's thoughts are the ſame with mine: Nay; My thoughts are not your thoughts, ſays God; look to the heavens, man; look to the heavens, woman; look to the heavens, laſs; look to the heavens, lad; for as the heavens are above the earth, ſo are my ways of grace, and thoughts of mercy, above your thoughts and ways:

your

your thoughts are; that I have no way to shew mercy on you; and therefore, that my thoughts are to ruin and destroy you: but I have found a ransom, through which my mercy does make way, and vent to the credit of justice; therefore, My thoughts are thoughts of peace, and not of evil. Judge not my thoughts then by the standard of yours, but rather make the height of the heavens above the earth to be the standard, whereby to judge the height of my mercy, for overtopping all your sins with abundant pardon; therefore turn: here is the for, the threefold for, or motive, upon which turning, or conversion, is urged.——This gathering, I say, supposes straying, and imports conversion.

(2.) It supposes SCATTERING, and imports CONVENTION; it is a gathering together into one, the children of God that were scattered abroad, John xi. 52. The natural state is a scattered state; and God's remnant whom he hath amind to gather, are not only scattered here and there through the earth, but before the Lord gather them, they are like dead and dry bones scattered about the grave's mouth, Psal. cxli. 7. They are dead in trespasses and sins: dead spiritually, under the power of sin; dead legally, under the sentence of death and damnation: and not only DEAD bones, but DRY bones; no sap of grace or goodness in them; and not only so, but SCATTERED bones; How shall these dry bones live, or these scattered bones be gathered together? You see this represented, Ezek. xxxvii. 1,—10. The Spirit of life must come, and gather together the bones, and make them live; and then, and not till then, are the scattered souls conveened, and gathered to Christ. Then the scattered thoughts, that were scattered among the stuff of the world, are gathered to Christ; every thought being brought in captivity to the obedience of Christ. Then the scattered affections, that were lost among the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eye, and the pride of life, are gathered and conveened together unto Christ, as the proper centre. O then, there is a convention of hearts, that were scattered among other objects; My son, give me thy heart. Then there is a convention of desires, to him is the desire of all nations; a convention of delights, to him who is the delight of God and angels. Instead of the desires of the flesh, and the delights of sense, the desire of their souls comes to be towards him, and the remembrance of his name, saying, Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none in all the earth that I desire besides thee. Oh! are there not here dead and dry bones scattered about the mouth of the grave? dead and dry hearts and affections scattered about the mouth of hell? Oh! what need of a gathering?

(3.) It supposes REJECTION, and imports RECEPTION. The natural state is a state, wherein the man is rejected of God; he hath forsaken God, and God hath forsaken him. But when God gathers the people to Shiloh, he receives them into favour; Isa. liv. 7. For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercy will I gather thee; that is, I will love thee freely, and receive thee graciously.

(4.) It supposes SEPARATION, and imports UNION. The natural state is a state of separation from God, wherein the man is like the prodigal, in a far country; far from God, and far from Christ, and far from grace; Aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world, Eph. ii. 12. There is an infinite moral distance, as well as natural, betwixt God and them. The wall of separation is such, as none but God can pull down; which he must do, when he gathers the people to Shiloh: and hence, in gathering sinners, he not only preaches peace to them that are afar off, but, in Christ Jesus, they that were afar off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ: they that were separate from God, and without a head, since the first Adam fell, are gathered together to God, under a new head, the second Adam, and unite to him: it is called, A gathering together into one, all things in Christ, Eph. i. 10. They are thus unite to God, and one among themselves in Christ. This union is by the bond of the holy Spirit, and instrumentally of saving faith: and the gathered soul becomes one building with Christ, whereof Christ is the foundation; one temple, one body, one Spirit; He that is joined to the Lord, is one Spirit.

(5.) It supposes REBELLION, and imports SUBJECTION, RECONCILIATION, and OBEDIENCE. The natural state is a state of rebellion, alienation, and enmity. Before people are gathered to Shiloh, they are gathered under the standard of the devil, and carrying on a rebellion against heaven; every man and woman is a rebel: The carnal mind is enmity against God: every thought of every man is a rebel against God; Every imagination of the thoughts of the heart is evil, and only evil continually. Now, when God gathers people, he brings them into subjection to his Son: as they are unite to him as their Head, so they are subject to him as their King. This subjection and obedience is imported in the original word, as I told in the explication. The gathered people are brought to say, Other lords beside thee have had dominion over us: but now, by thee only will we make mention of thy name. As the Jews said, We have no king but Cæsar: so they are brought to say, We have no king but Shiloh; no lord but the Lord Jesus. Rebellion is turned to subjection and obedience; and their alienation, to amity and love.

(6.) In a word, it supposes an AMISSION, or LOSING, and imports RESTORATION and RECOVERY. The natural state is a lost state: we are lost in the rubbish of the fall of Adam. We are lost privately, in that we are not what we were, in a state of innocence and uprightness, nor in a state of friendship and fellowship with God, nor in a state of power, strength, and ability to do God's will; we have forfeit all this by our sin and fall; All have sinned and come short of the glory of God, Rom. iii. 23. We are lost positively, in regard we are that which we should not be, even filthy sinners, and guilty criminals: filthy, and so are children of disobedience, Eph. ii. 3.; guilty, and so are called, children of wrath, Eph. ii. 3. Our bodies, and all their members, are corrupted, which is called, the filthiness of the flesh; our souls, and all their faculties are corrupted, this is the filthiness of the spirit: being filthy and guilty sinners, we are positively lost. —We are lost judicially, as being under a sentence of death, and under the curse of the law, Gal. iii. 10. The law saith, The soul that sinneth shall die.—We are lost meritoriously, in that our sins deserve death, which is the wages of sin, Rom. vi. 23. And no wonder, for it is a violation of God's holy, just, and good law, Rom. vii. 12. It is a contrariety and contradiction to God's holy, just, and good nature, Hab. i. 13. In a word, we are lost in point of power and ability ability to save and recover ourselves; lost as to all capacity in the creature to help us: We are by nature without strength, Rom. v. 6. We are not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be, Rom. viii. 7. We cannot know or discern the things of God; yea, they are foolishness to the natural man, 1 Cor. ii. 14.: far less can we by any atonement satisfy God for our offences; therefore, The redemption of the soul is precious, and ceaseth for ever.——Thus we are every way lost.

Now, as this is the lost state supposed, so this gathering of lost souls, imports the Son of man his coming to seek and save that which was lost, Luke xix. 10. While yet the sinner is stout-hearted, and far from righteousness, unwilling to be saved and gathered, like these, Mat. xxiii. 37. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered you, but ye would not! He makes inquiry after them by his word, by his rod, by his Spirit, saying, as to Adam, when he made inquiry after him, Adam, where art thou? Man, woman, where art thou hiding thyself? I am come to seek, to save, and gather you. And as he seeks them out by his word, so he finds them out by his Spirit, and restores them to a state of salvation. Thus he gathers them preparatively by the law, formally and immediately by the gospel, meritoriously by his blood, procuratively by his intercession, occasionally by his providence, and effectually by his Spirit; drawing them with grace, covering them with his righteousness, quickening, sanctifying and sealing them to the day of redemption. But how he gathers, may come to be more particularly shown upon the fourth head. Only so much for the remarks I promised concerning the nature and import of this gathering.

II. The second general head proposed, was, To shew who are the people of whom it is said, the gathering of the people shall be to him. Why, in general, by the people you are to understand the Gentiles, Rom. xv. 11.; and therefore here is a door of faith open to us, to gather in by it unto Shiloh: for the promise is to us, whose forefathers were as black and blinded pagans as any in the world; To us is the word of this salvation sent, that the gathering of the people shall be to Shiloh. And here is encouragement to us to gather in to him by faith; here is a foundation of faith for all the people that hear this gospel; God says, The gathering of the people shall be to Christ, the Messias, insomuch that whoever of all the people shall be persuaded to gather in under his wings, they shall be welcomed to him, and saved by him. Why, says one, it may be I am none of the people here intended, none of the elect that shall be effectually gathered; and therefore my attempting to come to him may be vain. In answer hereunto, you would consider, that there are two distinct questions here, namely, 1. Whom he designs in this decree? 2. Whom he defines in his word to be the persons that shall gather? And we would consider which of these especially is proposed in the gospel for our encouragement in gathering unto Shiloh.

As to the first, Whom he designs in his DECREE to be gathered? These are indeed the elect, who are said to be chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, Eph. i. 4. They are said to be predestinate; and whom he did predestinate, them he also called, Rom. viii. 30. They are said to be given to Christ; and, All that the Father hath given me, shall come to me, John vi. 37.; and, All that are ordained to eternal life, shall believe, Acts xiii. 48. The election shall obtain, Rom. xi. 7. And indeed, if God had not, in his eternal purpose, designed to gather some, none at all would be gathered. Now, I think it is observable, that in all these places, where God's design of gathering the elect to him is mentioned, it is readily brought in either as an encouragement to them that are gathered, that they may have the comfort of their election from eternity; or as an encouragement to ministers that are gatherers, that they may know their labour shall not be without success; or else as a check and blow to these that are final rejecters of Christ, and refuse to be gathered to him: but never is it brought in for a discouragement to any people in the world to gather unto Shiloh; hence, to the Jews, that obstinately and finally rejected Christ, he says, John vi. 36, 37. Ye will not come; but know to your confusion, that all that the Father hath given me, shall come. But, that none may be hereupon discouraged, he says, Whosoever comes, he will in nowise cast out. Where, as he shuts the door upon final rejecters; so he opens the door to all comers, that they may flock into him; and the rather because it is impossible they can know their election of God, till once they come and gather to Christ. It is deviliſh reasoning therefore to say, I know not if I be an elect, and therefore I need not come to Christ; for it is divine reasoning rather to say, I know not my election, therefore I will come unto him that I may know it, since it cannot possibly be known otherwise. Election is in Christ, Eph. i. 4. We are chosen in him; and therefore out of Christ it cannot be seen. But, if I be not elected, say you, I will not get grace to come. Indeed if you have no will to come, you have no grace to come; and if you have no will to come, whom can you blame for your enmity but yourselves, that will not come to Christ? Will you complain you have not grace to come, and yet reject the gospel of grace, that only can make you willing? O then, Why will you die, O house of Israel? But, Sir, is it not true, that all will not be gathered; and therefore perhaps not me? Well, but is it not as true, that many shall be gathered; and therefore why not you? Is there any irritant clause in the gospel, excluding you from gathering to Shiloh among the rest? Non-election can be no hinderance to you, if a lying devil and deceitful heart do not make it so; for it is a secret you are not concerned with: it is a secret thing that belongs to God, Deut. xxix. 29. Your business is to notice what belongs to you, namely, what warrant you have from the word for your gathering unto Shiloh. When the gospel-call is among your hands, it belongs not to you to demur upon that question, Whom he designs in his decree?

But it belongs to you to answer to your name in the second question, namely, Whom he designs in his WORD to be the persons that should gather, and shall be gathered to Shiloh? And that all may press themselves in upon him, without fear of presuming when they are gathering to him, they are defined by the most general terms, namely, THE PEOPLE; To him shall the gathering of THE PEOPLE be. And that none may have any reason to think that they are cast out, but that all and every one may be encouraged to venture their perishing souls upon Christ, Chriſt, I ſhall ſhew what ſort of people are here intended.

1. It is a gathering of pagan people and heathens that is here meant; Shiloh ſhall come, and the gathering of the people to him: accordingly Chriſt came, that the Gentiles might be gathered, and might glorify God for his mercy; he came to the Jews for the good of the Gentiles: ſee Rom. xv. 8,—12. And now, for accompliſhing of theſe promiſes, he allows us to preach among you Gentiles the unſearchable riches of Chriſt. This is a part of the myſtery of godlineſs, Chriſt preached among the Gentiles, 1 Tim. iii. 16. It was a myſtery to the Jews and primitive Chriſtians, when Chriſt was firſt preached among the Gentiles, Rom. xi. 17, 18. Why, the Gentiles were the uncircumciſion; they were abominable outcaſts, whoſe very entering into the temple was enough to pollute it. They were ſtrangers and aliens: but now God declares in the goſpel, that he will juſtify the uncircumciſion through faith, Rom. iii. 30. And the ſcripture foreſeeing that God would juſtify the heathen through faith, preached the goſpel before to Abraham, ſaying, In thee ſhall all nations be bleſſed. Gal. iii. 18. The Gentiles here meant were called dogs, and the Jews were called, the children; hence ſaid Chriſt to the woman of Canaan, when trying her, It is not meet to take the childrens bread, and caſt it to dogs. Without are dogs, Rev. xxii. 15.; but ſuch dogs have been gathered, 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10, 11. Such were ſome of you, but ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified.—Thus the people that may and ſhall be gathered are defined, they are Gentiles, uncircumciſed, heathens, dogs; and if that be a deſcription of you, man, woman; then the promiſe concerns you, and you are called to embrace it with application.

2. It is a gathering of graceleſs and ungodly people that is here deſigned. Though he makes them gracious and godly when once he hath gathered them; yet, before they be gathered, and while he is ſeeking to gather them to himſelf, they are graceleſs and ungodly; I came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance. Mark ii. 17. And, indeed, if he would except ſinners, he would except all mankind, and call none at all; for, All have ſinned: therefore ſay not, you are a ſinner, and therefore cannot be of that number to whom this word of grace belongs; for if you be a ſinful creature of Adam's family, we are charged to hold out the word of ſalvation to you; Go preach the goſpel to every creature, Mark xvi. 15.

3. It is a gathering of the moſt ſinful people that ever were, that is here intended. Chriſt, ſay you, may gather ſinners, but none ſo groſs as me: therefore I tell you, that even the groſſeſt of ſinners are included in this gathering; hence the ſtout-hearted people are encouraged to come to him; Hearken, ye ſtout-hearted, and far from righteouſneſs, I bring near my righteouſneſs; and my ſalvation ſhall not tarry, Iſa. xlvi. 12, 13. Hearken to his reaſoning, Iſa. i. 18. Though your ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be as white as ſnow; though they be red like crimſon, they ſhall be as wool. Why ſays he thus, but that the greateſt and moſt guilty ſinner may not be diſcouraged from gathering about the throne of infinite grace? Hence neither the cruel maſſacres and curſed ſorcery of Manaſſeh, nor the blaſpemy and perſecution of Paul, did exclude them from obtaining mercy and being gathered to Shiloh; yea, the Jews, who murdered the Lord of glory, ſee them both called and converted, Acts ii. 14.

4. It is a gathering of diſeaſed people that is here meant, Mark ii. 17. When Shiloh comes, it is to gather the ſick and diſeaſed about him to heal them; They that be whole need not the phyſician, but they that are ſick: multitudes gathered about him to touch him; and, as many as touched him, were made whole. All that are ſick are called to come to him, and all that want the phyſician. We need not underſtand it of theſe that are ſenſibly ſick, and ſee their need, ſuch only will indeed come; but it is true without a figure, That all that are really ſick, and ſtand in need of a phyſician, ought to come. Now, what is your diſeaſe, man, woman? For the phyſician is come here to gather all diſeaſed perſons about his hand, that he may get the glory of healing them. Is darkneſs and ignorance your diſeaſe? Behold, Shiloh is come to be a light to lighten the Gentiles. Is deadneſs your diſeaſe? Behold, He is come to give life, and to give it more abundantly. Is blindneſs your diſeaſe? He is come to open the eyes of the blind. Is hardneſs of heart your diſeaſe? He is come to take away the heart of ſtone, and give the heart of fleſh.—Whatever be the diſeaſe, let the gathering of diſeaſed people be to him. If your diſeaſe be unbelief, ſo as you cannot for your life elicite one act of faith; he hath the Spirit of faith to give for curing that. If your diſeaſe be impenitency, ſo as you cannot repent of one ſin; he hath the Spirit of repentance to give for curing of that. If your diſeaſe be enmity and hatred againſt God and Chriſt; he hath the the Spirit of love to give for curing that. If your diſeaſe be carnality, ſo as your thoughts and affections are carnal and fleſhly; he hath the Spirit of holineſs to give for curing that. If your diſeaſe be weakneſs, that you cannot think, you cannot act, you cannot pray; he hath the Spirit of power to give for curing that. If your diſeaſe be error and deluſion, as well as dimneſs and confuſion; he hath the Spirit of truth to give, to lead you into all truth. If your diſeaſe be ſecurity, fearing nothing, but ſleeping in the arms of the devil, deſtitute of all grace, filled with all atheiſm and blaſphemy, and ſuch unconcernedneſs and indifference, that no arguments in the world can awaken you; Behold, Shiloh is come, who is the reſurrection and the life, having the Spirit of all grace to give, Iſa. xlii. 1. Behold my Servant, whom I uphold; mine Elect, in whom my ſoul delighteth: I have put my Spirit upon him, he ſhall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. There is one diſeaſe, called the unpardonable ſin, which the man that is under would never ſo much as wiſh to be cured of; abſtracting from that, I know no diſeaſe excluded out of the Mediator's commiſſion. Whatever be the diſeaſe then, of which you would wiſh and need to be cured, if you be among the number of diſeaſed people, that is the people of which the gathering muſt be to Shiloh.

5. It a gathering of diſtracted people and mad fools. This is ſet forth in the parable of the prodigal, who played the fool and madman, till he came to himſelf, and came home to his father, who, notwithſtanding of his former madneſs and folly, kindly received and entertained him, Luke xv. 17,—24. What is all the people in the world but a company of mad fools, and beſide themſelves; feeding upon ſwines huſks, ſenſual pleaſures, and lying vanities? yet of ſuch people is the gathering to Shiloh. Therefore, O Sinner, do not exclude yourſelf from the benefits of this promiſe, though you have been carrying like one that hath been out of his wits all your days. Some in the world are called wits, and think themſelves ſo, who yet are mad and out of their wits, ſo long as they do not think of gathering to Shiloh, In whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge; and who of God is made unto us wiſdom.

6. It is a gathering of impriſoned people that is here meant; for Shiloh is come to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the priſon to them that are bound, Iſa. lvi. 1. Now, what ſort of a priſon are you in, man? This word of ſalvation is to you; Turn ye to your ſtrong hold, ye priſoners of hope, Zech. ix. 12. The people that are gathered to Shiloh, are deſigned priſoners; and if a priſoner be your name and deſignation, be it never ſuch a deep, dark, and dreadful priſon, here is a door of hope for you. Is your priſon-door barred and bolted, ſo as no man or angel can open? Behold, he proclaims the opening of the priſon to them that are bound. When he in the goſpel-proclamation is ſaying, Open priſon-doors, open, open; O take hold of his ſtrength, and invite his power to be put forth, and you ſhall find all the bands ſhall be broken in pieces. To give him employment to open your priſon, is one of the ways of gathering to him. Do you look upon yourſelf as a priſoner in the further corner, hidden in the deepeſt and darkeſt hole of the priſon? Behold the gathering hand of him that can ſave to the uttermoſt, can reach to the furtheſt corner in the priſon, and bring you forth, ſo as your name ſhall be called Sought out, and found out, Iſa. lxii. 12. But, on this ſubject, ſee my notes on Iſa. xlii. 6.*—Now, if the people to be gathered to Shiloh be of that ſort, if it be a gathering of pagans, to make them Chriſtians; a gathering of graceleſs people, to make them gracious; a gathering of great ſinners, to make them great ſaints; a gathering of diſeaſed people, that they may be made whole; a gathering of fools and mad-men, that they may be made wiſe; a gathering of priſoners, that they may be made free: if this be the deſignation of theſe people of whom the gathering ſhall be to Shiloh, O then, is your name and deſignation touched at here? What hinders, but you put in for a ſhare of this gathering grace! By what clauſe are you excluded, if you be one of the people here mentioned, man, woman? And why will you exclude yourſelves from coming to Chriſt? The goſpel excludes you not, for it names you in a manner; and you ſhould anſwer to your name, ſaying, Lord, here I am: I find I am mentioned among theſe of whom the gathering ſhall be to Shiloh; therefore, behold I come to him; let my ſoul, and all its faculties, be centred on him.

But, in caſe you think that I have miſſed your name, I muſt tell you, that all that are called by the goſpel of Chriſt are allowed to gather under his wings; and it is by the free univerſal call given to all the people to whom the goſpel comes; it is by this, that God gathers all his choſen in to Chriſt; and the promiſe, given forth indefinitely to all the people, is a ground of encouragement to them all to come to Shiloh by faith: therefore, ſays the apoſtle to them whom he was calling to come to Chriſt, whom they had crucified, Acts ii. 39. The promiſe is to you, and to your children; and to all them that are afar off, even to as many as the Lord our God ſhall call. And here, as all that are afar off are called, ſo more particularly there are two ſorts of people called, that ſome do not dream to be ſo, namely, 1. They that exclude themſelves. 2. They that are excluded by men, they are included in the call.

(1.) They that exclude themſelves; and you will find, they are moſt particularly called, who are moſt ready to exclude themſeles. They that are weary and heavy laden, under a ſenſe of ſin, and apprehenſion of God's wrath, are ready to exclude themſelves; therefore they are particularly called, Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you reſt, Mat. xi. 28. I do not confine the ſenſe of theſe words indeed to the humbled and convinced; for I think that even theſe that are wearying themſelves in purſuing vanities, and living contentedly under a heavy load of ſin or guilt, or wearying themſelves with a load of legal and unprofitable ſervice, are called alſo by that text to come to Chriſt, in whom alone they can find that reſt and ſatisfaction which they are vainly ſeeking in other things. Now, though I judge it would ſtraiten the goſpel-call there, to confine it only to the firſt ſenſe; yet I reckon the firſt to be ſo much imported, that ſeeing ſuch perſons as find a load of ſin and wrath upon them, are readieſt to exclude themſelves, therefore they are expreſly called. Thus again, they that ſee themſelves deſtitute of all good qualifications, have no money nor money-worth; nothing but poverty, and want, and worthleſneſs: theſe are ready to exclude themſelves, as being broken and loſt; therefore they are particularly encouraged, as Ezek. xxxiv. 16. Again,

(2.) They that are excluded by men; yea, whom miniſters are ready to exclude, yet the call reaches them. Men are ready to exclude from the call of the goſpel, ſuch as refuſe the call, and pour contempt upon it, viz. Mockers and ſcorners; yet we find ſuch are called, Pov. i. 22, 23. Men are ready to exclude from the call of the goſpel, or the invitation to come, and gather unto Shiloh, ſuch are not ſenſible of the want of him, and think themſelves happy enough without him.—Men exclude unſenſible ſinners, that have no thirſty deſire after Chriſt, but are ſatisfying themſelves with other things: yet theſe are particularly called, as you may ſee in theſe two paſſages, Iſa. lv. 1, 2. Ho, every one that thirſted, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye; buy and eat, yea, come, buy wine and milk without money, and without price. Wherefore do ye ſpend your money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which ſatisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your ſoul delight itſelf in fatneſs. Now, you may notice, that the thirſting here is no deſirable quality, it was a thirſting for that which did not ſatisfy, and a labouring for that which was not bread; and yet they are invited to come to him, as one that hath a variety of ſupply; water, to refreſh; wine, to cheriſh; milk, to nouriſh: and all offered freely; Without money, and without price: ſo that here, even theſe that are thirſting after their luſts, and after the world, and unſatisfying vanities, are called. See alſo, Rev.

* Sermon IV. intitled, Chriſt the People's Covenant, p. 66.

Rev. iii. 18. I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed; and eye-salve, that thou mayest see. But who are they that are thus called? Even these, that, in the preceeding verse, said they were rich, and increased with goods, and stood in need of nothing; even these that had no sense of their need of Christ: true, these that do not see their need will not come; but whether they see it or not, they are called and obliged to come.—Now, men are ready to exclude from the call these that are unhumbled, unsensible sinners, that are not convinced of their sin and misery; but because God's free and gracious call can effectually work upon unsensible, stupid, brutish sinners, as well as upon the objects that we reckon most prepared; therefore sinners want of sense, and due conviction, is brought in as a reason why they are called to come to Christ: I counsel thee to buy of me tried gold, white raiment, eye-salve; why, because thou sayest, I am rich, and encreased with goods, and stand in need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, miserable, poor, blind, and naked. Let none think then, because they do not see their wretched and undone state without Christ, therefore they are not concerned with his call: nay, upon that very account you are concerned, says the Spirit of God; and you may object what you will, but you will not get it put by you. Shift this call as you will, it will rise up in judgment against you, if you do not answer it. If you are an unsensible sinner, not knowing that you are poor and miserable, thinking that you are rich enough already, and does not see that you are wretched, blind, and naked, you have the more need to come to Christ, that he may give you eye-salve, that you may see your misery without him, and your remedy in him.—Thus we are warranted to open the mouth of the gospel-net: and I hope, by this time, you may see, that you are all concerned with this call. And, what do you think we intend by this universal call? Why, there is one of two things will follow; either, to the glory of God's justice we get you all left inexcusable; or, to the glory of his mercy, we get you all gathered in to Christ; and if there be some of both sorts, then both these ends are reached. But, O to see the last especially, even a happy gathering of the people to Shiloh!——Thus you see who are the people, of whom it is said, the gathering shall be to the Messias. None are excluded, all are invited, and warranted to assemble to him; and when God says, To him shall the gathering of the people be, all the people should say, AMEN.

III. The third thing proposed, was, To shew to whom shall the gathering of the people be; or, what is the gathering place, and where is the gathering to be. Here we may enquire, 1. What place there is in Christ for the people to gather? 2. In what respect the gathering of the people is to him?

First, What place there is in Christ for the people to gather to? Christ is the temple to which we ought to resort; he is the only refuge and sanctuary of poor miserable souls; and there is room enough in this temple and sanctuary for all that shall gather in to it. In general, the very PERSON of Christ is the gathering place, the meeting place, to which people should gather. They that come to Christ, are to close with his person, and then they are interested in all his purchase: hence the many calls to come to him, to receive him, to rest on him, to trust in him, to flee to him, and so to God in him; for a God in Christ is the throne of grace, to which the gathering of the people should be, Heb. iv. 16. Let us come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in the time of need. More particularly, there is a six-fold place or chamber in the Lord Jesus, that I shall mention, for the gathering of the people into.

1. There is the chamber of his righteousness: no doubt this is one of the chambers spoken of, Song i. 4. The King hath brought me into his chambers; and Isa. xxvi. 20. Come, my people, enter into your chambers, and hide yourself, till the indignation be overpast. Indeed there is no escaping of divine wrath and indignation, but by gathering into this chamber of Christ's righteousness. It is one of the most splendid and well-adorned chambers that ever was; for it is hung with the red and white hangings which God himself wrought: I mean, with the fair and white obedience, and the red bloody sufferings and satisfaction of the Son of God. Guilty sinners cannot be saved, without a law-fulfilling, justice-satisfying righteousness: but when they gather in to this chamber, they are absolutely safe, and may say, Surely in the Lord have I righteousness and strength, Isa. xlv. 24. The Lord is well-pleased, for his righteousness sake; insomuch, that none can lay any thing to their charge, Rom. viii. 33. They may laugh at all challenges, while they shut their chamber-door upon themselves: they are then chambered, like Noah in the ark, which was pitched within and without, Gen. vi. 14. so as no drop of water could come in; so here.

2. There is the chamber of his name, for the gathering of the people into; The name of the Lord is a strong tower, to which the righteous run, and are safe, Prov. xviii. 10. He is the strength, as well as the righteousness of Israel; and to this chamber, in which there is everlasting strength, we ought to throng. Many a closet there is in this chamber: if we should mention all his titles, all his offices, all his relations, all his divine attributes and perfections which belong to his name, there would be no end of telling; but every one of them, and any one of them, is a fit place for gathering to: every corner of this chamber is perfumed, insomuch, that none are gathered into it, but they are ravished with the sweet smell thereof; Because of the savour of thy good ointment, thy name is as ointment poured forth. His name is, Christ, the Anointed; and every name he hath is an anointed name: He is an anointed Jesus, an anointed Surety, an anointed king. And when any of his names are cleared up, and opened, it is like the opening of a box of ointment; it is like the opening of a chamber-door, full of ravishing perfumes.

3. There is the chamber of his bosom, for the gathering of the people into; He gathers them with his arms, and carries them in his bosom, Isa. xl. 11.; his kind and merciful bosom and bowels, which yern towards sinners, Jer. xxxi. 20. This is a large chamber, Jam. v. 11. The Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy; the original is, πολύσπλαγχνος, he is of LARGE BOWELS, or FULL OF BOWELS: there is place enough in these bowels of infinite mercy for sinners to gather in into; and this chamber of his bosom is standing open for all comers. The chamber-door of his heart is open, that the gathering ing of the people may be in to it: and as it is a large chamber, that can contain you all, being as broad and wide as the infinite mercy of a God in Chriſt; ſo it is a warm chamber: O it is a warm and heartſom chamber, to get in to the heart and boſom of Chriſt. They that gather in there, will ſit under the warm and benign influence of God's love and grace in Chriſt: their hearts are warmed, and made to burn within them; Did not our hearts burn within us, when he talked with us by the way, and opened to us the ſcriptures? Luke xxiv. 32. While he was opening the ſcripture, he was ſtirring up the fire of love; they were in the chamber of his warm heart and boſom, and it made them to have a warm heart too: ſurely, believer, you know what a ſweet chamber that is.

4. There is the chamber of fulneſs, to which the gathering of the people ſhould be. This is a chamber that comprehends all the reſt of the chambers within it; but becauſe it is ſo notable and glorious, we name it among the reſt. It is the beſt furniſhed chamber that ever you heard tell of, for, all the fulneſs of the Godhead is in it: It pleaſed the Father, that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell, Col. i. 19.; and ii. 9, 10. In him dwells all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily; and ye are complete in him. To this chamber ſhould all poor beggar and bankrupt ſinners, that have loſt their ſtock in the firſt Adam, gather together, that out of his fulneſs they may receive, grace for grace, John i. 16. In this chamber are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, all the treaſures of grace and glory, all the treaſures of God's perfections, and all the treaſures of the Spirit's graces. Your great want is the want of God; and you may find him in this chamber: your next want is the want of grace; and whatever grace you want, be it faith, repentance, love, or whatever elſe, it is lying treaſured up in this chamber: if you want pardon, purity, happineſs, holineſs, all the ſtock of riches that you can imagine, to make you up for ever and ever, is treaſured up in this chamber; and behold the chamber-door is open to you all, while we preach among you Gentiles the unſearchable riches of Chriſt. Let every ſoul here be like beggars gathering about this door.

5. There is the chamber of his covenant, to which the gathering of the people ſhould be; when God gathers people into it, he is ſaid to ſhew them his covenant, Pſal. xxv. 14.; and in ſhewing his covenant, he ſhews ſome divine ſecrets to them. When the people gather in to this chamber, they are ſaid to take hold of his covenant, Iſa. lvi. 4, 6. This chamber is remarkable for the wells that are in the midſt of it. There is both a well for waſhing, and a well for drinking; and both are open, that the people may gather together to them. The well for waſhing is the blood of the covenant; and that is the fountain open for ſin and for uncleanneſs, Zech. xiii. 1. It is juſt the boundleſs bottomleſs ſea of the Redeemer's blood, which cleanſes from all ſin: this fountain is open, that all guilty, filthy, polluted people may gather to it, and be waſhed. The well for drinking is not only that ſame blood of Chriſt, which is drink indeed, but all the bleſſings of the covenant, and all the promiſes of the covenant; to all or every one of which, people ſhould gather, and draw water out of theſe wells of ſalvation with joy, Iſa. xii. 3. Here is the well of water ſpringing up to everlaſting life, John iv. 14. and all the people are invited to gather to it; Whoſoever will, let him come, and take the water of life freely, Rev. xxii. 17. In this chamber there is the beſt of cheer; bread enough, and to ſpare; all ſpiritual bleſſings of heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus: and this chamber, and all the cheer that is in it, whereof Chriſt himſelf is the all, it is dedicate of God for the uſe of the people, that their gathering may be to it; I will give thee for a covenant of the people, Iſa. xlii. 6.

6. There is the chamber of his palace, for the gathering of the people into: by his palace, I mean, his church; and by his church, I mean, both his church militant on earth, and triumphant in heaven.

As for the church militant, that is the palace of the great King, Pſal. xlv. 15; there he deſires to dwell, Pſal. lxviii. 16. It is his houſe where he would have the gathering of the people to be; therefore he calls it a houſe of prayer for all people, Iſa. lvii. 7. and all are to flee unto it, Iſa. ii. 2. The ordinances and proviſions of Chriſt's houſe are, in a peculiar manner, for the entertainment of the people; and the ſtewards of the houſe have a ſpecial commiſſion to invite all ſorts of ſinners, even theſe that have played the prodigal and the fool in the way of ſin, to come in to it; Prov. ix. 3. Whoſo is ſimple, let him turn in hither: As for him who hath no underſtanding, Wiſdom ſays to him, Come eat of my bread, and drink of the wine which I have mingled, Luke xiv. 21, 23. Go quickly, ſays the Maſter of the houſe, to the ſtreets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, the blind, the maimed, and the halt; yea, go to the high-ways, and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my houſe may be filled. It is a pity indeed, that ever people ſhould be diſcouraged from gathering in to the Lord's houſe, while the proviſions of the houſe are mixed with unwholeſom food of corrupt or erroneous doctrine; while the ſtewards of the houſe do turn it to a den of thieves and robbers; robbing the people of their Chriſtian privileges; and while the ſervants of the houſe do fall by the ears, and begin to ſmite their fellow-ſervants, becauſe the Lord of the houſe is away, and delays his coming: while, in a word, the doctrine, worſhip, diſcipline, and government of the houſe is out of order, and in great confuſion, not garniſhed like the palace of the great King. This indeed is matter of lamentation, and will be ſo, till the King of Zion the Maſter of the houſe himſelf come by the power of his Spirit, and ſet matters right: and, as the prophet ſays, Hag. ii. 7. I will ſhake all nations, and the Deſire of all nations ſhall come; ſo, before the Lord comes in a glorious manner to his houſe, we have reaſon to expect he will give the houſe a terrible ſhake, and make it tremble. But in the mean time, let not the diſorders † of the houſe hinder the gathering of the people to it; for at beſt the lower chambers of our King's palace will never be ſo clean as the upper-chamber in the higher houſe. The church militant will never be in a ſtate of perfection here; only ſtudy you to keep always the cleaneſt and beſt ſide of the houſe, like ſick people betaking themſelves to the pureſt air. But withal, let never your gathering to his houſe or ordinances content you, without the preſence of the Maſter of the houſe, and the Lord of ordinances, ſo as you may have it to ſay, that not only you was brought to the banquetting-houſe, but alſo, his banner over you was love.

As to the church triumphant, that is his glorious palace, his higher houſe, of which Chriſt ſays, John xiv. 2. In my Father's houſe there are many manſions; thither all that have been gathered graciouſly, will be gathered glorioufly; with gladneſs and rejoicing will they be brought, and ſhall enter into the king's palace, Pſal. xlv. 15. This is, by way of eminency, the ivory palace, where all his garments ſmell of aloes, myrrh, and caſſia; where the people gathered to him, will be like him; for they ſhall ſee him as he is: where they will be for ever with him, In whoſe preſence is fulneſs of joy, and at his right-hand pleaſures for evermore. As he that drinks of the ocean, though his thirſt be never ſo great and inſatiable, yet leaves it as full and flowing as ever; ſo theſe that drink of the ocean of theſe heavenly pleaſures, will find the fulneſs of joy never ebbing, but ever flowing through all eternity. Chriſt himſelf will be the heaven of heaven, and the very temple, wherein the happy people will be gathered together; I ſaw no temple there: but the Lord God almighty, and the Lamb are the temple of it, Rev. xxi. 22. If the Lamb be the temple there, then the gathering of the people there muſt be to him.——Thus you ſee, what place there is in Chriſt, and what chambers for the gathering the people to.

The ſecond queſtion, upon this head, was, to ſhow in what reſpect the gathering of the people is to him, or in what capacity. The ſcripture is very copious, and elegant in ſetting forth the various reſpects, wherein this gathering of the people to Shiloh may take place; and that, for conveying a due apprehenſion thereof to our ſouls, it is ſet forth by what takes place, ſometimes among rational creatures, among ſenſitives, among vegetables, and among inanimate things; and it is not for nought, that the ſcripture is ſo copious this way, that our faith may have room and liberty to act upon Chriſt, in whatever reſpect he is repreſented.

1. From rationals; while we view political or œconomical affairs among men, or whatever ſtation or relation they are ſaid to be in, or actions they are ſaid to perform, by theſe we will find this matter repreſented unto us. Hence our gathering to Shiloh is like the gathering of ſcholars to a teacher, or of diſciples to a maſter, that we may be taught of him; and he is therefore called the non-ſuch teacher, Job xxxvi. 22. Who teacheth like him? Man's teaching reacheth the ear; but his teaching reacheth the heart: man's teaching may work upon the capacity where it is; but his teaching can work a capacity where it is not. O let all the people gather to his ſchool, who is the great Prophet, who teaches with authority, that teacheth as never man taught.—Again, it is like a gathering of purſued malefactors to a refuge: it is a flying for refuge to the hope ſet before us, Heb. vi. 18. To gather to him, is to ſay by faith, with David, I flee to thee to hide me; to hide with thy wings, with thy blood, with thy righteouſneſs, from the wrath of God, and from the curſe of the law.—Again, it is like the gathering of rebels to a ſovereign, caſting down their arms, and owning him to be their only King and Leige-lord: gathered ſouls put the crown upon King Jeſus his head, ſaying, Other lords have had dominion over us; but now, O let the King of glory come in! Pſal. xxiv. 7. Let him reign, and let all his enemies be ſcattered—It is like the gathering of wanderers to the right way home. I am the way, ſays Chriſt.—It is like the gathering of weary travellers to an inn, or weary labourers to a reſting-place: Come to me, all ye that are weary, and heavy laden, and I will give you reſt.—It is a gathering of gueſts to a feaſt, Mat. xxii. 10.; and of ſtrangers to their home, that they may be no more ſtrangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God, Eph. ii. 19. Before a man come to Chriſt, he is abroad in a far country; but whenever he comes to Chriſt, he is at home.—It is a gathering of children to a father, to be pitied as a father pities his children, Pſal. ciii. 13.—It is a gathering of brethren to their elder brother, as Joſeph's brethren did to their younger, that they might be ſupplied by him, and live upon him.—It is a gathering of beggars to a ſtore-houſe, that they may be enriched; of captives to a Redeemer, that they may be liberate; of debtors to a Surety, that they may be ranſomed; Be ſurety for thy ſervant for good; of lepers to a laver, that they may be cleanſed; Purge me with hyſſop, and I ſhall be clean; yea, waſh thou me, and I ſhall be whiter than the ſnow.—It is a gathering, as broken merchants, to a free market: what a gathering of people will be to a fair or market? But they are not all buyers that come to markets, far leſs that come to the market of ordinances; however the market is free, we may buy without money and without price. The wares are precious, tried gold, white raiment, eye-ſalve, and the pearl of great price. All things are nothing to this pearl; and therefore, when we ſell our all to buy this pearl, yet we get it for nothing. Right gathering to Chriſt, is to come to his market, and to take all his wares for nothing.—It is a gathering of members to an head; For he is the head of the body, the church, Col. i. 18. From the head is derived to the body all the light, life, beauty, motion, ſympathy, protection, proviſion, ſupply of good, and prevention of evil.—It is a gathering of fugitive ſervants to their maſters; of clients to an advocate to plead their cauſe.—It is a gathering of drowning men to an ark, to ſave their lives; and a gathering of patients to a phyſician, to heal their diſeaſes. Lord, ſays the gathered ſoul, my diſeaſe is mortal and incurable; I will die of this diſeaſe, if thou do not heal me. Well, ſays Chriſt, this ſickneſs is not unto death; I can cure the diſeaſe of death itſelf, ſpiritual death. Lord, ſays another, my diſeaſe is a lingering diſeaſe, it is an halt and lameneſs, that I cannot ſo much as come to the phyſician for healing, and I am like to go halting to the grave, under a certain ſore that no body knows of. Is that your diſeaſe, woman? mind that word, Micah. vi. 4. I will heal her that halteth: and be encouraged ſtill to be about the phyſician's hands.

2. From ſenſitives; this gathering of the people to Shiloh is repreſented in ſcripture in the following reſpects. This gathering to Shiloh is like the gathering of ſheep to a ſhepherd; Ye were as ſheep without a ſhepherd, but now are ye returned to the ſhepherd and biſhop of your ſouls. Other ſheep I have, that are not of this fold, ſays Chriſt; theſe alſo I muſt bring. He muſt gather them, and they muſt be gathered, according to his promiſe, Ezek. xxxiv. 11, 12. Iſa. xl. 11. O wandering ſheep, here is the fold.—It is like the gathering of doves to their windows; Iſa. lx. 8. Who are theſe that fly as a cloud, as doves to their windows? The wounds of Chriſt, the holes of the Rock of ages, the promiſes ſealed with his blood, and all his offices, are the windows; and to gather to him, is to fly to theſe windows, and make your neſt in the rock.—It is like the gathering of fiſhes into a net; Mat. xiii. 47. The kingdom of heaven, or the goſpel, is likened unto a net caſt into the ſea, gathering of every kind. O when the goſpel-net is ſpread, do not ſwim away: it may be your thoughts are ſwimming in the air, when they ſhould be gathered about the mouth of the net.—Sometimes it is likened to the gathering of chickens under the wings of a hen; Mat. xxiii. 37. Luke xiii. 34. O Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem, how often would I have gathered you, as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but ye would not! O the wings of his grace, the wings of his righteouſneſs, the wings of his merit, the wings of his mercy are ſtretched! If we will not be gathered, the ſilly chickens will witneſs againſt us; for they gather at the cluck of the hen under her wings.—Again, it is like the gathering of eagles to their prey; Mat. xxiv. 28. Where the carcaſe is, thither will the eagles be gathered together. Whither ſhould the eagles go, but to the prey? And, whither ſhould the ſoul go, but to Chriſt, who hath the words of eternal life? Chriſt's fleſh and blood is the carcaſe, which, like hungry eagles, we ſhould be gathering unto; for his fleſh is meat indeed, and his blood is drink indeed.

3. From vegetables; this gathering of the people to Shiloh is repreſented, in the following reſpects. It is like the gathering of wheat into a barn; Mat. iii. 12. He will gather the wheat into his garner. Mat. xiii. 30. Gather the wheat into my barn. God will not loſe a grain of his wheat; he will not only gather it to the barn to be kept, but the granary to be purified.—It is like the gathering of grafts into a branch; I am the vine, ye are the branches: he that abideth in me, and I in him, the ſame bringeth forth much fruit, John xv. 5. When God gathers ſouls to himſelf, he takes a branch of the old Adam, cuts it off from the old ſtock, and ingrafts it into Chriſt, from whom, as the everlaſting root, it derives all ſap of grace, all the fruits of righteouſneſs.—It is like the gathering of plants into a garden or vineyard; The vineyard of the Lord of hoſts is the houſe of Iſrael, and the men of Judah his pleaſant plant, Iſa. v. 7. And theſe, whom he effectually gathers into his garden, are called trees of righteouſneſs, the planting of the Lord, that he may be glorified. To be gathered unto Chriſt, is to be planted in his houſe.—It is like the gathering of fruit into a baſket, or of flowers and lilies for pleaſure and entertainment; My beloved is gone down to his garden, to gather lilies, Song vi. 2. Having gathered them into his garden, and planted them, and ſuffered them to grow, through his grace, till they be ripe, he gathers them to himſelf, and picks them one by one to put them in his boſom. But again,

3. From inanimate things, this gathering of the people to Chriſt is repreſented, in the following reſpects. It is a gathering of veſſels to an harbour; for, before the ſoul be brought in to Chriſt, it is like a ſhip toſſed in the tempeſt, and tumbling in the ſwelling waves, like the ſhip in which the diſciples were, when the ſea was tempeſtuous, and Chriſt came walking on the ſea towards them; but when they are gathered in to Chriſt, then they are at anchor in a ſafe harbour: Which hope we have, as an anchor ſure and ſtedfaſt, entering within the vail, whither the Forerunner is for us entered, Heb. vi. 19. It is a piercing, entering anchor; for, as an anchor will not hold a ſhip firm and faſt, if it only ly on the ground, and do not pierce deep into it; ſo faith will not eſtabliſh the heart, if it do not enter in to Chriſt, as it were, and pierce the vail; but when once it enters here, then the ſoul is at a ſafe harbour, and a ſure anchor both.—Again, this gathering of the people to Shiloh is like the gathering of ſtones to a building; To whom coming, as to a living ſtone, diſallowed indeed of men, but choſen of God and precious; ye alſo, as lively ſtones, are built up a ſpiritual houſe, 1 Pet. ii. 4. We are by nature hard ſtones, ſenſeleſs ſtones, ſtupid, inflexible, dull, heavy ſtones, having an heart of ſtone, Ezek. xxxvi. 26.; but God can, even of theſe ſtones, raiſe up children to Abraham, Mat. iii. 8. Luke iii. 9. And what does God condeſcend to do, when he comes to gather ſinners? Behold, he comes to gather ſtones! and he ſends us that are miniſters out to gather ſtones. It was a ſin for the man to gather ſticks on the Sabbath-day; but it would be no ſin, but a good Sabbath's work for us, if we were gathering ſtones this day, to bring them to the chief corner ſtone, the ſure foundation, as Chriſt is called, 1 Pet. ii. 6. Iſa. xxviii. 16. This is the ſtone which the builders rejected; but the ſame is become the head of the corner, Pſal. cxviii. 22. What we tranſlate the chief corner ſtone, ſome tranſlate it the higheſt, and ſome the loweſt ſtone: but it is beſt to reconcile both, and make him both the higheſt and loweſt, reaching from the firſt to the laſt; becauſe his name is ALPHA and OMEGA, the firſt and the laſt; and becauſe he is the ſtone, that reaches from earth to heaven, from the church militant to the church triumphant: he is the corner-ſtone to bring both ſides of the building together, Jews and Gentiles into one temple: and, Another foundation can no man lay, ſays the apoſtle, than that is laid, which is Chriſt; to this foundation ſhould the ſtones be gathered. Solomon ſays, Eccleſ. iii. 9. There is a time to caſt away ſtones, and a time to gather ſtones together. In alluſion to this, may I ſay, What ſort of time is this? It hath long been a time of caſting away ſtones, many are like caſtaway ſtones in the field, or deſert of nature, hard and dead ſtones; they never gather to the living temple, by all the gathering means and ordinances that ever they enjoyed: they look like ſtones ready to be caſt away to hell, to be fewel for God's wrath; becauſe the fire of love and grace, manifeſted in the goſpel, could never melt them. Oh! it hath been thus a time of caſting away ſtones: when it is not a gathering time, it is a rejecting time. But, O ſhall we now expect a time of gathering ſtones together! O cry for a day of power, a gathering day, a gathering time to Scotland again; a gathering time to yourſelves, even God's hand of power, for gathering ſtones together to Chriſt the foundation; and ſo for gathering the people to Shiloh!

IV. The fourth thing propoſed, was, to ſpeak of the manner of this gathering to Shiloh. That which I intend under this head, diſtinct from the

the former, is, to enquire, 1. Into the means of this gathering; 2. The qualities thereof.

First, As to the means thereof, or by what means the gathering to Shiloh is brought about. By what means, say you, does God gather the people, or are the people gathered to Christ? We have warrant from scripture to speak of these six gathering means.

1. A gathering hedge and inclosure; I mean, the hedge of providence, by which he gathers people occasionally, as sheep within an inclosure are gathered together, that they may not get leave to stray. This is the thorny hedge of affliction, whereby the Lord stops the sinful carreer of these, whom he hath aimed to gather in to himself; Behold I will hedge up thy way with thorns, and make a wall that she shall not find her paths, Hos. ii. 6. Thus Manasseh was catched among the thorns, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11. And to this purpose, says David, It was good for me that I was afflicted; for before I was afflicted I went astray, Psal. cxix. 67. Thus some affliction or other many times is made use of, as the occasional mean of gathering straying souls to Christ, or some alarming providence, as that which Paul met with, Acts ix. and the jaylor, Acts xvi. when the foundation of the prison was shaken with an earthquake. But this leads me to another mean.

2. There is a gathering storm and tempest, with thunder and lightening from mount Sinai, whereby an earthquake is raised in the conscience, or rather an heart-quake in the soul. By this mean of law-terrors and convictions, according to the measure wherein it is dispensed, he gathers the people preparatively, as by the former occasionally. This dispensation is called a tempest, Heb. xii. 18. accompanied with blackness and darkness, and burning fire. And as a blowing storm, or beating tempest, makes a man chearfully to betake himself to a house for shelter; so the storm of legal conviction and humiliation makes people willing to gather unto Shiloh. Hence the law is said to be our schoolmaster to SCHOOL us to Christ, as the word there signifies, Gal. iii. 24. By the law is the knowledge of sin, and the conviction of wrath; and while the storm of law-threatenings, law-curses, law-vengeance is beating and battering on the soul, it is glad to cry out, What shall I do to be saved? And where shall I go to be sheltered? Under this dispensation, there are two things that the soul sees, when the law comes with force, namely, the spirituality of the command, and the severity of the threatening. The spirituality of the precept discovered makes the man cry, Oh! I am unclean, unclean! The severity of the threatening discovered makes him cry out, Oh! I am undone, undone! O the infinite holiness of God in the precept can never be gratified by any obedience of mine, for I am a sinful beast! O the infinite justice of God in the threatening can never be satisfied by any suffering of mine, for I am a finite worm; if there be not another shift for me, I am lost and gone for ever! Thus Rom. vii. 9. the soul that was alive without the law once, now when the commandment comes, sin revives, and it dies.

3. As the gathering inclosure of providence is the occasional mean, and the gathering storm and tempest of law-conviction is the preparative mean, so the gathering trumpet of the gospel is the more immediate mean. The gospel is the great gathering engine of infinite wisdom; for faith comes by hearing of the joyful sound of this trumpet, which is like the trumpet of the jubilee of old, Lev. xxv. 9. There is the joyful sound of gospel-revelations, and good news, that Christ came to save sinners. O! when this sound of the silver trumpet reaches not only the ear, but the heart of the sinner, that by the law hath got the knowledge and conviction of sin and misery, what a joyful sound is it, that now he hears of the remedy for him; that justice is satisfied, life is purchased, death is destroyed, wrath is appeased, and the law is magnified, and God reconciled in Christ? Many a gathering sound comes through this gospel-trumpet. There is a sound of gathering calls, saying, Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved; This is his commandment, that ye believe.—A sound of gathering invitations, saying, Come to me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden.—A sound of gathering proclamations, saying, Ho, ho, every one that thirsteth, come; and he that hath no money, let him come; buy wine and milk without money and without price.—A sound of gathering expostulations, saying, Why will ye die? joined with complaints, Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life.—A sound of gathering counsels, saying, I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye salve, that thou mayest see.—A sound of gathering intreaties and obtestations, saying, We beseech you in God's name, and pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.—And, finally, A sound of gathering music, and charming melody; and as children gather to the sound of the pipe, so the Lord Jesus complains, Mat. xi. 17. when people do not joyfully gather at the sound thereof, We have piped unto you, and you have not danced; yea, such are compared to deaf adders, that stop their ears at the voice of the charmer, though charming never so cunningly, Psal. lviii. 5. O what melodious music in the world, so sweet as to hear the sound of gospel-promises, of pardon to the guilty, purity to the filthy, and pity to the miserable soul! This trumpet hath a sound of peace, a sound of grace, a sound of mercy, a sound of glory to God in the highest, and of good-will towards men: a certain sound, in opposition to all the legal trumpeters, sounding forth life and salvation, depending upon uncertain conditions and qualifications on our part: but, as says the apostle, 1 Cor. xiv. 8. If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who goeth forth to battle? There is no heart to go forth to the battle of the Lord, upon such an uncertain sound: but when the trumpet gives a certain sound of victory, peace, life, salvation, and all, to be had, only, and wholly, and freely for nothing, in and through Jesus Christ, then who would not go forth, under the standard of this Captain of salvation, at the sound of this golden trumpet!

4. There is the gathering wind of the Spirit. Besides the gathering inclosure of providence as the occasional mean, the gathering tempest of the law as the preparatory mean, and the gathering trumpet of the gospel as the immediate mean; there must be a gathering wind of the Spirit, which is the efficacious mean: the former means cannot be effectual without this, though the gathering trumpet of the gospel, and the gathering wind of the Spirit are most nearly related to each other; for it is the gospel only that is the ministration of the Spirit,

2 Cor.

2 Cor. iii. 8. It is this wind of which the Lord Jesus speaks, John iii. 8. which blows where it listeth, and is the great efficient of regeneration, and aggregation unto Christ. It is this wind that gathers dead sinners out of their grave of spiritual death; Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon the slain that they may live, Ezek. xxxvii. 9. It is this mighty wind that blows down the strong holds of Satan, and casts down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God; gathering the thoughts, like captives, to him, 2 Cor. x. 15. It is this wind that makes the spices of the believer's garden to flow out: for this gathering wind brings a gathering rain with it; He shall come down like rain upon the mowen grass; as showers that water the earth, &c. Psal. lxxii. 6, 8. Awake, O north wind; come thou south; blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out, Song iv. 16. O it is a happy wind, that can drive a sinking vessel to a safe harbour, and gather perishing sinners in to a Saviour! But, where is this wind to be had, say you? Why, it is in God's hand: it is said with respect to his kingdom of providence, that he hath gathered the winds in his fist, Prov. xxx. 4.; and it is true with respect to his kingdom of grace: this blessed wind is, as it were, gathered in his fist; and what a man hath gathered in his fist, he can easily distribute of it, by opening his hand; so our God can easily distribute of the Spirit: this wind is in his fist, and he hath no more ado, but to open his fist. O look to him, and cry to him, to cast a gale of this wind out of his fist, a handful of the gathering motions of his Spirit, a handful of the gathering influences of this heavenly wind, a gale of his gathering operations.

5. I may add, though it be very fib to the former, yet it is what may give us another distinct view of the Lord's way of gathering people; besides the gathering wind, there is a gathering sun: I allude to Psalm civ. 21. where it is said of the young lions, The sun rises, and they gather themselves together to their dens; and man goeth forth to his work and labour. As the rising of the sun makes the beasts gather to their dens, and men gather to their work; so the rising of the Sun of righteousness, in the manifestation of the favour of God in Christ, makes the lions of hell gather to their dens, in a manner, and men to gather to their work; I mean, to gather to Christ by faith: for, this is the work of God, that ye believe in his Son, whom he hath sent. It is promised, that men shall go forth when the sun rises; The Sun of righteousness shall arise, and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves in the stall, Mal. iv. 2. Indeed, they that go forth to meet the rising Sun by faith, they will grow up in all the graces and fruits of the Spirit of holiness. However, I say, it is the rising of the Sun of righteousness, and shining in his glory, that makes sinners gather to him by faith; He manifested forth his glory, and then his disciples believed in him, John ii. 11. The displays of his glory are his gathering arms; He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arms, Isa. xl. 11. He gathers with his arms, even the arms of his grace and mercy; yea, the displays of his glorious grace are his military arms, whereby he subdues them, and gathers them into his camp, Psal. xlv. 3, 4, 5.

6. In a subordination to all these gathering means, there is a gathering fan; Matth. iii. 12. Luke iii. 17. His fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into his garner. The devil hath his fan, wherewith he seeks to winnow God's people as wheat, in order to separate them from Christ, and from one another; but Christ hath his fan, wherewith he will winnow his church and people, in order to gather them to himself, and to one another in him. By the fan of his word, and the fan of his rod, he purges the floor of his church: it is his threshing floor; and sometimes he must take the flail of his doctrine and thresh upon his people, to separate the chaff of error from the grains of truth; and the sound from the erroneous. Sometimes he must take the flail of discipline, and severe judgments, rods, and calamities, to purge his floor, and gather the wheat from the chaff. Though the great day of judgment will be the great day of separating the precious from the vile, and gathering of his saints, yet there are trying days in this world, wherein considerable discoveries are made, and the Lord's scattered and divided sheep are gathered together, to be more unite in the Lord. It is necessary sometimes, that the Lord take his fan in his hand, for purging his floor; when it is foul, it needs to be swept with a besom. The floor of his house is sometimes very foul; and as when one sweeps a house, if there be dross and dirt in it, and also gold, and diamonds, and jewels, lying hid among the dust, all may be swept to the door together; but the jewels being soon mist, are gathered again from among the filth: so, when the besom of public judgment and calamities come, the godly, as well as the wicked, may be all swept to the door together, and share of the same outward strokes; but God, in due time, will gather the jewels to his cabinet: They shall be mine, in the day when I make up my jewels, Mal. iii. 17.——So much concerning the various means of gathering.

Secondly, The second question upon this head, was, To speak of the qualities of this gathering of the people to Shiloh. And here the qualities of this gathering may be considered, either passively, shewing how his power is exerted; or actively, shewing how their faith is exercised: or, 1. The qualities of God's gathering the people to Shiloh. 2. The qualities of the peoples gathering to him, under his conduct, influence, and assistance. Now, of both these particularly.

1*st*, PASSIVELY; the qualities of God's gathering the people to Christ; or, how his powerful grace is exerted, when, in a day of his power, he makes them willing, and gathers them.

1. His gathering power is exerted congruously, and agreeably to the rational nature; he draws with the bands of love, and the cords of a man, Hos. ix. 4. What is that? He even brings them over, by rational arguments upon the judgment, and powerful persuasion upon the will. While the minds of men are blinded with ignorance, their affections are bent upon their lusts; but now, the understanding being cleared, the affections are captivated, the man is bound with invincible reason: and so he gathers souls in a way congruous to the rational nature.

2. His gathering power is exerted affectionately and lovingly; Hos. ii. 4. I will allure her, and bring her to the wilderness; and there will I speak comfortably to her.—I will, as it were, BEGUILE her, and speak to her HEART, as the Hebrew signifies:

nifies: I will perſuade her, that there is more reaſon to yield to my intreaties, than to the devil's ſophiſtry. The Lord ſweetly draws up the lock of the heart, and gets in upon the affections; I have loved thee with an everlaſting love, and with loving-kindneſs have I drawn thee, Jer. xxx. 3. As a man puts on his beſt robes on his wedding-day; ſo Chriſt, in the day of eſpouſals, when he would gather the eyes of the people to look to him, and their affections to centre on him, he puts on his robes of glory and grace; clothes himſelf with a garment of ſalvation, with an alluring attire, when he addeſſes himſelf unto and courts ſinners.

3. His gathering power is exerted efficaciouſly: he comes with that argument of omnipotence, whereby he commanded light to ſhine out of darkneſs; by that ſame argument whereby he commanded the dead to ariſe, does he conquer and captivate the ſoul; by that ſame argument whereby Chriſt himſelf was raiſed, Eph. i. 19, 20. till there be no power to reſiſt, no ſtrength of corruption left to oppoſe. The infinite bounty of God, the infinite beauty of Chriſt, and the infinite power of the Holy Ghoſt, all concur to gain the ſoul, with infinite raviſhing ſweetneſs. Almighty love kills the mighty enmity; and, how can he be reſiſted? Compel them to come in, that my houſe may be filled. Before converſion, the ſinner is unwilling, and he cannot come to Chriſt, becauſe he will not; but in converſion, the man is made willing, and ſo he cannot reſiſt, becauſe he will not: the will is gained; Thy people ſhall be willing.

4. His gathering power and grace is exerted ſeaſonably, for, he ſpeaks a word in ſeaſon to them; Iſa. l. 4. The Lord hath given me the tongue of the learned, to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon to him that is weary. A word of power comes at a particular ſeaſon, at God's ſet hour; and people are never gathered till that hour come: The hour comes, when the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear ſhall live. "O happy hour, ſays one, "wherein the word and ordinances are im-"pregnated with almighty efficacy!" When the miniſter finds himſelf in a better frame than ordinary, he is ready to think that bleſſed hour is come; but he may be oft miſtaken. However, the counſel of God ſtands ſure; the Lord knows who are his: therefore we muſt preach in faith, and pray in faith, and wait in hope, and water in hope, till the accepted time come, the happy hour; and when it comes, it will be an hour never to be forgotten, a ſignal time, on which eternity depends. Beſides, it is ſeaſonable with reſpect to the ſoul that is gathered; it comes at the nick of time, when it is in the extremity of diſtreſs, plunged into the deeps, and deep calling unto deep, and the ſoul like to ſuccumb therein. Hence,

5. This gathering grace is manifeſted ſurpriſingly; it is freighted with preventing mercy: herein God anticipates the current of the carnal affections; when the ſoul is running poſt to hell, God ſtops his carreer, as he did that of Paul, Acts ix. Every ſinner that is converted, is gathered beſide his proper natural intention: little does the man foreſee what is God's deſign, in bringing him to ſuch a place, to hear ſuch a ſermon, to live under ſuch a miniſtry; even as little as Saul thought of finding a kingdom, when he went out to ſeek his father's aſſes. Some have come to hear the word, in a very cuſtomary careleſs manner, not knowing where elſe to ſpend an hour; when lo, on a ſudden, an arrow of conviction hath been ſhot into their conſciences, and awakened them to ſeek God. His gathering grace, both in the beginning and progreſs thereof, is ſtill exerted in ſuch a manner, as ſweetly ſurprizes the ſoul; Or ever I was aware, my ſoul made me like the chariots of Amminadab, Song vi. 12. When I was expecting that my ſoul ſhould be gathered among the damned, O! grace ſtepped in, and gathered me to Shiloh.

6. This gathering power is exerted ſovereignly; there is much ſovereignty manifeſted, both over the gathering means, and the gathered ſoul: Over the gathering means, ſuch as the word and ordinances; it is not every word that does the buſineſs: how many great ſermons, and ſpiritual diſcourſes have you heard, O believer, and yet never a word reached your heart, till the Lord ſent it with power? Hence the word that kills one, quickens another; the word that is unſavoury to one, is ſweet to another; the word that is galling to one, is gaining to another; the word that hardens one, ſoftens another.—Sovereignty is alſo manifeſted over the gathered ſoul; many hundreds are gathered together at a time, yet, perhaps, but one or two are touched, and reached by the word: the miniſter is ſpeaking to the heart of theſe, but only to the ears of all the reſt. O! is God finding you out by his word, and gathering you? He is ſovereign; Shewing mercy on whom he will have mercy, and compaſſion on whom he will have compaſſion, Rom. ix. 15.

7. This gathering grace is exerted particularly; for he calls his ſheep by name, John x. 3.; and leads them out: as by the law, the ſinner is convinced particularly, Thou art the man, the ſinful man, the guilty man; ſo by the goſpel, he is called particularly; I have called thee by name, Iſa. xliii. 1. and xlv 4. What is offered indefinitely and generally to all, is carried home particularly to the ſoul: it comes to be as particular, as if God were ſpeaking to none other in all the congregation. Chriſt came to ſave ſinners, and to ſeek loſt ſouls, and particularly, I am come for you, man; you, woman; Riſe, for the Maſter calls you. O, ſays the ſoul, it is me that God is ſpeaking to; there is good news for me!

8. This gathering power is exerted ſucceſsfully: the Lord comes to gather, and the people are gathered; he draws, and they run, and run in to the ark; The name of the Lord is a ſtrong tower, the righteous run into it, and are ſafe: the ſoul runs, not only to it, but in to it, ſo as to be found in Chriſt. People may be gathered to Chriſt, in a manner, and yet not gathered ſucceſsfully, unleſs gathered in to him: as in the days of Noah, when the deluge of water came upon the world, many might gather to the ark, and hing about the ſides of it, and climb up on it for ſhelter; but the waves at laſt waſhed them away: none came to it with ſucceſs, nor were ſaved, but ſuch as got in to the ark; ſo, unleſs you get in to Chriſt, be united to him, and implanted in him, as a branch to the ſtock, ſo as to derive life from him, and grow up in him; if you be not thus found in him, you cannot be ſaved by him, though in ſeveral reſpects you may lean upon him, and take hold of him. They gather to him with ſucceſs, that get in to him. O happy they, that are gathered to him, ſo as to win him!

him! Phil. iii. 8. He that wins, ſucceeds; and much winning, much ſucceſs; and they may laugh that win; for they win all, who win Chriſt: they win his perſon, for their Huſband; they win his purchaſe, for their jointure; his covenant, for their charter; his Spirit, for their counſeller; his righteouſneſs, for their robe; his grace, for their ornament; his glory, for their crown; and all his fulneſs, for their ſupply: they may live upon their winning for ever.

9. This gathering power is exerted irreverſibly, yet gradually: when God gathers ſinners to Chriſt, he gathers them irreverſibly; For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance: He never leaves drawing of them, and gathering them to him, till he hath gathered them all round about his throne in glory: his gathering grace works a laſting impreſſion, and abiding effect on them; the ſeed of God remains in them. Many hundred ſermons you have heard, and all theſe excellent truths evaniſh, and ſlip off from your memory, as water falling on a rock: but O, ſays the believer, though I forget much, yet I think I will never forget ſuch a word, that came to my ſoul with a glance of glorious majeſty in it, and filled all the powers of my ſoul with a divine ſeraphic enlargement: I will never forget thy precepts; for by them thou haſt quickened me. Chriſt having begun to gather, goes on with the ſoul conſtantly, till the buſineſs be done and ended; For he waits to be gracious, Iſa. xxx. 18. He will not take a refuſal, nor deſiſt for an ill anſwer; and whatever interruption may be after laying the foundation, yet he carries on the good work: it is not altogether ſtopt, as it is with others, that may be under ſome common operations of the Spirit; the Lord may leave them and never return: but here he renews his viſits, and gradually advances his gathering work; For his going forth is prepared as the morning, Hoſ. vi. 3.; and he comes to them as the rain, as the latter and former rain upon the earth, which makes the fruits of the ground gradually to ſpring up. "A "ſudden work is ſeldom a ſound work," ſays one. However his ordinary way of gathering is by various degrees; he gives them now a pull, and then a pull; here a little, and there a little.

10. This gathering power is exerted remarkably: Hence the ſoul can ſay, Once I was blind, now I ſee. Though the kingdom of heaven comes not with outward obſervation; yet either in the beginning, or progreſs, or both, it is remarkable, diſcernable, and ſenſibly felt, by the ſoul that is wrought upon and gathered: he hears the voice of the great Shepherd, he ſees his glory, he feels his power. Sometimes it is remarkable, in the very beginning; like a man born blind, and come to age, and getting his eyes ſuddenly opened, he cannot know the time: in others it is not ſo remarkable, till the progreſs thereof make it ſo; like rain dropping from a houſe-top on a flint-ſtone, that by conſtant dropping makes a hollow in the ſtone; when it begins to make the hollow at firſt, is hard to tell, but that it is made, is remarkably evident: even ſo here, by the conſtant dropping of the rain of the Spirit's influences, from time to time, there is an hollow made in the heart; the man is gradually emptied of ſin, and ſelf-righteouſneſs; and nothing can fill that hollow, but a God in Chriſt: when it began at firſt, he cannot tell; but now it is remarkable, if grace be in any meaſure exerciſed.——Thus you ſee the qualities of God's gathering people, yet after all, we are not capable to give an exact account of the outgoings of this mighty gathering grace: many feel it, who cannot tell the particular manner thereof; For the wind bloweth where it liſteth, and we hear the ſound thereof, but know not whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth, John iii. 8.*

2*dly*, ACTIVELY, viewed; the qualities of this gathering, that is, of the peoples gathering to Shiloh; or the way how faith is exerciſed, or how the ſoul acts, when it is prevailed upon to come to the Lord Jeſus, and ſo to be gathered unto Shiloh. In general, it is by FAITH that they gather to him; and hence this gathering to Shiloh is ſo frequently called a coming to him, and believing on him, truſting and ſtaying ourſelves upon him. In this gathering unto Shiloh, the ſoul acts believingly; and all the other qualities of this gathering are reducible to this, and are ſo many ways, wherein faith acts, in coming and gathering to Chriſt; or how, being acted they act: and here is matter for trial; particularly then,

1. In this active gathering unto Shiloh, people are made to act ſpiritually; for it is a ſpiritual gathering, under the conduct of the Spirit of God, as a Spirit of faith, making the ſoul to gather under the wings of Chriſt the Meſſias. It is not by natural might, but by the power of the divine Spirit, that ſinners gather to a Saviour: Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, ſaith the Lord; even the exceeding greatneſs of his almighty power, Eph. i. 19. There is a ſpiritual internal principle, from which the man acts, in his gathering to Shiloh, even the Spirit of God as the main, and the new heart as the ſubordinate principle of faith in the man. It is not the Spirit's working extrinſically upon the man; hypocrites may have the Spirit working on them extrinſically, to the production of great affections and enlargements, while they are not ſavingly gathered: but this ſpiritual act is from a ſpiritual principle, whereof the Spirit of God within is the ſpring. The former is but a natural acting by ſome external objects, it is like a pool fed by water from the clouds; the other is like a well fed by a ſpring within.

But here a queſtion may be propounded, How ſhall I know the difference betwixt theſe two, viz. the Spirit's working on me by his common motions, and his working in me as a living principle?

To which we might reply, Why, the common motions of the Spirit, externally moving the affections, differ from the ſaving operations of the Spirit, internally elevating the ſoul to a God in Chriſt, as a land-flood differs from a living ſpring: the land-flood is maintained externally by the clouds; the living fountain is maintained internally by its own ſpring: thus the hypocrites frames and affections are maintained only by external means and objects, ſuch as the tuneable voice of the miniſter; ſo Ezekiel was to his hearers as a very lovely ſong of one that hath a pleaſant voice, and can play well on an inſtrument, Ezek. xxxiii. 32.; and when the external object or excitement is over, then their frame and affection falls, becauſe the only thing that maintained it is gone: whereas, in the ſpiritual acting of the ſoul that is gathering to Shiloh, though faith comes by hearing externally, yet the Spirit of God being received by the hearing of faith, this internal principle of ſpiritual life does many times animate the ſoul to ſpiritual work, when all external objects and operations fail; and this may be known, juſt as a ſpring-well is known by the bubbling up of the water. Thus is the Spirit's inhabitation known by the actings of the graces of the Spirit, ſuch as faith, love, repentance, joy in the Lord, and the like.

2. In gathering to Shiloh, people are made to act knowingly and judiciouſly, under the influences of the Spirit, as a Spirit of light; and to act as in a matter of the greateſt concern, with judgment and underſtanding, ſaying, as John vi. 68. To whom ſhall we go? thou haſt the words of eternal life. We believe and are ſure that thou art Chriſt, the Son of the living God. Many gather together in a confuſed way, and know not wherefore they meet together; but this gathering includes knowledge, and ſaving ſpiritual illumination: They that know thy name, will put their truſt in thee, Pſal. ix. 10. They that know him, will gather to him: there muſt be a ſeeing of the Son, before there can be a believing in him, or gathering to him. Many, inſtead of gathering to Chriſt, they gather to an idol of their own fancy; when they hear of Chriſt, their idolatrous carnal mind repreſents a carnal image of Chriſt in their own brain: as thoſe, Hoſ. xiii. 2. that are ſaid to have made idols according to their own underſtanding; ſo many, in their own imagination, form an idea of Chriſt; and this idea or image of Chriſt, that they have in their own mind, is all that they have for Chriſt. But, O Sirs, when Chriſt is externally revealed in the goſpel, there muſt be a marvellous light diſcovering him in himſelf, making him known, though not perfectly, yet really and truly as he is; not only as he is man, but as God-man, having all the fulneſs of the Godhead in him, and all the glory of God appearing in his face, 2 Cor. iv. 6. ſo as the ſoul cannot but cleave and adhere to him. A painted ſun will neither give light nor heat, but the real ſun gives both: ſo a painted image and repreſentation of Chriſt, in the imagination, gives no ſpiritual light, heat, nor communicates any transforming virtue; but the true Sun of righteouſneſs ariſeth with healing under his wings. It is true, this light is not without miſts and ſmoke, ſent forth from the bottomleſs pit, to darken all; but yet there is ſuch a clear diſcovery of the man's inability, of God's gracious offer, and Chriſt's good-will and mind to the bargain, as determines the ſoul to its duty.

3. In gathering to Shiloh, people are made to act fiducially: this is connected with the former; They that know thy name, will put their truſt in thee, Pſal. ix. 10. This I call an acting fiducially; that is, with a believing perſuaſion and particular application. The good news, that Shiloh is come, that Jeſus Chriſt is come to ſave ſinners, even the chief of ſinners, is received as a faithful ſaying, and ſo with believing perſuaſion; and as worthy of all acceptation, and ſo with particular application. Perſuaſion with application muſt be in the nature of faith, according to the meaſure and degree of faith. If it be weak faith, it is a weak perſuaſion; if ſtrong faith, a ſtrong perſuaſion: and it is not a natural perſuaſion, a man perſuading himſelf that all ſhall be well with him, and ſo no more of it; nay, it is ſupernatural and comes of God, which natural, carnal perſuaſion does not, Gal. v. 8. This perſuaſion comes not of him that calleth you, intimating, that right perſuaſion comes of God; like that of Abraham, Rom. iv. 20, 21. He ſtaggered not at the promiſe of God through unbelief, but was ſtrong in the faith, giving glory to God; being fully perſuaded, that he that had promiſed was able to perform. And like that of the old-teſtament believers, Heb. xi. 13. who received not the promiſes by feeling, but by faith. But how? why, they were perſuaded of them, and embraced them.

But here there is a twofold perſuaſion that ought to be carefully diſtinguiſhed, and the confounding whereof occaſions many miſtakes and miſrepreſentations; namely, a fiducial perſuaſion, and an evidential perſuaſion. The former is the aſſurance of faith, and in the nature of it; the other is the aſſurance of ſenſe, and conſequential to faith; and is not properly faith at all, but ſenſe. Now, this fiducial perſuaſion differs from evidential, in four reſpects.

(1.) They differ in their acts: by fiducial perſuaſion, the man receives and reſts upon Chriſt, and truſts in him for ſalvation to himſelf, believing and expecting this ſalvation according to the promiſe of the goſpel, and as Chriſt is offered and exhibite to him therein: but by evidential perſuaſion, the man knows and feels that he hath received Chriſt. The former every believer hath, when he acts faith; the latter many believers want even when they act faith, becauſe, though they may be conſcious that they are acting upon Chriſt for ſalvation, yet they may not be conſcious of the quality of the act, if it is ſaving or not.

(2.) They differ in their order: we firſt believe, by a fiducial perſuaſion; before we can be ſure, by an evidential perſuaſion: the one is the cauſe, and the other the effect. The perſuaſion, that is in faith, is like the heat in the fire; the perſuaſion, that is after faith, is like heat in the room, that is the effect of the former: and, becauſe aſſurance (that is commonly ſo called, namely, the aſſurance of ſenſe) is the effect of faith; this will not prove, that there is no aſſurance in faith, no more than heat in the room will prove, that there is no heat in the fire; for the contrary is rather evident.

(3.) They differ in their objects and grounds: the object and ground of fiducial perſuaſion, or of the aſſurance of faith, is without the man, and looks to the word and promiſe of God, the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, the truth and faithfulneſs of God: but the object and foundation of evidential perſuaſion, or of the aſſurance of ſenſe, is within the man, and looks to the work of God within; ſuch as graces, attainments, and experiences. As there is a great difference betwixt a man's being perſuaded, that he hath ſuch a ſum of money, becauſe he hath it upon bond, or good ſecurity; and his being perſuaded thereof, becauſe he hath it in his hand, in his cheſt or coffers; ſo here, by the perſuaſion of faith, the man is perſuaded of ſalvation through Chriſt, becauſe he hath it upon bond, namely, God's promiſe ſealed with Chriſt's blood, which is good ſecurity: but the ground of the perſuaſion of ſenſe, is the man's having it in his hand, or ſo much of it, which is not faith, but ſenſe.

(4.) They differ in their effects: the effect of faith, or fiducial perſuaſion, is juſtification; the effect of ſenſe, or evidential perſuaſion, is conſolation: a man is not juſtified by his evidential perſuaſion, or by knowing and feeling that Chriſt is his; but he is juſtified by his fiducial perſuaſion, by his fiducial knowledge, whereby he receives and reſts upon Chriſt as his, and truſts in him for ſalvation to himſelf: by this fiducial knowledge, I ſay, is juſtification; By his knowledge ſhall my righteous Servant juſtify many, Iſa. liii. 11. *

Now, if theſe two were carefully diſtinguiſhed, and that people conſidered, that it is the former, namely, fiducial perſuaſion, that we put into the nature of faith, as eſſential to it, not the latter, namely, evidential perſuaſion, which is conſequential to it; it would prevent many miſtakes, and miſrepreſentations on this head; as if ſome placed aſſurance ſo in the nature of faith, as that none were to be reckoned believers, but ſuch as have this full evidential perſuaſion, and aſſurance of ſenſe, which is a groſs miſapprehenſion of matters, and flows from the confounding of this twofold perſuaſion, which differ as much as faith and ſenſe; aſſurance of faith carries in it the perſuaſion of the faithfulneſs of God in the promiſe; the aſſurance of ſenſe carries in it a perſuaſion of the reality of grace in the heart: by the one we ſee with our eyes, as it were; by the other we handle with our hands the word of life: the one, to wit, Faith, is begun viſion; the other, to wit, Senſe, is begun fruition: aſſurance of faith is eſſential to faith, the aſſurance of ſenſe is conſequential to it, and not always in, or with it. And hence we ſay, with reſpect to this evidential aſſurance and perſuaſion, as our Confeſſion hath it, "That it does not ſo belong "to the eſſence of faith, but that a true be- "liever may wait long, and conflict with ma- "ny difficulties, before he be partaker of it;" namely, of that aſſurance, that is grounded upon the inward evidence of grace, and teſtimony of the Spirit, which is the aſſurance of ſenſe there ſpoken of; but the aſſurance of faith, which is founded upon the divine truth of the promiſe of ſalvation, and upon the word of God without us, as the object thereof, this muſt be as eſſential to faith, as ſeeing is eſſential to the eye. And yet this will not ſay, that the believer hath always even this fiducial perſuaſion, unleſs his faith be in exerciſe: for, as it is the nature of the eye to ſee, though the man, that hath eyes, is ſometimes ſleeping, or winking, or dimſighted; ſo it is in the nature of faith, to be perſuaded of the favour and good-will of God in Chriſt, as revealed in the word of grace, though he, that hath this faith, is ſometimes doubting; ſometimes faith is not exerciſed; ſometimes the eye of faith is dimmed with the duſt of corruption and unbelief. It is with faith, as with other graces: as ſome have a true love to Chriſt, yet dare not ſay they love, becauſe they have ſo much enmity remaining: they have true grace, but dare not ſay they have it, becauſe they have too much ſin and corruption; but their doubting of their love and grace does not infer, that they have no love, no grace; ſo ſome have this fiducial perſuaſion, and aſſurance of faith, who yet dare not ſay they have it, becauſe they have ſo much unbelief and ſo many doubts: but as love is oppoſite to enmity, and grace oppoſite to corruption, though they are in the ſame ſubject; ſo is faith oppoſite to doubting, in its very nature, even though faith and doubting may be in the ſame believer, as light and darkneſs in the ſame air; yet their natures are oppoſite to one another.

As this fiducial act of gathering to Shiloh imports a believing perſuaſion, ſo alſo a particular application. In the offer of the goſpel, ſalvation is particularly held forth to every one, ſaying, The promiſe is to you; to you is the word of this ſalvation ſent; therefore in gathering to Chriſt, people are to lay hold on ſalvation to themſelves particularly: Chriſt came to ſave ſinners, of whom, ſays Faith, I am the chief; mercy is held out to me, and I lay hold on it as held out to me. As when the law comes with power, it ſays not only in the general, All have ſinned; but it comes in particular, ſaying, you have ſinned; and makes you ſay, I am the man, the ſinful man, the guilty man, the condemned man: ſo when the goſpel comes with power, it ſpeaks to the perſon particularly, ſaying, not only, Chriſt came to ſave ſinners; but, Here is a Saviour for you: and the ſoul is made to ſay, I am concerned in this. The goſpel offers life and ſalvation to the poor ſoul particularly, and he is commanded to believe for ſalvation particularly; and the man believes with particular application. Thus a certain divine illuſtrates it: "As the ſad ſentence of the law, generally and "indefinitely held forth in the ſcripture, is par- "ticularly applied for his [viz. the man's] con- "viction and condemnation; ſo the precious "promiſe of the goſpel, generally and indefi- "nitely held forth to all ſinners, that hear the "goſpel, is particularly applied for ſalvation:" and without this particular application, there is no effectually gathering to Shiloh. When goſpel-light ſhines into the heart of the awakened ſinner, it applies the promiſe particularly to itſelf, as it did formerly apply the threatenings of the law particularly; and as from the law it did particularly condemn itſelf; ſo now, from the goſpel, it does by faith particularly abſolve itſelf, or rather find itſelf abſolved from the law-ſentence, in its being helped to make particular application of the goſpel-promiſes. Again,

4. In gathering to Shiloh, the people that are brought to him are made to act evangelically, or to believe in a goſpel-manner; to receive and reſt upon him, as he is offered to us in the goſpel. — There is a goſpel-ground, on which the people gather: legal faith acts, upon a legal ground, ſuch as inherent ſtrength, and natural righteouſneſs; but true faith acts upon the ground of a borrowed ſtrength, and an imputed righteouſneſs of another, ſaying, In the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength, Iſa. xlv. 24. This gathering to Shiloh is a ſelf-renouncing buſineſs, ſtripping the man of his own righteouſneſs, of his own ſtrength, and taking him intirely off his own bottom: they that are gathered to Chriſt, are gathered out of themſelves. There is a goſpel-rule alſo, whereby they gather, in a ſuitableneſs to the goſpel-offer and diſpenſation; So we preach, and ſo ye believed, 1 Cor. xv. 11. Faith anſwers the goſpel-call, as the impreſs upon the wax does anſwer the engravings of the ſeal; ſo Chriſt offers himſelf, and ſo ſinners gather unto him, and believe in him for wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption. Hence again, there is a goſpel-order, wherein wherein the gathering of the people is to him; the ſoul, in coming to him, receives firſt the perſon, and then the portion; even as God gives Chriſt, and then with him all things, Rom. viii. 32. The people gather to him in a day of power, firſt, as JESUS, and then, as a LORD; firſt, for JUSTIFICATION, and then, for SANCTIFICATION*. Legal adventures invert this goſpel-order, ſeeking ſanctification firſt, that upon that bottom it may build its juſtification; Seeking righteouſneſs, as it were, by the works of the law; Rom. ix. 32. And however confuſed and indiſtinct the true believer's faith may be, in his firſt believing, yet repeated acts of faith may afterwards make it more and more evident to him; that right believing is in the foreſaid goſpel-order.—There is a goſpel-warrant, upon which this gathering proceeds; they that gather to Shiloh act warrantably, upon the warrant of an objective ſufficiency: there is a ſufficient Chriſt preſented. O the ſufficiency of his perſon; being God-man in one perſon! the ſufficiency of his offices and commiſſion, being ſealed of God to be a Surety, a Saviour, a Prophet, a Prieſt, and King! the ſufficiency of his righteouſneſs, his doing and dying, his obedience and ſatisfaction! the ſufficiency of his power, as being able to ſave to the uttermoſt! the ſufficiency of his will, while he proclaims his good-will towards men; and that God is in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelf! They gather upon the warrant of a general goſpel-diſpenſation of grace through Chriſt, in the external revelation of the word, where the elect are not characteriſed more than others, but life and ſalvation through Chriſt is held out to ſinners of mankind, without diſtinction of nation, ſtate, or condition; and ſo in an indefinite way. Thus run all the promiſes, except theſe that are made to believers, or ſuch as have grace already: to them indeed the promiſes are definite; ſo alſo they are definite to the elect, in the decree of heaven; but in the external diſpenſation of the goſpel, they are indefinite and general, ſaying, To you belongs the covenants and the promiſes, Rom. ix. 4. And as the promiſe is indefinite, ſo the call is univerſal, whether by exhortations, invitations, intreaties, counſels, or commands, to all and every one, to come and receive Chriſt, and all his ſure mercies, freely, Iſa. lv. 1. And upon theſe goſpel-warrants do the people gather to Shiloh. In a word, the whole covenant, and all the promiſes of it, are held forth to all the people, that they may gather to it; I will give thee for a covenant of the people, Iſa. xlii. 6. Hence we are ſaid, to receive the promiſe through faith, Gal. iii. 14.; to be perſuaded of them, and embrace them, Heb. xi. 13: and the faith we are called to, is ſaid to be a receiving of the word, Acts ii. 41.; a taking hold of his covenant, Iſa. lvi. 4.; a believing of the teſtimony, 2 Theſſ. i. 10. Chriſt cannot be received, but as he is offered; he is not offered to us, but in a word, a promiſe, a teſtimony: hence the ſubſtantial act of faith being an aſſent, there muſt be a word, promiſe, or teſtimony, for faith's immediate object, wherein we ſee and receive Chriſt: if a man would ſee his ſhadow in a glaſs, he firſt looks to the glaſs, and through it ſees his own ſhadow, or image; the glaſs is the immediate object, to which his ſight is directed: ſo, in order to our ſeeing of Chriſt, the glaſs of the goſpel-promiſe is ſet before us. Thus a diſplayed covenant of grace, as ſtanding faſt in Chriſt, ſeems to be the warrant for the people gathering to Shiloh, Jer. l. 5. Come and let us join ourſelves to the Lord, in a perpetual covenant (ſays our tranſlation) that ſhall not be forgotten: I know this is viewed, by ſome, in another ſenſe, with reference to our covenanting; but I think the original reading that others notice is very pleaſant and evangelical; for it may be read, Come and let us join ourſelves to the Lord, the perpetual covenant ſhall not be forgotten: q. d. Come and let us gather together unto Shiloh; why, the everlaſting covenant, that ſtands faſt in him, who is the all of the covenant, ſhall never be forgotten. And ſo it may be viewed, as an encouragement of faith, and reaſon for the gathering of the people to him: behold he is given for a covenant of the people, and this perpetual covenant ſhall not be forgotten.——Thus they are made to act evangelically.

5. In gathering to Shiloh, the people that are brought to him are made to act cordially and ſpontaneouſly, with heart and will; yea, with a thouſand good-wills; O take my heart, ſays the man in the day of power; take it, and a thouſand bleſſings with it. It is true, there is no gathering, no approaching to him, without a draught of omnipotency; yet there is no violence in it, no force or compulſion, but when power comes, it takes away the backwardneſs and unwillingneſs; Thy people ſhall be willingneſſes, Pſal. cx. 3. Never did a mariner draw near to a ſhore with better will after ſhipwreck, than the ſoul comes to Chriſt, in the day of power: the perſon being drawn, yields neceſſarily and willingly both: Draw me, we will run after thee; DRAW ME, there is the almighty power exerted, in its irreſiſtible operation; WE WILL RUN, there is the voluntary motion of the ſoul. So that this gathering does not deſtroy, but eſtabliſh the liberty of the will of the rational agent. Reaſon is not hoodwinked; the perſon approaches to a God in Chriſt, upon the moſt rational grounds, ſeeing and apprehending his miſery while far from God, and the happineſs of nearneſs to him in Chriſt. And this gathering is as cordial as it is voluntary; as the will is inclined, ſo the heart is inflamed. Hypocrites may gather to ordinances, and gather to a communion-table with the outward man; they may draw near to God with the mouth, and honour him with the lip, while the heart is removed far from him: this is what God complains of, Their heart is far from me. But what do I regard a gathering of dead corpſes about my table and ordinances, a gathering of bodies, while there is no gathering of hearts? But in this gracious gathering, the language of the ſoul is, O many a time I have given my heart away to the devil; I gave my heart and affections away to luſts; I gave my heart away to the world; and now, ſhall I give Chriſt leſs than I gave them? It will be a miracle if he accept of it, after my manifold departures; but, O if I had as many ſouls as I had ſins, I would give them to him! O if I could believe in him with the whole heart, pray to him with the whole heart, ſerve him with the whole heart; and that all my affections, that have been ſtruggling among the creatures, may be gathered to him, and centred in him! Yea, in the day of power, a man finds himſelf ſo willingly and freely to come to Chriſt, that he is rolled upon him, as if he were carried on a wave of the ſea, or rather in a chariot chariot paved with love: formerly he found believing hard; yea, that it was impoſſible for him to come to Chriſt: but now he finds it impoſſible for him to ſtay away from Chriſt. Believing is ſo ſweet and eaſy then, that, as if he had wings, he flees for refuge to the hope ſet before him, Heb. vi. 18. Though, as a great divine, [viz. Dr. Owen] expreſſes it, "Faith is in "the underſtanding, in reſpect of its being "and ſubſiſtence; yet it is in the will and "heart, in reſpect of its effectual working. As "to its eſſence, it lies in aſſent, but the ſaving "quality of this aſſent is, that it is cordial; and "it is not true faith, if it be not a cordial aſſent "to God's teſtimony concerning Chriſt." And indeed there is a great difference betwixt a dead aſſent, and a cordial hearty aſſent to any truth: "Suppoſe, ſays one, you were in a fo-"reign land, and that you got a ſure account, "that the Turks have got a victory over the "Perſians; and at the ſame time you hear, that "your beloved ſpouſe is recovered of a dan-"gerous diſeaſe, that all your family is well, "and your affairs proſper: there is a great "difference betwixt the way of aſſenting to "theſe two; you believe the former, but it "hath no impreſſion on your heart, it is only "a naked, heartleſs, unconcerned aſſent; but "you would believe the other cordially and "gladly, becauſe you are much concerned "therein: hence you would welcome the meſ-"ſenger." Thus the goſpel is not only a faithful ſaying, but worthy of all acceptation: and in gathering to Chriſt, in the day of power, the ſoul acts cordially.

6. In this gathering of the people to Shiloh, they are made to act humbly and reverentially: the man comes with a what am I? and what is my father's houſe? Behold I am vile! and if the Lord ſhall have mercy on me, it is well; grace ſhall have the glory: but if not, I may even preach his righteouſneſs in hell, and declare he never wronged me; he is a juſt God. O the ſoul acts humbly, in the day of powerful gathering; That thou mayeſt remember, and be confounded, and never open thy mouth, becauſe of thy ſhame, when I am pacified towards thee for all that thou haſt done, Ezek. xvi. 63. O but a ſoul, convinced of its own unworthineſs, and deſert of hell, and that ſcarce can expect any thing but utter damnation; how does the firſt dawning of mercy melt and humble it! O whence is this, to ſuch a worm as I! He ſtands behind Chriſt weeping, and waſhing his feet with tears. When one of the firſt works of the Spirit in converſion, is, to give the ſoul a light in its hand, to go down into the dark cellars of his heart, and make diſcoveries, ſo as he ſtands amazed, trembling at the ſight of himſelf; and the next work of the Spirit, is, to lead him to the lightſom chamber of the King of glory, to bring him from darkneſs to light: O how is he melted with a ſenſe of mercy, and humbled with a ſenſe of his own monſtrous vileneſs! Now mine eyes ſee thee; wherefore I abhor myſelf. Oh! in ſuch a day, the man ſees his heart vile, his lips vile, his practice vile, his righteouſneſs vile and filthy rags; he ſees in his boſom, as it were, an hell of devils and unclean ſpirits; that when he thinks on himſelf, it makes him loath and ſcunner, as it were, like a man ready to bock or vomit, when he ſees ſome filthy naſty thing, eſpecially among his meat; or as a man's fleſh will creep, when he ſees ſome venomous toad or viper: ſo it is with theſe, that ſee themſelves in the Lord's light, in the day of their gathering to Shiloh. They that were never humbled, were never gathered; and they that have been deeply humbled, have come to God with ropes about their necks, as worthy to be caſt over the gibbet, and hanged over the fire of God's everlaſting vengeance: they have been humbled to the duſt; yea, humbled to nothing before the Lord; and to a thouſand times leſs and worſe than nothing; yea, they cannot ſee ſuch vile monſters among all the devils in hell as themſelves; they come therefore with humility, reverence, and godly fear.

7. In this gathering of the people to Shiloh, under the influence of gathering power and grace, they are made to act boldly, though humbly; Heb. iv. 16. Let us come boldly to the throne of grace, Heb. x. 19. We have boldneſs to enter into the holieſt by the blood of Jeſus. Eph. iii. 12. In whom we have boldneſs, and acceſs with confidence, by the faith of him. Here is the boldneſs of faith, in oppoſition to the boldneſs of preſumption. Bold faith comes walking on a ſea of blood, or rather upon the red and white pavement of the active and paſſive obedience of Chriſt. This boldneſs of faith's approach to a God in Chriſt is remarkable for ſeveral things.—It is remarkable for the vehemency, that is ſometimes in it: O how vehemently does the ſoul act, when it is laying ſiege to heaven, by the prayer of faith and importunate ſupplication, crying, Lord, I believe, help my unbelief; Lord, increaſe my faith; Lord, give a drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem! O for a drop of the precious blood of the Lamb! O man, woman, where are the bed-ſides, and ſecret corners, that can bear witneſs to your beſieging heaven with your vehement cries?—It is remarkable for the violence that is in it; The kingdom of heaven ſuffers violence, and the violent take it by force. The man acts, as it were, violently; If I periſh, I periſh; at Chriſt I muſt be. It acts in a manner wilfully; Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him: I will not let thee go, except thou bleſs me. The ſoul, as it were, violently caſts itſelf upon the free grace and faithfulneſs of God, in the greateſt diſtreſs; and here it lies, as it were, at anchor in ſuch ſtormy days, Heb. vi. 19.—It is remarkable for the confidence that is in it: it hath the confidence to give God a teſtimonial, as it were; when faith is acted, not only does God give the man a teſtimonial, Heb. xi. 5, 6. Enoch had this teſtimony, that he pleaſed God; but without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe him; but what is yet more ſtrange, faith not only gets a teſtimonial from God, but gives a teſtimonial to him, John iii. 33. He that hath received his teſtimony, hath ſet to his ſeal that God is true. Here is the confidence and aſſurance of faith; it acts upon an infallible teſtimony, the divine veracity and faithfulneſs; a thus ſaith the Lord, is the firm foundation, upon which faith is built. It is a receiving the record of God: and all the acts of faith, without this, are but as ſo many arrows ſhot at random in the open air. Many a confident addreſs does faith make; it ventures to go as far forward as the holy of holies, by the blood of Jeſus; it ventures the ſoul upon the blood of the Son of God, and upon the promiſe of a God in Chriſt: here is the boldneſs of faith. To gather in to Shiloh, and believe in him, is in effect to ſay, I adventure my ſoul upon nothing in the world, but upon the promiſe of a God, that I have provoked, and been an enemy to all my days; I have nothing, but the word of this God; and yet I muſt adventure upon it, even my everlaſting ALL. It is an adventuring act, like Peter upon the boiſterous water, with this in his mouth and heart, Maſter, ſave me. To venture upon the promiſe of a provoked God, and to believe him to be a God in Chriſt reconciled, according to his word, upon the account of the ranſom he hath found out, and the propitiation he hath ſet forth: here is the boldneſs of faith.—And again, it is remarkable for its reſoluteneſs: the perſon, like the woman with the bloody iſſue, preſſes reſolutely through crouds of devils and luſts; and with an irreſiſtible intenſeneſs of ſoul, forces a paſſage through all obſtructions, to get a touch of the ſceptre of King Jeſus. We are called to come with full aſſurance of faith, with an holy reſolution and courage. When a poor trembling Roman approached the emperor Auguſtus, he was in ſome fear; "What, ſays the emperor, "take you me for an elephant that will tear "you?" So we ſhould come with boldneſs to Chriſt. He encourages the worſt of ſinners; he hath given his word for it, which is as firm as the pillars of heaven and earth, and ſtable like mountains of braſs, that him that cometh he will in no wiſe caſt out: when he comes at firſt, he will not caſt him out; when he comes again afterwards, he will not caſt him out; he will not caſt out the vileſt and moſt deſperate ſinner that comes; he will not caſt him out of his favour now; he will not caſt him out of heaven at laſt: no, no; He will in no wiſe caſt him out. We may gather to Shiloh, and come with the greateſt boldneſs; and welcome, welcome, welcome ſhall we be for ever.—In a word, this boldneſs is remarkable for the ſolemnity that is in it, it is a ſolemn gathering: the people, that gather to Shiloh, come to him with a behold, Jer. iii. 22. Behold, we come unto thee; for thou art the Lord our God. The heart goes out with ſome kind of eminency and ſolemnity: Behold we come; let heaven and earth be witneſſes: we take inſtruments, as it were, in every angel's hand, in every creature's hand, in every ſpire of graſs's hand, that we come back to a God in Chriſt: we are ſatisfied the whole univerſe atteſt, and behold what we are going to do. Not that the believer loves to blaze abroad his religion indecently; no, no; it is eſpecially a ſilent, ſecret, heart-gathering, and ſoul-approach to Shiloh: but they are ſo far from being aſhamed of the match, and ſo well-pleaſed are they with it, that they are content it be regiſtrate in heaven, and that the whole creation atteſt it; Behold we come! The man acts with a ſolemn boldneſs.

8. In this gathering of the people to Shiloh, they that are under the conduct of gathering grace and power, are made to act regularly: no wonder, for in gathering to Shiloh, their footſteps are ordered by the Lord, and according to his word, the unerring rule of faith and manners. It is in many reſpects a regular addreſs and approach: and here I ſhall name ſome other particulars, which I ſuppoſe may be included in the regularity of this approach.

(1.) When there is a gathering to Shiloh, the regular approach and addreſs to him is made penitentially: and faith in its addreſſes to him acts penitentially, mournfully, and tenderly; Going and weeping they ſhall go, and ſeek the Lord their God: they ſhall aſk the way to Zion, with their faces thitherward, ſaying, Come, and let us join ourſelves to the Lord, Jer. l. 4, 5. Going and weeping, this manner of gathering is not inconſiſtent with the cordial and chearful acting, that I ſpoke of already; for the tears of goſpel repentance are tears of joy: it is ſaid of the new-teſtament believers, Iſa. xxxv. 10. The ranſomed of the Lord ſhall return, and come to Zion with ſongs, and everlaſting joy upon their heads: they ſhall obtain joy and gladneſs, and ſorrow and ſighing ſhall flee away. Though this will not take place in its perfection but in heaven, yet it hath its begun accompliſhment in all believers that are gathered in to Shiloh; they obtain joy and gladneſs, and LEGAL ſorrow and ſighing do flee away; for, according to the meaſure of their faith in Chriſt, they have joy and peace in believing: yea, in him believing, they rejoice, with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory. But goſpel-ſorrow, and godly-ſorrow does not marr the muſic in this joyful ſong; for, while they look on him, whom they have pierced, and mourn, Zech. xii. 10. and ſee him wounded for their ſins, Iſa. lv. 5. they ſee, at the ſame time, the blood iſſuing out at theſe wounds, to be juſtice-ſatisfying blood, wrath-appeaſing blood, hell-quenching blood, and heaven-purchaſing blood; hence a ſweet mixture of joy and ſorrow both. Theſe ſeem to be joined together; They ſhall come with weeping, and with ſupplications will I lead them, Jer. xxxi. 9. It may be rendered, as you may ſee, in the margin of ſome of your Bibles, with FAVOURS will I lead them. As the ſenſe of their own ſins and ingratitude makes them come with weeping; ſo, at the ſame time, the ſenſe of God's favours, and kindneſs in Chriſt, makes them come with rejoicing; for, with loving-kindneſs does he draw them, and with favours does he lead them. O! when he favours ſuch a guilty ſinner with a pardon, ſuch a filthy ſinner with a laver of blood, ſuch a naked ſinner with a robe of righteouſneſs, ſuch a black ſinner with a beautiful ornament, ſuch a hell-deſerving ſinner with a promiſe of glory, ſuch a backſliding profligate with a merciful viſit or return, and ſuch a prodigal wretch with a compaſſionate embracement; and thus with favours does lead them: O then it is hard to tell, whether the voice of joy, or the voice of weeping in the ſoul be loudeſt. But as we render it alſo, it is moſt expreſſive of this penitential addreſs, in gathering to Shiloh; With weeping, and with ſupplications doth he lead them. Indeed faith's approach is begun, maintained, and nouriſhed, by prayer and ſupplication, ſaying, Lord, I believe, help my unbelief; Lord, increaſe our faith. There are ſome who have a preſumptuous faith, that can believe when they will, without praying down the Spirit of faith from God; as they can eat and drink, and ſleep, and walk, and talk, though they pray not for ſtrength to do theſe things; ſo they can exerciſe their natural preſumptuous faith, ſaying, I truſt in God's mercy; and their falſe repentance, ſaying, God forgive me, I am a great ſinner: they can believe and repent, without prayer and ſupplication for grace and ſtrength to do ſo. But true grace, true faith and repentance is attained and maintained, in a way of ſupplication: and hence true faith does increaſe and decreaſe, according to the increaſe and decreaſe of the Spirit of prayer and ſupplication. If it be not ſo with you, man, man, know it, that though your falſe faith may give you ſome falſe peace for a while, yet when death and eternity ſtare you in the face, then the rottenneſs of your faith will be diſcovered; The hope of the hypocrite will periſh. They that gather to Shiloh, they come with weeping, and with ſupplication doth he lead them.

I am not here to enter upon the diſpute concerning the priority of faith to repentence, in their natural order, and in their acting and exerciſe; it is well if you know both, whether you know the order or not: only, if whatſoever is not of faith is ſin, you may gueſs what ſort of repentance it is that is not of faith: and when the word of God ſpeaks any where of the proper order, let your experience, conſonant to the word, witneſs, and you will find, that ſuch as the faith is, ſuch will the repentance be. Legal faith works legal repentance; goſpel faith, goſpel repentance; true faith, true repentance. Thus, when the people of Niniveh believed God, then they proclaimed a faſt, and put on ſackcloth, Jon. iii. 5.: when they believed his threatening, and yet that he was not irreconcileable, nor implacable, then they repented. Thus, when a man believes, and apprehends that God is pacified towards him, then he is confounded and aſhamed, Ezek. xvi. 63. When you have harſh thoughts of God, and no hope of favour at his hand, I ſuppoſe then you will find your heart hard like a ſtone, and inflexible; but when you get kindly thoughts of God, and apprehenſion of his mercy and good-will, and love to you in Chriſt, then I imagine you will find joyful meltings, and goſpel ſorrow. O the fire of God's love melts the ſoul! And the hardneſs and impenitency is healed, when the Sun of righteouſneſs ariſes with healing under his wings, Mal. iv. 2. The qualities of this penitential approach you may ſee, 2 Cor. vii. 11. For behold, this ſelf-ſame thing that ye ſorrowed after a godly ſort, what carefulneſs it wrought in you; yea, what clearing of yourſelves; yea, what indignation; yea, what fear; yea, what vehement deſire; yea, what zeal; yea, what revenge. And this penitential acting of faith runs through the whole of the believer's life, in an univerſal tenderneſs of diſpoſition and deportment, according to the meaſure of faith. And there are ſix tender things in it, which the believer hath. 1. He hath a tender heart, called a broken and contrite heart; broken for ſin, and from ſin: Joſiah his heart was tender. 2. A tender conſcience; ſome have a conſcience ſeared as with a hot iron, and that is a ſilent conſcience: but the penitent hath a ſmitten conſcience; as David's heart ſmote him, when he cut off the lop of Saul's garment. 3. A tender eye; They ſhall look on him whom they have pierced, and mourn: Rivers of tears run down their eyes, becauſe of their own ſins, and the ſins of others, who break God's law. 4. A tender ear, which being circumciſed, does hear and fear; To this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite heart, and trembles at my word. 5. A tender lip or tongue, that dare not lie, nor ſpeak prophanely: I ſaid, I will take heed to my ways, that I ſin not with my tongue. And, 6. A tender hand, that dares not touch the garments ſpoted with the fleſh, but ſtudies to ſhun all appearances of evil; or, if you will, you may add, 7. That he hath a tender foot, ſaying, with Hezekiah, I will go ſoftly all my years in the bitterneſs of my ſoul. And this leads to another quality of this regular approach.

(2.) When there is a gathering to Shiloh, the regular approach and addreſs to him is made obedientially, as well as penitentially: it is an obediential gathering. And as faith acts penitentially, ſo it acts obedientially; for it works by love, Gal. v. 6.; it purifies the heart, Acts xv. 9.; and the man that hath it purifies himſelf, even as God is pure, 1 John iii. 3. It ſtirs up to new obedience; for, Faith without works is dead, Jam. ii. 20, 26. Wherever it is, it is ſtill working, and it can no more be idle than the fire can be. It is true, We are juſtified by faith, without works, as the apoſtle ſays; that is, without the cauſality of works, without the conditionality of works, without the inſtrumentality of works, and without the influence of works upon our juſtification; but not without the preſence of works: for juſtifying faith is a ſanctifying thing, and natively works, as the fire natively burns. Common faith is a dead, uſeleſs faith, making no change or alteration on the ſoul where it is; but ſaving faith acts always obedientially: hence you read of the obedience of faith, Rom. xvi. 26.; importing, both that faith acts in obedience to the divine call at firſt, and that it influences the ſoul to all the acts of goſpel-obedience afterwards. O, ſays the returning ſinner, that is making this obediential addreſs to a God in Chriſt, I have been a fugitive ſervant to the moſt glorious Lord and Maſter; I have deſerted his ſervice, and denied my obedience; but now, Lord, nail my ear to the door-poſt, that I may ſerve thee for ever; nail my heart to thy ſervice, that no trouble, temptation, devil, or deſertion may drive me away from thee: nail my eyes to thy ſervice, that I may never look upon vanity; nail my hands to thy ſervice, that I may never do an ill turn; nail my feet to thy way, that I may never turn aſide from thee: let all the faculties of my ſoul be nailed to thy ſervice and obedience.

(3.) When there is a gathering to Shiloh, the regular addreſs to him is made ſpeedily: O the poor ſoul, that ſees itſelf ready to drop into hell, how ſpeedily, in the day of power, does it flee unto Chriſt! I flee to thee to hide me, ſays the Pſalmiſt: the flight of faith is very quick, quick and ſwift as lightning, that goes from the one end of heaven to the other in an inſtant; ſo when the ſoul is on wing, under the influence of the Spirit of faith, it can flee from earth to heaven in a moment. But this ſpeedy gathering, I underſtand eſpecially in oppoſition to delays, which are dangerous in religion: to delay coming to Chriſt one half-hour, is dangerous exceedingly; for, if you die within that half-hour, you are undone to eternity. Now, in a day of powerful gathering, the ſoul makes no longer delay; but is in an holy haſte; I made haſte and delayed not to keep thy righteous judgments. The man is made to flee with ſpeed, and to run with haſte out of Sodom.

(4.) When there is a gathering to Shiloh, the regular approach and addreſs to him is made deliberately; though it is with ſpeed, yet it is with deliberation: though none can believe too ſoon by a ſaving faith, yet ſome believe too ſoon by a temporary faith, never having weighed matters in the balance of the ſanctuary. The true approacher puts the matter in a fair balance: he puts the diſadvantages in one ſcale, ſaying, What will be my fare, if I come not to Chriſt? Why, they that are far from him him ſhall periſh; he puts the advantages in another ſcale, and comes at length to that concluſion, Pſal. lxxiii. 28. It is good for me to draw near to God. O! of all gatherings, the gathering to Shiloh is beſt: To whom ſhall I go? he hath the words of eternal life. The man is not affected only with a tranſient flaſh; no, by no means: he ſees the wicked oft in proſperity, and the godly in adverſity; he ſees the large and allurring offers that ſin, Satan, and the world make; and yet after all, he deliberately affirms, It is good for me to draw near to God and Chriſt: Let others ſay, as Pſal. iv. 6. Who will ſhew us any good? But my ſay ſhall be, Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance on me.

(5.) When there is a gathering to Shiloh, the regular approach and addreſs is made chaſtly and uprightly: the ſoul views the ſaying, that Chriſt came to ſave ſinners from ſin and wrath, not only as a faithful ſaying, but as worthy of all acceptation; becauſe the beauty of Chriſt is diſcovered. Some have their reaſon conquered, but not their love; and, therefore, they come to Chriſt feignedly, and not with the whole heart: their judgment draws one way, and their affections another; for their judgment is gained, but not their affections: as if one ſhould marry a woman, not becauſe of her beauty, but becauſe of her patrimony; not from a regard to her perſon, but love to her portion. Some take on with Chriſt, and take hold of the ſkirt of this Jew, who yet ſee no form or comelineſs in him, for which he ſhould be deſired. But as it is ſaid, The upright love thee; ſo they that in gathering to him act chaſtly and uprightly, they come to him out of pure love, not for ſervile ends; not to gratify a natural conſcience, not for fear of hell only, but from a great love to him, and a juſt eſteem of him, and a ſtrong deſire of fellowſhip with him. The man is content to come to Chriſt on mount Calvary, as well as on mount Tabor; when going to Golgotha in ignominy, as well as when riding to Jeruſalem in triumph: he cleaves to him, when people cry, Away with him, away with him; crucify him; as well as when they cry, Hoſanna to the ſon of David. He loves him when lying in the grave, as well as when mounted on a throne. The chaſte and upright comer cleaves to him, when kings and princes are againſt him, when laws and governments are againſt him, when potentates and parliaments are againſt him, as well as when they ſeem to be upon his ſide. It is true, indeed, that there are many unchaſte thoughts, and looks, and luſtings after idols in the hearts of true believers, and many defections and declinings may take place; but theſe are wreſtled with and oppoſed by them, and that not only by their light and conſcience, but by their love and affection to the Lord Jeſus, ſaying, Oh! ſhall I thus requit the Lord? So that in the main they are upright. But, to the ſame purpoſe,

6. When there is a gathering of the people to Shiloh, the right and regular approach and addreſs to him is made intirely and undividedly. Falſe and hypocritical comers, they come with a divided heart to a divided Chriſt; but true comers, with a whole heart to a whole Chriſt. The legaliſt would marry Chriſt, while yet his other huſband, the law, is not dead to him, nor he dead to it: but it is an adulterous and unlawful match, to join with another huſband while the firſt is living: hence true believers in Chriſt are ſaid to be dead to the law by the body of Chriſt, that they might be married to another, even to him who is raiſed from the dead, Rom. vii. 4. And God throws down the old building, turns him out of that ſhelter, lets him ſee all his legal duties, beſt performances, and moſt glaring graces, are but fig-leaves, inſufficient to cover his nakedneſs; and diſcovers the neceſſity, excellency, and glory of Chriſt's righteouſneſs: and the man ſubmits cordially to it, renouncing all hope and expectation of life, favour, and juſtification by the deeds of the law.—The carnal man would have Chriſt and his luſts too; But if you ſeek me, ſays Chriſt, let theſe go their way. Gathering grace makes the man ſay, What have I to do any more with idols?—The covetous man would have Chriſt and the world too: Chriſt ſatisfies his conſcience, and he flies to him for that; the world ſatisfies his heart, and he cleaves to it for that: but in the day of gathering power, the emptineſs of the world is diſcovered, and the man ſells all for the pearl of great price.

The man that comes to Chriſt, he comes for all theſe four things, 1 Cor. i. 30. for wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption: He comes to him as a Prophet, for wiſdom; as a Prieſt, for righteouſneſs; as a King, for ſanctification; and as his all in all, for complete redemption: and he can want none of theſe, becauſe he knows his own fooliſhneſs, guiltineſs, filthineſs, and miſery. The true believer dares not divide righteouſneſs from ſanctification, nor pardon from purity; yea, he comes to Chriſt for remiſſion of ſin for the right end. What is that? namely, that, being freed from the guilt of ſin, he may be freed from the dominion of it. Knowing that there is forgiveneſs with him, that he may be feared, he does not believe remiſſion of ſin that he may indulge himſelf in the commiſſion of it; no, no: the blood of Chriſt, that purges the conſcience from the guilt of ſin, does alſo purge the conſcience from dead works to ſerve the living God, Heb. ix. 14. They that come to Chriſt regularly then, they come ſo to him for righteouſneſs, that they may have him alſo for ſanctification; otherwiſe the man does not really deſire the favour and enjoyment of God, or to be in friendſhip with him who is a holy God. As the true lover loves him, not only becauſe he is good and merciful, but becauſe he is a pure and holy JESUS; ſo the true believer employs Chriſt for making him holy as well as happy: and hence draws virtue from him for killing of ſin, and quickening the ſoul in the way of duty. And the faith that can never keep you from a ſin, will never keep you out of hell: and the faith that cannot carry you to a duty, will not carry you to heaven. Juſtifying faith is a ſanctifying grace; it improves Chriſt undividedly. It is true, as it ſanctifies it does not juſtify; but that faith that juſtifies, does alſo ſanctify: as the ſun that enlightens hath heat with it; but it is not the heat of the ſun that inlightens, but the light thereof: ſo that faith that juſtifies hath love and ſanctity with it; but it is not the love and ſanctity that juſtifies, but faith as cloſing with Chriſt.

(7.) When there is a gathering of the people to Shiloh, the regular approach and addreſs to him is made excluſively; excluding all other Saviours, all other helps, all other props, ſaying, I will make mention of thy righteouſneſs, and of thine only, only, Pſal. lxxi. 16. To depend partly on Chriſt and partly upon our own righteouſneſs, is to ſet one foot upon firm ground, and another upon quick-ſand. If a man ſet one foot upon a rock, and another upon the deep water, and lean to them both with equal weight; yea, if he give any of his weight to the foot that is on the water, he will be ſure to ſink into the deep; ſo here: theſe who rely partly on the merits of Chriſt, and partly upon their own good works for juſtification, will inevitably periſh in the iſſue: therefore, in the day of gathering to Chriſt, the ſoul is brought to ſay, Surely in the Lord only have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength, Iſa. xlv. 24. Thus Paul excludes the beſt righteouſneſs that ever he had, either before or after converſion, from the matter of his juſtification, Phil. iii. 8, 9. When he compares his beſt righteouſneſs with Chriſt's, he looks upon it as a dunghil, a ſtinging dunghil, where there is no pleaſure; and a ſinking dunghil, where there is no ſtanding. Such is our righteouſneſs, if it be not excluded from our juſtification before God, and acceptance with him. If we go about to eſtabliſh our own righteouſneſs, it ſtinks in the divine noſtrils as dung: and not only ſo, but it is a ſinking ground to ſtand upon, there is no firm footing; the more a man leans to it, the more he ſinks in it. Chriſt's blood is the only ſacrifice of a ſweet ſmelling ſavour to God; every ſacrifice ſtinks, that is not perfumed therewith: Chriſt's righteouſneſs is the only ſure foundation and firm ground for ſtanding on before God. As the way of ſin is a ſinking way, ſo the way of ſelf-righteouſneſs is little better; for the ſin that is in man's beſt righteouſneſs trips up his heels, and lays him in the mire, where he ſinks to hell, if he be not brought to build upon a ſurer ground, and to take a better way.

(8.) When there is a gathering to Shiloh, the regular approach and addreſs to him is made progreſſively, as alſo peremptorily and irreverſibly, ſaying, as Pſal. lxxx. 17. Henceforth we will not go back. O! after we have taſted of the bitterneſs of ſin, and the bitterneſs of wrath; after the wings of our ſouls have been ſinged with the flames of hell; after the arrows of conviction ſhot out of the bow of omnipotence have pierced our ſouls, ſo as no man, miniſter, or angel, could pull them out; Chriſt did it, with his own hand, and therein manifeſted his powerful grace, as being the Man of God's right-hand. Shall we again turn our back upon him? No; Henceforth, through grace, we will not go back. The true believer comes to Chriſt, ſo as never to part with him, ſaying, as Ruth to Naomi, Ruth i. 16. Intreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goeſt, I will go: and where thou lodgeſt, I will lodge; thy people ſhall be my people, and thy God, my God. Nothing ſhall part thee and me. Yea, the man, having once come to Chriſt, is ſtill coming nearer and nearer to him; To whom coming as to a living ſtone, ye are built up a ſpiritual houſe, 1 Pet. ii. 4. The building goes up gradually, and is ſtill going forward. Some profeſſors are like the mill-wheel, it goes round, yet ſtill it ſtands in the ſame place where it was: they go the round of duties, and morning and evening prayers; and attend Sabbath and week-days ſermons, which is well done: but they are at a ſtand; they are the ſame now, that they were ten, twenty years ago, if not more. But, in gathering to Shiloh, the people are made to advance nearer and nearer to heaven, getting more knowledge, more experience, more hatred of ſin, more love and likeneſs to Chriſt. It is true, the ſaints themſelves have their winter-decays, but they have alſo their ſummer-revivings, that ſet them forward again. And thus the path of the juſt is as the ſhining light, which ſhineth more and more unto a perfect day.

V. The fifth general head propoſed, was, To ſpeak of the ſpecial ſeaſons, wherein this gathering of the people to Shiloh does take place. When ſhall this gathering be? Why, in general, When Shiloh is come, then ſhall the gathering of the people be to him: and there are two remarkable ſeaſons of his coming, that the text intends, namely, his coming in the fleſh, and his coming in the Spirit. Now, his coming in the fleſh, I ſpoke of in the explication; and his coming in the Spirit, I ſpoke of, when I ſhewed by what means this gathering is brought about: particularly the gathering wind of the Spirit, when he gathers the dead ſinners, as it were, out of the graves; according to that word, Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon theſe ſlain that they may live. Ezek. xxxvii. 9. Chriſt's coming in the fleſh was the beginning, and commencement of the New-Teſtament diſpenſation, which is to laſt till his ſecond coming; and during the whole of that diſpenſation, there will be a gathering of the Gentiles, a gathering of the people to him. Chriſt's coming in the Spirit, is the very efficient cauſe of all the Spiritual and effectual gatherings, that do take place under that diſpenſation; and therefore, his coming in the Spirit, to convince the world of ſin, righteouſneſs, and judgment, is promiſed for that end, John xvi. 8. His coming thus is like the gathering ſhower ſpoken of, Pſal. lxxii. 6. He ſhall come down like rain upon the mowen graſs, as ſhowers that water the earth; whereupon a gathering enſues, ver. 8. His kingdom ſhall be from ſea to ſea, and from the river to the ends of the earth. They that dwell in the wilderneſs ſhall bow before him, and his enemies ſhall lick the duſt. The kings of Tarſhiſh and the iſles ſhall bring preſents, the kings of Sheba and Seba ſhall offer gifts; and all nations ſhall ſerve him. O cry for a gathering ſhower of the Spirit's influences and operations; for there will be no gathering till then. But more particularly, the gathering ſeaſons may be conſidered under a fourfold view. 1. With relation to the public and remarkable gathering of the church in general. 2. With relation to the initial gathering of ſinners in particular. 3. With relation to the progreſſive gathering of believers. 4. With relation to the conſummate gathering of the ſaints.

1*ſt*, The gathering ſeaſons may be conſidered, with relation to the public and remarkable gathering of the church in general. And, there are four or five ſeaſons, that have been very remarkable, for public and numerous gatherings of the people to Shiloh. As,

1. Reformation times, in the church, have been gathering times, under the powerful influence of the Spirit of God accompanying reformation-work, and leading forward thereunto. Thus was it in the days of Hezekiah, when a multitude having deſtroyed the altars of idolatry, and Hezekiah having joined fervent prayers with his reforming meaſures, The Lord hearkened ened to Hezekiah, and healed the people, 2. Chron. xxx. 20. Reforming times have been remarkable gathering times, in Britain and Ireland. The Lord brought goſpel-light very early, particularly into Scotland, by which our fore-fathers were delivered from heatheniſm and paganiſm: and we wanted not ſome goſpel-light, for the ſpace of five hundred years after Chriſt; about which time, popery came to put in its foot among us, when one Palladius was ſent from Rome to corrupt us: and though there was a ſtrenuous oppoſition for ſeveral hundred years after that, againſt the Romiſh rites and hierarchy; yet popiſh darkneſs did gradually overſpread theſe lands, till it came to the greateſt height, in the ſpace of a thouſand years; after which time, to wit, in the fifteenth century, I mean a thouſand five hundred years after Chriſt, which was the reformation period; and now, about two hundred years ago, the Lord was pleaſed to make reformation-light to ariſe by ſtirring up eminent inſtruments to preach the goſpel clearly, and to put their hands zealouſly to reformation-work; eſpecially in Scotland, even to the extirpation of Popery, Prelacy, and Eraſtianiſm, and the ſolemn renunciation thereof, and of all heretical and ſectarian errors, whether in doctrine, worſhip, diſcipline, or government. Then it was, that miniſters were clothed with righteouſneſs and ſalvation, and were eminent in their faithfulneſs to God, in his truth and intereſts, and zealous againſt ſin, and all lukewarmneſs in the Lord's cauſe: then it was, that the repreſentative body of the nation put to their hand for the reformation thereof: then it was, that Scotland particularly was famed through the world, under the name of PHILADELPHIA; becauſe of the purity of its reformation, having left all the rags of Popery behind it in the grave, from whence it aroſe; which could not be ſaid of many other churches, particularly of our neighbour church of England: for, as Lazarus came out of the grave, bound hand and foot, and his face bound about with a napkin, ſo was it with England in their firſt reformation. It was indeed like a reſurrection from the grave, in the days of king Edward and queen Elizabeth; but yet they came out of this grave, bound hand and foot with their grave-clothes, bringing many things out with them, which they ſhould have left behind, eſpecially all theſe ceremonies, ſuperſtitions, and modes of worſhip and government, wherein they ſymbolize with the church of Rome, and which they brought along with them, when they left her: theſe grave-clothes they have not caſt off to this day. And, alas! many in Scotland are fond of borrowing from them ſome of their old garments, which ſmell of the priſon of Popery, which they left. But with reſpect to Scotland's reformation-days, as Chriſt, when he aroſe from the dead, left all his linen's and grave-clothes behind him; ſo he helped Scotland, in riſing out of the grave of Popery, to riſe and reform ſo purely, as to leave all the rags of Popery, to be buried in the grave from whence they aroſe. And then in theſe days it was, that the work of the Lord proſpered, the goſpel flouriſhed, iniquity was made to ſtop its mouth: our church was glorious to all its beholders, And terrible to her enemies, as an army with banners, and multitudes of people were gathered to Shiloh. But, alas! one of the great reaſons why there are ſo few gathering to Shiloh now, is too plainly this, that reformation-work is much at a ſtand, little reformation-zeal and ſpirit among magiſtrates, miniſters, or people, as it is ſaid, Neh. iii. 5. The nobles of Tekoah did not put their necks to the work of the Lord: yea, deformity, defilement, corruption, and defection, inſtead of reformation, is too palpable in our day, wherein many pollutions have crept into our doctrine, much defilement into our worſhip, partiality and pithleſneſs into our diſcipline, and tyranny and diſorder in the church-government: manifold incroachments made upon the liberties of the Lord's people, and the privileges of the Lord's houſe, too well known that we need to mention them all; inſomuch, that the very foundations are ready to ſhake, and the garden is much grown over with weeds. Oh! cry for the return of reformation-days!! for till then, there is but little hope of remarkable gathering of the people to Shiloh. And as Chriſt commanded his diſciples to unbind Lazarus, when he was raiſed out of the grave, and to take away his grave-cloaths; ſo, ſeek and earneſtly intreat that the Lord may come and take away whatever is oppoſite to the doctrine, worſhip, diſcipline, and government of his houſe, and to the perfecting of the work of reformation, and whatever tends to hinder it. But, again, days. Little wonder, when we have occaſion to lament, that our covenant hath been broken, burnt, and buried! and, if our covenant-breaking be not duly lamented, and covenanted reformation revived, we have ground to expect the Lord will ſend a ſword, a dreadful judgment, to avenge the quarrel of his covenant. Till there be a remarkable reviving hereof, we can hardly expect a remarkable gathering of the people to Shiloh.

2. Covenanting times, in the church, have been gathering times; as you may ſee in the time of Joſiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 3. when the people made a covenant,—to walk after the Lord, and to keep his commandments, and his teſtimonies and his ſtatutes, with all their heart and ſoul,—and all the people ſtood to the covenant, Thus it was with theſe lands, when, after the reformation, all ranks were brought into holy and ſolemn covenants with God: in thoſe days the Lord delighted in us, and our land was married to him; when, with uplifted hands, we ſwore allegiance to him, and abjured all rivals with him in his government. Never a nation was more ſolemnly bound to the Lord by national covenants, in the fifteenth century, the eightieth and eighty-firſt years thereof; and renewed again and again in the ſixteenth century, the thirty-eight and thirty-ninth years thereof, and in latter times alſo; together with the Solemn-league afterwards, for furthering the ends, deſigns, and obligations of the former. I know indeed ſome diſpute, and deny the obligation of theſe covenants upon poſterity: but as good Joſiah brought back the people, and cauſed them to ſtand to the covenant of their fathers, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 32.; ſo we find, that religious covenants, in ſcripture, comprehend abſent, as well as preſent; and poſterity to come, as well as the covenanting forefathers, Deut. xxix. 14, 15, 22, 24, 25. Now, our Solemn Covenants, that our forefathers entred into, being nothing but a ſuperadded, and accumulative obligation, to what we were previouſly bound to by the word of God, they cannot but ſtand binding upon us their poſterity. But as theſe covenanting days were gathering days, wherein many flocked in to Shiloh, and wherein God appended his ſeal to the covenanted work of reformation, by a numerous acceſſion of ſouls to the Meſſias, under the influence of the powerful Spirit of God, bleſſing his word and ordinances to their converſion; ſo our covenant-breaking days, on the other hand, are far from being gathering days.

3. Confeſſing times, in the church, have been gathering times; times of humble acknowledging of perſonal and national guilt, as you ſee, Ezra viii. 23. and ix. 7. and downwards, compared with chap. x. 1, 2, 3. No doubt, there were better days of the goſpel, in reſpect of the power thereof, with us than now, when there was a public and ſolemn acknowledgement of public ſins and breaches of the Covenant; ſuch as you have an account of in the ordinary Confeſſions of Faith among your hands. But in our days, we ſeem to be ſo far from taking with our public ſins and defections, that we are rather upon the ſelf-juſtifying lay, as if we had done nothing amiſs, and as if matters had never been better with us. May we not hereupon conclude, that the Lord is ſpeaking to us, as he did of old to Judah, Jer. ii. 34, 35. Behold I will plead with thee, becauſe thou ſayeſt, I have not ſinned? While our mother-church is not duly taking with her ſin, how can we expect a remarkable gathering of her children to Shiloh? Whereas, if our uncircumciſed hearts were humbled, and that we were confeſſing our iniquities, and the iniquities of our fathers, then we might expect the Lord would yet remember his covenant, and heal our land, as it is, Lev. xxvi. 40, 41, 42. Not that public reformings, covenantings, and confeſſings have any meritorious influence upon, or are procuring cauſes of remarkable gatherings unto Shiloh; only in this method and order he uſes to work, preparing the way of the people, Iſa. lvii. 14. and lxii. 10. He gathers out the ſtones, lifts up a ſtandard for the people, and then follows the gathering of the people to him: therefore, while none of theſe national revivings, or public acknowledgments of our own and our forefathers iniquities, appear; little wonder, that, inſtead of a gathering of the people to Shiloh, we ſee clouds gathering in our ſky, and more and more national bondage and thraldom taking place: We walk contrary to God, and God walks contrary to us, and will puniſh ſeven times more for our iniquities. Therefore, if you would wiſh for a remarkable gathering, O cry for a remarkable outpouring of the Spirit of repentance and reformation, whereof there is ſo little to be ſeen in church or ſtate in our day. O ſeek for a return of his departed glory, and that our land may not be called LO-AMMI and LO-RUHAMAH, as it is ſaid, Hoſ. i. 6, 9. but rather AMMI and RUHAMAH, Hoſ. ii. 1. and that we may be called HEPHZI-BAH and BEULAH, Iſa. lxii. 4. that the Lord may yet delight in us, and our land may yet again be married; ſo that every one may not only call him BAALI, but ISHI *, Hoſ. ii. 16. But,

4. Suffering and contending times in the church have been remarkable gathering times. It was in times of perſecution and ſuffering of the church, that ſuch great numbers of people were converted and gathered in to Chriſt in the primitive ages, as you ſee, Acts iv. 4. Times of contending for the faith have been times of conveening to Chriſt, the glorious object of faith: yea, ſcattering times have been gathering times, when the Lord hath ſcattered his ſervants abroad, that, by the preaching of the word in every airth to which they were ſcattered, there might be a gathering of the people to Shiloh, as you ſee it was, Acts viii. 4. and particularly, Acts xi. 19, 20, 21. Thus the Jewiſh perſecution firſt, and then the primitive Pagan perſecution next; eſpecially the ſecond under Domitian, which was about the ſixty-ninth year of Chriſt; and the ninth and tenth under Aurelius and Diocleſian, as hiſtorians relate, were the very means of bringing the goſpel firſt to Scotland, while eminent men fled from theſe dreadful tempeſts unto this land, and ſo planted the goſpel here. Suffering times, perſecuting times, and hiding times, have been gathering times in the church. Some old perſons here, perhaps, have been witneſſes to days of power in the time of perſecution, in the late ſuffering times in Scotland. Our fathers have told us, how the Lord appeared for them and with them, when men were appearing moſt bloodily againſt them: they have heard the beſt news from heaven, when they heard the worſt from earth. God many times ſmiles moſt upon his church, when the world frowns moſt againſt them: when the cauſe and truths of Chriſt are moſt oppoſed by men, God uſually puts the moſt remarkable ſeal to them upon the hearts of many. Some can ſay, When they were contending moſt for the truth, then the Lord hath made the truth moſt ſweet and refreſhful to themſelves, and moſt powerful and efficacious to others. Even a time of bonds hath been a time of begetting children to God; Mind Oneſimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds, ſays Paul, in the 10th verſe of his epiſtle to Philemon. Indeed, the Lord's gathering time is not confined to ſuffering periods of the church; for, Glorious things are ſpoken of Zion the city of God, even at other times, that this man and that man was born there; and I know that it can be ſaid of our Zion, without looking many years back, that this man and that man, this woman and that woman was born there. But I ſpeak of remarkable gatherings, where it can be ſaid, not only this man and that man, but this multitude and that multitude was born there: and, O for a time of the gathering of multitudes to Chriſt! Perhaps ſad and ſuffering days muſt come again before we have ſuch gathering days; and there may be terrible ſufferings before there be remarkable gatherings; for, he whoſe fan is in his hand, does uſually purge his floor, before he gather in his wheat, Mat. iii. 12.

But as the day of calamity in itſelf is not to be deſired; ſo, that we may not be hopeleſs in the mean time, I would further tell you, that the church's backſliding times have been God's gathering times, according to Jer. iii. 14. Turn, O backſliding children, ſays the Lord; for I am married unto you: and I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and bring you to Zion. There is a call in a backſliding time; but ſee ver. 22. where there is not only a gathering call, but a gathering power accompanying the call, even at

at a time wherein they had perverted their ways, and forgotten the Lord their God: Return, ye backſliding children, and I will heal your backſlidings; and then it follows, Behold we come unto thee, for thou art the Lord our God. Behold a gathering of the people unto Shiloh in a backſliding time! O then, let backſliding Scotland ſay, Behold we come! O that the hearts of hearers were ſaying, Behold we come! Oh! there is no national reformation can take place, till there be a perſonal reformation: if perſonal returning to the Lord were general and univerſal, then there would be a national returning. Therefore, if you would wiſh to ſee a national reviving, let every perſon put in for a ſhare of gathering power and grace, ſaying, Turn me, and I ſhall be turned; draw me, and I ſhall run: and, under the conduct of drawing power, let us ſay, Behold we come to thee, for thou art the Lord our God. Hath your perſonal backſliding, man, woman, been great and grievous? Hath this been your diſeaſe all your days, a backſliding heart, a backſliding nature, a backſliding practice, a bentneſs to backſliding in thought, word, and action? Is that your diſeaſe, that you are a backſliding heifer, a backſliding devil, that, it may be, thinks the diſeaſe is deſperate and incurable? O let me aſſure you, that there is a Healer come here to day, that ſays, I will heal your backſlidings; and he will not ſay the thing that he cannot do. And while his mercy is ſaying, I will heal your backſlidings, let your heart be ſaying, Lord, I will come to thee for that healing, for that is my diſeaſe, and there is none in the world needs it ſo much as I: the church and nation need to have their backſlidings healed; but I am the particular perſon that needs it moſt of all: heal me, and I ſhall be healed; behold, I come to thee for that end. Is your heart ſaying ſo? Then welcome be all comers; welcome, welcome, welcome! Him that comes, I will in no wiſe caſt out: nay, he will in no wiſe caſt up your former backſlidings, but heal you, without upbraiding you; for he gives liberally, and upbraids not. I will heal your backſlidings: it is ſpoken without limitation, either of former or future backſlidings; and therefore the fear of backſliding again, needs not diſcourage you from coming to him; your former backſlidings will not caſt you out: and though you backſlide again, he will not caſt you off; He may viſit your iniquity with the rod, but his loving-kindneſs will he not take away: No; he will in no wiſe caſt you out. Backſlidings ſhall never part him and you, for he will heal your backſlidings; I will heal your backſlidings. It hath a reſpect to the future, as well as the preſent time; not to encourage your ſinning for the future, no, no; but to encourage ſinners to come, notwithſtanding of their fears of future failings: this ſhall be my office and employment, ſo long as you labour under that diſeaſe of backſliding, which will be till you come to that land, where the inhabitants ſhall not ſay, I am ſick: now, till you come there, I will conſtantly and perpetually be a phyſician and healer to you, to give you my healing word, my healing blood, my healing viſits, from time to time, and to ariſe like the Sun of righteouſneſs with healing under my wings from day to day: therefore come, backſliding ſoul, and let me have all your employment from day to day. O! is your heart ſaying, Behold we come! then, bleſſed be the comers, though they have been backſliders. The people that muſt be gathered to Shiloh, are a backſliding people; and if it were not ſuch, it would be none of Adam's race, for they are all ſmitten with the ſame diſeaſe; therefore all the backſliders here are invited to be comers. Come and welcome in the name of Shiloh, to whom the gathering muſt be; and in his bleſſed Father's name, come and welcome. And if there be any comers here, then glory, glory to God, that, notwithſtanding all that is amiſs in the church of Scotland, yet it is a gathering time; notwithſtanding all your backſlidings, yet it is a gathering ſeaſon.——Thus I have conſidered the gathering ſeaſons with relation to the remarkable gathering of the church in general.

2dly, The gathering ſeaſons may be conſidered, with relation to the initial gathering of ſinners in particular; when he begins to gather in ſinners to himſelf, O the freedom and ſovereignty of his grace, that ſhines in the ſeaſons and times of gathering! for ſome he gathers at the third hour, Mat. xx. 3.; ſome at the ſixth hour, and ſome at the ninth hour, ver. 5.; yea, ſome at the eleventh hour, ver. 6. Theſe are four periods and ſeaſons mentioned; for he gathers ſome in the morning, ſome in the evening, ſome at mid-day, and ſome at midnight; whatever be the hour, it is an happy hour; The hour comes when the dead ſhall hear: and, O may this be the happy hour, with reſpect to ſome here! More particularly,

1. The morning is the gathering ſeaſon, with reſpect to ſome; I mean, the morning of their youth: the Lord hath gathered ſome very early in the morning, before break of day, before ever they ſaw the light of day; for ſome are gathered before they be born, ſealed and ſanctified from the womb, as well as foreknown from eternity; Jer. i. 5. Before I formed thee in the belly, I knew thee; and before thou cameſt forth out of the womb, I ſanctified thee: which ſome have applied to regeneration, that ſome are ſpiritually born, before ever they are naturally ſo. We are ſure that infants are as capable of all the eſſentials of regeneration, as adult perſons are. The eſſential part thereof, is, God's putting his Spirit within them; and infants are as capable of this as aged perſons, if not more, while natural enmity is not ſtrengthened by actual rebellions. But this I paſs, as more rare, and what cannot be known, but by ſome remarkable effects thereof. It is not ſo rarely that ſome are gathered in the morning of their younger years; ſo was it with Joſias, who was called at eight years old, 2 Kings xxii. 1, 2.: ſo was it with young Timothy, who knew the holy ſcriptures from a child, 2 Tim. iii. 15. And, if the morning of youth be a gathering ſeaſon unto Shiloh, let this encourage young children, that are here, to remember their Creator and Redeemer, in the days of their youth: O remember to ſeek him early; I love them that love me, ſays God; and they that ſeek me early ſhall find me. See alſo, Pſal. cx. 3. Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power: in the beauties of holineſs from the womb of the morning, thou haſt the dew of thy youth.

2. The evening is the gathering ſeaſon, with reſpect to ſome: God gathers ſome in the evening of their old age. Thus we find Abraham was gathered in his old age; he was ſeventy-five years old, when God firſt called him, Gen. xii. 4.: and it is probable, that Nicodemus was an old man, before he was born again, as appears pears from John iii. 4. Is there any old ſinner here, that hath been a tranſgreſſor from the womb, and been living without Chriſt all your days? Oh! it is more than time you were gathered in to Shiloh. Oh! hath the devil got the morning, and the noontide of your day, and will you give him the evening too? Alas! Sirs, he hath got too much of your time already; let Chriſt have the reſt, if he can have no more. I dare not ſay, that he will not take what the devil hath left; for I have no warrant from the word, to ſay, that old age cannot be God's gathering time: I am ſure my text excludes neither old nor young, To him ſhall the gathering of the people be; therefore let even old and dying people gather in to the new and living way, which is conſecrated for us, through the vail of the Mediator's fleſh: ſure it is the beſt way, that you can take, before you be gathered into a grave.

3. The mid-day is God's gathering ſeaſon, with reſpect to ſome; I mean, the middle time of their age: and, whom God gathers, he moſt ordinarily gathers about the midſt of their days. Some have judged, that God's remnant are moſt ordinarily gathered in, betwixt the years of fifteen and twenty-five, others, between fourteen and forty. But I dare not limit the holy One of Iſrael; only, ſeeing the moſt part here are, perhaps, ſuch as are about the midſt of their day, O look to God, to hallow the middle of your days, as Solomon hallowed the middle of the court, 2 Chron. vii. 7. And when God ſays of the Meſſias, To him ſhall the gathering of the people be; let all the people ſay, AMEN. Ye that are young, ye that are old, and ye that are betwixt the two, O ſay, AMEN; let gathering power come.

4. The midnight is a gathering ſeaſon, with reſpect to ſome; I mean, not only a midnight time of death and approaching eternity, at which ſeaſon God hath gathered ſome, as he did the thief on the croſs, though it is not his ordinary time; but alſo a midnight-ſtate of ſecurity, when the ſoul is in a dead ſleep; even ſuch a time hath been a gathering time. I need not inſiſt here on Manaſſeh, Mary Magdalene, and others: when did the day of grace dawn upon Saul, afterwards called Paul? even when it was the darkeſt hour in the night; when he was ſleeping moſt ſound in the bed of ſecurity. It is true, his body was not ſleeping, for he was riding furiouſly to Damaſcus; but his ſoul was ſo far aſleep, that he was ſnorting and breathing very high in his ſleep, Acts ix. 1. He was breathing out threatenings and ſlaughter againſt the diſciples of the Lord: behold, even at midnight there came a cry from heaven, that awakened him, and rouzed him to ſeek Jeſus. Now it is, perhaps, a midnight-time with ſome here; they are ſleeping and breathing in their ſleep; breathing out enmity againſt God, and the people of God, and the way of God; but a midnight time may be a gathering time, as it is ſaid, Mat. xxv. 6. when all the virgins, wiſe and fooliſh, were ſlumbering and ſleeping, that at midnight there came a cry, Behold, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him: ſo, though it be midnight, with the church, and midnight with poor miſerable ſecure ſouls; yet at midnight there is a cry in this goſpel, behold Shiloh is come, and let the gathering of the people be to him; go forth and meet him; for, behold he comes with ſalvation.——There is the initial gathering.

3*dly*, The gathering ſeaſons may be conſidered, with relation to the progreſſive gathering of believers, in whom the good work is begun, and who have either now, or at ſome former time, been engaged to come to Shiloh; yet they need to be ſtill coming to him, and ſtill gathering under his wings. Now, many are the gathering ſeaſons, that relate to the believer's progreſſive gathering, and advances in nearneſs to, and communion with the Lord. I ſhall conſider them, for diſtinction and memory's ſake, in theſe four periods; namely, of ſummer, winter, ſpring, and harveſt. And,

1. There are ſummer times of refreſhment, that believers ſometimes have immediately after the gathering harveſt of converſion; and theſe ſummer-times are further gathering times, and contribute to their progreſſive gathering. When the ſoul hath been long under guilt and wrath, and under the frowns and diſpleaſure of God, and had long ſeen the gates of heaven barred againſt him, and the mouth of hell open to receive him; then readily the Lord comes in, and ſpeaks peace to the ſoul, ſaying, I, even I, am he that blotteth out thine iniquity, for mine own name's ſake. Hearken, ſoul, my thoughts towards you are thoughts of peace; here is mercy, to pardon thee; merit, to juſtify thee; blood, to waſh thee; balm, to heal thee; bread, to nouriſh thee; wine, to cheriſh thee; raiment, to cloath thee.—Thus after Paul was awakened, and converted, and gathered, then God takes him up to the third heaven, and makes ſuch manifeſtations of his love and favour, beauty and glory, as he is not able to utter.—Thus, after the prodigal's return, the fatted calf is killed, the beſt robe is put upon his back, and the ring is put upon his hand, and ſhoes on his feet; ſhewing us, that upon the ſinner's converſion, and gathering in to Shiloh, God is graciouſly pleaſed to give him ſome choice and ſignal manifeſtation of his love and favour, grace and glory; and theſe contribute to his progreſſive gathering; He manifeſted forth his glory, and his diſciples believed on him, John ii. 11. Hence, Pſal. cii. 16. when he builds up Zion, he appears in his glory; when the ſtones that are already gathered, and laid upon the foundation, are to be built up a ſpiritual houſe, in a progreſſive work, he diſcovers his glory; that, beholding his glory, they may be changed from glory to glory. But the ſummer-time of ſpiritual proſperity may be but a ſhort time, as David's, Pſal. xxx. 6, 7. though it ordinarily recurs to them in ſome meaſure, even as ſummer does year by year; yet it is frequently followed with a winter. Therefore,

2. There are winter-times of adverſity, which believers have, which yet may be God's gathering times, for making way for their progreſſive gathering to Shiloh. And thus,

(1.) A winter-time of perſonal affliction does ſometimes make way, for their further gathering; It was good for me that I was afflicted, for before I was afflicted, I went aſtray; but now have I learned thy law: he had been ſtraying, but now a gathering again was the fruit of his affliction, according to Hoſ. v. 15. In their affliction they ſhall ſeek me early: their afflicting times ſhall be a gathering time, for bringing them nearer to the Lord; hence they have been made to rejoice in the Lord, though the fig-tree ſhould not bloſſom, and to glory in tribulation. As the ark was lifted up nearer and nearer heaven, by the riſ-

ing of the waves; ſo, by affliction, believers are raiſed nearer and nearer to God in Chriſt.

(2.) The winter-time of ſore trial hath ſometimes been a gathering time to them: gathering mercy prevents them ſometimes before an eminent trial, to prepare them for it. Thus it was with Elijah; Ariſe and eat, for thou haſt a journey before thee, and the journey is too great:—And he went in the ſtrength of that meal forty days and forty nights, till he came to Horeb the mount of God. 1 Kings xix. 7, 8. Sometimes gathering mercy ſupports them in the trial, and under it, ſaying, Fear not, for I am with thee; I will ſtrengthen thee; when thou goeſt through the fire, I will be with thee that the flames kindle not upon thee. Thus many times the Son of man is with them in the furnace, gathering them in his arms, as he was with John, in the iſle of Patmos; with Ezekiel, by the river Chebar; with David, in the wilderneſs of Judea; and with the three children, in the furnace of fire. Again,

(3.) The winter-time of temptation is ſometimes a gathering time unto them; as, after Paul was buffeted by Satan, he heard that ſweet word, My grace ſhall be ſufficient for thee; for my ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs. Yea, after the ſharpeſt conflict, he uſually gives the ſtrongeſt cordial, for gathering their ſpirits again; In the multitude of my thoughts within me, thy comforts delight my ſoul, Pſal. xciv. 19.

(4.) The winter-time of deſertion and hiding, hath been ſometimes a gathering ſeaſon: let not the deſerted ſoul be too much diſquieted, the valley of Achor may be a door of hope; you may have occaſion to ſay, as Pſal. cxiv. 6. I was brought low, and he helped me; you may be brought to the brink of deſpair, that you may have occaſion to ſay, as Pſal. xl. 2, 3. He brought me out of the horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and ſet my feet upon a rock, and eſtabliſhed my goings: and he hath put a new ſong in my mouth, even praiſe unto our God. When Jacob was in great diſtreſs, God met with him at Bethel, Gen. xxviii.; and when he was in great fear that God would not accompliſh his promiſe, he was prevented by another viſit, Gen. xxxii.; and it was the moſt remarkable night that ever he had: he calls the place PENIEL; for he ſaw God face to face; and he had told him before what he had been, and would be to him, ſaying, I am the God of Bethel.

(5.) The winter of downcaſting hath been a time of reviving; O my God, my ſoul is caſt down within me; therefore I will remember thee from the land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites, from the hill Mizar. And, Deep calleth unto deep, at the noiſe of thy water-ſpouts; all thy waves and billows have gone over me: yet the Lord will command his loving-kindneſs in the day-time, and in the night his ſongs ſhall be with me, and my prayer to the God of my life, Pſal. xlii. 6, 7, 8. Thus he gives ſongs in the night, inſomuch that the darkeſt night hath uſhered in the cleareſt light, according to that promiſe, Zech. xiv. 7. It ſhall come to paſs, that at evening-time it ſhall be light. Again,

(6.) The winter-time of outcaſting hath been a gathering time; for He gathers the outcaſts of Iſrael, Iſa. lvi. 8. I ſaid, I am caſt out of thy ſight; yet will I look again to thy holy temple, Jonah. ii. 4. There, you ſee, was a gathering time by faith unto Chriſt, when he was caſt out into the very belly of hell, as it is called, ver 2. You, whoſe name is a CAST-OUT, may then expect that your name may be turned to a SOUGHT-OUT, Iſa. lxii 12.

(7.) The winter-time of fears; What time I am afraid, I will truſt in thee: fear not, for I am with thee; be not diſmayed, for I am thy God; I will ſtrengthen thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right-hand of my righteouſneſs. The time of hopleſneſs and helpleſneſs hath been a time of ſpiritual gathering to the people of God; I looked on my right-hand, and beheld; but there was no man that would know me; all refuge failed me: then I cried to thee, O Lord, and ſaid, Thou art my refuge, and my portion in the land of the living, Pſal. cxliv. 4, 5. When their hope is periſhed, and nothing but the ſentence of death paſſing, then the Lord hath been gathering; We had the ſentence of death in ourſelves, that we ſhould not truſt in ourſelves, but in God which raiſeth the dead, 2 Cor. i. 9. Yea, when the ſoul hath not only been ſentenced, but ſlain in a manner, and laid in the grave, then hath it been a time of gathering; Our bones are dried, ſays the church; our hope is loſt; we are cut off for our parts: but, Behold, ſaith the Lord, I will open your graves, and cauſe you to come up; and I will put my Spirit in you, and you ſhall live, Ezek. xxxvii. 11, 12.

(8.) Yea, a winter-time of ſinning, and declining, and departing from the Lord, hath been a time of gathering of his people; and this is moſt wonderful of all, as I ſaid before of a backſliding time: O! that is a ſtrange word, Iſa. xliii. 23, 24, 25. Thou haſt made me to ſerve with thy ſins, and wearied me with thine iniquity: yet I, even I am he, that blotteth out thine iniquities for my name's ſake. There is one of the bittereſt challenges for ſin, and that backed with one of the ſwetteſt promiſes of pardon and pity, and of gathering and reſtoring mercy: will this encourage a believer to ſin, becauſe the time of your falling down may be a time of God's gathering-up? Oh! no; nothing will humble and melt the believer's heart for ſin more, than to think of the riches of divine mercy, and ſovereign grace: when he ſtoops down to gather you out of the mire that you fall into, and recovers your ſoul and your graces. Some tell us that muſk, when it hath loſt its ſmell and ſweetneſs, if it be put into a ſink among filth, it recovers it; ſo when the believer's graces have loſt their flavour and ſavory exerciſe, the Lord, in a manner, lets them fall into the mire, that their decaying graces may be recovered and revived. Thus Peter was ſuffered to fall into the mire of dreadful ſinning, and then his graces were revived; his humility revived, he was humbled to the duſt; his repentance was revived, He went out and wept bitterly; his ſpiritual rememberance was revived, for he remembered the words of Chriſt to him; and all flowed from this, that it was even Chriſt's gathering time; for while he was yet among the dung, into which he fell, Chriſt looks upon Peter, with a gracious gathering eye, Luke xxii. 61, 62. Let the believer then, for the upſtirring and encouragement of his faith, know, that his ſaddeſt winter-time may be God's gathering time to Shiloh.—Your halting time may be his gathering time: when your decripped feet make you go halting in the way of the Lord; I will aſſemble her that halteth, and gather her that was driven out, Micah iv. 6.—Your falling time may be his raiſing and up-gathering time; your periſhing time may be his ſaving time; for, his thoughts are not as your thoughts, nor his ways as your ways. And his taking ſuch a time, makes his interpoſal at ſuch a juncture

the more wonderful, and the more welcome. But now, as, in these instances, God is pleased to glorify his sovereignty, and shew that he does not confine himself to means, in these progressive gatherings of believers, any more than he did in the initial gatherings of unbelievers to himself; so to glorify his holiness, and to put honour upon the means of his own appointment, you would know also, that,

3. There are spring-times of spiritual duty and gospel-diligence, which believers have, which are also God's gathering times, with respect to their progressive gathering to Shiloh. (By the bye, neglect not means, on pretence that grace must do all; it were an ill argument, water only refreshes, therefore cut off all cocks and pipes.) But to return; such a spring-time as this you read of, Song ii. 10,—13. My beloved spake, and said unto me, Arise my love, my fair one, and come away: for, lo! the winter is past, the rain is over and gone: the flowers appear.—Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away. Why, it is a gathering time, therefore come away. Now, what are these fruits and flowers that appear in the spiritual spring-time, which prognosticates a gathering time to be at hand; yea, that it is a gathering time at present? There are several fruits of the Spirit, that appear in the gospel spring-time, which betoken a gathering time: As,

(1.) A believing time is a gathering time: faith is one of the fruits and flowers that appear in this spring. A believing time is so much a gathering time, that God's gathering, is his giving faith; and our gathering, is our exercising faith. But a believing time is also a prognosticating time, betokening a further progressive gathering, so as to be brought to more and more nearness to the Lord Jesus: hence believing times are glorious times; Said I not unto thee, If thou wouldst believe, thou shouldst see the glory of God? John xi. 40. When God's children are in the exercise of faith, then the Lord is pleased to make known his goodness. Believing times are sealing times; In whom after ye believed, ye were sealed with the holy Spirit of promise, Eph. ii. 13. Believing times are rejoicing times; In whom, though now we see him not, yet believing, we rejoice, with joy unspeakable, and full of glory, 1 Pet. i. 8. There is joy and peace in believing. Faith ordinarily brings in sense; spiritual sense and feeling is the fruit of faith: though, by the bye, I must tell you, what is the fault and folly of the most part even of believers themselves, from whence it flows that they feel so little of the sweet fruits and advantages of faith, they make sense and feeling the root and ground of faith; whereas it is only the fruit and effect of faith. But know, that when sense is made the support of faith, it frequently leaves faith in the mire; for when sense, which they made the ground of their faith, fails, then their faith fails with it. The only sure ground of faith is God's word, his truth, his faithfulness, which is an unchangeable ground. Now, if you make God's work upon you, such as spiritual sense, graces, experience, or the like, the ground of your faith, you will find these to be such changeable grounds, so much up and down, that your faith must be up and down with them, and you will totter sooner than you are aware: or, if you build your faith partly upon sense, feelings, etc. and partly upon God's truth, you are then like a man that sets one foot upon a firm ground, and the other upon a floating board; when the loose floating board fails or slips, you will hardly stand fast, however firm the other foot stands. Who among all ordinary believers knows not the ebbings and flowing, the ups and downs of frames and spiritual feelings? They may rise and fall ten times in an hour, as the wind blows. Now, if your faith be built upon these love-tokens, and depend upon them; then, as your faith must be very wavering, so God, seeing himself robbed of the dependence due to him, may purposely withhold these things from you, that you may learn not to trust in uncertain experiences, but on the living God. Why, say you, when I get these love-tokens, it is not upon these that I trust, but on the God that sent them. Well done, if it be true: but I fear it is otherwise; for if Christ himself and his truths be the ground of your faith, when you get these love-tokens, then how comes it, that when these love-tokens are gone, and when sense and feeling is gone, your faith is to seek? I suppose, when feeling is up, then your faith is up; and when feeling is down, your faith is down. Now, if the whole building of your faith were upon the unchangeable Rock, you would see no more cause of doubting, when the changeable feeling is gone, than when it is present; and therefore, I fear it be your fault, believer, as well as mine, that many times we lay too much weight upon that thawing ice, and make sense and feeling the ground of our faith. But if God make you a believer at all, man, he will bring you off gradually from this evil: and if you never believe till you get spiritual sense, you will never be a believer; for feeling follows believing, and therefore believing must be before feeling. To build faith upon sense then, is like a man setting up the couples of a house, and then beginning at the rigging or roof of the house, and building it downward; such a house can never be built.—This is one lesson by the bye, which though we should tell you it twenty times, we will need to tell it over again; however, I say, it is a believing time that is a gathering time, for faith hath influence upon all other graces: it is like a silver threed, that runs through a chain of pearls: it puts strength and vivacity into all other virtues: it applies and appropriates all to itself, even God, and Christ, and the promises, and all: it is like the spring of the watch, that sets all the golden wheels of love, joy, comfort, and peace a-going; for it sees in Christ's righteousness a fulness, a glory that fills the heart with glorious joy. Christ is the centre of faith, and therefore a beliving time is a time of gathering to Shiloh.—But lest any say, Oh! I do not find it a believing time with me; therefore,

(2.) A repenting time is a gathering time; and repentance is one of the fruits that appears in this spring-time that I speak of: and gospel-repentance natively springs from faith; for, in short, "It is a turning from sin to God, "through Christ by faith;" and surely, where there is no such turning from sin, there is no gathering to Shiloh; Isa. lv. 7. There you see this gospel repentence described, in the several parts that I have mentioned. 1. It is a turning from sin; therefore it is said, Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: all all ſins of heart and way, thought, word, or action. 2. It is a turning from ſin to God; therefore it is ſaid, Let him return to the Lord: there is the end. 3. It is a returning from ſin to God through Chriſt; therefore it is ſaid, Let him return to the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon: and ſo it is a merciful ſin-pardoning God, that is, a God in Chriſt, in whom alone God is reconciled, and well-pleaſed: and without this apprehenſion of the mercy of God in Chriſt, there can be no kindly repentance. Therefore, 4. It is a returning from ſin to God through Chriſt, by faith: hence it is ſaid, Let him return,—FOR he will abundantly pardon. Faith looks to this FOR, this motive of returning: faith views the motive, and ſo influences the return. As it is a good FOR, ſo it is a good TURN that is influenced thereby; and as the motive to an action is viewed, before the act be elicite; ſo here, the motive, though the laſt thing in the expreſſion, yet is the firſt thing viewed by faith. O! is there mercy with him for the like of me, and pardon, yea, abundant pardon, great pardon for my great ſins, multiplied pardon for my multiplied ſins! O this kindneſs of God melts the heart! this goodneſs of God leads to repentance! and ſo the faith of God's favour and mercy in Chriſt influences this goſpel-repentance. And indeed the whole progreſs of the believer, in this continued progreſſive gathering to Shiloh, is intermixed with this penitent diſpoſition: he cannot ceaſe repenting, till he hath ceaſed ſinning, and conſequently till he hath ceaſed living: and his moſt joyful days of communion with God, on earth, are ſtill attended with the joyful tears of repentance; and he ſows in tears, till he reap in joy. He never comes to Chriſt, by any lively act of faith, but, at the ſame time, with Mary, he waſhes his feet with his tears, in a manner, and wipes them with the hair of his head.—But in caſe any ſhould think their faith and repentance is to ſeek, therefore it is no gathering time with them: Why then,

(3.) A praying time is and indicates a gathering time; I ſpeak of the prayer of faith: while Daniel was praying, and confeſſing his own ſins, and the ſins of his people, the Lord appeared to him, and gives him a divine touch, and tells him, that he is a man greatly beloved, Dan. ix. 20, 23. Of this we have the inſtance of Cornelius alſo, Acts x. 1,—4. God loves to load the wings of prayer with the choiceſt and chiefeſt bleſſings, the beſt and ſweeteſt flowers of paradiſe. God gives liberally many times to his people, when they are upon their knees. Thus many have found praying times to be ſealing times, wherein the Lord hath been pleaſed graciouſly to lift up the light of his countenance upon them. After much praying, weeping, and wreſtling, God uſually comes, with his hand and his heart full of mercy to his people; he loves not to come empty handed to theſe that have tarried long begging at mercy's door.—But becauſe ſome poor ſoul may think, either they cannot pray, or they have been long praying, and yet have not come ſpeed; therefore,

(4.) A waiting time ſpeaks forth a gathering time; The viſion is for an appointed time, at the end it will ſpeak, and not lie; though it tarry, wait for it, becauſe it will ſurely come, it will not tarry, Hab. iii. 3. God never did nor will fail the praying and waiting ſoul; for, they that wait on him ſhall not be aſhamed, Iſa. xlix. 23. They ſhall not be aſhamed that wait for me: yea, Iſa. xl. 31. They that wait on the Lord ſhall renew their ſtrength; they ſhall mount up with wings as eagles, they ſhall run and not be weary, and they ſhall walk and not faint. Therefore we are to wait for him, as the huſbandman waits for the precious fruits of the earth, and hath long patience for it, till he receive the early and latter rain, James v. 7. Though you do not reap the very day you ſow, yet, in due time you ſhall reap, if you faint not, Gal. vi. 9. David found his waiting time to uſher in a gathering time, Pſal. xl. 1, 2, 3. I waited patiently on the Lord, and he inclined to me, and heard my cry, he brought me up alſo out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay; and ſet my feet upon a rock, and eſtabliſhed my goings: and he hath put a new ſong into my mouth, even praiſe unto our God. Old Simeon had waited for the conſolation of Iſrael, and behold the Holy Ghoſt led him to a ſight of Chriſt in the temple, Luke ii. 25,—30. And this made the old man ſing, and ſay, Now, letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace;—for mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation. O I have lived long enough, for now I have got Chriſt in my heart, and Chriſt in my hands, who is my light, my life, my love, my joy, my crown, my glory, my all. O believer, have you not found, when you have been weeping and waiting at the door of mercy, how the Lord hath ſometimes cauſed his love and goodneſs to beam forth upon you, ſo as to make your heart rejoice, and your tongue to ſing; yea, ſo as to gather your ſoul to Shiloh, and to gather all the lines of your affections to meet in him, as the centre of your reſt, and ſo as you could have wiſhed the valley of viſion had been your burial-place, and that your eyes might never ſee another ſight than the glorious Jeſus, that was diſcovered to you, when you was waiting on him in public ordinances, or in a certain ſecret corner?—But in caſe any poor ſoul may be ſaying, Oh! I have been waiting, and yet find ſo little ſucceſs, that I fear, I am a ſtranger to the right way of waiting. Therefore,

(5.) A longing time may be a gathering time, and hath been ſo; for, Pſal. cvii. 9. He ſatisfies the longing ſoul, and fills the hungry with good things. Are you at David's four how-longs? Pſal. xiii. 1, 2. HOW LONG, Lord, wilt thou forget me for ever? HOW LONG wilt thou hide thy face from me? HOW LONG ſhall I take counſel in my ſoul, having ſorrow in my heart daily? HOW LONG ſhall mine enemies be exalted over me? It ſeems his longing was ſoon backed with gathering influences, drawing out his whole ſoul towards the Lord, and filling his heart with joy, and his tongue with ſinging, ver. 5, 6. I have truſted in thy mercy; my heart ſhall rejoice in thy ſalvation; yea, I will ſing unto the Lord, becauſe he hath dealt bountifully with me. O believer, when you are longing, he is waiting, and waiting to be gracious, Iſa. xxx. 18. Surely you have found it in your experience, that your longing time hath been his gathering time: but leſt you miſtake, know that I ſpeak of gathering, in the whole of my progreſs here, both in an active and paſſive ſenſe; both paſſively, that is, God's gathering his people to Shiloh, and to more and more nearneſs to him; and actively, that is, their active gathering to him through his grace. Now, I ſay, a longing time is, and preſages a further gathering time; for, He fills the hungry with good things. Some have found that promiſe of ſatisfying the longing ſoul, as clearly made out, as it is evident, that that the light of the day ſhines at preſent.—But ſome poor ſoul may ſay, I fear it is no gathering time with reſpect to me; for I find no ſuch diſpoſition as you have been ſpeaking of; it is neither a believing nor a repenting time with me, neither a praying, waiting, nor longing time with me. Therefore,

(6.) An attending time, O believer, may be a gathering time; your attending time, I ſay, O ſoul, may be God's gathering time. It is true, bodily attendance, like bodily exerciſe in religion, profits little; when people come to duties and ordinances with their bodies only, to ſee and hear, and hardly that, while their eyes and ears are ſometimes ſhut with ſleep and heavineſs: but becauſe preventing grace hath laid hold upon ſinners many times, and taken them napping, and gathered them to Shiloh; therefore I ſhall not diſcourage peoples giving their bodily attendance on goſpel-means and ordinance, even though they have neither an outward ear, or inward diſpoſition towards a regular attendance: becauſe, though, in ſuch a caſe, juſtice might take advantage againſt them righteouſly; yet none knows, but mercy may catch them at a diſadvantage graciouſly; as it did the man, who coming to church, yet hating to hear, ſet his elbows on the deſk, and put his fingers into his ears; but while he was napping, one of his elbows falls down, and as his finger went out of his ear, a word of the ſermon came in to it, by which the Lord catched him, converted him, and gathered him to Shiloh. But the ſubject I am upon, at preſent, relates to believers, and their progreſſive gathering; and it may be their caſe ſometimes, that an outward attendance is all that they can attain unto: they can find neither any believing, repenting, praying, waiting, or longing diſpoſition; but on the contrary, much darkneſs, deadneſs, dulneſs, deſpondency, hardneſs, heavineſs, and all ſpiritual indiſpoſition: only this is all they can ſay, Some ſecret hair of hope hath brought them to attend, and give their bodily preſence, that they may hear what God will ſay to them, and ſee what God will do to them. Well, poor ſoul, even ſuch an attending time as this may be a gathering time, as you may ſee it was with theſe ſpoken of, Acts x. 33. We are all here preſent, ſay they, before God, to hear all things commanded thee of God: what they were to get, or receive from God, they knew not as yet; but all they could ſay, at preſent, was, that they had brought their ſouls and bodies before God, to attend upon him in his ordinances. It ſeems they had ſome ſecret hope, that they might get ſome good by Peter's preaching; and behold it was a remarkable gathering time, as you ſee, ver. 44. For while he ſpake, the Holy Ghoſt fell on all that heard the word. Therefore, if any poor creature be here, ſaying, It does not look like a gathering time with reſpect to me; for it is not a believing time, but a doubting time; it is not a repenting time, but rather a rebelling time; it is not a praying time, but rather a perplexing time; not a waiting, but a wearying time: not a longing, but a languiſhing time; I cannot ſo much as pray, nor pant, nor long, nor look up; I can hardly give an hearty ſigh, or a groan upwards. Well, but poor creature, can you ſay, Lord, I am here preſent before thee, thou knoweſt this is all I can do; I have no more, under heaven, about me, of diſpoſition to any duty or ordinance, but a ſecret may-be the Lord will pity, and may-be not; I am juſt at the footſtool of ſovereignty. Well, ſuch a time may be a gathering time; when they were all preſent before the Lord hearing, a gathering wind came, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt. This is one of the loweſt flowers, that appear in the believer's ſpring-time, when no grace is appearing in his view at all, but only he is preſenting himſelf before the God of all grace; and does not the believer find this to be even a gathering time, now and then in ſecret, as well as public, when all he can do is juſt to caſt himſelf down on his knees, before the Lord his Maker, as it is, Pſal. xcv. 6. with a who knows but the Lord may pity? This attendance on the Lord, even in this manner, hath been bleſſed with a mighty gathering wind about their ſouls, that hath blown them nearer to the Lord, their harbour of reſt, than ever they were before. Therefore, believer, however low your circumſtances may be, when you can do no more but attend, as it were, at a ſecret duty or public ordinance, never draw back your attendance on the Lord, and preſenting yourſelves before him; ſeeing your attending time may be his gathering time.—Thus I have mentioned to you ſome of the believer's ſpring-times of duty, and ſome of the fruits and flowers that appear therein, which ſpeak forth a gathering time, and preſage an harveſt. And this leads me to ſpeak of another gathering ſeaſon, with reſpect to the believer's progreſſive approach to Chriſt, or gathering to Shiloh.

4. There are harveſt-times of ſolemn ordinances, or goſpel-ſolemnities, not only teaching but ſealing ordinances, which his people ſometimes have, and which are God's gathering times, and the believer's gathering times, with reſpect to their progreſſive gathering unto Shiloh. And though the Lord of the harveſt, who ſends forth labourers thereunto, and takes them away when he pleaſes; as he hath lately removed one,* that uſed to be an eminent labourer at ſolemnities, in Airth; on which occaſion, if we cannot ſay in point of paucity, that though the harveſt be great, the labourers are few; yet ſure I am, we may with grief of heart ſay, in point of quality, that the harveſt is great, and the honeſt evangelical labourers are the fewer that he is gone: and the only thing that makes ſuch an heavy loſs to be ſupportable, is, that the Lord of the harveſt ſtill remains, who can ſend forth labourers, qualified for whatſoever work he hath ado: But what I was ſaying, is, that though the Lord of the harveſt makes theſe goſpel-ſolemnities, frequently to be the gathering times for ſinners, in reſpect of their initial gathering, of which I ſpoke before; yet the ſpecial deſign of theſe communion-ſolemnities, is, for advancing the progreſſive gathering of believers: and, though the moſt remarkable progreſs of the believer may be upon his knees in ſecret duties, and in ſecret prayer, and ſecret intercourſe betwixt God and him; yet public ordinances are the means of theſe private intercourſes; though the ſecret may be moſt comfortable and refreſhful, yet the public ordinances lay the foundation of

* It is ſuppoſed, and with a great degree of probability too, that our Author, both here, and p. 312. has his eye upon that ſhining light, and able ſervant of CHRIST, the Reverend Mr. BRISBAN, miniſter of the goſpel at Stirling.

that ſecret comfort and refreſhment. It is in this, as it is with the public well of a city, from whence people go and fetch water to their private houſes; for ordinary, there is not ſo much uſe made of the water at the public well itſelf, till once they bring it home in their veſſel to the private houſe or family, and there it is more freely made uſe of for ſeveral neceſſary purpoſes; ſuch as for drink, and refreſhing meals, the liquid part whereof is moſtly made up of the water, that was fetched home from the well. Public ordinances are the wells; but, for ordinary, the children of God are not ſo much refreſhed with the water thereof, till once they get home to ſome ſecret corner with it, and there they get a more hearty draught, and refreſhing drink of the water of life, than they got at the public well; but ſtill it is from thence it was fetched; and ſo the foundation of theſe private and ſecret refreſhing meals, is ordinarily laid in the public ordinances. It is true, ſome that go to fetch home water from the well, may, according to their need, get an hearty drink of water, even at the ſide of the well, before they bring any water home; and ſo the Lord's people may, and ſometimes do, get a very heartſom and refreſhing draught of living water, even at the well-ſide of public ordinances, while they are hearing the word, or receiving the ſacrament of the ſupper. Now, the harveſt-time of goſpel-ſolemnities, for the believer's progreſſive gathering unto Shiloh, is twofold, teaching and ſealing.

(1.) The harveſt-time of teaching ſolemnities is his hearing ſeaſon, which frequently is God's gathering ſeaſon; the gathering of the people to Shiloh is ordinarily made up in the time of hearing the word; for, faith comes by hearing: and the progreſſive gathering of believers is ordinarily made up alſo in the time of hearing the word; for, the increaſe of faith comes by hearing; As new-born babes deſire the ſincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby, 1 Pet. ii. 2. And hence, the doctrine of the goſpel is the ordinary means of working and increaſing faith; becauſe it is the miniſtration of the Spirit; Gal. iii. 2. Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? This goſpel is the power of God to ſalvation, both for working faith, and for advancing it; For therein is the righteouſneſs of God revealed from faith to faith, Rom. i. 17. By this means we advance, if ſo be we have heard of him, and been taught by him, as the truth is in Jeſus, Eph. iv. 21. The goſpel is like a ladder, by which we climb up to a God in Chriſt, when he is gathering us to him; and every truth of the goſpel is like ſo many ſteps, or rounds of the ladder, and every one of them ſhould be maintained and contended for: if any of the rounds of the ladder be broken off, you are in danger of falling down, and your climbling up is rendered more difficult or impoſſible. Every truth denied, or error maintained, is like a cutting out, or breaking off a round of the ladder; and whenever a breach is made in it, the climbing up by it is rendered impracticable, if it be a fundamental error; or greatly obſtructed, if it nearly concern the fundamentals of religion: we need therefore to be concerned, that every truth be maintained by us, and tranſmitted to our poſterity pure and intire. It is our mercy, that we have pure Standards; and if any latter acts * of this church ſeem to claſh therewith, we hope they have not the deliberate approbation, even of thoſe that framed them; however all goſpel-truths ought to be ſacred to us, as well as the purchaſt liberties and privileges in God's houſe; the loſs of the leaſt whereof, is the loſs of a jewel out of the Mediator's crown. Chriſt is the Head, and centre of all goſpel-truth, and we ought to hold by the Head; and ſo we ſhall hold by the truth, as it is in Jeſus the Head. The apoſtle complains of ſome, their not holding the Head, Col. ii. 19. Some inſtead of holding the Head, they hold by the feet: it is enough to them, that ſuch a good man, or ſuch a learned man ſays ſo and ſo, concerning this or that truth; and ſo let the Head go, and hold by the feet, not regarding the truth, as it is in Jeſus; but the truth, as it is delivered by ſuch a man, whom they eſteem, or ſuch another man that hath this or that good character: but we ought to hang and hold by the Head, and not to hang our faith at the belt of any man or angel; For, if we, or an angel from heaven, preach another doctrine, let him be accurſed, Gal. i. 8. Now, I ſay, that the goſpel-ſeaſon is the gathering ſeaſon; while goſpel-truths are publiſhed, they are the Standard of the Captain of ſalvation, to which the gathering of his ſoldiers ſhould be, and will be, when the goſpel comes not in word only, but in power. But again,

(2.) The harveſt-time of ſealing ſolemnities, that is the believer's receiving ſeaſon, which frequently is God's gathering ſeaſon, when he forwards their progreſſive gathering to Shiloh. This ordinance of the ſupper, being, in a ſpecial manner, appointed, not for begetting ſpiritual life, where there is none, but for increaſing it where begun: it is in this ordinance, that the Lord is pleaſed ſometimes to ſeal up the promiſe, to ſeal up the covenant, to ſeal up his love, and ſeal up their pardon ſenſibly to their ſouls; and to make himſelf known to them in the breaking of bread, Luke xxiv. 35. He brings them under the ſhadow of a ſacrament, and his fruit is ſweet unto their taſte, and his glory bright in their eye; whereas they came ſtark blind, they have got their eyes opened: yea, ſometimes they get here a breathing of glory, an holy perfume of the ſweet embalming love of Chriſt: ſometimes a young heaven, a green glory, a taſte of the grapes of the good land beyond Jordan, to keep the taſte in their mouth, till they come to drink of the new wine in their Father's kingdom. Many a fainting ſoul hath been refreſhed, and revived with the wine upon the lees in this ordinance; while he hath come, and pardoned all their ſins, healed all their ſores, ſupplied all their wants, cleared all their cloudy ſkies, and driven the bottom out of all their doubts and fears; and thus gathered them, and brought them to more nearneſs and conformity to him: for, as when a man makes a timber veſſel for holding food, or the like, the firſt caſt may be very rough, and therefore he ſmooths, and fits it more and more for uſe; ſo the ſouls of the ſaints are, at firſt converſion, but rough caſten, as it were; therefore the Lord, by viſiting of them, and manifeſting himſelf to them in his ordinances, does more and more fit the veſſel of mercy for a fill of the liquor of glory: hence theſe divine incomes now and then, that make them cry out, O my ſoul thirſts for God, for the living God, when ſhall I come and appear before God? Pſal. xlii. 2. As the toſſed mariner longs for the haven, the harbour; harbour; so does the soul, that hath met with God in ordinances, long to meet with him in heaven. As one tells us, "That when once "the Gauls of old had tasted of the sweet wine "that was made of the grapes of Italy, no-"thing would satisfy them but Italy, Italy:" so, the soul that hath once tasted of the goodness of God, and sweetness of Christ, and the grapes of Paradise, nothing satisfies that soul at such a time, but, O Paradise, Paradise! O to be in glory's land, in Immanuel's land! O to be for ever with the Lord! It is true, as the Lord is sovereign, and sometimes hides his face from his children in these ordinances, and sacramental solemnities, insomuch that they go mourning without the sun: so the measures of his communications are various; sometimes more bright and glorious, and sometimes more dark and cloudy: but as we enjoy the light and benefit of the sun, even when we cannot see it, because of the clouds; so believers do sometimes enjoy much of the light, and heat, and warmth of the sun of righteousness, even when, by reason of many clouds, they cannot see him so clearly as at other times; however, every glance of his glory, in these galleries of ordinances, hath such a soul-gathering influence, such an heart-drawing virtue, that this harvest-time may be called a gathering season; while all the faculties of the soul, all the affections of the heart are gathered to, and centered on Christ, and longing to be gathered about the throne, to see him face to face. And this leads me to the fourth and last period, with respect to the season of this gathering of the people to Shiloh.

* What theſe Acts are may be ſeen above, p. 70, 149, 150.

4*thly*, The gathering seasons may be considered, with relation to the consummate gathering of the saints: and of this final gathering there are two seasons, namely, the day of death, and the day of judgment.

1. The day of death is a gathering day to the saints; for then Christ gathers his lilies to himself; My beloved is gone down into his garden, to gather lilies, Cant. vi. 2. When the lilies are ripe, he gathers them into his bosom; he picks up one here, and another there: and indeed some of the sweetest smelling lilies in all the garden of his church, particularly in this and some neighbouring presbyteries, hath the Lord been lately gathering; and among the rest, that lily that used to cast such a savoury gospel-smell, at former solemnities here; you cannot but know what I mean: but, O Sirs, if God shall gather up all the fairest and sweetest of his lilies from among us, our garden will become but unbeautiful and unsavory: the beauty and savour is gone, when the lilies are gathered; unless the Lord himself shall make other such lilies to grow up in their room. I remember that one of the last savoury smells that that lily cast among us, at the last year's solemnity, was in the pleasant opening of that word, Now, we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face: and, no doubt, it was in the prospect of being gathered to the place of immediate vision, and full enjoyment of God and the Lamb. And indeed a time of death is a time of gathering of the saints to glory, where their dark, and partial, and transient enjoyment of God here, is turned to a clear, full, perfect, permanent, and uninterrupted enjoyment: for then, they know him, as they are known; And there is no temple there; for the Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb are the temple of it, Rev. xxi. 12. And therefore, to him, as the temple in heaven, shall the gathering of the people be. Hence, death to the godly is called a gathering, Gen. xlix. 33. It is said of Jacob, when he died, He was gathered unto his people: why, one would think, he was rather taken away from his people; for he was dying, and all his children and grand-children about him; yea, but he had people elsewhere, and better company, that he was going to, even the general assembly and church of the first-born, that are written in heaven, the spirits of just men made perfect, and all the saints that had gone before him. O Sirs, see what company ye choose now; if ye be of the wicked and ungodly, your death will be but a gathering to the devil and reprobates in hell; if you lose heaven at the first shot of death, you are gone for ever: when a man shoots at a mark in his life-time, if he miss at one shot, he may shoot another, and shoot again and again, till he hit; but if you miss heaven at the first shot of death, you are not to live again to shoot another shot for it: therefore, let your life now be a pressing towards the mark; a shooting at the right mark, a gathering to Shiloh: for these that are gathered to him graciously in life, will be gathered gloriously to him at death; for then, the souls of believers do immediatly pass into glory; when their bodies are laid in the dust, their souls are gathered to their people in heaven, where Christ is the centre of the assembly; And so shall we be ever with the Lord, 1 Thes. iv. 17. There are angels and arch-angels in heaven, there are saints and seraphims there; but all will not make a heaven without Christ; he is the light of the place, and the heart of the company for ever, and to him shall the gathering of the people be. But then;

2. The day of judgment will be a most remarkable season of the consummate gathering of his people to him: the text indeed speaks mainly of Christ's first coming in the flesh, The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, till Shiloh come, and to him shall the gathering of the people be; but it will be also true of his second coming in the clouds of heaven; for then will he gather his saints together unto him, these that have made a covenant with him by sacrifice, Psal. l. 5. Therefore the apostle joins his second coming, and his glorious gathering together; We beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, 2 Thes. ii. 1. Then will he send his angels, with the great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to another, Matth. xxiv. 31.; wherever the wind of providence hath driven their dust. Though the dust of the believer's body may be scattered to all corners of the earth and sea, and resolved to the original elements, of which it was at first compounded; yet God will gather it all together again, when he makes the earth to give up its dead, and the sea to give up its dead, Rev. xx. 13. And therefore, Though worms destroy this body, yet in their flesh shall they see God, according to the words of Job, wherein he expresseth his faith of the happy resurrection, Job xix. 25. I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; for then, as God will gather together their scattered bones and dust, so he will bring their glorified souls along with him; Them which sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him, 1 Thess. iv. 14.

and he will reunite these two intimate friends, soul and body; they shall meet with one another, and meet the Lord in the air.

O my brethren, let none of us think it incredible, that God should raise the dead; for, in that day when Shiloh comes again, he will gather together and make up all his jewels, Mal. iii. 17. Though his jewels be lying amongst the dust, yet he will separate his jewel-dust from the rest of the dust: for, as Christ is the Load-stone, that draws the hearts of people to him, that are gathered to him by his grace now, according to his own word, When I am lifted up, I will draw all men unto me; so, at his second coming, he will be the glorious Load-stone, that will draw all the precious dust of his saints together to him. Any of you who know the virtue of the load-stone will know this, (which I have sometimes tried with a load-stone in my hand) let the filings of steel, never so small, be mixed with dust, so as it is impossible, you would think, to separate the dust of the steel from the dust of the other earth; yet, if you bring near the load-stone, all the filings of the steel will separate from the rest, and fly up to the load-stone, in the tenth part of the twinkling of an eye. Well, if the load-stone have such a virtue, what must be the virtue of him who gave virtue to it? Whenever Shiloh comes in the clouds of heaven, behold, in the twinkling of an eye, all the redeemed that sleep in the dust will be gathered; the glorious Load-stone will put forth its virtue, and they will be all drawn to him in a moment, 1 Cor. xv. 52. 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. There is the consummate gathering of the people to Shiloh.

It is true, the day of judgment will be a separating day, the sheep will be separate from the goats, and the wheat from the tares, Mat. xiii. 20. But however terrible that day will be to the Christless world, that could never be gathered to Shiloh, when they shall be gathered together in bundels, and cast into the fire of God's everlasting wrath! yet glorious, glorious will the gathering be of all the redeemed! As they will be gathered to him, so they will be assessors with him in judgment; Know ye not that saints shall judge the world? yea, they shall judge angels, 1 Cor. 2, 3. They shall sit upon the bench of judgment with Christ, and applaud him in all his judicial procedure against wicked men and devils. These, who formerly trampled them like dirt under their feet, will then stand, like so many guilty pannels before them; and when the irreversible doom goes forth, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels, the gathered saints will joyfully adore the equity of the Judge, and will not so much as give a sigh or a sob at the terror of the sentence against the wicked, but clap their hands, and send them to hell with a shout. Oh! that wicked and Christless souls would fear and tremble, and flee from the wrath to come, in the awful apprehension of this glorious day! Devils quake at the apprehension of this day; they believe and tremble: and yet sinful men are fearless. But when the great Judge will erect his fiery tribunal in the air, see if you shall be able to bear up, be as stout-hearted as you can.

O man, death is insensibly stealing away your breath; and after death, comes the judgment; and then comes the doleful gathering of the wicked to be the fewel of eternal flames: because oft he would have gathered you, as a hen does her chickens under her wings, but ye would not be gathered, therefore you will be separated from him for ever: you would not come for his blessing, therefore you must depart with his curse; Depart from me, ye cursed: Then shall they be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power. Oh! sinner; flee, flee to Shiloh: let the gathering of the people be to him now, that you may share of the glory of the consummate gathering of the saints. After judgment, the gathered saints will return, and come to Zion with songs. God having in that day gathered together, and made up all his jewels, what a bright constellation will these jewels make, when they shall be all gathered together in the firmament of glory! Yea, they will shine as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars for ever and ever, Dan. xii. 3. Then, says Christ, shall the righteous shine as the sun in the kingdom of their Father, Matth. xiii. 23.; that is, even all these poor creatures that have been gathered to Shiloh, as the Lord their righteousness and strength.

O Sirs, this glorious gathering day will be upon you, before we be all gathered together on earth again. Some that were at the last year's gathering here, are now gone to eternity; and you will never see them again, till you and they be gathered together before the awful tribunal of God; and, without all peradventure, there are here that will never see another sacrament at Airth: it may be you, man; it may be you, woman; it may be such a minister, or such a private person; it may be such a gentleman or such a lady, such a youth or such a girl, as have little thoughts of death at present. O Sirs, I am looking to you, and you to me; but we will never all see one another, till we see the Son of man, the Son of God, coming in the clouds of heaven, and gathering all the world before him: and therefore, in the view of that gathering day, O let not this gathering of people here part from one another and dismiss, till once there be a gathering unto Shiloh. Now, we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, at the great day of his appearance, that you consent to be gathered, and that this present gathering be not dissolved, till your hearts and affections be gathered to Shiloh, and centered in him. Oh! choose rather to die upon the spot, than not be gathered unto him this day. Many a gathering word and call you have got these days bygone, and Christ is saying, How oft would I have gathered you, yet ye would not! O! is he saying, I would gather you, man, woman? then, what would you? Have you no will to be gathered? Have you no will to be gathered out of the stinking prison of your lusts and idols, your self and self-righteousness, your worldly-mindedness, and covetousness, your pride and vanity? What ever be the filthy stinking prison that you are like to perish in, he is saying, I would gather you out of it! And, O man, woman, would you rather be gathered unto the devil, than gathered unto Shiloh? Would you rather be gathered to a tavern of drunkenness, lewdness, and carnality, than gathered to the temple of grace and glory? Would you be gathered to Shiloh, or not? It is come just to this, man, What would you that I should do unto you? Would you that I should gather you? Behold, he

he is declaring his will in this gospel. Is he saying, The gathering of the people shall be to him? Does he say, It shall be? then, O say, AMEN, Lord; So let it be.

The strength of unbelief lies in your unwillingness to be gathered: and if the will were once broken, it would be a day of power; Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, Psal. cx. 3. O! has there any power been here to make you willing? willing to be gathered to him as a Priest, and a Prince both? willing to be gathered out of the prison of sin, as well as out of the prison of hell and wrath? willing to be gathered to him for wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and complete redemption; and to be indebted to him for all and every part of his salvation? willing to have all from him for nothing, so as the praise and glory of all may redound to himself? O Sirs, are you thus willing to be gathered under his wings of grace and glory? Then, glory to God for the power that hath made you willing: or, if you cannot say, that that power is what you have felt, yet is it that will-breaking power you would be at, saying, O let this gathering power be exerted? There is hope in Israel concerning you.

O may sinners be gathered to and close with him! This is God's design by the gospel; and, we hope, it is our design in preaching it, to get sinners gathered. And, O let me tell you, that there is such a glorious gathering of excellent things in him, as may engage the hearts of all the sinners here to gather unto him, and all the believers here to be still gathering to him more and more.

Well, what for a gathering is there in him? O! there is a gathering of all glories in him; the glory of saints, the glory of angels, the glory of God is in him: so that he is altogether lovely.— The gethering of all perfection is in him, and all divine attributes and fulness; for, it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell: so that he hath all fulness of ability and authority to save.—The gathering of all righteousness and strength is in him; therefore, to him should men come, Isa. xlv. 24.—The gathering of all the promises is in him; for, all the promises are Yea and Amen in him: there is no promise out of him.— The gathering of all graces is in him, that out of his fulness we may come and receive grace for grace: and to whom should the gathering of the people be, but to him that hath all grace for them? —The gathering of all blessings is in him; for, all spiritual blessings in heavenly places are only in Christ Jesus, Eph. i. 3. And to whom should the gathering of the people be, but to him, of whom it is said, that men shall be blest in him, and all nations shall call him blessed? Psal. lxxii. 17.: and no blessing is to be had out of him.—The gathering of all mercy is in him; and therefore all the mercies of the everlasting covenant are called, the sure mercies of David. All the mercy of God is in Christ; and there is no mercy in God, out of Christ, towards any sinner.—The gathering of all gifts is in him; He hath received gifts for men, even for the rebellious, that God the Lord might dwell among them: the gift of the Spirit especially; for, he hath received the Spirit above measure; and so hath all the influences of the Spirit to give. He received gifts for men; all is for men, and for the people: all the promised righteousness, graces, blessings, mercies, and gifts that he hath received, as Mediator, and that are gathered in him, is for the people, that the gathering of the people may be to him.—There is a gathering of all things in him; for he is all in all: and all things are yours, if once you be gathered to him; whereas you have nothing at all but sin, death, and misery out of him.— In a word, there is a gathering of all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, and all unsearchable riches in him, for making you up, and making you happy for ever; and to whom should the gathering of poor ignorant people be, but to him? — What shall I say? There is a gathering of all saving offices in him; he is a Prophet, Priest, King, Mediator, Redeemer, Surety, and all offices in one: whatever be your want, he hath an office for supplying it; whatever be your debt, he hath an office for paying it: whatever be your disease, he hath an office for curing it: for diseases in the mind, he is a Prophet; for diseases of the conscience, he is a Priest; for diseases of the will, he is a King. And for all other maladies that can be named, he hath all other healing offices that can be named: yea, for wonderful maladies, he hath wonderful offices; for wonderful sins, he hath wonderful pardons; for wonderful plagues, he hath wonderful balsams and plaisters.

O Sirs, is there such a gathering of all good things in him for the people? and shall there be no gathering of the people to him? Christ hath no other use for these things that are thus gathered in him, but for the behoof of the people that are gathered to him; and they would all be useless, if there were no gathering of the people to him. Alas! shall he be an useless Shiloh for you? And have you no need of him, no use for him? Oh! dole and misery! Will you stand at a distance from him, as if he were an useless Christ? But if you have any use for him then, all that he wants is to have your employment; to believe, is to employ him to do all your work in you and for you. Doing and believing are very different things: if you be for doing all yourself, in order to your own salvation and justification, then you make Christ useless, and his death vain; If righteousness come by the law, Christ is dead in vain, Gal. ii. 21. But if you be for believing, then know what believing or faith is. Faith doth nothing, but gives Christ all to do, and lets him have the glory of doing all that belongs to his office, saying, Lord, work; work for me, and work in me. And hence, though believing be not doing, yet the best believer is the best doer; in regard the work that is put in Christ's hand is best done; and because, while faith does nothing, but only employs the strength of Christ to do all, then, through Christ's strengthening, it can do all things.

Now, O Sirs, shall Christ get no employment here? Will there be no gathering to him for righteousness and strength? I hope some have been gathered and drawn to him, and can say, The Lord God of the Hebrews met with us, and made a soul-gathering influence run through, yea, thoroughly through our hearts. O Sirs, let the whole of your life be a gathering to Shiloh, and a living upon him. And, now the great gathering of people here may be joyfully dismissed, though they shall never all meet together again in time, if this promise of Christ hath taken effect, To him shall the gathering of the people be. *

* What follows, to the end, was delivered in two discourses, at a sacramental occasion at Carnock, July 4th and 5th, 1725.

VI. The

VI. The sixth general head was, To give you the reasons of the doctrine. And here I am to show you, 1. Why there must be a gathering of the people, the Gentiles? 2. Why to SHILOH must the gathering be? Why to him?

1st, Why are the people, the Gentiles, to be gathered? For this part of the text concerns the Gentiles, in contradistinction from the Jews; To him shall the gathering of the people be, the Gentile people. It was in pursuance of this design that the apostle Paul was called the apostle of the Gentiles; and he magnifies his office, and boasts of it, saying, To me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, Eph. iii. 8. This is a question of the greatest concern to us Gentiles: Why, is our name put in Christ's commission? O Sirs, it should be good news to us: and for confirming our faith herein, take these six grounds and reasons for it.

1. There must be a gathering of Gentile people to him, for filling up the room which the Jews left: Christ came to his own, and his own received him not. And since the Jews rejected him, and cast out themselves by unbelief, the Gentiles are taken in, to succeed to them in their church privileges; Through their fall, salvation is come to the Gentiles, Rom. xi. 11. And ver. 19. These branches were taken off, that the Gentiles might be grafted in. The room which the Jews left vacant must be filled up with Gentiles, Luke xiv. 15,—24.; where the gospel-entertainment is compared to a great man's supper, to which many are invited; some reject the invitation, particularly the Jews, that had the first honour of being invited to the banqueting-house; that is, to partake of Christ and his gospel-blessings: others embraced the gracious offer, particularly the poor, despised, out-cast Gentiles, even these who were without the law. Hence see and read ver. 21, 22, 23.: there you see the Gentiles called, to fill up the room that the Jews left vacant.

2. There must be a gathering of the people, the Gentiles, to reprove and punish the unbelief of the Jews, from whom the sceptre is departed, and to provoke them to jealousy, Rom. xi. 11.; for, as because of unbelief they were broken off, ver. 20.; so for the punishment of their unbelief. See what God says to them, Deut. xxxii. 21. compared with Rom. x. 19. I will provoke them to jealousy, by them that are no people. The Jews had the first offer, Acts iii. 26.; and the Gentiles had but their leavings. But what a provocation it was to the Jews, to see the Gentiles taken into favour, is represented in the parable, Luke xv. 11,—32. where the elder brother envied the reception and entertainment of the prodigal Gentiles; and more plainly, Acts xiii. 45. where you see how the Gentiles were received, ver. 46, 47, 48. Thus, whenever the Jews heard that the apostle Paul had a commission to go to the Gentiles, see how they were provoked, Acts xxii. 21, 22. It was their sin that they were thus inraged; and God makes oftentimes peoples sin their punishment: a man needs no greater plague, than to be left to the impetuous rage of his own lusts. However, in gathering of the Gentiles, God shews his anger and displeasure at the unbelief of the Jews; and, to this day, their posterity, scattered up and down the earth, are under the dismal effects of this anger; for, ever since Shiloh came, the Jews have been set to the door, and the Gentiles gathered in. Yea,

3. There must be a gathering of the people, the Gentiles, to pave a way for the glorious gathering of the Jews again, Rom. xi. 23,—26. Here is a twofold mystery, namely, that the gathering of the Gentiles will make way for the renewed gathering and conversion of the Jews. I shall read you some promises you have thereof, Isa. xi. 10,—12. Jer. xxii. 3,—6. These, you may see, have evidently a further look than their deliverance from Babylon, Zech. xii. 10. and xiii. 1. As we have encouragement to pray for the conversion of the Jews; so if there were a Spirit of prayer to a God in Christ among us, in their behalf, who were his antient people, we might then think, the happy day were hastening, wherein it is promised, that the Gentiles shall further the gathering of the Jews, Isa. xlix. 22. and lx. 9, 10. lxvi. 18,—23. See Zech. ii. 10,—12. and viii. 21,—23. Again,

4. There must be a gathering of the people, the Gentiles, to shew the sovereignty of his grace, and freedom of his mercy, Rom. ix. 15. That he will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and compassion on whom he will have compassion. The Jews expected to monopolize this privilege, of being God's people and church, continually to themselves; and few thought, that the Gentiles should become fellow-citizens of the saints, and of the household of God: but God's thoughts are not our thoughts; he shews his sovereignty, in pitching upon what nation of the earth it pleases him: The potter hath power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel to honour, and another to dishonour. The great Creator of the ends of the earth does thus shew his power and authority, in making these a people that were no people, and these his people that were not his people, Rom. ix. 25, 26. This therefore was one of the great mysteries of godliness, Christ preached unto the Gentiles, and believed on in the world, 1 Tim. iii. 16. This was a great mystery, that with great difficulty could be received, and believed by the apostles; for when Peter was persuaded, by the vision of a sheet knit at the four corners, wherein was all manner of four-footed beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air, not to despise the Gentiles as common and unclean, and accordingly had preached the gospel with success to them, he was accused by the rest of the apostles, Acts xi. 2, 3. till Peter making his defence, They held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God granted to the Gentiles repentance unto life, ver. 18. And in all this the Lord acted in a suitableness to his antient promise, concerning the calling and inbringing of the Gentiles. It is long since God promised by Noah, saying, God shall enlarge Japhet, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem, Gen. ix. 27. Now, of Japhet came the Gentiles, Gen. x. 5. and of Shem came the Jews; so that by this prophecy, there is a clear prediction of the conversion of the Gentiles, and their inheriting the privileges of the Jews, to the praise of sovereign grace.

5. There must be a gathering of the people, the Gentiles, to shew the extent and sufficiency of his grace, as well as the sovereignty and freedom of it: how extensive is his grace and goodness, in gathering in the Gentiles, as well as the Jews, under the wings of his favour and mercy? While he sets open his entertaining-room doors to sinners, out of every tongue, and nation, nation, and kindred, where neither Jew nor Greek, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free, are excluded; but all are one and alike in Jesus Christ, Gal. iii. 28. Col. iii. 18. Herein he appears to act with a greatness like himself, becoming his boundless infinity, and not after the manner of men, but like a God; and so to signalize his goodness beyond the compass of man; For he is God, and not man, Hos. xi. 9. It were a diminution of the glory of his grace, if it were said, This is nothing, but what a man might do. It is his glory, to act in such a manner, as is proper to none but a God, a God of boundless grace and unparalleled goodness; that when poor dogs, Pagans, Gentiles find his goodness, even extending to them cast-aways, that were rejected of men, they may have it to say, Is this the manner of men, O Lord?

6. There must be a gathering of the people, the Gentiles, to show the glory and greatness of Christ's kingdom; That his dominion reacheth from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth: see Psal. lxxii. 8, 10. As it is the glory of a king, to have many subjects, a numerous train, and a great retinue; so it is the glory of our Shiloh, that the gathering of the people is unto him, even Gentiles as well as Jews; and so many the more to celebrate the praises of free grace, and to adorn the triumph of his glorious throne above, with loud acclamations of Grace, grace. Solomon tells us, Prov. xiv. 28. That the glory of a king is in the multitude of his subjects; so it is the glory of King Jesus, to have a multitude of people gathered to him: and, O that he may get honour here this day, by gathering a multitude of souls, that they may come and set the crown upon the head of an exalted Jesus!

2dly, Why to SHILOH must the gathering of the people be? Why,

1. To him must the gathering of the people be, because to him the headship and government of the people does belong. All the people, that come of Adam, have lost their head since Adam's fall: or, if they have no other head than the first Adam, they are no better than an headless company, yea, and worse; for, from Adam their first head, there is nothing but sin and death conveyed, Rom. v. 12. But now, the second Adam, the promised Shiloh, is constitute the Head of the people, the Head of the body the church, That in all things he might have the pre-eminence, Col. i. 18. And to whom should the gathering of the people be, but to him, who is the Head of the people, and the Head over all things to the church? Eph. i. 22. He is the Head influential and political: the Head of influences; for all the influences of light, and life, and strength, and comfort, come from him: the Head of government; for, Isa. ix. 6. The government is laid upon his shoulders,—and of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end; upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment and justice for ever, ver. 7. The sceptre is departed from Judah; but it shall never depart from Jesus, the Lion of the tribe of Judah: the sceptre is fallen into his hand; and to whom should the gathering of the people be, but under the sceptre of this glorious King? O that there were a flocking to touch the sceptre of King Jesus! For, God hath made this Jesus, who was crucified, to be both Lord and Christ, Acts ii. 36. He hath set his King upon his holy hill of Zion, Psal. ii. 6. He hath exalted him, by his right-hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour, Acts v. 31. The sceptre, and the law-giver is departed from Judah, from the Jews, since Shiloh came; but the sceptre and the Law-giver is come to the Gentiles; for, The Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our Law-giver, the Lord is our King, he will save us, Isa. xxx. 22. There needs no other reason, why the gathering of the people must be to him; for he being the Head and King of the people, by God the Father's appointment, all divine honours are owing to him: he must be the object of our faith, love, trust, obedience, and worship, as he is God-man, Mediator: and it is the will of the Father, that all men honour the Son, even as they honour the Father; and to him must the glory of the gathering be: Upon him must be hung all the glory of his Father's house,—even all the vessels of small quantity, as well as great, from the vessels of cups to the vessels of flagons, Isa. xxii. 24. All the vessels of mercy, that are gathered together to God's house, they must be gathered to him, and fastened on him, as the glorious Nail in a sure place, ver. 23.; For it is he that builds the temple of the Lord, and shall bear the glory: for he shall sit and rule upon his throne, Zech. vi. 13. People may gather about the throne of a king; and, O! should not the gathering of the people be about the throne of grace, to see the glory, and touch the sceptre of him that sits upon the throne? To him the headship and government of the people does belong; therefore to him must the gathering of the people be.

2. To him must the gathering of the people be; because to him does the WORK of the people belong: as he is appointed to be an Head to them, so a worker for them. Ever since the covenant of works was broken, and so our working arm broken, we being by nature without strength, it is he that works all our work in us, and for us, Isa. xxvi. 12. Hence says the psalmist David, Psal. lvii. 2. I will cry unto God most High, unto God that performs all things for me. There is a twofold work that we need to have performed, namely, work satisfying to the law, as a covenant; and work suitable to the law, as a rule. Now, the performing of both these works belongs to Christ, as he is made of God to us, both righteousness and sanctification. The work satisfying to the law, as a covenant, is performed by him as our righteousness, while he fulfils the righteousness of the law for, and in his people, Rom. viii. 4. The work suitable to the law as a rule, is performed in and through him, as our sanctification; while he puts his Spirit within us, and causes us to walk in his statutes, Ezek. xxxvi. 22. And hence, says Christ, John xv. 5. Without me ye can do nothing: the word is, χωρὶς ἐμοῦ, SEVERED from me, or SEPARATE from me, ye can do nothing. Why then, we must not remain separate from him; but gather to him, as he is the Mediator, and the All of the covenant. The whole weight and work of the covenant belongs to him, and this makes it a covenant of grace to us, and not of works; because all the work falls to his share. There is his doing work, for the people; for he came to fulfil all righteousness, that so the people might say, In the Lord have I righteousness, Isa. xlv. 24. Therefore it follows, To him shall men come.—Again, there is his suffering work for the people, on which account, the gathering of the people should be to him; Heb. xiii. 13. That he might sanctify the people with his his own blood, he ſuffered without the gate; therefore let us go forth to him.—There is his dying work; for he ſuffered unto death: and his death was an act of obedience; he being obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs. This is the goſpel delivered unto us, to be preached unto the people, How that Chriſt died for our ſins according to the ſcriptures 1 Cor. xv. 3. And ſhall he die for the people, and yet there be no gathering of the people to him?—There is his repairing work, for the behoof of the people; and in the works juſt now mentioned, this repairing work is accompliſhed; for he repairs the breaches of the law, that our ſin made: and not only is the law magnified and made honourable, by his doing and dying; while his doing anſwers the precept, and his dying the threatening thereof, and that to infinite advantage; but the glory of the Law-giver is repaired. The people had come ſhort of the glory of God; but he, to whom the gathering of the people muſt be, did repair the honour and glory of his holineſs, by a perfect obedience; and the glory and honour of his juſtice, by a condign ſatisfaction: and thus brought in glory to God in the higheſt; yea, and made all the other glorious attributes of God ſhine forth gloriouſly and harmoniouſly, in the work of our redemption. And hence, when Chriſt was about this work, he ſays, Now is the Son of man glorified, and God is glorified in him, John xiii. 31.—There is his purchaſing work, for the behoof of the people; He hath bought the people with a price, 1 Cor. vi. 20. And ſhall not the gathering of the people be to him, whoſe blood was the price of the peoples ſouls, and the purchaſe-money for buying grace and glory to them?—There is his pleading work for the people; for, he is able to ſave to the uttermoſt, all that come to God by him, becauſe he ever lives to make interceſſion for them, Heb. vii. 25. And this is the reaſon for their coming and gathering to him; for, in ſo doing, they ſhall have an evidence, that his pleading for them hath been, and will be for ever effectual.—There is alſo a conquering work, that belongs to him, according to Pſal. cx. 3. Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power: therefore the gathering of the people ſhall be to him, becauſe the conquering of the people belongs to him; and how he conquers them, by the ſword of his powerful grace, you ſee, Pſal. xlv. 3, 4, 5. Indeed there will be no gathering to him, till this conquering power come: and therefore, if you would be gathered, cry to him to gird this ſword upon his thigh, and to ſend the rod of his ſtrength out of Zion, that it may be mighty through God to the pulling down of the ſtrong holds of ſin. O that his voice in the goſpel were powerful! Some tell us that the lion's whelps are born dead at firſt, till by the roaring of the old lion over them, they are quickened: whatever be in this, it is true enough in the caſe of the people that are gathered to Shiloh; they are born dead, and remain ſo, till the Lion of the tribe of Judah roar ſo loudly, as to quicken them with his powerful voice, according to John v. 25. The hour cometh, when the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear ſhall live: his voice quickens, conquers, and captivates them. And as it is his work to conquer them; ſo to conquer all their enemies for them; whether it be ſin, Satan, death, hell, or the world, that they may be more than conquerors through him; and all this conquering work belongs to him, that the gathering of the people may be to him.—And, in a word, there is a ſtrengthening work, that belongs to him, as well as a leading, guiding, comforting, and counſelling work, that I might mention, together with all the other parts of his ſaving work; I can do all things through Chriſt ſtrengthening me, ſays Paul. And it is upon this footing, that all the fruits of faith come in, even all the works of ſpiritual goſpel obedience. When we go forth to any work, we are to go in the ſtrength of the Lord, making mention of his righteouſneſs, and of his only; being ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might; ſtrong in the grace that is in Chriſt Jeſus; and ſtrengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; his ſtrength being made perfect in our weakneſs; and he working in us both to will and to do of his good pleaſure. Thus he is the ſtrength of Iſrael, the ſtrength of his people: for which cauſe, the gathering of the people muſt be to him; and becauſe, in this manner, the work of the people belongs to him, to work all their works in them, and for them. But then again,

3. To him muſt the gathering of the people be, becauſe to him does the INSTRUCTION of the people belong; for as the purchaſe of the people belongs to him, as a Prieſt, and the conqueſt of the people belongs to him, as a King; ſo the inſtruction of the people belongs to him, as a Prophet. And indeed, though I mention it here in the third place, yet this is the firſt part of his gathering work, to inſtruct, and teach, and enlighten; and may we not ſay, with Elihu, Job xxxvi. 22. Who teacheth like him? He is the none-ſuch Teacher of the people; and therefore, muſt the gathering of the people be to him. In vain is the gathering of people about tents and pulpits, if their eyes look no higher than towards poor miniſters, mortal worms like themſelves, that can only ſpeak to their ears, but cannot make one beam of divine light to break in upon their underſtandings. This is the peculiar work of him who is the Sun of righteouſneſs, the Light of the world, the Light to lighten the Gentiles: it is he only, by his Spirit, that can make us to know God, and the things of God; No man hath ſeen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the boſom of the Father, he hath declared him, John i. 18. He is the bleſſed and only Teacher and Inſtructer; and therefore the gathering of the people ſhould be to his ſchool, that they may be all taught of God; John vi. 45. And every man therefore that hath heard, and learned of the Father, comes to me, ſays Chriſt; where it is pleaſant to obſerve, comparing this and the former ſcripture together, that as God and Chriſt both are teachers here, ſo the Father and the Son both are the leſſon taught, in the light of the eternal Spirit: and, that as there is no coming to Chriſt, nor gathering to him, but under the influence of the Father's teaching; nor is there any coming to the Father, but by the Son, who is the way: ſo the great leſſon that the Father teaches is the Son, and the great leſſon that the Son teaches is the Father; and ſo the whole teaching comes to this, a knowing the Father, in the Son, by the Holy Ghoſt. Now, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in a peculiar manner, is the great Prophet and teacher, being anointed with a ſupereminent unction of the Spirit of wiſdom for this end; Iſa. lxi. 1. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, for he hath anointed me to preach; O glorious preacher and teacher! I have put my Spirit upon upon him, says the Father, that he might bring forth judgment to the Gentiles; that is, light and instruction to the people: and therefore should the gathering of the people be to him. O then, let all the people say, To whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life.

4. To him must the gathering of the people be, because to him does the SALVATION of the people belong. Salvation from sin belongs to him; therefore his name is called JESUS, because he saves his people from their sins, Mat. i. 21. Salvation from wrath belongs to him, therefore his name is also called, even JESUS, which delivered us from the wrath to come, 1 Thess. i. 10. And not only the privative, but the positive salvation of the people belongs to him: hence, whom he saves, he adopts; whom he saves, he adorns; whom he saves, he anoints; whom he saves, he justifies, and glorifies. O then, to whom should the gathering of sinners be, but to him who is the Saviour of sinners? 1 Tim. i. 5. This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came to save sinners, of whom, [viz. of saved sinners] I am the chief. O let every man and woman here say it with application! say it, man, woman; say it, old and young, high and low, rich and poor; and I will say it with you, through grace, of whom I am the chief; even the chief of sinners, whom he came to save. Let not unbelief say, It may be he came not to save me: for this gospel declares that your name is in his sealed commission, if you be a sinner; there is the gospel-charter let down from heaven, and it is a letter directed on the back, For you sinners; Jesus Christ came to save SINNERS: and if you open the charter, and read it with application to yourself, you will find that it is all for you, both within and without. O! hath Christ a commission to save the people! and shall not the people gather to him for salvation? Hath he a commission to save sinners, and shall he return with his commission in his hand, saying, Father, thou gavest me a commission to seek and to save that which was lost, and yet wretched lost sinners will not have me, nor my salvation either? They love their lusts better than me; they love their own proud fancy better than my righteousness; and they will not believe that I have so much good-will to them as to save them: they will not be persuaded but I am cheating them with some goodly words: I would gather them, but they will not be gathered; and save them, but they will not come to me that they might have life, though I have a commission from the Father to give life to dead sinners. Why, may one think or say, if Christ hath such a commission to save sinners, then let him execute his commission, I shall not hinder him. What is that you are saying, man? Let me hear that again: if he hath a commission to save sinners, let him come and save me, I shall not hinder him. Is it jest or earnest that you are saying? If your heart be jesting, while you are speaking thus in your heart, and despising a Saviour notwithstanding; then it is a dreadful jest: Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish; How shall ye escape, if ye neglect so great salvation? But are you in earnest, O sinner, saying, Since it is his office to save sinners, O let him do it for God's sake! let him execute his saving office on me the chief of sinners; for, the Lord knows, I would not desire to hinder him? Why, poor soul, I will tell you good news, he seeks no more at your hand than what you are saying, namely, that you do not resist nor refuse his grace by unbelief; but that your heart say, Content, Lord; content to have salvation from all my sins and lusts, content to have all the salvation that Christ came to give: why, he came to give life, and to give it more abundantly; and when he is content to give, and you content to receive, there is little more ado, than to bless him that it is a bargain; for he is profering himself, and all his salvation upon you this day. To him does the salvation of the people belong; therefore let the gathering of the people be to him.

5. To him must the gathering of the people be, because to him is the GIFT of the people made. God the Father hath made a gift of the people to him; therefore the people must be gathered to him. The Father desires him to ask the people, and he should have them; Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost ends of the earth for thy possession, Psal. ii. 8. There is indeed a select number that were given to him from eternity, John vi. 37. All that the Father hath given me, shall come to me; that is, all that were given to him shall be gathered to him: and, that none of all the people that hear the gospel may exclude themselves, as if they were not given; therefore it follows, Him that comes I will in no wise cast out; all comers are welcome. It is as if Christ had said to these final rejecters of him, I would have gathered you, but you would not; you never had so much as a will to be gathered; you would not: but be it known, to your confusion, that though you reject and despise me, yet I will have a gathering of the people to me; All that the Father hath given me shall be gathered to me: and though none will be gathered, but these that were given, yet this giving is not put in as a bar to your coming, but rather as an encouragement thereto; therefore it is remarkable, he does not add, Him that WAS GIVEN I will in no wise cast out; but him THAT COMES I will in no wise cast out; intimating, That as this giving is not the primary object of faith, so it cannot be seen or known, but in the way of coming: and they may have this encouragement to come, that in coming they may know they were given to me. They that have no will to be gathered, cannot know they were given; but all that would be gathered, may be sure they were given: therefore let this be a ground for the gathering of people to him, that as the people to be gathered were given to him from eternity, so they that would be gathered may know and be assured, that they were given to him; Thine they were, and thou gavest them me, John xvii. 6. They were thine by election, and thou gavest them me, to be redeemed by me. O happy people, whom a day of power hath made so willing, that indeed they would be gathered to Shiloh! They may know that they were in God's hand from eternity, and out of God's hand they were put as a compliment into Christ's hand, if I may so express it; and indeed he is infinitely well-pleased with the compliment; he takes an armsful of them, as it were, out of God's everlasting arms; and he hugs them in his bosom; for, his delights were with the sons of men; and whenever he sees the travel of his soul, he is satisfied: and when he hath hugged them in his redeeming arms, till he hath justified, sanctified, and and completely ſaved them, then he will give them back to the Father's hand again, preſenting them blameleſs to him, ſaying, Behold I, and the children which thou haſt given me. There muſt then be a gathering of the people to him, becauſe there was a giving of the people to him. A poor compliment, you may think with wonder, of the like of me, to paſs betwixt the hands of the eternal Father, and his eternal Son, in concurrence with the eternal Spirit, one God in three Perſons: but little matter how poor and mean the compliment ſeem to be, and really is in itſelf, if God be glorified, and Shiloh magnified, and you ſaved. O! let the conſideration of what a large dominion, from ſea to ſea, and from the river to the ends of the earth, is given to Chriſt; yea, a numberleſs number, that no man can number, of all nations, and kindreds, and tongues, and people, that ſhall ſtand before the throne of the Lamb, with white robes, and palms in their hands, Rev. vii. 9. ſaying, Salvation to our God, that ſits upon the throne, and to the Lamb for ever and ever: Let the view of that innumerable multitude of people that are given to him, ſtir up and provoke the gathering of the people to him; he is come to demand what was given him. But then again,

6. To him muſt the gathering of the people be, becauſe as the people are given to him, ſo he is GIVEN to the people for this end, that the gathering of the people may be to him: and hence, to all the people of the viſible church, it is ſaid, To us a child is born, to us a ſon is given, whoſe name is called Wonderful, Counſeller, the mighty God, the everlaſting Father, the Prince of peace, Iſa. vi. 9. I ſpeak not here of his being given in actual poſſeſſion to believers; they that take the gift of God are poſſeſſed of it: but I ſpeak even of a giving in the goſpel-diſpenſation and offer; for, no man can receive what is not given: receiving is not giving; and Chriſt is ſo far given to all the hearers of the goſpel, that they are obliged to receive him, and believe in him, upon peril of damnation; He that believes not ſhall be damned. Thus he is given to many that reject him; hence, ſays Chriſt, to theſe that were rejecting him, John vi. 32. My Father gives you the true bread from heaven; that is, in order to be received by you; for, in rejecting of this bread that my Father gives you, your ſouls will ſtarve. This will aggravate the damnation of the damned, that Chriſt was given to them in the goſpel-offer, and they rejected the gift of God. However, the good news of the goſpel is, John iii. 16. God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believes on him, or gathers in to him, may not periſh, but have everlaſting life. This reaſon, for the giving of the people to Shiloh, is imported in the very boſom of the text; Shiloh is come to you, that you may come to him; he is come in the fleſh, he is come in the goſpel, and may we hope he is come in the Spirit? He is come to the people, that the people may be gathered to him; and he is come as a Shiloh; that is, the Meſſias, the Sent of God, that the people may welcome God's Send, ſaying, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. To you is born a Saviour, which is Chriſt the Lord; this is indeed good tidings to all people, Luke ii. 10. To you is the word of this ſalvation ſent, Acts xiii. 26. Chriſt the Shiloh is the promiſed Seed, the leading promiſe; and the promiſe is to you, and to your children, Acts ii. 39. that you may receive him in the promiſe. He is the Sent of God to you, that you may gather to him; he is ſent to be the Saviour of the people, the Helper of the people; and ſent by way of free gift and donation, Iſa. xli. 27. I will give to Jeruſalem One that brings good tidings; and for what is he given to the people? See Iſa. lv. 4. He is given to be a Witneſs to the people, and a Leader and Commander to the people: yea, Iſa. xlii. 6. He is given for a Covenant of the people. And why is he thus given to the people, but that the gathering of the people may be to him? The people then are promiſed to him, and he is promiſed to the people; and there muſt be a gathering of the people to him. Shiloh is come to ſeek the people that were promiſed and given to him: let the people ſeek that Shiloh, that is promiſed and given to them. In a word, he is the true temple, to which the gathering muſt be; he is the mercy-ſeat, at which God and the people may meet together; and you cannot meet with God but in him, for in him alone God is well-pleaſed: and when you gather in to him, you get in to the heart of God; for he lies in the Father's boſom, being his Elect, in whom his ſoul delights.——So much for the reaſons.

VII. The laſt thing propoſed in the general method, was the application of the ſubject.

I have endeavoured, in the doctrinal part, all along to deliver the matter in a practical and applicatory ſtrain, and alſo enlarged it ſo much, that I need the leſs to inſiſt upon many inferences, wherein I have already anticipated myſelf. The main uſes I deſign are for information of ſome truths, and exhortation to ſome duties.

Firſt, For information. Is it ſo, that the Counſel of Heaven hath determined concerning Chriſt the Meſſias, that to him ſhall the gathering of the people be? Hence ſee,

1. The doleful ſtate of the Jews at preſent, and the lamentable circumſtances they have been in ever ſince the coming of Shiloh their promiſed Meſſias. While a multitude of Gentiles, that were but dogs, are gathered to God's houſe, and they, in the mean time, unchurched and caſt out, though to them pertained the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the ſervice of God, and the promiſes; and though of them, as concerning the fleſh, SHILOH came, even CHRIST, who is over all, God bleſſed for ever, Rom ix. 4, 5. Though they were the people of his firſt love, the ſeed of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, to whom ſo many precious promiſes were made in behalf of their ſeed: behold, their Shiloh comes to them, and they will not have him; He came to his own, and his own received him not. They owned the ſceptre was departed from Judah, when they ſaid, We have no king but Cæſar; and ſo by their own confeſſion, Shiloh is come, ſince the ſceptre was departed from Judah. And, becauſe they would not ſubmit to the ſpiritual ſceptre of the promiſed Meſſias, they have been without a king, without a prince, without a ſceptre, or law-giver, without a governor and government, for 1700 years and more, even ſince Shiloh came, to whom there is a gathering of other people in their room. Oh! ſhall we not lament their long continued rejection? Their ſeventy years captivity in Babylon was nothing to this; yea, their four hundred and thirty years bondage in Egypt was nothing to this! Alas! how long, how long ſhall his anger laſt againſt againſt that people! how long ſhall they be under the guilt of the blood of Chriſt, which they imprecated upon themſelves and their poſterity, ſaying, His blood be upon us, and our children! Oh! pray, pray for that antient people of God, and that the blood of Shiloh may cleanſe them from that blood-guiltineſs! When they were in favour with God, the believers among them had mind of us poor Gentiles, when we were the little ſiſter that had not breaſts, Song viii. 8.; and now, when we are ſucking at the breaſts of goſpel ordinances and ſacramental ſolemnities, Oh! ſhall we not mind them, when their breaſts are cut off, when they that were the natural branches are broken off, and we that were the wild olive-tree, are grafted in to partake of the root and fatneſs of the good olive-tree? Rom. xi. 17, 24. Oh! let us not boaſt againſt the branches; For if thou boaſteſt, thou beareſt not the root, but the root thee. See ver. 18, 19, 20, 21. Let us not boaſt, but let us beg, that they may be again grafted in; For if the caſting away of them be the reconciliation of the world, what ſhall the receiving of them be but life from the dead? ver. 15. The day of the return and converſion of the Jews will be a day of greater gathering to Shiloh, even among the Gentiles, than we have yet ſeen; and it would fare better with us, if we were more employed in praying for them. Mean time, this dark and doleful diſpenſation, that as yet they are under, was not darkly foretold in the words of our text, that, upon the ſceptre's departing from Judah, Shiloh the Meſſias ſhould come, And to him ſhould the gathering of the people be, that is, the Gentiles; plainly intimating, a wonderful myſtery of providence, that the King of the Jews ſhould come to the Gentiles, and be crowned king among them, that ſo the Jews might have it to ſay at length, That the King of the Gentiles is become the King of the Jews; as well as the Gentiles have it to ſay, That the King of the Jews is become the King of the Gentiles.

2. Hence ſee the ſovereign mercy of God in Chriſt towards the poor Gentile nations, and the iſles of the Gentiles not forgotten; for he particularly promiſes, that the iſles ſhall wait for his law, Iſa. xlii. 4. And, O wonder, that we, in this remote iſland, were in his view, when he promiſed, that to him ſhould the gathering of the people be. Jacob, by inſpiration of the Spirit of God, ſaid it on his death-bed, and it is now more than three thouſand years ago; that is indeed to him not ſo much as three days; for, to him a thouſand years are as one day. Thouſands of years interveening cannot make him forget his promiſe; and, ſo far as there is, or ſhall be a gathering of the people to Shiloh, ſo far does this promiſe take effect. There was a promiſe of this, more antient yet, Gen. ix. 27. God ſhall inlarge, [or PERSUADE] Japhet, and he ſhall dwell in the tents of Shem: there, is a promiſe that the Gentiles ſhould be gathered in to partake of the privileges of the Jews; for of Japhet came the Gentiles, and among his poſterity were the iſles of the Gentiles divided; ſee Gen. x. 1, 2, 5.; and probably this iſland among the reſt. For confirming whereof, I ſhall not be poſitive in averring what ſome alledge, that as Gomer was the eldeſt ſon of Japhet, and of him came the people called Gomeri or Cymbri; ſo the firſt inhabitants of this iſland of Britain came of the poſterity of Japhet, one of the ſons of Noah, namely, of the ſaid Japhet's eldeſt ſon Gomer; and hence, from GOMERI came CAMBRIA, which is the Latin name of Wales in this iſland to this day, to which place the antient Britons retired at the coming in of the Saxons: hence they ſuppoſe, that the iſle of Britain is particularly intended here. But I ſhall not found any certain concluſion upon a doubtful ſuppoſition, though it be generally agreed to by ſome good hiſtorians. We may ſee it plain from the event, that God had a particular deſign that there ſhould be a gathering of people to Shiloh in theſe lands, and even in Scotland. I have ſhewed formerly, how early the Lord viſited us with the goſpel; and that we were among the firſt of the Gentile nations that ever were enlightened therewith, after Chriſt's aſcenſion, by which we were delivered from groſs paganiſm. And when I ſpoke of the remarkable gathering ſeaſons, I took notice of our reformation-days from Popery, and afterwards from Prelacy, our covevanting-days, and the like; and therefore I am not here to inſiſt thereupon: only, as there have been remarkable gathering times in Scotland, and as the Lord countenances yet the gathering means and ordinances among us; ſo we ought to bleſs him that ever goſpel-light ſhined upon us, and wait on him for more of that gathering power of his Spirit, that Scotland's barrenneſs now, and unfruitfulneſs under the means of grace, may not provoke him wholly to leave us, and make our name LO-AMMI; i. e. Not my people.

3. Hence ſee the excellency of the goſpel, and the reaſon of the efficacy thereof. Behold the excellency of the goſpel, which brings the glad tidings of a Saviour to the people, and of a gathering place for the poor Gentiles, as well as the Jews; a God-man, in whom God and man might meet together, that ſcattered ſinners ſeparated from God might be gathered to him. Behold the condeſcenſion of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt proclaimed in this goſpel, that he ſtoops ſo low as to be the gathering-room for poor ſinful people, to which they reſort for ſhelter and ſalvation. Shiloh is come; he is come in our nature, and with human nature he puts on human bowels, that into his very boſom the gathering of the people may be, that all the good they have loſt may be found in Chriſt; yea, that the God, whom they have loſt, may be found in him; for, God is in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelf.—But as herein we ſee the excellency, ſo alſo behold the efficacy of the goſpel, and the power thereof. What was the reaſon of the wonderful ſpreading and influence of the goſpel of Chriſt, eſpecially in the firſt ages? It is a matter for which no human policy can account, that the goſpel, preached in ſimplicity, by men of the meaneſt character, ſhould make its way through forces of devils and men, ſhould gain ſo many proſelytes, ſubdue ſo many kingdoms. Had this doctrine been ſuited to fleſh and blood, and, like Mahomet's, indulged men in ſenſual enjoyments, and promiſed afterwards the higheſt degrees of ſenſual pleaſures; had the goſpel been deſigned for encreaſing the ſtock of earthly treaſure, it were no wonder that it ſhould have gained ſo much ground; for all carnal men would readily receive this doctrine, and tenaciouſly retain it. Nay, had it proceeded upon mere rational grounds and foundations, ſome philoſophers, at leaſt, would have embraced it.

it. But, that a doctrine, that teaches to deny ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts; a doctrine, that teaches to crucify the old man, with his affections and luſts; the luſts of the eye, the luſts of the fleſh, and the pride of life; a doctrine, that enjoins us to look to things that are not ſeen; a doctrine, that commands us to leave all things, deny ourſelves, and count all but loſs and dung for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt: that this doctrine, however highly rational, yet hath no foundation in reaſon, and admits conſequences of no rational demonſtration, many thereof being above the reach of reaſon; that this doctrine, that owes nothing to the character of its preachers, and owes as little to human force; that this doctrine ſhould have gained ſo great a ground, obtained ſo vaſt ſucceſs in a time, wherein the profeſſion thereof did make the profeſſors of it to run the riſque of poverty, death, and diſgrace; this, I ſay, is a myſtery, that none ſhall be able to unfold, but theſe who plow with this goſpel-hiefer, that the goſpel is the very inſtrument of divine power, whereby he gathers the people to Shiloh. The reaſon of this marvellous diſpenſation is, that the omnipotent God, who can give a being to his word, hath paſt his word, that to Chriſt ſhall the gathering of the people be: and divine power, for effectuating this deſign, is put forth in the goſpel; which, therefore, is called the power of God to ſalvation, while therein is revealed the righteouſneſs of God, from faith to faith. And this treaſure is put in earthen veſſels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of man: And, O that this power were put forth on this occaſion, for gathering the people to Shiloh!

4. Hence ſee what ought to be the great deſign of peoples gathering to goſpel-ordinances; the leading end is, what the prophet expreſſes, Jer. l. 5. They ſhall aſk the way to Zion, with their faces thitherward, ſaying, Come and let us join ourſelves to the Lord: that is, let us gather together unto Shiloh; let us lay ourſelves under the influence of his gathering power, and caſt ourſelves into his gathering arms, while he is ſtretching forth the arms of his free grace, in a preached goſpel. O Sirs! What is the deſign of theſe gatherings of people together, if there be no gathering to Shiloh? If we look to the views and deſigns of the moſt part, we will find, that the gathering to Shiloh, is leaſt of all in their view. As there were wiſe virgins and fooliſh; ſo there are wiſe hearers and fooliſh: ſome come to ordinances, only for a name, becauſe they would not be thought any worſe than their neighbours; ſome come for diverſion, to ſpend an hour or two in hearing, becauſe they have little elſe to do; ſome come for attendance' ſake, becauſe they are waiting on their maſter or miſtreſs; ſome come for company's ſake, their fellows ſaying, Let us go to ſermon; Content, ſays the other, and ſo they go for company; ſome come for curioſity's ſake, they have heard people ſpeak to the praiſe, or diſpraiſe of ſuch and ſuch a man, and they will ſee whether it be as they ſay; ſome come for carping and cavilling, not to be judged by the word, but to judge it, and cenſure it, being content to find ſome word, that they reckon may be to the miniſter's prejudice, or reproach; and though they ſhould forget all the reſt of the word, yet this they will mind, to report it to their confederates, either out of malice, becauſe they receive not the truth in the love thereof, or out of pride, becauſe they would have others, that hear their cenſorious remarks, to eſteem them to be judicious perſons, and competent judges, while, in the mean time, they are but bewraying their own ignorance, malice, and pride. Hence, ſome come to watch, if any thing can be wreſted, that is uttered, that they may act the devil, in accuſing the brethren; ſome gape for remarkable phraſes, that, when they come to their ordinary company, they may have ſomething to grace and adorn their tales; ſome never come to hear what ſhall be ſaid to themſelves, and therefore never prick up their ears, till they ſuppoſe they hear the miniſter expoſing the crimes of others; ſome come to gaze, and look about them, to ſee who are there, and what is their dreſs and behaviour; ſome come to muſe and dream, and rove, and if they notice any word that is ſaid, it will perhaps occaſion a hundred impertinent thoughts to keep out the reſt of the ſermon, and the mind will run a thouſand ways before it can get another word noticed, and, perhaps, the ſermon is done before they can gather their thoughts together again. Many ſuch accidental hearers there are, that gather to ordinances, but not to Shiloh. They come to meet with their friends, that, it may be, conveen at ſuch a ſermon, but not to meet with Chriſt. They are like children that gather to a market, and ſit in the market-place, but neither to buy nor ſell. But, as many foxes have been taken, when they came to take; ſo, ſome that have come only to ſpy novelties, yea, to ſcoff and ſcorn, have changed their minds before they went home. And, Oh that grace would come and catch ſome that are here, and yet are ſeeking nothing here, but, like babes, to catch butterflies! Oh that Chriſt, the greateſt treaſure in the world, ſhould be moſt deſpiſed, and that the goſpel-ſtar, which ſhould lead you to the place where he is, that you may be gathered to him, that this ſtar ſhould not be marked!

5. Hence ſee what is the great Mark, at which miniſters of the goſpel ſhould ſhoot, in diſperſing thereof; why, it is juſt the gathering of ſouls to Chriſt: To him ſhall the gathering of the people be. Wo! wo to the miniſter, whoſe great deſign is only to gather a multitude of people to himſelf, and enhanſe their applauſe! It hath been indeed the lot of ſome of the moſt faithful miniſters of Chriſt, to be thus reproached and calumniated, as if all their deſign were to recommend themſelves to the populace, and gather a multitude to their faction; they have been branded as ſelf-ſeekers, inſtead of being ſoul-fiſhers; and why? Becauſe providence hath commonly ordered that thoſe who have been moſt denied and mortified to ſelf, have been moſt followed; but the more they were followed, the more they were envied by thoſe that truly ſought themſelves: hence, as none was more followed than Chriſt, ſo none was more envied by the ſelf-ſeeking Phariſees; Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? Behold the world is gone after him, John 12. 19. And, as we read not that Chriſt reproved any for following him, though he reproved them for their falſe ends in doing ſo, John vi. 26. ſo, though no goſpel miniſter will be diſpleaſed, that he hath many fiſhes before the net, in hopes that ſome may be gathered; yet it is, and will be the character of all faithful miniſters, which the apoſtle relates, 2 Cor. iv. 5. We preach not ourſelves, ſelves, but Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, and ourſelves your ſervants for Jeſus ſake. And, 1 Cor. ii. 2. I determined to know, [or, MAKE KNOWN,] nothing among you, ſave Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified. The great goſpel-deſign then is, to gather ſouls to Chriſt, ſeeing they can never be happy or holy, but in him. And while you find that to be your miniſters great ſcope, you ought to regard and hear them, as you would do a voice from heaven; yea, and more, while they ſpeak the mind of God, from the word of God, which is the more ſure word of prophecy; for it is the ſame as if you heard Chriſt himſelf: therefore he ſays, He that hears you, hears me; and he that deſpiſes you, deſpiſes me. If you truly regarded that word of Chriſt, you would hear the voice of the preacher, as you would hear the voice of God. If Samuel had thought it was God that ſpoke to him, he would not have ſlept; but becauſe he thought it was not God, but Eli, therefore he ſlept on: ſo, while people do not think it is God that ſpeaks to them, but only a man, they will never regard it; and never will there be a gathering to Shiloh, till the word be received, Not as the word of man, but as it is in truth the word of God, which effectually works in you that believe, 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. Where alſo that queſtion is obviate, How ſhall we know when the miniſter ſpeaks his own words, or God's word? Why, let the word of God be received, and it will ſpeak for itſelf; for, it will effectually work in you that believe. And when the words of one preacher ſeem to claſh with the words of another, this effectual working of the word will teach you how to judge things that differ really, and how to prove all things, and hold faſt that which is good. The great mark then, I ſay, that the goſpel-miniſter aims at, is the gathering of the people to Shiloh; and the pointing out of Chriſt to them, for wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption. Surely, my friends, we know no other way to ſave you, nor ourſelves; if we did, how wretched were we to keep it from you, ſince we have no other calling, but to ſhew you the way of ſalvation.

6. Hence we may alſo ſee what is the centre of all goſpel-truth; Chriſt is the centre, wherein all the lines of evangelical doctrine are gathered together, and do meet. It would not be the duty of people, to believe in him, or gather to him by faith, if he were not the truth, as well as the way; yea, the centre and ſubſtance of all truth: and that is not the truth, that does not lead to him. Here is the moſt ſure teſt of orthodoxy; whatever pretends to be the truth, and yet tends only to lead a man in to himſelf, and not out of himſelf to Chriſt; whatever doctrine tends to make you think, you muſt produce ſome holineſs or good qualifications from within yourſelf, without gathering firſt to Shiloh, to get it, you may know it is not orthodox doctrine: whatever doctrine tends to the diſparagement of Chriſt, or to the robbing him of any part of the glory of ſalvation-work, is to be rejected, as erroneous; for, to him alone muſt the gathering of the people be: and to him only ſhall the glory of our whole ſalvation, from firſt to laſt, belong. Chriſt is much robbed of his glory in Britain at this day; damnable Arian doctrine is ſpreading, whereby Chriſt is robbed of the glory of his ſupreme Deity, denying his being the eternal Son of God, co-equal, and co-eſſential with the Father *. The devil himſelf was more orthodox than our Arian doctors, when he owned, Mat. viii. 29. that Chriſt was the Son of God; What have we to do with thee, Jeſus thou Son of God? The devil ſpake more honourably of him, than they do, when he ſaid, Mark i. 24. I know thee who thou art, the holy One of God. My text leads me to what I am ſaying; for, if Chriſt were not the ſupreme God, equal with the Father, the gathering of the people to him, to believe in him, to worſhip and adore him, would be unlawful; it would be idolatry. For, as the Lord our God is one Lord; ſo we muſt worſhip the Lord our God, and him only muſt we ſerve: and it is idolatry to worſhip any other. Yea, to the Son, he ſays, Let all the angels of God worſhip him: and for this end, muſt all the people be gathered to him. My preſent work allows me not to trace the other doctrines, that rob him of his glory, and tend to lead people elſewhere than to Shiloh: only, whatever maſk of truth, or holineſs, any doctrine ſhall put on, if it tend to gather people to Moſes, and not to Shiloh; or to lead them to the law, and not to Chriſt, who is the end of the law for righteouſneſs to every one that believeth, it favours not of the truth as it is in Jeſus, Eph. iv. 21.——But the main inference I deſigned at preſent, was for exhortation; and therefore, paſſing all other inferences that might be drawn, I come to apply it,

Secondly, For exhortation. And I deſign, as the Lord may pity and aſſiſt, to direct it to three ſorts of perſons, with relation to this gathering of the people to Shiloh. 1. Some may be doubtful whether they were ever gathered to Shiloh, or not; therefore I would exhort them to try. 2. Some may be ſure they were never yet gathered to Shiloh; therefore I would exhort them to gather under his wings. 3. Some are believers, that have, through grace, been gathered by him, and made to gather to him; and I would exhort them to their duty, with reſpect to their further gathering to him.

1ſt, Some may be doubtful, whether they were ever gathered to Shiloh, or not; and therefore my exhortation to ſuch, is, that they would try and examine, whether it be ſo or not. Examination is a neceſſary duty at all times, as well after, as before a communion. He that ſays, with reference to the ſacrament, Let a man examine himſelf, and ſo let him eat; ſays alſo, with reference to any ſeaſon, Examine yourſelves, whether you be in the faith, prove your ownſelves; know ye not your ownſelves, how that Chriſt is in you, except ye be reprobates? 2 Cor. xiii. 5. Oh! poor dying mortal! will you try if you have been gathered to Shiloh, or not? Whether you have gone in to him by a faith of his own operation? For according as this takes place, ſo will it fare with you through all eternity. If you die out of Chriſt, or in unbelief, you die in your ſins, John viii. 24. And better die in a ditch, and die like a dog, than die in your ſins. If you die in your ſins, you will riſe in your ſins, and

* About this time the Arian hereſy was not only revived, but had gained conſiderable footing in our neighbouring kingdom of England, under the patronage of Mr. Whiſton, and others; but alſo diffuſed its baleful and pernicious influence into Scotland, befriended by many, adopted and publicly taught in one of our principal Seminaries of learning; for which a proceſs was commenced by the preſbytery of Glaſgow, againſt profeſſor Simſon, Anno 1726, and carried on, before the reſpective judicatories, till concluded by the Aſſembly 1729. the charge being found clearly proven; and he, in conſequence thereof, got but a very inadequate ſentence, being only ſuſpended from teaching and preaching, inſtead of depoſition and excommunication.

ſtand before the tribunal of God in your ſins, and ſo be condemned. If you be gathered to Chriſt, you will be found in him, and ſo found happy, when death, judgment, and eternity appear; therefore I exhort you ſolemnly to reflect upon this matter, whether you be gathered, or not. If all that you are worth in a world, as I noticed on a former occaſion, lay in one precious ſtone, and that ſtone were to be tried by a ſkilful jeweller, whether it were true or falſe, whether it would fly, or endure under the ſmart ſtroak of his hammer; ſurely, your thoughts would not be unconcerned about the iſſue of ſuch a trial. Why, man, woman, all that you are worth in this world, and the world to come, depends upon this matter, whether you be of the people that are gathered to Shiloh, or not. Try whether your faith in the promiſed Shiloh, will fly, or endure the ſtroak of the hammer of God's word: have you no concern in this matter? You would be loath to put to ſea, though it were but to croſs a narrow ferry, in a rotten leaky veſſel; and will you dare to venture on the ocean of eternity, in a falſe rotten bark? Whatever profeſſion you have, whatever blaze you make, whatever eſteem others may have of you, whatever opinion you may have of yourſelf, and of your faith, you will be drowned for ever in the deluge of God's wrath, if you be not gathered in to the ark, Jeſus Chriſt: I would therefore offer you ſome helps to make this trial. And here all that I ſaid upon the fourth general head, concerning the means and manner of this gathering; how God acts in gathering, and how he makes the ſoul to act, might be brought in; but, paſſing all theſe, I offer theſe few following marks, by which you may try whether or not, you have ever been gathered to Shiloh.

1. If ever you was gathered to Shiloh, then Shiloh hath come to you, before ever you was gathered to him. The text makes the coming of Shiloh to be the very cauſe of the gathering of the people to him: as his coming in the fleſh did uſher in the gathering of the Gentiles; ſo it is his coming in the Spirit that makes the ſpiritual gathering to him. Try then, if ever he hath come to you. Surely, if you be gathered to him, you can ſay, I would never have come to him, unleſs he had come to me: now, if Chriſt never came to you by his Spirit, as a Spirit of conviction, convincing you of ſin and miſery, and diſcovering your need of Chriſt, and that you was loſt for ever without him, ſurely you have not yet been gathered to him. You that never yet had a ſorrowful hour for want of Chriſt, and was never brought to a wo's me, for I want Chriſt and ſalvation! nor to a what ſhall I do to be ſaved? you have reaſon to conclude that you was never yet gathered to him: for, when he comes by his Spirit, he convinces the world of ſin; when he gathers the people to him, he comes and convinces them of ſin, becauſe they believe not in him, John xvi. 8. Some never wanted faith, which declares they never had it; they never miſſed Chriſt, which ſays they never matched with him. As he that was never a real wanter, was never a real and true ſuiter; ſo it is the needy wanter that is the ſteady ſuiter. Thus here, man, woman, if you had never a want of Chriſt, you was never in ſuit of him, never gathered to him: though he hath been in ſuit of you by the goſpel-offer may be a thouſand times, yet you being pleaſed with your old match, your ſins, luſts, idols, ſelf-righteouſneſs, or the world; his ſuit was never regarded, becauſe you was never a wanter; and being never a true wanter, you was never a true ſeeker or receiver of him; and ſo never gathered to him: for you was never convinced of your want of Chriſt, and want of faith in him. Deceive not yourſelf, O ſinner; you was never a believer, if you was never a wanter; if the Spirit of conviction never came and made you ſay, Oh! I want grace, I want holineſs, I want faith, love, repentance, and all good; yea, I want God, I want Chriſt, I want the Spirit! Hence it is the property of a believer, notwithſtanding all he gets, yet he is ſtill a wanter; always poor and needy, and nothing in himſelf: and it is the property of an unbeliever, notwithſtanding all that he wants, yet he is always rich, and increaſed with goods, and wants nothing; hence we find ſome ignorant people expreſſing what others that pretend to more knowledge do conceal; aſk them, Do you want faith? Oh! no; we always truſted in God. Do you want hope? No; we hope in his mercy. Do you want love? No; I had ever a love to God and his people all my days. Do you want grace? Nay, God forbid, that I ſhould be altogether graceleſs. Do you want Chriſt? Oh! no; my ſweet Saviour, what would come of me if I wanted Chriſt? Why, man, woman, I know nothing that you want; you are not a wanter: the Lord pity you; for, what you dream you never wanted, you never had to this day. The Spirit of conviction hath never come; and, inſtead of being gathered to Shiloh, you was never yet gathered to the porch-door of true Chriſtianity; for the Spirit's coming to convince of the want of Chriſt, and of faith in him, is the very beginning of all true religion. But if Shiloh hath come by his Spirit, and ſhewed you your want of all things, but ſin, it is a good beginning; for thus he gathers you out of your falſe hopes and lying refuges.—But next, if Shiloh hath come to you for gathering you to himſelf, then he hath come not only as a Spirit of conviction, but alſo as a Spirit of powerful illumination, diſcovering the glory of Shiloh to you, even the glory of his perſon, offices, righteouſneſs, fulneſs, and other things of Chriſt, ſo as to glorify Chriſt in your view, John xvi. 14. He ſhall glorify me; for he ſhall receive of mine, and ſhew it unto you. Now, if Shiloh ever came by his Spirit in the goſpel, to ſhew ſomething of the glory of Chriſt to you, and the glory of God's perfections in him, ſo as to make him appear more glorious to you than all the world, it ſeems you have not yet been gathered; For if our goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt; in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, leſt the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt, who is the image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them, 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. But if ever you was gathered, then the God who commanded light to ſhine out of darkneſs, hath ſhined into your hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 6. For as, when the Lord builds up Zion, he appears in his glory; ſo, when he gathers ſouls, he appears in his glory, and brings them from darkneſs to his marvellous light. I do not ſpeak of the higheſt degree of ſpiritual light, nor yet of any extraordinary manifeſtations; all that I mean is, the Spirit's coming to enlighten your minds minds in the knowledge of Chriſt, whereby you have ſeen his glory, as the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth; and have ſeen a fulneſs of all grace in him. Theſe are not enthuſiaſtic deluſions, but ſpiritual expreſſions: for, perhaps ſome perſon may think or ſay, What is that the man is ſpeaking, of beholding ſuch a glory? I never ſaw any greater glory in all the world than that of the ſun, moon, and ſtars in the firmament. What ſay you, man? Saw you never any greater glory than that which your bodily eyes have ſeen betwixt earth and heaven? Then I may ſay to you, that you was never yet gathered to Shiloh; for he never came in his Spirit to ſhew you his glory. I ſpeak not of weak powerleſs fancies and imaginations that ſome may have of Chriſt's glory, but I call it a powerful illumination, conquering the will, and captivating the heart, and carrying in all the affections to the embracing of Chriſt; for, when the Sun of righteouſneſs ariſes, it is with healing under his wings; healing the reſiſtence of the will, and the hardneſs of the heart, and melting down the whole ſoul in the warm arms of his gathering grace and love, while he draws with loving-kindneſs. And indeed, No man can come to me, ſays Chriſt, except the Father which hath ſent me draw him; and ſaving diſcoveries are of a drawing nature. The true Sun hath not only light, but heat, whereby the heart is warmed; and the true Light is the light of life, whereby the ſoul is quickened. If ever you was gathered to Shiloh, then know it, that Shiloh hath come to you before ever there could be a gathering to him.

2. If ever you was gathered to Shiloh, then as Shiloh hath come to you, ſo you have been made particularly to come to him, under the drawing power and influence of that Spirit I have been ſpeaking of. And indeed, as none can come unleſs he draw them, ſo none can ſtay away when he is drawing them: and hence every believer finds, that as it is impoſſible to believe till power come, ſo it is impoſſible not to believe when divine power comes: it is as eaſy then, as it was difficult before. If ever you was gathered to Shiloh, then as the coming of Shiloh to you hath prevented your coming to him, ſo your coming to him hath been effectuate by his coming to you, and making the general call of the goſpel effectual, in enabling you to a particular application, ſo as to give a particular anſwer to the general call. If you have been but hearers of the word all your days, without ever applying it to your own uſe; and hearers of the general offer and promiſe of Chriſt, without ever ſeeing yourſelves involved, incloſed, and included in the general promiſe and offer, and without ever making a particular, perſonal application thereof, you are not yet gathered to Shiloh; for, when ſouls are gathered, the general call gets a particular anſwer; When thou ſaidſt, Seek ye my face; my heart ſaid, Thy face, Lord, will I ſeek, Pſal. 27. 8. The goſpel-call is general, Believe in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; but the anſwer muſt be particular, Lord, I believe; help thou my unbelief. When people ſuffer goſpel-truths to hover in the brain, without application, or learn things as children do their catechiſm by rote, never reflecting, what am I doing? where am I going? what will become of me? and what effect hath this word upon me? Unbelief remains undiſturbed; the word comes and goes; and there is no good done, no gathering to Shiloh, becauſe no particular application. It is the very deſign of the Spirit's convincing and enlightening work, to bring the ſoul to this particular application of Chriſt; and therefore this mark may clear the former. If you think, how ſhall I know if I have ſuch a meaſure of conviction and illumination as is ſufficient to evidence that I am gathered to Shiloh? Why, any meaſure that God pleaſes to give is enough, if it iſſue in the ſoul's particular reception and application of Chriſt. When is it that the metal is melted enough in the fire? Why, it is melted enough when it runs eaſily into the mould. Now, there may be natural meltings, under the common influences of the Spirit: but, when is the ſoul melted enough with the beams of the Sun of righteouſneſs, or with the fire of the Spirit? Why, it is melted enough when it runs into the goſpel-mould. There are ſome, as I have noticed on a former occaſion, that have, as it were, too much of the fire; theſe are they that apprehend themſelves ſuch great ſinners, that they dare not come to Chriſt: There are others that have, as it were, too little of the fire; theſe are they that only think they are not ſo good as they ought to be, and therefore they ſhould not come to Chriſt: there are others that have nothing of the fire at all, and theſe are they that think they are good enough already, and they need not come to Chriſt: but then only is the ſoul ſufficiently melted, when it runs into the mould. What is the goſpel-mould? It is even Chriſt; and when the melted ſoul runs into this mould, there does it get the right ſhape and form, and there only. As it is not the melting of the metal that gives it a ſhape, faſhion, or form, but the mould that gives it the form; ſo never expect to have any good form, any good ſhape, any good qualifications, till your ſouls run into this mould. It is the very deſign of the Spirit's coming to induce people to relinquiſh their own fancied goodneſs, and oblige them to come to Chriſt for all. Try then, if ever you was gathered to Shiloh, by this, namely, whether your ſoul, in a day of divine power, was made to run in to him like melted lead into a mould, cloſing with, and cleaving to him by a particular application. But how the ſoul acts here, by a particular appropriation and fiducial perſuaſion, upon the divine word, under divine conduct, I have formerly deſcribed*; therefore I proceed to another mark.

3. If ever you was gathered to Shiloh, then the gathering place will be very precious to you; I mean the promiſed Shiloh, Chriſt himſelf, 1 Pet. ii. 6, 7. There he is held forth as the chief corner-ſtone, to which all the ſtones of the Spiritual building are gathered together, and unite; and to all ſuch as are gathered to him, it is declared, He is precious: and the word ſignifies, He is HONOURABLE; he is an honour to them, and they put honour upon him, and entertain him honourably, in a ſuitableneſs to his high quality, as he is God-man; and particularly, as he is Shiloh, that is, the Meſſias, the Sent of God, the Father's extraordinary Ambaſſador. Some eſteem Chriſt, but not according to his grandeur and glory; and therefore, it is evident, they are not gathered to him as the Shiloh, the Sent of God; but they that are gathered to him, they receive, eſteem, and entertain him, according to his dignity. If a ſubject ſhall receive, or entertain his prince, or the king's extraordinary ambaſſador, no otherwiſe than he would do his country neighbour, this would be interpreted a contempt: ſo, if Chriſt be not received, eſteemed, and entertained according to his grandeur, dignity, and ſtate, he counts it a contempt, rather than a due reception or eſtimation of him. If Chriſt be not eſteemed as a King, he is but diſregarded; if he be not honoured as the Father's Ambaſſador-extraordinary, he is but deſpiſed: for, as Shiloh, he hath Heaven's ſealed commiſſion; Him hath God the Father ſealed. The unbelieving Jews were content to receive and eſteem Chriſt as a great prophet, as the Mahometans do; but they would not receive and entertain him according to his greatneſs, grandeur, and glory, which he was inveſted with: therefore they were challenged as rejecters and deſpiſers of him, Acts xiii. 41. He came to his own, but his own received him not; for they did not receive him, as the Son of God, and the Sent of God: whereas, it is ſaid of the believing Jews, who received Chriſt, That they beheld his glory, as the glory of the only begotten of the Father; that is, they ſo received him in all his glory, grandeur, majeſty, and ſplendour, that they eſteemed honourably of him. Hence, ſays Chriſt, John xvii. 8. They have known that I came out from thee, and have believed that thou didſt ſend me. If you be gathered unto Shiloh, then you eſteem honourably of him, as he is the glorious Shiloh, the Sent of God. Is Chriſt thus precious to you, and honourable?

4. If you be gathered unto Shiloh, then you will be cloathed with him, for he is ſent to be a robe of righteouſneſs; and all that are gathered to him, do put on that mantle, and gather in under that cover; and in that cloathing do they ſtand perfectly righteous in the ſight of God; being accepted as righteous in his ſight, only for the righteouſneſs of Chriſt. Hence, it is given as a mark of the true church and children of God, that are gathered to Chriſt, that they are cloathed with the Sun, Rev. xii. 1. It is indeed called a great wonder; for the myſtery of free and perfect juſtification, and of being cloathed with a perfect righteouſneſs, is ſuch a myſtery, that natural men cannot conceive it, nor believe it, though a man ſhould declare it to them, as the apoſtle ſpeaks, Acts xiii. 41. Yea, the believer himſelf cannot believe it, without holy wondering, and joyful trembling, Jer. xxxiii. 8, 9. This wonder is ſaid to be of a woman in heaven; that is, the church militant, and every particular believer under a goſpel diſpenſation, wherein there is a full revelation of this righteouſneſs. Now, here it is ſaid alſo, ſhe was clothed with the Sun; that is, with Chriſt, the Sun of righteouſneſs; the woman being married to Chriſt, as the Lord her righteouſneſs, ſhe is, as it were, gathered in to the Sun in the firmament, and ſo cloathed with the perfect righteouſneſs of Chriſt; that however black and dark ſhe is in herſelf; yet, in point of juſtification, this Sun, wherewith ſhe is cloathed, makes her ſhine in a perfect righteouſneſs, as gloriouſly in God's eyes, as the bodily ſun ſhines gloriouſly in our eyes, when it ſhines in its meridian ſplendour. The believer is not only fair as the moon, in the ſight of men, in point of ſanctification; which moon, may be indeed, and is full of ſpots, and very changeable; but clear as the ſun, in the ſight of God, in point of juſtification; the Sun of righteouſneſs, with which he is clothed, being perfectly glorious. But, perhaps, ſome may ſay, If this be an evidence of one that he is cloathed with the Sun of righteouſneſs, how ſhall I examine myſelf by this, or know that I am thus cloathed? Why, you may examine it by what follows. If you be cloathed with the Sun, then you have got the moon under your feet, and upon your head a crown of twelve ſtars. Have you got the moon under your feet? What is that, may you ſay? I find ſome underſtand two things by it; the one is, the moon of your own righteouſneſs, and the other is the moon of the world. As to the former then, if you be gathered to Chriſt, and cloathed with the Sun of righteouſneſs, then you have got the moon of your own righteouſneſs under your feet; that is, you will make no account of your own righteouſneſs of ſanctification before God, in compariſon of the garment of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, which is the Sun that you are ſo glorioufly cloathed with. Nay, when your own righteouſneſs, or graces, put in for any ſhare of juſtification before God, you will, in this reſpect, trample them under your feet as a menſtruous cloth, as the prophet Iſaiah did, chap. lxiv. 6. All our righteouſneſs are as filthy rags. Yea, when it claims to be a righteouſneſs, before an infinitely holy and juſt God, you will trample it under your feet as dung, as the apoſtle Paul did, Phil. iii. 8. Yea, doubtleſs, I count all things but loſs, for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt; yea, I do count them but dung, that I may win Chriſt, and be found in him, not having mine own righteouſneſs, that is after the law, but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, the righteouſneſs which is of God by faith. This he ſpeaks not only of his phariſaical righteouſneſs before his converſion, but his righteouſneſs of ſanctification after his converſion. The man that is cloathed with the Sun of righteouſneſs, accounts his own righteouſneſs a contemptible nothing, in compariſon of Chriſt's righteouſneſs. It is not gain, but loſs, becauſe, as Chryſoſtom, one of the Fathers, ſays, "When the ſun ſhines, it is but loſs to ſit by a "candle-light:" Why? becauſe his righteouſneſs is God's righteouſneſs. God is the worker of it; and, in compariſon thereof, our beſt righteouſneſs, whereof we are the workers, even with divine aſſiſtance, is but dung, to be trampled upon, when it competes with the other, or would have any ſhare in the matter of our juſtification before God. If you be cloathed with the Sun then, and be thus gathered to Shiloh, you have got this moon under your feet; and whatever light of ſanctification you have, it will flow from your juſtification, as the light of the moon does come from the ſun; and as the moon gives light in the dark night, ſo will the moon of your ſanctification give light to other men, walking in the dark night of this world: Your light will ſo ſhine before men, that they ſeeing your good works, may glorify God. And here is a myſtery in the believer's life; he ſhines like the moon, in point of ſanctification, doing all the good works he can, that he may glorify God, and edify his neighbour in the world; and yet he keeps this moon of his own works and righteouſneſs under his feet, and tramples upon it, in the matter of juſtification, becauſe, in that reſpect, his only cloathing cloathing is the Sun of righteouſneſs.—Again, as to the other ſenſe, if you be cloathed with the Sun, and gathered to Shiloh, then you will have the moon of this world under your feet; the profits, honours, and pleaſures of the world, which being changeable and unconſtant, as the moon, the believer hath it under his feet; becauſe, being cloathed with the glorious Sun of righteouſneſs, and thereby diſcerning the glory of God and Chriſt, and heavenly things, he cannot but deſpiſe and undervalue all earthly things, when coming in competition with heavenly; as Moſes did, Heb. xi. 25, 26. when he vilified all the glory and grandeur of Pharaoh's court, Chooſing rather to ſuffer affliction, with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon; eſteeming the reproach of Chriſt greater riches than the treaſures of Egypt. You that had never the moon of this world under your feet, but have the world in your heart, and nothing but the world, ſurely you are not gathered unto Shiloh; for they that are gathered to him, they are gathered out of the world, and ſet apart from the reſt of the world; They are not of the world, but choſen out of the world. Hence, they that are gathered to Shiloh, are brought off from their old worldly companions: there are ſinful gatherings, wicked clubs and cabals, that will be hateful to them; of which, their heart will ſay, as Jacob ſaid of Simeon and Levi, Gen. xlix. 6. O my ſoul, come not thou into their ſecret; to their aſſembly, mine honour, be thou not united; and, with David, Pſal. xxvi. 9. Gather not my ſoul with ſinners. If you belong to theſe drunken, tippling, idle, and debauched gatherings; you may be ſure, that you are not gathered unto Shiloh. The godly may indeed fall into ſuch company, but it is not their element to embrace their ſociety; nay, fellowſhip with the ſaints, the excellent ones of the earth, is their delight; and fellowſhip with the wicked, is ſo far from being their delight, that their ſociety is rather a burden, and brings them to a wo is me, wo is me, that I ſojourn in Meſhech, and dwell in the tents of Kedar! I had rather be a door-keeper in the houſe of God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedneſs. Now, ſee to it, if you be not gathered out of the world, you are not yet gathered to Shiloh: for, if you be cloathed with the Sun, then you have the moon of this world under your feet, and upon your head a crown of twelve ſtars; that is, the doctrine of the goſpel, delivered by the twelve apoſtles, and preached by goſpel-miniſters, which are called ſtars in his right-hand, will be your crown, a golden crown to you: yea, his word will be to you, as more to be deſired than gold, yea, than much fine gold. And this leads me to another mark of thoſe that are gathered to Shiloh.

5. If you be gathered to Shiloh, then gathering means and ordinances will be always deſirable to you; for they that are gathered, will be always a gathering to him, till they be for ever with him, in the full and immediate enjoyment of him: now try yourſelf by this mark. I enlarge a little upon each, becauſe I deſign not to multiply particulars.—If you be gathered to Shiloh, then the gathering means will be deſirable to you. Now, what conſcience do you make of the means? For, there is a generation, that boldly ſay, they have religion, yet they uſe not duly, either public, private, or ſecret means. If ever you be gathered to Chriſt, all the gathering means, all his ordinances, will be ſweet to you: you will ſeek him where he is to be found; not in the city, about the ſtreets and broad ways, among the watch-men, but a little further, Song iii. 2, 3. 4. They that never uſed means, were never gathered; they that are gathered, are ſtill endeavouring to improve them, becauſe they are always gathering to him: therefore try yourſelves here further, on this ſcore, and ſee where you are, in Shiloh, or not. If you be gathered to Shiloh, you will be conſtantly gathering to him, and living on him; for ſuch are not of thoſe that draw back to perdition, but of thoſe that believe, to the ſaving of their ſouls. They that go out from him, were never of him; therefore ſays Chriſt to his diſciples, Will ye alſo go away? John vi. 67. To which, the true believer's anſwer is, Lord, to whom ſhall we go, thou haſt the words of eternal life? ver. 68. Let me therefore aſk you, whether or not you intend to abide with Chriſt? Surely, if you be gathered to him, you reſolve, through grace, to remain with him, and to be ſtill coming to him, 1 Pet. ii. 4.; and as new-born babes, deſiring the ſincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby, ver. 2. Indeed, they that abide with Chriſt cannot but grow; and this, I ſay, to find out hypocrites, that perhaps uſe the outward means, and reſolve, in their faſhion, they will abide with Chriſt; that is, they will not turn papiſts or malignants, turn who will, and yet know not what it is to be ever gathering to, and growing in the Lord Jeſus. I know that ſaints have their winter-blaſts, that ſet them back; but they have alſo their ſummer-refreſhings, to ſet them forward again, and make them grow in knowledge, faith, love, experience; or elſe, for want of this growth, they are always quarrelling themſelves: but, for other profeſſors, that never were rooted in Chriſt, they keep ſtill their old footing and diſpoſition. Men would bluſh for ſhame, to have it ſaid to them, they are as fooliſh this day, as they were this day twenty years; or, that they are as bad in their callings, and as ill at their trade, as when they began; and yet, in Chriſtianity, many are as ill as they were thirty, forty, fifty years ſince; as ignorant of Chriſt and the goſpel, as great ſtrangers to communion with God in Chriſt. Surely, they that are gathered to Chriſt, they will ſtrive to get forward, they cannot get enough of him, but preſs toward the mark. They that have got enough of Chriſt, have got nothing as yet; and they that have got him, they may think they have got nothing to what they ſee to be in him; and therefore they preſs forward, whenever they are themſelves. And, indeed, when you are not going forward, you are going backward. When a man rows againſt the ſtream, he holds up the boat; but let him lay aſide the oars, he will go further down than he came up. Hence, gathered ſouls are aſſiduouſly for making uſe of the oars of gathering means, that they may reach forward: and hence, as God's gathering means will be delightful, ſo the devil's ſcattering means will be hateful to him that is gathered; every thing that tends to make a ſeparation betwixt Chriſt and him, will be uneaſy, eſpecially when he hath made any progreſs at ordinances. Oh! to think of a ſeparation again, will be ſad and ſorrowful! Wo is me, that I am going back to a world of ſin, and ſinners, and temptation again! Being gathered to him, he cannot think of being ſeparated from him.

6. If

6. If you be gathered to Shiloh, then it will be your desire and endeavour to gather others to him; the soul that comes to Christ, will seek to draw others after him, John i. 45, 46. Whenever Christ found Philip, Philip found Nathanael, and says, We have found the Messias; O come and see him. When Christ manifested himself to the woman of Samaria, she invites the men of the city to come to him; O come, see a man that told me all things that ever I did, John iv. 29. Never a soul was gathered to Christ, but desired to gather others, especially its friends and relations. The parent that is in Christ, will be careful to gather his children to Christ; the master his servant, Gen. xviii. 19. I know, says God of Abraham, that he will command his children and his houshold after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord. It is not possible, but that soul that comes to Christ, and hath got a draught of his free love, if it could command ten thousand, it would command them to come to Christ. If you never had a care or concern this way, to know the Lord, you declare you was never gathered to him. But, you whose soul's desire is, to gather others to Christ, you may be sure, concerning yourself, that you are gathered to Shiloh.——Now, if you try yourselves impartially by these marks, you may come to find whether you have been gathered to Shiloh, yea, or not.

2*dly*, The second sort then, that I would speak to, are some that may be sure, that they were NEVER gathered to Shiloh; and it is to be feared, that unbelievers make up the greatest part of this assembly: and therefore I must be allowed to speak, especially to them; and if believers themselves give ear, and the Lord concur with the word of general exhortation, they may get a new grip and a firm hold of Shiloh, by the bye. My exhortation to the people in general, then, especially those that were never gathered unto Christ, is in the words of the prophet, Zeph. ii. 1. Gather yourselves together; yea, gather together, O nation not desired; that is, either not desiring, even you that have no desire towards God and Christ, and his grace and favour, but are very indifferent about it; or, nation not desirable, having nothing lovely or amiable about you, to recommend you to God: yet, O gather together, before the decree bring forth, and before the fierce anger of the Lord come upon you; for, if once his wrath begin to burn, blessed are all they that trust in him, and gather to him. Also, in the words of the prophet, Isa. xlv. 20, 22. Assemble yourselves, and come; why? what is that? it follows, Look to me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else. Shiloh is come, and he is come for the salvation of the people. O let all the people say, AMEN; even so, come Lord Jesus: here is the feast of fat things, that the Lord of hosts hath made on this mountain, for all people, Isa. xxv. 6. Therefore let all the people assemble themselves and come, that they may eat and drink. I allude to Ezek. xxxix. 17. where God speaks to every feathered fowl, and every beast of the field, saying, Assemble yourselves and come, gather yourselves on every side to my sacrifice, that I do sacrifice for you, even a great sacrifice upon the mountains of Israel, that you may eat flesh, and drink blood. Indeed, except you eat the flesh, and drink the blood of the Son of God, you have no life in you, John vi. 53. Therefore, assemble yourselves and come, gather to this sacrifice upon the mountains of Israel for you; a sacrifice of a sweet-smelling savour unto God. Here is the carcase; O let the eagles be gathered together. We must preach this gospel to every creature, every rational creature; yea, to men that have lost their reason, and turned to beasts: every beast of the field, tame or wild, clean or unclean, Acts x. 12. What means the opening of the heavens there, and the descending of the sheet, the great sheet knit at four corners, containing all manner of wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air? Why, the meaning was, Go call all, and every one of the people. The Gentiles, some of them are creeping in the dust, and wallowing in the mire of sinful lusts and worldly-mindedness; others are flying in the air of pride, vanity, and selfishness: but, go you and call the poor sinful creatures within your reach, whether they be creeping on the earth, or flying in the air: all the sinful house of Adam, are made up of such a sort of people; but go, and tell them, that now Shiloh is come; and, to him must the gathering of the people be. Therefore, in the name of the great Shiloh, and in his Father's name, we invite and exhort all the people, that have hitherto been gathering to the devil, and gathering to their lusts, and gathering to the world, and gathering to their idle cabals, and drunken gossipings, sinful diversions, and damnable debaucheries, now to think in earnest of gathering unto Shiloh; for, Shiloh is come, and let the gathering of the people be to him.

Now, seeing nothing but divine almighty power can gather souls unto Christ; therefore, O man, woman; every individual who is just now hearing me, whether old or young, look to God for power to accompany the call; for the gospel call uses to be the channel, in which divine power runs, for conquering souls. And because, I know not, but this power may accompany this call, for making out the promise in the text, that to him shall the gathering of the people be; therefore, I shall offer some considerations, for pressing home this exhortation upon the people.

1. Consider, that Shiloh is come to the people, that the people may come to him; for this is what I mean, by gathering to him, namely, a coming to him by faith: and this faith, you know, is a receiving and resting upon him alone for salvation, as he is offered in the gospel. Now, since he cannot be received, but in and by the gospel-offer, the word of grace, the word of promise in the gospel; therefore, to receive him, is to believe in him, John i. 12. As it is by unbelief that we depart from him, Heb. iii. 12. Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God: so it is by believing in him that we gather to him; and to believe in him, is to credit the record that God hath given of his Son; And this is the record, that God hath given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son: he that does not thus believe, hath made God a liar, 1 John v. 10, 11. To come to him by faith, then, is to close with him in the gospel-record, and upon the divine testimony; to have a divine persuasion of the truth and goodness of the gospel-message, with particular application to yourself, saying, O here is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came to save sinners, of whom I am the chief, 1 Tim. i. 15.; and so it is just a taking him at his word, and taking his word of grace, his word of honour for your salvation, according to the gospel-offer of him. If you be saying, ſaying, then, that you cannot come to him by faith; it may be very true, for indeed you cannot come, till he draw you, John vi. 44. You cannot believe, till the Spirit of grace mix in with this word of grace; but do you know what you are ſaying, when you ſay you cannot come to him by faith, though the word of grace came to you in particular, to be believed by you? You are ſaying, in effect, that God is a liar; I cannot take his word for it; I cannot believe that he is ſpeaking to me; or that he means any good to me. To you is the word of this ſalvation ſent, ſays the goſpel: "No, "ſays unbelief, never a word of that is true, "with reſpect to me: let them apply it to whom "it is ſent, but I cannot think it is to the like "of me." Wretch! you are calling the God of truth a liar: Oh! blaſphemy! If it were not to you, your unbelief would not be your ſin; but of all ſins it is the moſt damning, as well as the prolific womb that genders other ſins. However, Shiloh is come to you, that you may come to him; He came to his own, and his own [viz. the Jews,] received him not; intimating, that the deſign of the work, and deſign of his coming, was that they might come to him, receive him, and gather to him. And now he is come to you, Gentiles; he is come to the people; and ſhall the people reject him too? He is come to us in the fleſh, by taking on our nature; he is come to us in the goſpel, the goſpel-offer, the goſpel-promiſe, the goſpel-invitation; and though he ſhould never come any other way, yet it ſtates your obligation, and lays a foundation for your coming to him; and if you reject him, you are as inexcuſable, as the Jews that rejected him were.

2. Conſider whom it is you will be gathered to, when gathered unto Shiloh: ſurely, They that know his name will put their truſt in him, and ſo gather to him. Pſal. xxiv. 9, 10. Lift up your heads, O ye gates, that the King of glory may come in: Oh! who would not caſt open the gates of their hearts to receive ſuch an honourable gueſt! Oh! if you knew what a glorious one Chriſt is, you could not find in your heart to reject and deſpiſe him: he is not a man ſimply, or an angel, but a God-man, the Lord of men and angels. It is not poſſible to tell what glory is in him, for God is in him; Great is the myſtery of Godlineſs, God manifeſted in the fleſh, 1 Tim. iii. 16. A God-head dwelling in our fleſh is the world's wonder: it is ſuch a myſtery, that the world cannot receive it; but this is the goſpel that we preach, That God is in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelf, 2 Cor. v. 19. O think, what of God is in Chriſt! (1.) The authority of God is in him; My name is in him, Exod. xxiii. 21. this is his proper name, Shiloh, the Sent, the Authoriſed, and Sealed of the Father, John vi. 27. He came in his Father's name, as well as his own, To ſeek and ſave loſt ſinners. As the authority of God, ſo, (2.) The wiſdom and power of God is in him; We preach Chriſt crucified,—the wiſdom of God, and the power of God, 1 Cor. i. 23, 24. All the treaſures of divine wiſdom, and all the magazine of divine power are in him. And not only ſo, but again, (3.) The Spirit of God is in him; I have put my Spirit upon him, that he may bring forth judgment to the Gentiles, Iſa. lxii. 1. He hath not only the Spirit of wiſdom, to contrive for the beſt; and the Spirit of power, to ſave to the uttermoſt; but alſo the Spirit of grace, to confer upon the people: and ſhall not the gathering of the people be to him? O! What of God is in him! (4.) The righteouſneſs of God is in him; and his righteouſneſs is the righteouſneſs of God, which is revealed to you in this goſpel, from faith to faith, Rom. i. 17. (5.) The love of God is in him, for divine love is wrapt up in this garment of fleſh and blood; In this was manifeſted the love of God towards us, becauſe God ſent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him, 1 John iv. 9. (6.) The mercy of God is in him. Oh! poor ſinner, when you come to your dying moments, readily, God's mercy will be your cry; but in vain will you ſeek God's mercy, to the prejudice of God's juſtice; and behold, juſtice and mercy meet together, and kiſs one another, only in Chriſt: mercy will vent no otherwiſe, but in Chriſt, in whom alone God is well-pleaſed, and by whom his juſtice is ſatisfied. What ſhall I ſay? (7.) The ſalvation of God is in him, Acts iv. 12. Neither is there ſalvation in any other; for there is no name given under heaven, among men whereby we can be ſaved, but the name of Jeſus. Yea, (8.) The fulneſs of God is in him; For it hath pleaſed the Father, that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell, Col. i. 19.; and accordingly, Col. ii. 9. In him dwells all the fulneſs of the God-head bodily. None of God's attributes and excellencies are out of him; *He is the brightneſs of the Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon. There is enough here to provoke all the world to gather to him.

3. Conſider what you muſt be gathered to, if you be not gathered to Shiloh.

(1.) If you be not gathered to Chriſt, you will be gathered to your idols and luſts: and have you not provoked God too much already, by gathering towards that airth! May not the time paſt ſuffice you to have wrought the will of the Gentiles? Will you prefer a baſe luſt to bleſſed Jeſus? a luſt that would damn you, to a Jeſus that would ſave you? Again,

(2.) If you be not gathered to Chriſt, the beſt airth you can pretend to go to, is to be gathered to the law as your huſband: and, Oh! is a broken covenant of works a better bargain, think you, than Chriſt? Nay, nay; As many as are of the works of the law, are under the curſe, Gal. iii. 10.; that is, as many as think to be juſtified and accepted of God by their obedience to the command of the law, they are under the threatening and curſe of the law; for, Curſed is every one that continues not in all things written in the book of the law to do them: and hereby, you are a debtor to do the whole law, Gal. v. 3.; and, becauſe you cannot pay the debt of obedience to the command, you muſt ly under the debt of ſatisfaction to the curſe: and therefore under the heavy curſe and condemnation of the law is your ſoul gathered, while you are out of Chriſt. Yea,

(3.) If you be not gathered to Chriſt, you muſt be gathered to the devil; for there is no medium, either Chriſt or the devil muſt be your maſter: if Chriſt be not entertained, you entertain the devil in his room. And do you conſider what ſort of gueſt he is? He is a gueſt that will blind you; for, he is the God of this world, that blinds the minds of them that believe not.—He is a gueſt that will blaſt you, and blaſt every word to you that you hear, or elſe run away with it, that you may never get good of it; for he catches away the very ſeed that is ſown in the heart; heart, Matth. xiii. 19.—He is a gueſt that will deceive you, by perſuading you that you have either been gathered to Chriſt already, and that you are a good enough believer, or elſe that it is time enough for you to be gathered to Chriſt.—And ſo he is, in a word, a gueſt that will deſtroy you, and devour you, as well as delude you; for, The devil goes about like a roaring lion, ſeeking whom he may devour. And as now he is your tempter, ſo afterwards he will be your tormentor. Therefore, again,

(4.) Let me tell you, if you be not gathered to Shiloh, you muſt be gathered to hell; for, He that believeth not ſhall be damned, Mark xvi. 16. And it is not the miniſter that ſays it, it is the ſay and affirmation of the God of truth; and if his ſay be not enough, know he hath ſworn, as well as ſaid it, Heb. iii. 18. He ſwears in his wrath, that you ſhall not enter into his reſt. And to whom does he ſwear, thus in his wrath? Even to them that believe not. Alas! there is no little wrath abiding that ſoul againſt whom God ſwears in his wrath; it will be wrath proportioned to the worth of that blood of Chriſt which you do trample under your feet. Oh! How ſhall you eſcape, if you neglect ſo great ſalvation? Let not the devil perſuade you, that all theſe things are but fancies; for, when death's cold ſweat begins to break upon you, you will find them to be ſad realities, if you be not gathered unto Shiloh. And therefore, again,

4. Conſider what things are a-gathering, that ſhould haſten your gathering in to Shiloh. Clouds are gathering faſt in our ſky; a cloud of wickedneſs, a cloud of error, a cloud of wrath, a cloud of death.

(1.) A cloud of wickedneſs is gathering; nay, this cloud is already gathered to ſuch a blackneſs, that we cannot ſay, The iniquity of the Amorite is not yet full; or that the iniquity of Britain and Ireland is not yet full; nay, our covenant-breaking, covenant-burning, covenant-burying ſin and defection, beſide all our other evils, have made our cup full, ſome time ago: but it ſeems God hath a mind our cup ſhould run over, that ſo his cup of judgments may run alſo: for a cloud of wickedneſs is gathering more and more.

(2.) Clouds of error are gathering alſo; a black cloud, eſpecially of Arianiſm, which threatens the deſtruction of the very foundation of Chriſtianity; And if the foundation ſhake, what ſhall the righteous do? Of this I ſpoke formmerly*; therefore, I ſhall only ſay, when theſe clouds of wickedneſs and error are gathering to a prodigious blackneſs of darkneſs, it is a time to be gathering to Shiloh, who is the way and the truth: the way to walk in, in oppoſition to the way of wickedneſs; and the truth to be believed, in oppoſition to all the paths of error. But, moreover, theſe black clouds bode more a-coming.

(3.) There is a cloud of wrath gathering over Britain; a cloud of judgment and calamity is gathering over Scotland, and hath been gathering theſe many years bygone, eſpecially ſince the time that Scotland was incorporate with her neighbour: a cloud of wrath hath been gathering over us, both as a church and nation; what drops have fallen out of that cloud, to the rending and dividing of our church, and to the ſinking and impoveriſhing of our ſtate; what clouds of diſorder and confuſion are hovering over our head, is too well known: but the Lord knows what will be the end of theſe things, more dreadful ſhowers of temporal judgments are in all appearance haſtening on: and, Oh! is it not time to be gathering to Shiloh, the only place of ſoul-ſafety? They that are in him have the lee-ſide of the buſh, and are in abſolute ſafety, whatever way the wind blows. But though you ſhould eſcape the cloud of national judgments, yet there is a cloud of perſonal affliction gathering, be it ſickneſs on your body, or the like: is it not beſt to be under covert before the ſhower come on? Or, if you ſhould eſcape that, yet,

(4.) Certainly there is a cloud of death gathering and coming upon you, as faſt as days, and hours, and moments fly away; and if your bodies be gathered to the grave before your ſouls be gathered to Shiloh, you will be miſerable as long as God ſhall be bleſſed, that is for ever and ever. You may make a ſhift to live as merrily as you can now; but, What will you do in the day of viſitation? Iſa. x. 3. What will you do when the king of terrors is gathering his forces againſt you, and when you ſhall be gathered before God's awful tribunal to hear and receive that direful and alarming ſentence pronounced againſt you, Depart from me ye curſed, into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels!

5. Conſider how long he hath been offering to gather you. And how oft, O ſinner, would he have gathered you, as a hen does her chickens under her wings, but ye would not? How long? Even all day long; Rom. x. 21. All day long have I ſtretched forth my hands unto a diſobedient and gainſaying people. God hath been ſtretching out his arm to take hold of you, even the arm of his grace in the goſpel-offer and invitation, and you are not laid hold upon to this day. All the day long that the goſpel-ſun hath been ſhining have I been ſtretching out my arms, ſays God; for God counts the time how long he waits upon you; he reckons up the time how long you let him ſtand knocking at the door of your heart: he counts every hour's refuſal, and every year's refuſal, though it be forty years; Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. God hath been calling on ſome of you, ten, twenty, thirty, forty years; and, it may be, to gray hairs, but he counts the time how long: he hath been purſuing you with his grace, while you have been catching feathers in the wind; delighting yourſelves in nothing but vanity; yea, lying vanity, forſaking your own mercy; as perſons that have neither care for heaven, nor a fear of hell. What if the time be now come, wherein he is ſaying, I will wait no longer; Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone; if this very call be ſlighted, My Spirit ſhall ſtrive no more with you; I have long ſought your kindneſs, and you refuſed it; I offered my kindneſs, and you thought nothing of it; I would have gathered you, and ye would not? The cauſe of your damnation then, if you periſh, is not in God, but in you: it is not in his act of reprobation, but in your act of rebellion and wicked will. You are a gainſaying and rebellious people againſt the God that ſtretched forth his hands towards you: ſay not then, what ails God at me? but rather, what ails your wicked nature at God? Oh! may conquering grace at length come! But again, may be to him: not only is Shiloh come in our nature, but he is come in the capacity of a Shiloh; that is, the Sent of God, under ſuch manifold relations to the people as may engage the hearts of the people. Since the text makes him the Sent of God, let us ſee what he is ſent for, and whether the people have any concern therein. —He is ſent to be the Saviour of the people; To you is born in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Chriſt the Lord, Luke ii. 11. This is indeed the Chriſt, the Saviour of the world, John iv. 24. Is he ſent to be the Saviour of the people; and ſhall not the gathering of the people be to him?—He is ſent to be the Deliverer of the people; There is come out of Zion the Deliverer, that ſhall turn away ungodlineſs from Jacob, Rom. xi. 26. Oh! ſhall he come to deliver the people, and none of the people come to be delivered by him?—He is ſent to be the Helper of the people; yea, all the help of the people is laid upon him; I have laid help upon one that is mighty, Pſal. lxxxix. 19. O Iſrael, thou haſt deſtroyed thyſelf, but in me is thy help, Hoſ. xiii. 9. Is he the helper of the people, and the help itſelf; and ſhall not the people come to him, to ſeek his help, and take his help?—He is ſent to be the Prophet of the people; The Lord hath given him the tongue of the learned, to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon to the weary, Iſa. l. 4. He is the only powerful preacher and teacher of the people; Never man ſpake like this man: and ſhould not the people hear him? This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleaſed, hear ye him.—He is ſent to be the Prieſt, and the Sacrifice of the people. As he is a Prieſt for ever, Pſal. cx. 4.; ſo he gave himſelf to be an offering, and a ſacrifice of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour unto God, Eph. v. 2. And all was, that the people may gather under the covert of the blood of the ſacrifice.—Again, he is ſent to be the King of the people; I have ſet my King upon my holy hill of Zion, Pſal. ii. 6. Shall he have no ſubjects for your part? Will none in all this large audience be influenced to become willing and loyal ſubjects of this glorious and immortal King? Will none match with him?—He is ſent to be the Friend and Favourer of the people: hence called, a Friend of publicans and ſinners; not a friend to their ſins, but ſuch a friend to their ſouls, as to ſave them from their ſins.—He is ſent to be the Juſtifier of the people; the Juſtifier of them that believe in Jeſus: yea, hence, he is ſaid to juſtify the ungodly; for he came not to be a condemner, but a juſtifier; God ſent not his Son to the world, to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be ſaved, John iii. 17. Oh! ſhall not guilty people come to him to be juſtified from all things, from which they could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes?—He is ſent to be the Shepherd and Biſhop of the people, that the people may return unto him, as the Shepherd and Biſhop of their ſouls, 1 Pet. ii. 25.—He is ſent to be the Phyſician of the people; hence, his name is JEHOVAH-ROPHI; The Lord that healeth thee: And as many as touched him were healed. The whole need not a phyſician, but they that are ſick. And, who are they that need not his healing? Therefore, let the gathering of the people that need healing be to him.—He is ſent to be the Witneſs, the Leader, and Commander of the people; Behold, I have given him for a Witneſs, a Leader, and Commander of the people, Iſa. lv. 4.; and all that the gathering of the people may be to him.—He is ſent to be a Counſellor, a Father, and a Prince of the people; To us a child is born, to us a ſon is given, and his name ſhall be called, Wonderful, Counſellor, the mighty God, the everlaſting Father, the Prince of peace; and the government ſhall be upon his ſhoulders, Iſa. ix. 6.—He is ſent to be the Builder of the people, and the Foundation-ſtone, upon which the people ſhould build; Even he ſhall build the temple of the Lord, and he ſhall bear the glory, Zech. vi. 13. Behold, I lay in Zion, for a foundation, a ſtone, a tried ſtone, a precious corner-ſtone, a ſure foundation, Iſa. xxviii. 16.; and all that the gathering of the people may be to him.—He is ſent to be the Bleſſer of the people, that the people may gather to him for a bleſſing; God having raiſed up his Son Jeſus, hath ſent him to bleſs you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities, Acts iii. 26.—He hath ſent him to bleſs the people; and God's bleſſing will light on all them that gather to him for a bleſſing; Men ſhall be bleſt in him, and all nations ſhall call him bleſſed, Pſal. lxxii. 17.—He is ſent to be the Standard-bearer of the people; He is the Chief, the Standard-bearer among ten thouſand, Song v. 10.; hence he is called the Enſign of the people, and to it ſhall the Gentiles ſeek, Iſa. xi. 10. Ought not then the gathering of the people to be to their Standard-bearer and Enſign?—He is ſent to be the Burden-bearer of the people: behold, the burden of your ſins is laid upon him; The Lord hath laid upon him the iniquities of us all, Iſa. liii. 6, 8. [or, made them to MEET on him,] he hath gathered together all the ſins of the people, and laid them on his back, that the gathering of the people may be to him, as the Lamb of God, that takes away the ſins of the world. As the burden of our ſins, ſo the burden of our ſorrows is laid upon him; Surely he hath born our griefs, and carried our ſorrows, Iſa. liii. 4. The burden of our wounds, and bruiſes, and ſtripes, was laid upon him; He was wounded for our ſins, and bruiſed for our iniquities, the chaſtiſement of our peace was laid upon him, and by his ſtripes we are healed, ver. 5. All the wounds that we ſhould have got with the ſword of God's wrath, and all the ſtripes that ſhould have been laid upon our backs to eternity, were gathered together, and laid upon Chriſt's back. And why was the burden of all the ſins and ſorrows of the people laid upon him, but that the gathering of the people might be to him, as the Burden-bearer of the people?—What ſhall I ſay? He is ſent, not only to be all relations, but all things to the people.—He is ſent to be the Covenant of the people; I will give thee for a covenant of the people, Iſa. lxvi. 6.—He is ſent to be the Glory of the people; a Light to lighten the Gentiles, and the Glory of his people Iſrael.—He is ſent to be the Hope of the people; He is our Hope, ſays the apoſtle; and, The Lord ſhall be the Hope of his people, Joel iii. 16.—He is ſent to be the Deſire of the people; therefore it is ſaid of him, The Deſire of all nations ſhall come.—He is ſent to be the Propitiation of the people; He is the Propitiation for our ſins, 1 John ii. 2.—He is ſent to be the Salvation and Conſolation of the people: Behold thy Salvation comes; and he is called the Conſolation of Iſrael.—He is ſent to be the Door of the people; I am the Door, by me if any enter in, he ſhall be ſaved, John x. 9.—Again, he is ſent to be the Way of the people; I am the Way; no man comes to the Father, but by me.—He is ſent to be the Ladder of the people: he is the true Jacob's ladder, that reaches from earth to heaven, by which alone we can aſcend up to glory. And, O ſhould not the gathering of the people be to him! And becauſe they cannot of themſelves enter in at this door, nor walk in this way, nor climb this ladder, therefore he is sent to be the Leader of the people; I will lead the blind in a way they know not, and in paths which they have not known: Yea, and to be the Strength of the people, that the people may gather to him, and trust in the Lord Jehovah, in whom there is everlasting strength.—He is sent to be the wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption of the people, 1 Cor. i. 30. He is made of God unto us, all these things; even he who is the Lord our righteousness.—And, that he might be a perfect law-biding righteousness of the people, behold with wonder, he sent him to be the Sin of the people, and the Curse of the people; He hath made him to be sin for us, that we might be the righteousness of God in him, 2 Cor. v. 21. To redeem us from the curse of the law, he was made a curse for us, Gal. iii. 13.—What shall I say? He is the Redeemer of the people, the Surety of the people, the Advocate of the people, and the Ransom of the people.——Shiloh is come, and he is sent of God, to be all relations, and all things to the people, that the gathering of the people may be to him.—God hath put all the privileges of the people into his hands, that he may be the Light and Life of the people; who is therefore called, the Light of the world, and the Life of the world.—He hath put all gifts, and graces, and fulness in his hand, for the peoples use and behoof; He hath received gifts for men, even for the rebellious, that God the Lord might dwell among them.——And is there nothing in all this to be a motive or argument for gathering the people unto him? Is he sent for all these ends to the people, and shall not the people be gathered to him? O! may the people come to him, who is the All of the people!

6. Conſider what relation Chriſt ſtands in to the people, that the gathering of the people may

7. Consider what house-room there is in him, for the people to gather unto: And,

(1.) He is a hiding-house for the people to gather to; A man shall be as a hiding-place from the storm, a covert from the tempest; as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land, Isa. xxxii. 2. Behold, he is a hiding-house, a shelter-house, a refuge for the people, a sanctuary for the people, that the people may flee to him, saying, with the psalmist, I flee to thee to hide me.

(2.) He is a dwelling-house for the people to gather to; He that dwells in the secret place of the most High, shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty, Psal. xci. 1. And, O they that dwell in him, they dwell on high, and the place of their defence is the munition of rocks. They that are once gathered to him, he and they do mutually inhabit one another, in the communion of the Holy Ghost; Hereby we know that we dwell in him, and he in us, by his Spirit which he hath given us, 1 John iv. 13.

(3.) He is a working-house for the gathering of the people to: not one spiritually good work can be performed out of him; for, without him we can do nothing, John xv. 5. But when one gets in to this house, then he is like a man in his working house, that hath all his working instruments and tools at his hand, without which he could not work at his trade: yea, then he hath Christ himself for his working hand; I can do all things through Christ strengthening me. He performs all my work for me, his strength being made perfect in my weakness.

(4.) He is the bathing-house for the gathering of the people to; The blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin, 1 John i. 7.; If I wash thee not, thou hast no part in me. He himself is the fountain open to the house of David for sin and for uncleanness: Here alone it is, that the filthy leprous people can get their souls bathed and purged, and must gather to him for that end, saying, Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than the snow, Psal. li. 7.

(5.) He is the treasure-house for the people to gather unto. Where must the gathering of the people be, but to the only store-house? Poor people may be here supplied, out of his unsearchable riches; for, In him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, Col. ii. 3. It hath pleased the Father, that in him should all fulness dwell, that out of his fulness we might receive grace for grace.

(6.) He is the pleasure-house for the gathering of the people to. He is a pleasure-house, both for God, and for the people of God; such a pleasure-house for God to dwell in, that as God is well-pleased in him, reconciled and satisfied in him, in whom his soul delights; so he is infinitely well-pleased with all that gather in to him, they are accepted in him, and that with pleasure; This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased. And when once sinners are gathered in to him, O they are well-pleased also; yea, abundantly satisfied with the fatness of his house, Psal. xxxvi. 8. In whom believing, we rejoice, with joy unspeakable, and full of glory. In his presence there is fulness of joy. There is no house of pleasure in the world like this.

(7.) He is the magazine-house for the gathering of the people to. All our magazines for military provision are in him: he indeed is like the tower of David, built for an armoury, where there hangs a thousand bucklers, all shields of mighty men, Song iv. 4.; for all the believer's spiritual armour, whereby he must fight against the devil, the world, and the flesh, is hanging in this house; and therefore, whenever he is for fighting, he is to put on the whole armour of God; and to be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Never will a soul get a happy stroak given to the devil, or corruption, without armour got out of this magazine-house. Here lies all the powder and ammunition, whereby the most subtile engines of hell may be blown up, and broken.

(8.) He is the banquetting-house for the gathering of the people to; He brought me to the banquetting-house, and his banner over me was love, Cant. ii. 4. It is remarkable and strange, that there should be need of a banner in a banquetting-house. A banner is for war; and indeed his people, when they are fed in his house, they are fitted for war: but, O a banner of love is good provision for war; the manifestation of the love of God in Christ, encourages and strengthens the soul, both for work and warfare. He fights best, when he feeds best upon the love and favour of God in Christ, who himself is both the banquetting-house, the banner, and the feast; he is the food, His flesh is meat indeed, and his blood is drink indeed. There he feeds them with his pardon and peace; he feeds them with his righteousness and fulness; yea, there he sups with them, and they with him: and this feast of fat things is provided for all people, Isa. xxv. 6. that they may gather in to the banquetting-house. He only is the victual-house, the true Bethlehem, the house of bread.

(9.) He is the praying-house for the gathering of the people to; the true temple, and house of prayer for all people, Isa. lvi. 7. Would you have have a houſe for praying acceptably in, ſo as to be always heard and anſwered, whenever you pray? Here it is; there is no houſe of prayer like it: and where-ever you go, be it to a corner or cloſet, this houſe is at hand for you to run in to, that you may be accepted in the Beloved: and when you go in to this houſe of prayer, you ſhall have whatever you aſk, that the Father may be glorified in the Son, John xiv. 13.

(10.) He is the praiſing-houſe for the gathering of the people to; Bleſſed are they that dwell in thy houſe, they will be ſtill praiſing thee, Pſal. lxxxiv. 4. And, indeed, the farther you go into the houſe of prayer, the more will you find it to be the houſe of praiſe. Much praiſe, and honour, and glory in the higheſt, does God get in this houſe; whereas people, out of this houſe, do nothing but diſhonour and affront him. But, O may all the people praiſe him, by gathering in to this houſe! O what notable houſing is there here for the people! Therefore, let the gathering of the people be to him.

(11.) In a word, he is the meeting-houſe with God; There will I meet with thee, even on the mercy-ſeat, between the cherubims, Exod. xxv. 22. Here is houſe-room for all the people. There is a ſign hung up over the door of the houſe, with this inſcription, Whoſoever will, let him come, Rev. xxii. 17.

8. Conſider there is a gathering place for the people in the Lord Jeſus, with a WHAT THOUGH written below the inſcription.

(1.) What though you have never come in to this day, yet now you are welcome to come in, though you have been ſtanding without all your days till now; it is come to the eleventh and laſt hour; Why ſtand ye here all the day idle? Mat. xx. 6. He calls you in to his working-houſe.

(2.) What though you have played the harlot with many lovers, yet there is place in him for your gathering to; Jer. iii. 1. Yet return unto me, ſaith the Lord; yea, Iſa. i. 18. Though your ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be white as ſnow; though they be red as crimſon, they ſhall be as white as wool. Have you been a drunkard, a ſwearer, an unclean perſon, etc? Why, Such were ſome of you, but you are waſhed, juſtified, and ſanctified, etc. Read 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10, 11.

(3.) What though you have been untoward and untractable hitherto, yet there is place in him for your gathering to; For the iniquity of his covetouſneſs was I wroth, and ſmote him; I hid me and was wroth, and he went on frowardly in the way of his own heart; yet I have ſeen his ways, and will heal him, Iſa. lvii. 17.

(4.) What though you have been making God to ſerve with your ſins, and wearying him with your iniquity, yet there is place in him for your gathering to him; for, behold what he ſays, even with reſpect unto ſuch, I, even I, am he that blotteth out thine iniquity, for mine own ſake, and will not remember thy ſins. Put me in remembrance, Iſa. xliii. 25, 26.

(5.) What though you have been guilty of the moſt provoking and grievous backſliding, yet there is place in him for your gathering unto; Return, ye backſliding children, for I will heal your backſlidings; yea, I will heal your backſlidings, and love you freely, Jer. iii. 14, 22.

(6.) What though your outward circumſtances in the world be never ſo mean and contemptible, ſo as no perſon cares for you, more than the mire of the ſtreet, and you are caſt out at all hands; yet there is place in him for your gathering to; for, he gathers the outcaſts of Iſrael. And, James ii. 5. Hath not God choſen the poor of this world, to be rich in faith, and heirs of a kingdom?

(7.) What though MANY have gathered in to Shiloh already, yet there is room enough, and place enough for you to gather in alſo; for, as it is ſaid in the parable, Luke xiv. 22. Though many were gathered in to the ſupper, yet there was room; ſo here, though thouſands, and ten thouſands have been gathered to Shiloh, ſince he came, and before he came, yet there is room; there is place for you: as he ſays, In his Father's houſe are many manſions; ſo ſay I of Shiloh's houſe, that there are many manſions therein; with him there are multitudes of mercies for multitudes of ſinners. O! who can reckon the multitudes of his tender mercies? Who can comprehend the vaſtneſs of this gathering-place? It would hold thouſands of worlds, let be one world: therefore let not that ſtand in the way of your gathering unto Shiloh.

(8.) What though you could never think that there was any place in him for you, nor any mercy for the like of you; yet nevertheleſs there is a gathering-place in him for you, Iſa. lv. 8. For my thoughts are not your thoughts;—for, as the heavens are higher than the earth, ſo are my thoughts higher than your thoughts.

(9.) What though you be unworthy to come to him, yet there is place in him for unworthy ſinners to gather in to. Are you unworthy of him? Sure I am that is true; as true a word as ever you ſpake: but the more unworthy you are, the more welcome to him, who hath worth enough for you and himſelf both: he expects no worth to be in you, till once you come to him. What is it that makes you unworthy? Is it, that you are poor, miſerable, wretched, blind, and naked? Or, is it, that you are ſtupid and ſenſeleſs, and know not that you are in theſe circumſtances? Why, he makes that the very reaſon of his inviting you to gather in to him; Becauſe thou ſayeſt, I am rich, and knoweſt not that thou art wretched, and miſerable, and poor, and blind, and naked. I counſel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire that thou mayeſt be rich, etc, Rev. iii. 17, 18. Unworthy ſinners, gather in to that well-furniſhed houſe, where all that you need to make you happy and holy is to be had: and ſay not you are unfit to come; for there you ſee, that even impotent and unſenſible ſinners, whom we are ready to ſhut out, grace is ready to take in. Yea,

(10.) What though you be unable to come to him, and gather in to Shiloh, yet there is place in him for your gathering in to him; Iſa. xl. 29. For he gives power to the faint, and to them that have no might, he increaſeth ſtrength. If you would be gathered, he ſtands ready to reach you his helping hand, and injoins you to take hold of his ſtrength, that you may make peace with him, and you ſhall make peace with him, Iſa. xxvi. 3.—Yea, what though you have been unwilling all your days till this very moment, unwilling to be gathered? Yet he who ſays, How oft would I have gathered you, and you would not? is now ſaying, If you would be gathered, I am here, and my power and grace is at your ſervice, for drawing you nearer.—Yea, what though you find much unwillingneſs and enmity this moment in your hearts againſt him; yet if you would be content that he break your enmity, and make you willing, O there is place, there is place in him for you to gather in to. Yea, what ſhall I ſay? Though you be as unwilling as ever you was, and your ill-will againſt him is ready to land you in the burning lake; yet know, O wretched enemy to God and Chriſt! he is calling you to come to him, ſaying, Whoſoever will, let him come. Oh! will you not be gathered? Why will you die? As I live, I have no pleaſure in your death; I have infinitely greater pleaſure in your gathering to Shiloh, in whom all my attributes are glorified and well-pleaſed. And if this call do at laſt kindle a ſecret wiſh and deſire in your ſoul, ſaying, that he would come and gather me! Behold his gathering arms are ſtretched out towards you, and you ſhall be as welcome to him, as ever any ſoul was, ſince the world began.—Well, is there ſuch a gathering-place for the people here, ſuch a gathering-houſe, with ſo many what though's written on the ſign of the houſe, or the face of the door, to invite all paſſengers, that are travelling to eternity, to come in, and be happy for ever? And ſhall there be no gathering of the people to Shiloh? May we hope, that divine power hath made ſome to be willing, and that they are either ſaying, Behold we come to thee, for thou art the Lord our God; or elſe, Lord, come and draw; come and gather, and get the glory to thy name for ever.

Having offered theſe motives and conſiderations; I ſhould next offer ſome directions. It is divine power only that does the buſineſs; and therefore, I ſhall only give you thoſe two directions, in caſe you would know how to manage, ſo as you may not be deceived in this matter. If I could help you to heaven, I think, I would deſire to do it; and, for your help and direction, in order to your right gathering to Shiloh, I would ſay to you,

1. Never ſatisfy yourſelves with gathering about him and his ordinances, without gathering to himſelf. Many, like the multitude in the goſpel, may gather about him, yea, ſo near as to preſs upon him, while there was but one poor woman, that was gathered to him, and touched him: Some body hath touched me, ſays Chriſt: why ſay the diſciples, the multitude preſs upon you; and what mean you, Lord, by that, Some-body hath touched me? Nay, but as one of the Fathers ſaid, Turba premit, fides tangit; "The multitude preſs, "but faith toucheth." Satisfy not yourſelves then, I ſay, with a gathering about him, unleſs you be gathered to him. People may gather about a tree to pluck the fruit thereof, but it is another thing to be gathered to it, ſo as either to become a branch, or have an intereſt in it; even ſo, may ſome people eat of the fruit of the tree of life, in reſpect of common providence, common graces, common influences; but it is another thing to have an intereſt in the tree, and union to it: ſo here, many may be gathered to ordinances, and even to ſolemn ordinances, and partake of the external privileges thereof; and yet, not having firſt gathered to the God of ordinances, nor having any intereſt in him, or union unto him, have no right conſequently to intermeddle with the childrens bread. O Sir! ſay you, that is a hard note, that caſts me all down again. Why, may the Lord himſelf bring down all falſe refuges: but in caſe it perplex any poor ſoul, that hath been ſitting under Chriſt's ſhadow at this occaſion, and his fruit hath been ſweet to their taſte, and they may think, that all they got, is but only the fruit, while they have no union to, or intereſt in the tree: Well then, ſay you, How ſhall one know if he only eats of the fruit, and hath no intereſt in the tree? In anſwer to which, I will endeavour to illuſtrate it by this plain ſimile; You know, when a man hath no intereſt in the tree of a garden, if he gets the fruit, he cares not what come of the tree, though the branches of it were all broken down: he loves the fruit, and takes it; but the tree is not his own, and therefore he hath no concern about it: but, the man that hath an intereſt in the tree, though he loves the fruit, yet he loves the tree better than the fruit; and therefore he would rather that people ſhould take away all the fruit from him, than break and deſtroy the branches of the tree; for he eſteems the tree better than all the fruit that grows upon it. The application thereof is eaſy; for, even ſo the hypocrite that eats of the fruit of the tree of life, as it were, but hath no intereſt in the tree; the fruit, viz. the frame, the enlargement, or the like, is all that he wants; the gifts and common graces he gets, is what he ſolaces himſelf withal; he reſts there, and ſits down ſatisfied, without Chriſt himſelf, or any true love to him, and unfeigned concern for his glory and intereſt: ſelf is upmoſt with him, and therefore he pleaſes himſelf with the fruit, and loves it more than the tree. But, the true believer, that is gathered to Chriſt, he loves the fruit indeed, and takes pleaſure in the communication: but the tree itſelf is above all things to him; and the fruit he taſted ſtill the more recommends the tree to him. O Chriſt's gifts are ſweet, but himſelf ſweeteſt of all! The believer's frame is like the frame of a picture; he is not taken up with the frame, but with the picture that is within the frame, even Chriſt, who is the picture of God, the image of the inviſible God. See, I ſay, that it be Chriſt himſelf, that you are gathered to.

2. Be ſtill about his hand, in the uſe of appointed means, but with a conſtant eye to divine power. Let means and ordinances be ſtill uſed: for, though, as they are your performances, they cannot be profitable; yet, as they are his ordinance, he may put a bleſſing in them. Therefore, be ſtill in the King's high-way, in the uſe of means; for, though the natural uſe of means, and God's ſaving grace, have no connexion; yet there is far leſs a connexion betwixt that grace, and the neglect of means. The poor beggar, that needs an alms from the king, goes to the king's high-way, where he paſſes; and ſurely he is nearer his purpoſe, than if he ſhould go to the top of a mountain, where the king never comes: ſo, be you ſtill in the uſe of means in the Lord's way; but reſt not there, leſt you be like one, that, upon pretence of ſeeking a treaſure on the other ſide of the river, ſhould come to the boat, which is the mean, and reſt there, without going further; why, he may thus loſe the treaſure for ever. In your uſe of the means, look beyond the means, and cry for almighty drawing power, without which it is ſimply impoſſible you can make one ſtep towards Shiloh. God knows, you can do nothing this way yourſelf, and he does not expect it of you, that you ſhould come to him in your own ſtrength; nay, if you eſſay to do ſo, you but affront him, who is the ſtrength of Iſrael; and ye diſparage his power, as if a creature, far leſs a filthy ſinful creature, dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, would act independently of him. O then, caſt yourſelf always into his almighty gathering arms, crying, O power, power, power of the eternal Spirit of God, come! — Cry for a powerful conviction of the Spirit, whereby you may ſee how far off you are from God and Chriſt: they that are gathered to him, are made to ſee how far they are ſeparate from him, and to ſay, "Lord, I "am lying in the arms of the devil, and I "know not how ſoon I may be in hell: O pity, "pity, of thy ſovereign mercy!" — Cry alſo for the powerful illumination of the Spirit, that you may ſee a God in Chriſt; not an abſolute God, ſitting on the throne of flaming juſtice, but on the mercy-ſeat, ſprinkled over with the juſtice-ſatisfying blood of the Lamb, from whence mercy does vent itſelf, to the higheſt honour, and greateſt glory of infinite juſtice. — Cry, in a word, for the powerful operation of the Spirit, the irreſiſtible, efficacious pull of his omnipotent arm: O long for a day of power, a gathering day! Many a black powerful hinderance and drawback you have: every luſt ſays, upon the matter, If I can get my will, he ſhall never be gathered to Shiloh; the devil ſays, If I can get my will, he ſhall never win to Chriſt; the world, and the cares of it, ſay the ſame; your graceleſs neighbours, and wicked companions, ſay the ſame: there is a ſtrong helliſh combination to hinder your coming to Shiloh. Yet, nevertheleſs, though all the intanglements of the world, all the corruptions of the heart, and all the devils in hell, ſhould join counſel together, to keep your ſoul back from Chriſt, one divine draught of the cord of love will make them all yield. Theſe are potent enemies, but here is an omnipotent God; they are mighty, but he is almighty.

O Sirs, cry, and continue to cry for his gathering power! and though you have been long ſeeking an omnipotent pull of divine grace, and, to your ſenſe, have not got it; yet, if you wait for it, cry for it, and be earneſtly ſollicitous to obtain it, it is a thouſand to one, if you miſs it: nay, it cannot be; for, he is a God of judgment, and bleſſed are all they that wait for him, Iſa. xxx. 18. Judgment here, is not judgment in oppoſition to mercy, but judgment in oppoſition to folly; that is, he is an infinitely wiſe God, who knows the beſt time of coming and paying his viſit; and becauſe he is a God of judgment, bleſſed are all they that wait for him. He hath long waited for you; O wait for him in his own way! And when he is ſtretching forth his arms towards you in this goſpel, offering to gather you; let your heart cry to him, ſaying, "Lord, thou who gathers the lambs with "thine arm, O do thou not only ſtretch forth "thine arms towards me, but claſp thine arms "about me; gather me, and I ſhall be gather-"ed." If you be brought to this, I would hope the good work were begun.

3*dly*, The third ſort, to whom I propoſed to direct my exhortation, was to believers, who ARE gathered to Shiloh. My exhortation to you is, that, through grace, you would gather more cloſly to Shiloh, than ever you have done, ſo as to be rooted in him, and abide in him, Col. ii. 7. John xv. 5. O cry for more and more of his gathering power and grace, to bring you nearer and nearer to him. More particularly,

1. Hath Shiloh come and gathered you to himſelf? Then, O live UPON him; for that is the end, for which you are gathered to him, Gal. ii. 20. that the life you live may be a life of faith upon the Son of God, who not only loved you, and gave himſelf for you, but gathered you alſo out of the ſtinking grave of ſin and miſery, wherein you was. You have need to live a life of dependence upon him; for all other things may ſoon fail you, and nothing in all the world may be left you, but himſelf. But, when the ſpider's web is ſwept down, yet you may ſee the houſe ſtanding ſure; even ſo, when the cob-webs of creature-confidences fail, faith will ſee a ſure foundation to rely upon; Though the fig-tree ſhould not bloſſom, nor fruit be found in the vine, etc. yet faith in exerciſe will induce a perſon to rejoice in the Lord, and be glad in the God of ſalvation. You will every day need to be living on him; for, as I noticed upon another occaſion, the veſſel that is full to-day, needs a new filling to-morrow; and the ſtomach that ſeemed to be ſatisfied juſt now, within a few hours will be empty and craving again: ſo here, your veſſel may ſoon be empty; but though the veſſel be empty, the fountain is full; and his power to help is a creating power, whereby he can command nothing in to a being.

2. Not only live on him, but live WITH him; let it appear, that you are gathered out of the world, by your living above the world, in the place where Shiloh is; If you be riſen with Chriſt, ſeek the things that are above, where Chriſt ſits at the right-hand of God, Col. iii. 1. Oh! how unſuitable is it for them who are gathered to Shiloh in heaven, not to have their converſation in heaven? What a pity is it, that they ſhould ſo much reſemble the bird, they call the lapwing, that hath a crown upon her head, and yet lives upon excrements? Hath the Lord crowned you with his loving-kindneſs, and yet you live upon the dung of this world? Hath he made you an heir to a kingdom, and yet you ly tumbling in the aſhes? Surely the believer that does not live above the world, he lives below himſelf.

3. Are you gathered unto Shiloh? Then, not only live on him, and live with him, but live TO him. For this cauſe alſo, did he gather you to him, that you might live to him, and to his glory and honour; You are not to live to yourſelves, but to him that died for you, and roſe again, 2 Cor. v. 15. In him there is a gathering of all gifts, and graces, and fulneſs, and all mediatorial offices, and divine qualifications, for your uſe and behoof; and, to him, O believer, ſhould be the gathering of all the powers and faculties of your ſoul, that you may glorify and honour him. — O let the gathering of your deſires and delights be to him, who is the Deſire of all nations, and the Delight of all the ſaints and angels in heaven! — Let the gathering of your thoughts and meditations be to him, and the meditation of his name will be ſweet! — O let the gathering of your hearts and affections be to him; for, he is altogether lovely. — Let the gathering of your prayers and praiſes be to him. Begging and bleſſing ſhould go together; for you will have occaſion to beg from him as long as you are out of heaven; and you will have reaſon to bleſs him as long as you are out of hell. Though you that are gathered to him have no reaſon to fear hell, For there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt; yet you have always reaſon to bleſs, that you have eſcaped it. — In a word, let the gathering of your words and actions be to him, ſo as you may put honour upon him, before the world, by the whole tenor of your talk and walk, that your neighbours may take notice of it, that you have been with Jeſus, and that you are gathered to him: and let the gathering of your ſervices and ſacrifice be to him, ſaying, What ſhall I render to the Lord, for all his benefits towards me? O render your humble ſervice to him, ſaying, Truly I am thy ſervant, thou haſt looſed my bands. Render him the love of your hearts, the calves of your lips, and the obedience of your life.—Thus are you to live to him.

4. Are you gathered to Shiloh? O then, endeavour to gather OTHERS to him! See if you can get all that are in your family to come to Shiloh with you; ſaying with Joſhua, As for me, and my houſe, we will ſerve the Lord, whatever others do, Joſh. xxiv. 15. O have you been gathered to Chriſt? and will you be careleſs though your friends, your children, be gathered to the devil? O hath Chriſt brought you to himſelf, and will he bring you to glory, and gather you to heaven? and will you be eaſy, though all about you be gathered unto hell? No, no; that cannot be your diſpoſition, if you be a believer indeed. If you be content in your lifetime to ſerve him, you will ſtudy to your power, that others may do the like. And, this is the way to make the love of Chriſt continue in the world; for, when you teach your neighbours, your ſervants, your children, the way of the Lord, they, following your example, may teach their children too; and this will go from generation to generation, ſo as generations to come may praiſe the Lord; or, at leaſt, it will not fail on your part. Oh! how is it to be regrated, that few come to Chriſt! and of the few that come, how few do ſhew their love, in endeavouring to bring others to him? Therefore, O let this be amended, and endeavour, in the place where you dwell, and the ſtation you are in providence placed into, that, by your holy converſation, others may be gathered unto Shiloh too.

5. Are you gathered? O let not believers, that are gathered to Shiloh, forget their gathering together for Chriſtian-fellowſhip and prayer; Heb. x. 24, 25. Let us conſider one another, to provoke unto love, and to good works; not forſaking the aſſembling ourſelves together, as the manner of ſome is, but exhorting one another, and ſo much the more, as you ſee the day approaching. The wicked, that are to be gathered to the burning Tophet, are making ſpeed in ſinful ways, and gathering in clubs and cabals, to hearten and harden one another: and, O ſhall not the godly gather together, to exhort and excite one another in the way to heaven; as iron ſharpens iron, ſo does the holy gathering of ſaints uſe to ſharpen the edge of their ſpirits in the Lord's way. But ſince fellowſhip-meetings have been deſerted, many profeſſors are blunted and ruſted; ſeveral Chriſtian ſocieties are broken and evaniſhed, even at a time, when they that fear the Lord ſhould ſpeak often one to another in ſpiritual conferences. O! if you be gathered unto Shiloh, let your zeal for him appear, in reſtoring and reviving theſe Chriſtian gatherings in a regular manner; and pray, that the devil's ſcattering wind that he hath raiſed in our day, for ſeparating and dividing miniſters and Chriſtians from one another, may be laid.

6. To add no more, and to encourage you in the whole of your Chriſtian courſe, O you, that through grace have been gathered to Shiloh, take home the comfort that belongs to your gathered ſtate.—As to theſe that are yet in a diſtant ſtate, ſeparate from the Lord Jeſus, we have little comfort to offer, if you abide there; for, in the Lord's time, you will be gathered to the grave, and after that, you will be gathered before the tribunal of God, to receive the dreadful ſentence, Depart from me, ye curſed; and, in all appearance, ſome here will be gathered before that awful tribunal, before they be gathered together here again: it is more than probable, we are not all to meet again in this manner, till we meet before the fiery bench of the glorious Judge; and if you be not gathered to him, as an amiable Jeſus now, you muſt be gathered to him as a terrible Judge then. And, Oh! that the thoughts of this would excite poor ſouls to think of gathering to Shiloh before they part, that they may part with God's bleſſing, and not under his heavy curſe!—But, as to you that have been gathered unto Chriſt, I would have you know, that God allows you ſtrong conſolation. You having fled for refuge to the hope ſet before you, you may rejoice in the hope of the glory of God, that the joy of the Lord may be your ſtrength, in the whole of your work and warfare, as you go through the wilderneſs. You may rejoice in this, that as your hearts are gathered unto Shiloh now, ſo your happieſt gathering time is but coming; for he that hath begun to gather you as ſtones for the ſpiritual building, will never leave the work, till the building be completed, with ſhoutings of, Grace, grace unto it. He will never give over gathering you, till you be completely happy; from time to time the work will be advanced, by the means of his word and ordinances, till the conſummation of the work in glory; for he hath appointed a goſpel-miniſtry for the perfecting of the ſaints, for the edifying the body of Chriſt, till they all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt, Eph. iv. 12, 13. He hath appointed theſe three fearful things, death, judgment, and eternity, to be three happy gatherings for you; the initial gathering being over, by your getting in to Chriſt, after your progreſſive gathering is come to a cloſe, in your having finiſhed your courſe, and fought the good fight of faith, your glorious and conſummate gathering will take place: the day of death will be the glorious commencement of it, and eternity will be the everlaſting continuation of it. The firſt coming of Shiloh hath uſhered in a gracious gathering; his ſecond coming will produce a glorious gathering; but of theſe gathering ſeaſons, I formerly ſpoke at large †; I only ſay therefore, that then, O believer, then ſhall you be for ever with the Lord; and it is for this reaſon you are now gathered to him, that there you may be for ever with him: and ſo ſure as you are gathered to him in time, ſo ſure ſhall you be with him through eternity; not only for ever with the patriarchs, and prophets, and apoſtles; not only for ever with angels and archangels; not only for ever with ſaints and ſeraphims; but for ever with the Lord; for none of theſe can make a heaven without him. Chriſt himſelf will be the centre of the aſſembly, and heart of the meeting: and though now you are but with him for a ſtart, and he is is with you but for a moment, and so your communion with him is but in transient glances of his glory; it may be just now you are with him in the banquetting-house, but instantly you are, as it were, at the back of the door: it is only for a little, but then for ever; and it is but a little of him that you have for a little while; yet then, O then, shall you be for ever with the Lord; wherefore comfort one another with these words, 1 Thess. iv. 18. Know, that being gathered to him on earth, you shall be gathered to him in heaven; and being gathered in grace, you shall be gathered in glory: for all the promises of grace and glory are gathered in him, and you being gathered to him, are in him also, in whom all the promises are Yea and Amen.

And, now this gathering of the people here is to part; but, O happy parting, to these who can date their first or farther gathering to Shiloh from their gathering to Carnock! For, part with whom you will, Christ and you shall never part again; whatever clouds may be in your sky, yet your sun is risen, and will never set. But the most part of you here were never yet gathered to Shiloh: and, oh! how can you find it in your heart to go away without him, and without so much as a desire after him, who is the Desire of all nations! For my own part, I cannot think of your going away in such a case. Alas! shall he have it to say, I would have gathered you, as a hen does her chickens under her wings, but you would not! Oh! wherefore did you gather to this place, if you would not be gathered to Shiloh? And if you be more willing to be gone, than willing to be gathered, wo is me, that my text will be no more but a witness against you upon Carnock green, that you would not; and, that the devil, and the world, and your lusts were more desirable to you; and you had more heart to be gathered to them, than to be gathered to Shiloh. Oh then, Sirs, heartless parting, while you are content to part with Shiloh for ever, rather than to part with a base lust, or a black devil! If that be not your choice, then let your heart say, in the sight of the living God if you can, Lord, I think I would be gathered, and would rather choose to die upon the spot, than not to be gathered unto Shiloh; and, my soul could wish, that all my dearest lusts were buried in this green, never to rise again, and that Christ might have my heart for ever, in room of them all. Why, man, can you say that to the heart-searching God? Then, poor soul, let me desire you to take the first convenient closet or corner you can get, and there tell him this over again more solemnly; and, at the same time, bless him that ever Shiloh came to you, and that ever you felt the virtue of this promise, that, That to him shall the gathering of the people be.

SERMON XXVIII,–XXXI.

The Main Question of the Gospel Catechism, What think ye of Christ? *

Matth. xxii. 42. What think ye of Christ?

My friends, if you have any regard to the voice of the Son of God, speaking to you in this text, then, to be sure, the application of it is begun, before ever we come to the explication of it. And, indeed, if the Lord himself would open and apply it to you, you would see more in it than we can tell you. Perhaps many here, when the minister reads his text, turn up their Bibles, and put a mark upon the place of scripture: very well; but then they think there is the minister's text, and so no more of it; as if it were only the minister's concern, or at most, that it is only the minister's business to speak to his text, and their business to hear what he says. But, my friends, you would know, that you have here more than a text, and it is my business, at the time, not only to read you a text, but to ask you a question; and I cannot resume my text without proposing it, What think ye of Christ? And it is your business, not only to hear seriously what is said, but to answer solemnly before God what is asked, namely, What think ye of Christ? If you take it up simply as my text, you will think yourselves little concerned with it; but if you apprehend it as Christ's question to you, then your concern is great. It is not my question only; but, as Christ proposed it to the Pharisees here; so, your hearing it repeated to you in Christ's name, and from his word, makes it his question to you, What think ye of Christ?

At such solemnities as this, you have occasion to hear much of Christ; but now the question is, What think ye of Christ, of whom you hear so much? Many, the more they hear of Christ, the less they think of him; like Israel, when they had the manna so plentifully rained down about their tent doors, they thought very little of it. But, wo will be to you, who hear much of Christ, and yet think little or nothing of him: If any man love not our Lord Jesus Christ, says the apostle, if he hath no esteem of him, let him be Anathema Maranatha: [i. e. accursed until our Lord come.] If you have the sacramental supper in view, you know Christ hath ordered you to search and try before-hand, saying, Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat: and now, if you would examine to purpose, I cannot see a more short and substantial question in all the Bible, to try yourselves by, than this is, What think ye of Christ?

* This subject was the substance of four sermons, preached at Portmoak, etc. on sacramental occasions, August 22d, 1725. and hath undergone five editions.

Solomon

Solomon ſays, Prov. xxiii. 7. As a man thinketh in his heart, ſo is he; where he declares the man's ſtate to be according as the thoughts of his heart go. Now, ſo it is here; truly, according as you think in your heart, eſpecially concerning Chriſt, ſo are you, and ſo is your ſtate in God's ſight: according as you think highly and duly of Chriſt or not, ſo are you either a gracious or a graceleſs man; either a believer or unbeliever; either a man fit to go to a communion-table or not; and therefore enquire into it, What think ye of Chriſt? The trial here comes to a narrow point, wherein God only can be the witneſs, who will be the judge. You may deceive men with your words and works, which is all we have to know you by: but here you are called to try yourſelves by your thoughts, before that God that ſearches the heart, and ſees the thought; What think ye of Chriſt?

The occaſion of Chriſt's propounding this queſtion, was this. The Phariſees had propoſed ſeveral queſtions to him concerning the law, by which they thought to have expoſed him, while they did but expoſe themſelves; particularly from ver. 15. and downward, thinking to intangle him, They ſent forth their diſciples with the Herodians, ſaying, Maſter, what thinkeſt thou? Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæſar, or not? What is lawful? or, what ſays the law concerning this? Chriſt anſwers the queſtion to their aſtoniſhment and confuſion.—Again, from ver. 23. and downward, the Sadducees, who denied the reſurrection, came to him with a queſtion on that head; and they ſtart a difficulty out of the law of Moſes, which they thought was irreconcilable with the doctrine of the reſurrection: but Chriſt anſwers that alſo, and puts them to ſilence.—Again, afterwards, from ver. 34. and downward, the Phariſees finding that the Sadducees were ſilenced by him, they gather together their forces to puzzle and tempt him; and one of them, that was a lawyer, comes with another queſtion to him, ſaying, Maſter, what is the great commandment in the law? Now, they having aſked ſo many queſtions at him, and he having anſwered them all, it was time for him to aſk them a queſtion; and he does it while they are gathered together in confederacy againſt him; though their forces were unite, and every one preſent to help another, yet he puzzles them; for God delights to baffle his adverſaries, and conquer his enemies, when they think themſelves ſtrongeſt, and have all the advantages they can deſire. Now, Chriſt aſked them a queſtion, which they could eaſily anſwer: it was a queſtion in their own catechiſm; What think ye of Chriſt? And, Whoſe Son is he? They anſwer truly according to ſcripture, that he was the Son of David. This they were taught, from Pſal. lxxxix. 35. and ſeveral other places, ſhewing, that the Meſſias was to be the ſeed of David, the rod out of the ſtem of Jeſſe. But now Chriſt ſtarts a difficulty upon their anſwer, which they could not eaſily ſolve; nay, which ſilenced them, and all that ſought occaſion againſt him, ver. 43, 44, 45. If Chriſt be David's Son, how then is he David's Lord? Chriſt did not hereby intend to enſnare them as they did him, but to inſtruct them in a neceſſary truth which they were to believe, namely, that the expected Meſſiah is God as well as man; David's Lord as well as David's Son; and ſo both the root and offſpring of David, Rev. xxii. 15. Now herein they were puzzled, and put to ſilence.

Many are proud of their knowledge, becauſe they can anſwer ſome queſtions of their catechiſms, as the Phariſees here did in general; but yet they have reaſon to be aſhamed of their ignorance: for when the queſtion is opened up, they cannot confirm the truth which they affirm, nor reconcile one truth with another, no more than the Phariſees here could; by which it was evident, that though they anſwered, yet they did not underſtand this queſtion, which he propoſed, 1. More generally, What think ye of Chriſt the Meſſias? 2. More particularly, Whoſe Son is he? It is the queſtion, as propoſed in general, that I confine myſelf unto, yet not excluding the other branch of, as the ſubject may bring it in. When Chriſt propoſed this queſtion to the Phariſees, What think ye of Chriſt? no doubt they reckoned their thoughts of the Meſſias were very ſound and right every way, while they thought he was the Son of David; but, like the damnable deluded Arian doctors of our day, they did not think ſo highly of him, as to apprehend him to be the Son of God; they did not think ſo honourably of him, as to own his being the ſupreme God, equal with the Father; for all their acquired and imagined knowledge, there was more in that queſtion than they underſtood, What think ye of Chriſt?

The Phariſees had aſked Chriſt ſeveral queſtions concerning the law, and the great precept of the law; and now it was fit that Chriſt ſhould aſk them a queſtion concerning the great promiſe of the goſpel: they were ſo taken up with the law, they had no thought of the goſpel; they thought ſo much of Moſes, that they had no thought of Chriſt; therefore ſays he, What think ye of Chriſt? Many are ſo full of the law, that they forget him, who is the end of the law for righteouſneſs, to every one that believeth. Here is a queſtion to check the pride of legaliſts, What think ye of Chriſt? There is a depth in every place of ſcripture, which, though it ſeems to be very plain to the carnal eye, yet the ſpiritual depth thereof cannot be ſounded without the help of the Spirit of God: there is alſo a great depth in this queſtion; angels cannot ſound the depth thereof, they pry into it, and cannot think enough of Chriſt; they can never think too much of him: and what ſhall men ſay in anſwer to it, What think ye of Chriſt?

To divide this text too critically, would, I ſuppoſe, be the way to confuſe it; but I think every word hath an emphaſis therein.

1. There is an emphaſis in the interrogative particle What; WHAT think ye of Chriſt? what place do you give him? what value do you put upon him? what grandeur and glory do you aſcribe unto him? what eſteem have you of him? And ſo,

2. There is an emphaſis in the verb think: ſome think not of him at all, God and Chriſt is not in all their thoughts; ſome think meanly, ſome think baſely, ſome think diſhonourably, ſome think hardly of him: but what think ye? what is your judgment of Chriſt? what is your opinion of him? what is your ſentiment of him? what is your apprehenſion of him? how ſtand you affected towards him? and what conſideration have you of him?

3. There is an emphaſis in the pronoun ye; What think YE of Chriſt? ye Phariſees and Sadducees; What think YE of Chriſt? Ye that are ſo buſy in ſtarting queſtions about the law, What think ye of Chriſt, the end of the law? Ye legaliſts and self-righteous persons, What think ye of Christ? Yea, though it was put to the Pharisees in particular, yet it concerns all in general. The trying question that is proposed for the conviction of hypocrites, and to find them out, is useful for the consolation and confirmation of believers, and for discovering their uprightness. While the daughters of Jerusalem think no more of Christ than of another beloved, saying, What is thy beloved more than another? the spouse of Christ thinks him to be the Chief among ten thousands. Therefore it comes to you all, What think ye of Christ, believers and unbelievers? Surely to them that believe he is precious.

4. There is an emphasis in the object or matter of the question, Christ; What think ye of CHRIST; what think ye of the Messias? what think ye of the Anointed of God, the Christ of God? It is remarkable, Christ says not here, What think ye of ME? but, what think ye of CHRIST? that is, God's Anointed, and the Messias promised to the fathers: and hereby it is intimate to us, that as Christ loves to magnify his office, as the Sent, and Sealed, and Anointed of God; so we cannot have right and becoming thoughts of him, unless we apprehend him in his saving offices, to which he is authorized of the Father: and so, when he says not, What think ye of ME? but, What think ye of CHRIST? He does not simply commend himself, but his Father also, who anointed him to that office; and himself, bearing his Father's commission, and invested with his authority to save sinners, What think ye of Christ? Here is the proper object of the esteem of rational creatures, and especially mankind sinners, on whom their thoughts ought to be terminate. It is not, what think ye of God absolutely considered? for, God out of Christ is a consuming fire. It is not, what think ye of Moses? You magnify Moses and the law; but, A greater than Moses is here, even he by whom the law is magnified and made honourable. It is not, what think ye of the ministers and their sermons? Oh! they are nothing but the image of death without him! but the question is, What think ye of Christ? The word itself is but a dead letter without Christ. It is a remarkable saying that Christ hath to the same purpose, John v. 39, 40. Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they that testify of me: and ye will not come to me that ye might have life. You think you have eternal life in the scripture, but the scripture testifies of me; yet ye will not come to me, though the scripture testifies that eternal life is only to be had in me. Christ is the true God and eternal life, 1 John v. 20. And this is the record, that God hath given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son, ver. 11. Seeing, then, that the scripture testifies of Christ, that eternal life is in him; in vain do men think to have eternal life, even in the scripture, while they will not come to Christ, that they may have life. People may think respectfully of the scripture, and yet perish in their ignorance, and die in a delusion, while they do not think respectfully of Christ, in a suitableness to the testimony that the scripture gives of him; therefore the great question is still, What think ye of Christ?

OBSERV. That the great question of the Christian catechism, by which people are to try themselves, is this, WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?

Here, you see, CHRIST, who is the catechist, that puts the question, is also the catechism, the matter of the question. It is to this same purpose that Christ demands an answer to this question, both with respect to the people in general, what they thought of Christ; and also with respect to the disciples themselves, what they thought of him, Luke ix. 18, 19, 20. Whom say the people that I am? What is the sentiment and opinion of the people about Christ? It is answered for the people, that some took him for John the Baptist, some for Elias, some for one of the old prophets: they had an esteem of Christ, but not according to his worth and excellency, his grandeur and glory. Well, but says Christ to his disciples, Whom say ye that I am? What is your thought and judgment? Peter answers, in the name of the rest, saying, Thou are the Christ of God. Believers only can answer this question to purpose, What think ye of Christ?

The method which I would here essay to prosecute, as the Lord may assist, shall be the following, viz.

I. To premise some general remarks for clearing of this doctrine.
II. To shew what is the import of this question in the several parts thereof.
III. Offer some reasons of the doctrine, shewing why this is the leading and trying question in the Christian catechism.
IV. Deduce some inferences, and so make application of the point, for informing of our minds, trying of our state, and directing of our thoughts and affections concerning Christ.

I. The first head proposed is, To offer some general remarks for clearing of the doctrine.

1. Remark, "That man is a thoughtful, or "a thinking creature." God created him with a thinking faculty, capable of discursive thought and ratiocination; capable of rational cogitation concerning God, and spiritual objects, and celestial things; which beasts, that have some sort of thoughts, yet are not capable of. I need not insist upon this; for some of you know, that even Pagan philosophers are acquaint with this, and that heathen poets have inferred it from the very frame and structure of the human body; as Ovid.

Pronaque cum spectant animalia cætera terram,
Os homini sublime dedit: Cœlumque tueri
Jussit, & erectos ad sidera tollere vultus.*
METAM. lib. i. fab. 2.

Man was endowed above beasts with a faculty capable of celestial contemplation. It is peculiar to the creatures called MEN and ANGELS, to think of God, and to think of Christ; other creatures are not capable of such thoughts: this is plainly supposed in this question, What think ye of Christ?

2. Remark, "That man's thoughts, together "with all the faculties and powers of his soul, "have got such a dash by the fall of Adam, "that they were set a wavering after other "objects, besides God the chief good: yea, the "fall in a manner dashed out his brains; and "his head being broken, God went out of his "head, and the creature came in." Since that time, he could never have a right thought of God in his head: yea, God is not in all his thoughts;

* i. e. "While other animals look downwards upon the earth, the Creator gave man a lofty face; and ordered him to look to heaven, "and lift his countenance upright towards the stars."

innumerable other things fill up the room which God ſhould have. He created man upright, but he hath found out many inventions, inſomuch that now every imagination of the thoughts of his heart is only evil continually, Gen. vi. 5. The world, and the luſts thereof, do monopolize and ingroſs all the thoughts of the children of men, and God is thruſt out of them; there is no room for God, or the Son of God. This wrong ſett of the thoughts is alſo here ſuppoſed in the queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt?

3. Remark, "That whatever confuſed thoughts, "and dark apprehenſions men may naturally "have, now in their fallen ſtate, concerning "God and his law, like the confuſed chaos, "Gen. i. 2. Without form and void, and darkneſs "upon the face of the deep; yet thoughts of Chriſt, "or of God in Chriſt, are what no man could "ever have had in the leaſt glimmering idea "by nature, without divine goſpel-revelation." Adam fallen retained ſome awful and terrible thoughts of God; but no thought could he ever have had of Chriſt, unleſs God had revealed him as the ſeed of the woman that was to bruiſe the head of the ſerpent. This is the myſtery that was hid from ages and generations: the great myſtery of godlineſs, God manifeſted in the fleſh; God in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelf, could not enter into our thoughts. Some natural impreſſions men have of God as a lawgiver, ſtanding upon terms of obedience with them, according to the firſt covenant, [namely, of works,] made with the firſt Adam; but God in Chriſt, as the end of the law for righteouſneſs, and fulfilling the righteouſneſs of the law in the ſinner's room, is ſuch a hidden myſtery, ſo far above the natural thoughts of man, that even where the objective revelation of this myſtery is made, without the ſubjective, internal, ſaving illumination in the knowledge thereof, men cannot have or entertain any due apprehenſions of it, but remain doting upon their legal dreams and imaginations concerning God, as in the old covenant-relation to them. This was evident in the Phariſees here, notwithſtanding of the goſpel-light they had both from the Old-Teſtament prophecies and promiſes of Chriſt, and from the rays of the Sun of righteouſneſs himſelf, now ariſen among them; ſtill they were doting upon the law, and had ſome dark thoughts of God with relation thereto; therefore Chriſt, to direct their thoughts in the only way to God, he leads them to himſelf. And as the diſciples themſelves, being but partly enlightened herein, need to be directed in their faith and ſpiritual thoughts of God, that they be not legal, terminating upon God abſolutely, but evangelical upon Chriſt, or God in him, John xiv. 1. Ye believe in God, believe alſo in me; ſo much more do blind Phariſees need to be directed to the right road, as here our Lord does. Ye think of God, but, What think ye of Chriſt?

4. Remark, "When Chriſt is revealed, people "may think of him, and yet think amiſs, un"leſs their thoughts be ſpiritualized by a ſu"pernatural change of the mind, and ſaving "illumination of their underſtanding in the "knowledge of Chriſt." Thoughts may be conſidered as either rational and ſpeculative, which is juſt the work of the brain, and lies only in a bare theory of divine things; or, as practical and ſpiritually operative, which does not reſt in the head, but affects the heart, and ſets the affections in motion towards divine things, and raiſes the ſpiritual eſtimation thereof. Now, whatever thoughts of Chriſt the natural man may have in the former ſenſe, yet no ſuitable thoughts of Chriſt can he have in the latter ſenſe, till a ſupernatural change be wrought by ſaving illumination. It is as impoſſible in the black ſtate of nature to think upon Chriſt, or ſpiritual things, in a ſpiritual manner, as it is for a man that was born blind to judge of colours, or to be taken up with their beauty and luſtre; The natural man receives not the things of God, they are fooliſhneſs unto him, neither can he know them, for they are ſpiritually diſcerned, 1 Cor. ii. 14. This diſcerning he cannot have, till he be tranſlated out of darkneſs to God's marvellous light, and till the God, who commanded light to ſhine out of darkneſs, ſhine into his heart, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, 2 Cor. iv. 6. People then may think of Chriſt, and yet think amiſs, without this ſaving illumination. This is alſo ſuppoſed here in the queſtion; for the Phariſees did not want ſome thoughts of Chriſt the Meſſias, and partly right thoughts too upon the matter, while they thought he was the Son of David; yet they were ſo far from being right thoughts of Chriſt, as God-man, and as to the manner of thinking of him, that they had no due eſteem of the true Chriſt; nay, He was deſpiſed and rejected of them, as a root out of a dry ground, and as having no form or comelineſs, Iſa. ii. 3. And thus he is ſtill undervalued by multitudes, who yet judge they have right enough thoughts of Chriſt; they think of him, but think amiſs: and therefore the queſtion is not merely concerning the act of thinking, but the quality thereof; it is not, have you any thoughts of Chriſt; do you ever think of him? but it is, What think ye of him?

5. Remark, "That man's thoughts are with"in God's juriſdiction, and under his autho"rity." The commands of God extend not only to the outward, but the inward man of the heart, and conſequently further than ever any earthly command could go: where was there ever a monarch that could give out ſuch laws, as would bind the heart and thoughts of men? If any mortal ſhould make a law, that his ſubjects ſhould not dare, upon their peril, to welcome a traiterous thought againſt his royal perſon, otherwiſe he would be avenged upon them; really ſuch an one would deſerve to be laughed at for his pride and folly, more than Caligula, who threatened the air, if it durſt rain when he was at his paſtime, who yet durſt not look upon the air when it thundered. It were the height of madneſs, for any crowned head in the world, or potentate on earth, ſo far to forfeit their reaſon, as to think, that the thoughts of mens hearts were within their territories or juriſdiction: but behold, they are all under the authority of God; for his name is Καρδιογνώστης, the Searcher of the heart, Acts i. 24. and the Trier of the reins of the children of men. Think not that thoughts are free, any more than your words or actions before God. It is his prerogative to lay hands upon the inner man, and to judge the ſecrets of men by Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. ii. 16. who is here the catechiſt, putting the queſtion to you; and he is the fitteſt hand, for he knows what way your thoughts are running: he is the witneſs, and will be the judge of your thoughts, which are all under his juriſdiction. Therefore fore it is his unqueſtionable right, to call you to an account of your thoughts; thoughts are as viſible and evident as actions to him; Heb. iv. 12. 13. The Word of God, [the eſſential Word, the Word that was made fleſh,] is quick and powerful, and ſharper than any two-edged ſword, piercing even to the dividing aſunder of ſoul and ſpirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart; neither is there any creature that is not manifeſt in his ſight: but all things are naked, and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do. He knows our thoughts afar off, even before we conceive them; and thoughts are actions before him: heart-thoughts are heart-acts, and real deeds in his ſight; the adulterous thought, is adultery before him, and will be judged as ſuch; the covetous thought, is idolatry before him; the malicious thought, is murder; and the unbelieving thought, is unbelief; the contemning thought of Chriſt, is contempt itſelf: he is an infinite Spirit, that ſees your thoughts better than men ſee your actions; and therefore anſwer for your thoughts to him. What think ye of Chriſt?

6. Remark, "That as men may expect to be "catechiſed and examined of God, with reſpect "to their thoughts, as well as their actions, "ſo eſpecially concerning their thoughts of "Chriſt." And as God will judge us by the thoughts we have of Chriſt, ſo we ought to try and judge ourſelves by this rule; for as our thoughts are, ſo are we; yea, God's thoughts of us are according to our thoughts of Chriſt. If we think nothing of Chriſt, God thinks nothing of us; if we think highly of Chriſt, God thinks highly of us in him: for, as God's thoughts of Chriſt are very high and honourable, he being the Father's darling and delight, Iſa. xlii. 5.; ſo, when our thoughts of Chriſt, in ſome meaſure, agree with God's thoughts of him, and we think highly and honourably of him, as God does; ſurely it is evident, that we have the Spirit of God; and that as God is well-pleaſed with Chriſt, ſo he is well-pleaſed with us in him. Now, if our thoughts and hearts condemn us in this matter, God is greater than our hearts, and knows all things; but if our hearts and thoughts condemn us not, then we have confidence towards God, 1 John iii. 20, 21. It is true, the natural conſcience of men, and their thoughts, may accuſe or excuſe, and ſo condemn or juſtify them, according as they do good or evil, Rom. ii. 15.; and to be thus condemned and juſtified, is no evidence of the man's ſtate before God; for this only ſhews the work of the law, written in our hearts by nature, even the covenant of works, which ſays, That the doer of the law ſhall be juſtified, ver. 13. and the breaker of the law condemned. Theſe are ſome of the beams of nature's light; all men may find themſelves condemned here, and they that think themſelves juſtified here before God, by their good deeds, they but diſcover their ignorance of the law, which condemns all vain and evil thoughts, as well as evil deeds; and therefore no man can have his heart and thoughts juſtifying him before God, nor a good conſcience or confidence towards God, till once he come to think duly of Chriſt, from whom the law hath got full ſatisfaction to all its commands and demands, and by whoſe blood the fiery law is diſtinguiſhed: the conſcience being ſprinkled with that blood, and ſo purged from dead legal works to ſerve the living God, the man hath confidence towards God, according to the meaſure of his faith, and regular thoughts of Chriſt. The more a man thinks upon the law, the more his thoughts condemn him, if he underſtood the ſpirituality of the law: but, the more he thinks of Chriſt, as the end of the law for righteouſneſs, the more will his thoughts and conſcience ſmile upon him, and give him confidence towards God; for, we have boldneſs to enter into the holieſt, and to come to a holy God, by the blood of Jeſus, Heb. x. 19. They that think much of themſelves, and think little or nothing of Chriſt, they are leaſt in the kingdom of heaven; yea, they are not of that kingdom at all; they deſpiſe Chriſt, and God deſpiſes them: but they that think little of themſelves, or think nothing of themſelves, but think much of Chriſt, and think every way highly and honourably of him, they are great in the kingdom of God; Chriſt is great in their eye, and they are great in God's eye, being accepted in the Beloved: therefore, the great queſtion is, What think ye of Chriſt?

II. The ſecond head propoſed, was, To ſhew the import of this queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? That people may not deceive themſelves with paſſing thoughts they may have of Chriſt, I would more cloſely open up the meaning and import of the queſtion; and this being the main head upon the doctrinal part, we muſt explain the ſeveral branches of the queſtion, and ſo ſhew the import of it. 1. Objectively, with reſpect to the object, CHRIST. 2. Actively, with reſpect to the act of thinking. 3. Formally, with reſpect to the quality of the act, what ſort of a thought it is; What think ye of him? 4. Subjectively, with reſpect to the perſons that are the ſubjects, ye; What think YE of Chriſt?

1*ſt*, Then, I am to conſider the import of this queſtion, with reſpect to the object, or matter of our thoughts, namely, CHRIST: What think ye of Chriſt? And here I own it is impoſſible for me to go through all that I thought might be ſaid here: there are ſo many things in Chriſt, that I found to be the matter of the queſtion, he being all in all, and all the fulneſs of the Godhead being in him, that before ever I was aware, there were more than an hundred queſtions occurred to me, that might be put upon this one particular; and therefore I found a neceſſity of reſtricting myſelf. And though, if time allow, in the application I may, through grace, dilate upon ſome of theſe; yet at preſent I ſhall confine myſelf to what I judge preciſely to be the ſcope of the text and context, and the intent of the Spirit of God in this queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? That is, 1. What think ye of his righteouſneſs? 2. What think ye of his pedigree? 3. What think ye of his perſon? 4. What think ye of his anointing? Theſe four, I ſuppoſe, we will find as the ſpecial import of the queſtion here.

[1.] What think ye of his righteouſneſs? This I place firſt, becauſe I judge, from what goes before, as the occaſion of this queſtion, that the great deſign of Chriſt therein was to lead off theſe ſelf-righteous Phariſees from the righteouſneſs of works and of the law, concerning which all their queſtions were put to him, and to lead them to another righteouſneſs, even to himſelf as the Lord their righteouſneſs, the end of the law. As if he had ſaid, You think to be juſtified by the deeds of the law; but, how is that poſſible, ſeeing by the law is the knowledge knowledge of ſin? Rom. iii. 20. If ye will ſtand cloſs to theſe old-covenant terms with God, then let the law itſelf catechiſe you. Where is your righteouſneſs of nature and practice, that the law requires? Where is your righteouſneſs of thought, word, and deed, that it requires? Where is your righteouſneſs of affection and action, that it requires? Where is your perfect, perſonal, and perpetual obedience; your righteouſneſs internal in heart, external in life, and eternal in duration, which the law requires? for, Curſed is every one that continues not in all things written in the book of the law to do them, Gal. iii. 10. The law will tell you, that though you keep it wholly, and yet offend in one point, you are guilty of all, James ii. 20. Now, is there no point wrong in your ſtate, nature, heart, or thought all your days, not to ſpeak of your words and actions? If there be, then you are guilty of all; and ſeeing by the law is the knowledge thus of your ſin and guilt, how can you be juſtified by the law? Can that holy righteous law pronounce you juſt and righteous? No, no; in vain do you think of righteouſneſs by the law: therefore, what think ye of Chriſt the Meſſias, who is called, JEHOVAH-TSIDKENU; the Lord our righteouſneſs, Jer. xxiii. 6. It is he that came to fulfil the righteouſneſs of the law in his own perſon, really and actively, that the righteouſneſs of the law might be fulfilled in us, imputatively and paſſively, Rom. viii. 4. Is not this the only righteouſneſs that magnifies the law and makes it honourable? You magnify your own righteouſneſs, which does but diſgrace and diſhonour the law; but, what think ye of Chriſt? Do you magnify and honour him, as the Lord the righteouſneſs? Ought not you to magnify that righteouſneſs that magnifies the law, ſeeing it is more than an angelical righteouſneſs? It is not the righteouſneſs of a man only, or of David's ſon; but the righteouſneſs of God, and of David's Lord. If you think no more of Chriſt but that he is David's ſon, no wonder then you be relying upon and following after the law, and a poor pitiful righteouſneſs of your own; you have never ſeen the glory of Chriſt's righteouſneſs: but if you think duly of Chriſt, you will ſee him to be the LORD JEHOVAH, and his righteouſneſs to be a glorious divine righteouſneſs, ſo as you will count all things but loſs and dung for the excellency of the knowledge of him, and to be found in him, not having your own righteouſneſs that is after the law, but the righteouſneſs which is of God in Chriſt by faith, Phil. ii. 8, 9. Let all your queſtions about the law then, might Chriſt ſay, give way to this great queſtion, what think ye of Chriſt, and his law-biding righteouſneſs? Your righteouſneſs will not abide the firſt fire of the law when it comes to be diſcharged againſt you, and to exact obedience and ſatisfaction; but Chriſt's obedience and death anſwers the whole charge of its precept and ſanction both to the full: therefore, What think ye of Chriſt? and what think ye of his righteouſneſs? This is the firſt thing imported in this queſtion, as it ſtands here.

[2.] What think ye of his pedigree? That this is imported in the queſtion, appears from the connexion alſo, Whoſe ſon is he? What think ye of his pedigree? They thought it was eaſy to anſwer that queſtion, by ſaying only, He is David's ſon. They might have known it was not ſo eaſy to anſwer that queſtion, if they had conſidered the queſtion of the prophet Iſaiah, chap. liii. 8. Who ſhall declare his generation? And the deſcription which that prophet gives of him, Iſa. ix. 6. that the name of the Meſſias, the child born, and ſon given to us, ſhould be, Wonderful, Counſellor, and the mighty God, the everlaſting Father, the Prince of peace.—What think ye of his pedigree as he is man? No doubt this was partly implied in the queſtion; for Chriſt did not diſprove their anſwer, though it was but to the leaſt part of the queſtion: He is David's ſon, ſay they; and it is right to think of him as the ſon of David, cloathed with our nature: here was the great myſtery of godlineſs, God manifeſted in the fleſh. It was no myſtery for the Phariſees to think only that he was the ſon of David; David had other ſons, and a numerous ſeed: and if that be all, that he was the ſon of David, they might thus think of Chriſt, and yet think nothing of him. But it is another thing to think of him as God in our nature. If we think duly of Chriſt as the ſon of David, or in human nature, then, muſt we not think that God is come very near to us, ſo as there is a natural fibneſs betwixt him and us, he being bone of our bone, and fleſh of our fleſh? Muſt we not think, that he wonderfully emptied himſelf of his divine glory, and humbled himſelf unto death? Though he thought it no robbery to be equal with God, yet he ſuffered himſelf to be denuded of his glory, cloathed with rags of our fleſh: God calls him the man that is his Fellow, yet he was made a fellow to thieves and malefactors, and a murderer preferred before him. Though he was the Prince of life, yet, as the word may be rendered, he EVACUATED or EMPTIED himſelf unto death; and yet, to them that know him, he is moſt lovely, even in his greateſt abaſement. What think ye of Chriſt as man, as the ſon of David, the ſon of man, a man of the ſame infirmities with us; except ſinful infirmities? He was made in all things like unto us, ſin only excepted: He became a poor man, in all outward reſpects; a diſtreſſed man, a man of ſorrows and acquainted with grief; a tempted man, toſſed and tempted of the devil ſometimes, he going through all the ages of a man, firſt conceived, then born, then a babe, then a youth, and at laſt the perfect ſtature of a man: He became a mortal man, and accordingly was put to a painful and ſhameful death; yet a holy man, a wonderful man, a God-man: What think ye of the man Chriſt Jeſus?—But the main thing imported in the queſtion here with relation to his pedigree, is, What think ye of his pedigree, as he is God? What think ye of Chriſt, in this reſpect? For to ſeparate Chriſt from God, is to make him no Chriſt; therefore the queſtion is, What think ye of Chriſt, whoſe ſon he is, with reſpect to his divine nature, as well as his human nature? That this was the import of the queſtion, appears from his reply to their anſwer, How then does David call him Lord? He is Lord JEHOVAH, the only begotten Son of God, John i. 18.; the brightneſs of the Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, Heb. i. 2.; by whom all things were made, John i. 3. It is the Arian blaſphemy, to affirm him to be no more but Omoiuſius patri, but not Omouſius; that is, like unto the Father, but not the ſame eſſence and ſubſtance with him. He is, according to his Godhead, arrayed with all glory. All the creatures are to him as the drop of a bucket; yea, as nothing, and leſs than nothing and vanity; vanity; he hath a name above every name; and all the creatures are but ſhadows to him, who is the ſubſtantial image of God. He is the eternal Son of God, by an ineffable generation; whatever Arians and Atheiſts think of Chriſt; yet Chriſt himſelf thought it no robbery to be equal with God, Phil. ii. 6. Therefore, What think ye of Chriſt? is he no more but the ſon of David? The Jews looked upon Chriſt, as an ignorant clown, or filly perſon, will look upon the ſun; and, it may be, will think it no bigger than his bonnet; or at moſt, no larger than a milſtone: ſo did the Jews. The Phariſees looked upon the Son of God, ſaying, Is not this the carpenter's ſon? but their utmoſt was, that he was the ſon of David; they did not ſee him to be the Son of God. What think ye of Chriſt? Do ye ſee all the attributes of God to be in him? and all his actions, as Mediator, to be dignified with infinite virtue and value? that he was able to ſatisfy infinite juſtice? that he is able to ſave to the uttermoſt? that he is the adequate object of divine worſhip, and a full ſuitable portion for an immortal ſoul, becauſe he is the Son of God, as well as the ſon of David? All this is imported in the queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt?

[3.] What think ye of his perſon? This queſtion is alſo plainly imported in that, What think ye of Chriſt, namely, as he is God-man in one perſon, and the ſecond perſon of the glorious Trinity? It is plain, that Chriſt ſpeaks of himſelf here as perſonally conſidered, and as having two diſtinct natures in one perſon. Now, the human nature of Chriſt is not a perſon diſtinct from the divine; though the natures are diſtinct, the perſon is one. But the anſwer of the Phariſees to this queſtion, ſhewed they had no diſtinct knowledge of this myſtery; for they anſwer, He is the ſon of David; without knowing that he was the Son of God, as well as the ſon of David, in one perſon; which made Chriſt here to declare his ſovereign Lordſhip and Godhead, as well as his manhood. The myſtery of the queſtion then, which they did not underſtand, was, What think ye of that wonderful perſon God-man, in whom the human nature is advanced to ſuch an unſpeakable dignity, as to be united to, and of the ſame perſonality with the Son of God? Here is matter of thought to an intelligent mind; What think ye of the wonderful manner, in which ſinful men may come to be partakers of the divine nature, even by the holy Son of God his being a partaker of the human nature? Here is a glorious ſubject for thought and contemplation. What think ye of the wonderful way, that God, in his infinite wiſdom, hath taken, to bring God and men together, even in and through him, who is both God and man, and partaking of both natures in one perſon, is fit for bringing both God and man into one, and to lay his hand upon both parties? What think ye of ſuch a glorious perſon as finite and infinite, time and eternity, Creator and creature joined together? The Word was made fleſh, and dwelt among us; and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, John i. 14.

[4.] What think ye of his unction or anointing? This, I ſuppoſe, muſt alſo be the import of the queſtion objectively conſidered, as it is here generally propoſed; for, Chriſt ſignifies Anointed; in the Hebrew it is Meſſias; in the Greek, it is Chriſt; and in our language, it is the Anointed: and this being the main word, on which the weight of the general queſtion itſelf lies, it is the more neceſſary that this be particularly opened.—The queſtion then comes to this in general, What think ye of his Father, the Anointer? John vi. 27. For him hath God the Father ſealed; How? See Pſal. xlv. 7. God, thy God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladneſs above thy fellows. How much pains is Chriſt at, in the goſpel, to recommend his Father, as ſending and authorizing him to his mediatorial work?—Again, What think ye of his office, to which he is anointed? He hath not taken the honour of the mediatorial office upon him, without being called of God, and anointed of God thereunto, Heb. v. 5. We do not think honourably enough of any of his ſaving offices, unleſs we, at the ſame time, apprehend his divine unction thereunto.—Again, it comes to this, What think ye of his Spirit, the ointment, wherewith he is anointed? Iſa. lxi. 1. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, for he hath anointed me. Iſa. xlii. 1. I have put my Spirit upon him, and he ſhall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.—— There is the meaning of the queſtion in general, with reſpect to this Chriſt, who is the ſubject-matter of the queſtion: but there is much in this name CHRIST, and more than we can tell; I only name ſome particulars further here imported.

1. What think ye of his prophecy and teaching? For, as Chriſt, he is anointed to be a Prophet: Who teaches like him? ſays Elihu, Job xxxvi. 22. Other prophets and teachers have no wiſdom but what he gives them; but, in him are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge. Other prophets may err, but he teaches infallibly: for he is the truth itſelf; full of grace and truth. Other teachers may be daſhed, but he teaches authoritatively; he ſpeaks as one having authority, and not as the ſcribes. Other teachers may fail in their deſign, and prove unſucceſsful in their work; but he teaches efficaciouſly: men work upon a capacity, but he can give a capacity; The entrance of his words giveth light; he gives underſtanding to the ſimple. The excellency of his teaching is ſingular, if we conſider his ability and fidelity; the matter of his teaching is ſingular, if we conſider it is the whole will of God for our ſalvation; the manner of his teaching is ſingular, if we conſider it is by his word and Spirit; and even by a human voice he can convey his divine power; the extent of his teaching is ſingular, if we conſider it extends to all ſorts of perſons, Jews and Gentiles, and to all ſorts of things neceſſary to eternal life: this anointing teaches all things, 1 John ii. 27. In a word, none have authority to teach, but by commiſſion from him; neither can any other teacher preach himſelf; We preach not ourſelves, but Chriſt Jeſus the Lord; and, To him gave all the prophets witneſs: but it is his prerogative alone, to preach himſelf, ſaying, Come to me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt. Look to me and be ſaved: I am the roſe of Sharon; I am the light of the world; I am the way, the truth, and the life. O then, was there ever any prophet or teacher that could compete with him? The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, ſays Chriſt, for he hath anointed me to preach glad tidings to the meek. He is the Chriſt, the anointed prophet; and, What think ye of Chriſt?

2. What think ye of his prieſthood? For, as Chriſt

Chriſt, he is anointed to be a Prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedeck. All the Levitical prieſts were but ſhadows and types of him who was the true Prieſt, the true Temple, the true Altar, the true Sacrifice, all in one. What high thoughts may we have of his oblation, or obedience unto death, even the death of the croſs? For here was the grand condition of the covenant of redemption, or grace, fulfilled. The covenant of grace was all grace with reſpect to God, who, of his grace, found out the ranſom; and with reſpect to us, who are ſaved by grace: but, with reſpect to Chriſt, it is a covenant made upon terms and conditions, namely, his obedience, righteouſneſs, paſſion, and oblation; Whom God hath ſet forth to be the propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs for the remiſſion of ſins that are paſt, Rom. iii. 25. O what a free, full, perfect, holy, ſweet, and ſatisfying ſacrifice did he offer up of himſelf, even a ſacrifice of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour unto God, whereby juſtice was ſatisfied, wrath appeaſed, ſin expiated, God atoned, death vanquiſhed, hell quenched, heaven purchaſed, and the devil's kingdom deſtroyed; for, by death he deſtroyed him that had the power of death, that is, the devil! What may we think of his interceſſion, grounded upon this oblation? For he is able to ſave to the uttermoſt all that come to God by him, becauſe he ever lives to make interceſſion. Here is the antidote againſt all charges and accuſations, Rom. viii. 33, 34.; the antidote againſt all temptations, Heb. ii. 17, 18. iv. 14, 15.; an antidote againſt all the ſnares of the world, John xvii. 15.; againſt all ſins, failings, and infirmities, 1 John ii. 1, 2.; againſt all fears, thro' ſenſe of unworthineſs, to draw near to God's throne of grace, Heb. iv. 15, 16. x. 19,—22.; and againſt all fears of apoſtaſy and falling away, John xvii. 11. O Sirs, his promiſe, his power, his prayer, give great ſecurity, and greater cannot be given: he hath prayed for the Spirit, and the conſtant abiding thereof, John xiv. 16, 17. ſee alſo John iv. 14. Chriſt's interceſſion is founded on his oblation; and the Father is ſo well-pleaſed with the oblation, that he cannot refuſe his interceſſion; nay, he hears him always. Therefore, What think ye of Chriſt?

3. What think ye of his kingdom and royalty? The queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? imports this alſo; for, as Chriſt, he is anointed to be a King; I have ſet my King, [or, as it is in the Hebrew, ANOINTED my King,] upon my holy hill of Zion, Pſa. ii. 6. Is not all power in heaven and earth committed unto him, having on his veſture and thigh this name written, KING OF KINGS, and LORD OF LORDS? He is the King eternal and immortal; the government is upon his ſhoulders; and of the increaſe of his kingdom and government there ſhall be no end. His delivering up the kingdom to the Father at laſt, is but a changing the manner of his adminiſtration, and delivering up all his members, of whom his kingdom conſiſts, unto his Father, to be eternally crowned and glorified: he will reign through eternity, and the children of Zion will be joyful in their King, and ſing through eternity. I might here ſhew what a powerful and peaceable, mild and merciful, wiſe and holy, juſt, and righteous King our Lord Jeſus is; and then aſk you, What think ye of Chriſt? But it is not poſſible to give ſo much as a hint at the thouſandth part of his glory and royalty. His kingdon is ſpiritual and internal: if you be his ſpiritual ſubjects, his kingdom is within you; yea, though you be yet ſubjects to the devil, he hath power over all hearts, and can ſoften the hardeſt, and bind the ſtouteſt, and make the people fall down under him: yea, as he is able, ſo he is willing; for, he is not only the God of power, but the prince of peace, Iſa. ix. 6.; and therefore, as a Prophet, he preaches peace; as a Prieſt, he purchaſes peace; and, as a King, he proclaims peace; yea, Creates the fruit of the lips peace; peace to him that is afar off, and to him that is nigh. As a powerful Potentate, he is able; and, as a Prince of peace, he is ready, to ſave to the uttermoſt. As he is full of power, ſo he is full of pity; and his power and peace both are joined together, for the encouragement of ſinners to come to him; Let him take hold of my ſtrength, that he may make peace with me, and he ſhall make peace with me, Iſa. xxvii. 5.—Perhaps, by the bye, ſome poor ſoul is thinking, Oh! but I have no ſtrength to take hold of his ſtrength. Well, it is right to think ſo of yourſelf, and of your own weakneſs and wickedneſs: but no ſtrength comes in by that thought, while poring on yourſelf only; that is but the half of what you are to think, when you think right of yourſelves, as weak and wicked. But, what think ye of Chriſt our glorious King? If you can think honourably of him, as able and willing to help you, O then you would find ſtrength coming in with ſuch a thought: and high thoughts of a powerful and merciful King JESUS, is one of the ways of taking hold of his ſtrength. If you ſuppoſe that you think he is able and ready, and yet you find no ſtrength coming in, O Sirs, ſuſpect your own thought of him, that it is but a miſbelieving and diſhonourable thought: for, I aſſure you, right thoughts of Chriſt will ſet the heart all in motion towards him. But now, O! there would be no end in ſpeaking of the royalties of King JESUS; his royal throne, his royal crown, his royal victories, his royal triumphs, and the royal entertainment that he gives to his ſubjects at his table above, and even below, when he brings them to his banquetting-houſe. I ſhall only add, that as it is ſaid of Solomon, there was no king like him; ſo, behold a greater than Solomon is here: there is no King like him who is the King of Zion; he hath all other kings under his check and controul; and, what think ye of Chriſt then? Other kings have their dominions, for the moſt part, by uſurpation, by encroachment: but Chriſt is King conſtitute of his Father; I will make him my firſt-born, higher than the kings of the earth, Pſal. lxxxix. 27.; and all this for the good of the people: He hath put all things under his feet, and given him to be head over all things unto his church, Eph. ii. 22. This leads to another import of the queſtion; that is,

4. What think ye of his authority and ability, commiſſion, fulneſs, furniture, and fitneſs for executing theſe ſaving offices? For all this is implied in the deſignation CHRIST, the anointed; that is, one commiſſionated and qualified of God, by a ſupereminent unction, John iii. 34. Behold his excellency here, above all that ever had the like offices. Behold he is anointed, for the concurrence of all theſe offices, whether general, as Saviour, Surety, and Redeemer; or particular, as Prophet, Prieſt, and King. Some have been prophets, ſome prieſts, ſome kings anointed; but never any was anointed to all theſe but Chriſt: What think ye of Chriſt? — Behold the matter of his anointing; others have been anointed with material oil, but he is anointed with holy oil, the holy Spirit.—And whereas others have had the Spirit in some respects, therefore behold the measure of his anointing; others were anointed in measure, but he without measure; they may have a fulness of sufficiency, but he hath a fulness of redundancy; they a fulness like the fulness of a vessel, but his the fulness of an ocean; they a plenitude, but he a fountain.—Behold and view the duration of his anointing; his saints and servants may have the Spirit sometimes working, sometimes ceasing, sometimes flowing, and sometimes ebbing; but Christ is anointed with an enduring unction, John i. 33. The Spirit that descended on him, did remain and rest upon him; see Isa. lix. 22.—Hence behold also the equality of his anointing with himself: the Spirit given to others, that were invested with an office in God's house, did work with them as mere men; there was no equality betwixt them and the Spirit given to them: but as Christ is anointed with the Spirit, as he is Mediator, God-man; so, as to God, he is co-equal with the Spirit, wherewith he is anointed; yea, the same in substance, equal in power and in glory with the Father and with the Holy Ghost. And, What think ye of Christ? his authority, ability, and furniture for his work?—In a word, behold the efficacy of his anointing; and the communicable nature thereof: He is anointed above his fellows; yet so, as he hath fellows to whom he allows fellowship in the same anointing: he hath not only received the Spirit of all grace and gifts for himself, but he received gifts for men, even for the rebellious, Psal. lxvii. 18. Hence, according to his pleasure, he allows the oil to drop down to the skirts of his garment; yea, like rain upon the mowen grass, or showers that water the earth, Psal. lxxii. 6. It is true, ministers anointed with the Spirit are to drop, Ezek. xx. 46. Son of man, drop thy words towards the south: and Moses says, My doctrine shall drop as the rain: but as the clouds from whence the rain descends have not their water originally in themselves, but from the sea, and moist places of the earth, exhaled and drawn up by the heat of the sun; so, no minister of Christ hath a faculty of teaching heavenly and divine things, and saving gospel-truths of himself; but it is drawn up out of Christ, as out of a full sea and ocean of all wisdom and knowledge: and is conveyed unto them by the heat and vigour, not of their own spirit, but the Spirit of Christ, who is anointed, to anoint others. And, O for a liberal share of his anointing among us at this occasion!—In a word, the name Christ imports such an anointing, as that he is qualified with all authority and ability, all furniture and fittedness for his work of saving sinners; with all fulness of divine perfections, and all fulness of mediatorial gifts and graces: and all this is imported in the question, What think ye of Christ?

5. What think ye of his aromatical savour? for this is his name, Christ, the Anointed; his ointment casts a perfume through heaven and earth. How savoury is he to God? Why, his sacrifice was of a sweet-smelling savour unto his Father, Eph. v. 2. The stinking smell of sin is extinguished thereby; and the persons and performances of believers perfumed: and hence, how savoury also to believers? Song i. 3, 5. Because of the savour of thy good ointments, thy name is as ointment poured forth; therefore do the virgins love thee. Were it no more but the name JESUS a SAVIOUR, may it not be so delightful to sinners, as to cause their hearts to leap within them when they hear it; as John leapt in his mother's womb for joy, at the voice of the blessed virgin's salutation? Luke i. 44. O! what think ye of the sweet name JESUS! It should even pluck your heart out of your bosom, and transplant it into the bosom of Christ. How delightful is the very naming of a temporal saviour to them that are in misery, when they hear of his ability and readiness to deliver them? And, may not your heart even exult within you for joy, when you hear us speak to you of such a Saviour that saves from sin and wrath? O sweet-smelling name! O have you no sense of smelling! What think ye of Christ?

6. What think ye of his beauty and comeliness? This is also imported in his name CHRIST, and so in the question, What think ye of Christ, the Anointed? Ointment and perfume rejoice the heart, says Solomon, Prov. xxvii. 6. Now, Christ is anointed with the oil of gladness, Psal. xlv. 7.; and a glad heart makes a chearful countenance; yea, Oil makes the face to shine, Psal. civ. 15. A saint, that hath but a sprinkling of this oil, how will his face shine, and his countenance, like Hanna's, be no more sad? How did Moses's face shine when some of this oil was upon him? But, O what think ye of the shining glory and comeliness of Christ, who is anointed from head to foot! Is he not altogether lovely? Is he not white and ruddy, the Chief among ten thousands? Is he not a perfect beauty? All God's fulness is in him; all God's beauty is in him; all God's glory is to be seen in the face of Jesus, 2 Cor. iv. 9. O then, What think ye of Christ?

7. What think ye of his worth and preciousness? This is also imported in the name CHRIST, and so in the question, What think ye of Christ, the Anointed? for it is precious ointment, Psal. cxxxiii. 2. Ointment was reckoned of great worth and esteem among the Jews; it was among the precious presents that were sent unto kings, Isa. lvii. 9. Hos. xii. 1. O how great is the preciousness and worth of Christ! It is the delight and recreation, the study and occupation of elect angels, to pry into the preciousness of Christ, to look upon the frame and fabric of salvation to mankind-sinners by Christ, that they may therein observe the glorious attributes of God: his wisdom, power, holiness, justice, truth, mercy, all shining and glittering in it, like bright stars in the firmament. Let a profane world think what they will of Christ; let them slight him and his gospel; let them scorn him, and cast him at their heels; let them trample on his blood and passion, as their manner is, making it a common and worthless thing; let them despise his high and celestial mysteries: we need not care for their thoughts; it is enough that God the Father hath honoured and exalted him; that the holy angels do reverence and worship him; and that all the saints do magnify him: To them that believe he is precious. O! his blood is precious blood, his promises are precious promises, his love is precious love; and every thing about him is precious: What think ye of Christ?

8. Again, to add no more here, what think ye of his virtue and usefulness? This, I suppose, is also imported in the name CHRIST, and in the the queſtion objectively conſidered, What think ye of Chriſt, the Anointed? For, as ointment was, and is of manifold uſefulneſs, ſo is Chriſt: eſpecially oil hath a twofold virtue, (1.) A molifying virtue, and a ſoftening quality; ſuch is the virtue of Chriſt. Were the heart never ſo hard, he can ſoften and molify it; a drop of that oil with which he is anointed, I mean, the ſmalleſt ſaving motion of his Spirit, can melt and diſſolve the heart, though it were harder than a ſtone or adamant, Ezek. xxxvi. 26. (2.) It hath a medicinal virtue; hence it is ſaid of the Samaritan, Luke x. 34. that he poured in oil into the wounds of the diſtreſſed man. Chriſt is the tender-hearted Samaritan; his blood and Spirit is the ointment for curing all the wounds that we got by the old ſerpent. What wounds, what plagues, what deadly diſeaſes and deſperate maladies are among you! Behold, there is no diſeaſe out of hell that ſurmounts the medicinal virtue that is in Chriſt! O then, What think ye of Chriſt? Is there none here to think highly of him?——Now, theſe particulars that I have mentioned are imported in the very name CHRIST, and ſo implied in the queſtion objectively conſidered, or with reſpect to the object thereof, What think ye of Chriſt?

2*dly*, The ſecond thing here propoſed, was, to ſhew the import of this queſtion actively conſidered, or with reſpect to the act of thinking; What THINK ye of Chriſt? Now, the full import of this queſtion, thus viewed, may comprehend more than people are ready to imagine. It is not a paſſing thought, or fleeting imagination; we ought not to explain the words of Chriſt by the motions and notions of our own ſpirits: we need the Spirit of Chriſt to explain the words of Chriſt according to the mind of Chriſt, 1 Cor. ii. 17. We may be ſure, as the apoſtle ſays, 2 Cor. iii. 5. that we are not ſufficient of ourſelves to think any thing as of ourſelves, our ſufficiency muſt be of God. And if we can think of nothing aright of ourſelves, far leſs can we think of Chriſt: and as none can ſpeak duly of Chriſt, nor call Jeſus LORD, without the Spirit; ſo neither can we think duly of Chriſt, without the Spirit of Chriſt. What then is the meaning of this queſtion relating to its act of thinking, What THINK ye of Chriſt? There are theſe following particulars, which, I ſuppoſe, are implied therein, and which I alſo propoſe by way of Query, that you may ſtill ſearch yourſelves and apply as we go along.

1. What think ye of Chriſt? That is, What know ye of Chriſt? what underſtand ye of Chriſt? Surely ye cannot have a right thought of that which ye do not know or underſtand. Have you got the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation, in the knowledge of Chriſt? Eph. i. 17. Hath the God, who commanded the light to ſhine out of darkneſs, ſhined into your hearts, to give you the light of the knowledge of his glory in the face of Jeſus Chriſt? Hath God revealed his Son in you? Gal. i. 16. Have you ſeen the Son? He that ſees the natural ſun in the firmament, hath a thought of it ſuitable to the ſight he hath thereof: but a man that hath been born blind, and never ſaw the light, he cannot have a right notion or thought of the ſun, though you ſhould ſpeak never ſo much of the glory of it to him. I have heard of a man born blind, on whom a great deal of pains was taken to let him underſtand what a glorious creature the ſun was, and what bright beams and rays it ſends forth through all the world; but he was ſo far from having any right thoughts about it, that, after all the pains taken on him that was poſſible, he cries out, "O now, ſays he, I know what it is like, it is "juſt like the ſound of a trumpet." Poor man! that was the beſt notion he could frame about it, for he never had eyes. So it is here, Sirs; we are all born blind, having no ſpiritual eyes till God open the eyes of the underſtanding, and enlighten the mind in the knowledge of Chriſt: we may ſpeak of his glory and excellency; but the beſt you make of him is, O he is like a very ſtately and majeſtic perſon as ever ye ſaw or heard tell of! and ſo you frame the image of a great man, ſitting on a lofty throne, compaſſed about with ſo many ſparkling attendants in fine robes: and what you have heard with your natural ears of any perſon, or ſeen with your natural eyes, or can conceive with your natural underſtanding and reaſon, helps you to, or furniſhes you with materials for framing ſuch a notion of him. But what is all this? It is nothing but an image of your own brain, a carnal fantaſtical thought; the true Chriſt is the image of the inviſible God, the wiſdom of God, and the power of God, God-man in one perſon. Now, have you got a ſpiritual diſcerning; for, The natural man receives not the things of the Spirit of God; they are fooliſhneſs to him, neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned. The world cannot think of Chriſt, far leſs think much of him, becauſe they do not know him: like Æſop's cock, contenting himſelf with, and thinking more of a barley-corn than of a pearl, becauſe he knew not the worth of it; ſo the world think more of a barley-corn of temporal good things, than they think of the Pearl of great price, becauſe they know it not. Therefore the queſtion imports, what know ye of Chriſt?

2. What think ye of Chriſt? That is, What believe ye of Chriſt? Knowledge and faith are like the two eyes of the ſoul: knowledge is the diſcerning and apprehending eye; faith is the applying and appropriating eye. And as ſaving knowledge is objective faith, and ſaving faith fiducial knowledge; ſo without knowledge we cannot think duly of Chriſt, with reſpect to what he is in himſelf; and without faith we cannot think duly of Chriſt, with reſpect to what he is to us, ſo as to receive the record of God, namely, That God hath given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son, 1 Joh v. 11. Which record, Whoſoever believeth not, hath made God a liar, ver. 10. That the queſtion concerns this believing thought of Chriſt, is plain from the context, wherein Chriſt ſhows they had but unworthy thoughts of him, if they did not ſee him to be David's Lord, that is, the true God, and eternal life; in and through whom, as the God-man, this life was to be conveyed from God to man. This queſtion then is a trial of our faith, which faith is the evidence of things not ſeen. And, I ſuppoſe, one of the reaſons why Chriſt here ſays, What think ye of CHRIST? and not, What think ye of ME? is, becauſe, though now they were ſpeaking to him, and ſeeing him with their bodily eyes; yet their faith was not to terminate on what was the object of their ſenſe. We have no more faith than an ox or a horſe, if we believe no more than we ſee or feel: the brute beaſts think they have what they find they have by ſeeing and feeling; but what do you, that are rational creatures, think of things that cannot be ſeen or felt? Faith is the evidence of things not seen. The Pharisees here, they saw Christ, they saw his miracles; but yet, for all that, they saw not the true Christ by faith, while they saw not his invisible glory, his invisible Godhead, nor the invisible seal appended to his commission for saving sinners. Therefore it is not, What think ye of ME? Your eyes see me, as if I were no more but a man like yourself: but, What think ye of CHRIST? Do you believe no more of Christ than you see? If so, then you have no right thoughts of Christ at all, because you have no faith. My friends, the question concerns you also: it is not, what see or feel you of Christ? but, What believe ye of Christ? There is a threefold seeing or feeling, that is to be separate from believing.

(1.) The first is a corporeal seeing or feeling. Thomas thought it a better way to believe Christ to be risen, by seeing and feeling him, than by running to the promises without sight of him; and we all naturally follow him: but Christ tells him, that the best and most blessed way was quite contrary to that; Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed, John xx. 29. Again,

(2.) There is a rational seeing, that is to be separate from believing. Though none can believe, without the exercise of their rational faculties spiritualized; and though it be the highest reason to believe what God speaks; yet to make natural reason the rule or ground of faith, is not to believe at all, but the way to doubt of all that ever God said. Thomas consulted with reason, and reason consulted with death and the grave, whether they could send their guests away back and live again into the world; and so he believed not. If Abraham had not separated the sight of reason from his faith in the promised seed, where would his faith have been? natural reason might say, "Heark "you, Abraham, is it possible that you and "Sarah can now have a son betwixt you, "when you are both come to such an age, "that you are but dead stocks?" But, when reason began to speak, Abraham stopt his ears; He considered not the deadness of his own body, nor of Sarah's womb; He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, but was strong in the faith, giving glory to God; being fully persuaded that he that had promised was able to perform, Rom. iv. 19, 20, 21. Perhaps, reason is whispering into the ears of some here, saying, O man, woman, you are but a dead stock, a dead stone; do you ever think to be a child of Abraham, or that you will bring forth fruit unto God? but, if you, believe with Abraham, you will say, Hold your peace, carnal reason, you are but a blind fool in the matters of God: cannot God out of stones raise up children unto Abraham? And as he is able, so he hath given me many promises in his word, which he allows me to build upon, and commands me to believe. Unbelief builds always upon sense and reason; but faith builds upon the power and promise of God. What believe you of Christ?

(3.) There is a spiritual seeing that is to be separated from faith. It is true, there is a spiritual seeing of sanctified knowledge and understanding, which I spoke of already, that is essential to faith; there can be no believing without this seeing: He that sees the Son, and believes in him, hath everlasting life. But there is a spiritual seeing of experience, or experimental sense and feeling, which is to be separate from believing; such as spiritual mourning, spiritual joy, spiritual enlargement, or such like workings of the Spirit. Where these are, they should indeed be cherished with thankfulness, as being a taste of heaven, and a comfortable means of glorifying God on earth: but it is dangerous to make them the ground of faith; for they are ebbing and flowing, up and down, it may be twenty times in the space of one sermon; and your faith that is built thereupon will be up and down therewith. If you believe no longer than you see and feel, no wonder that you be always doubting when you are not feeling. And so you are never living by faith; for you are not properly believing, when you are feeling; faith is one thing and feeling another: or, if you build partly on the feeling of God's work within you, and partly on the truth of God's word without you, then you are like one that would build a house partly upon thawing ice, and partly on a firm rock; surely that part of the house, that was built on the ice, will tumble down whenever the ice melts: but, were the building of faith wholly upon the firm rock, that changes not with the changes of your sense and feeling, you will find no more cause of doubting when you have, than when you want these changeable things: you would be thankful when you have them, and yet not doubtful when you want them. Unbelief, which builds upon things seen and felt, says and thinks, in the want of these, O! all is good, and so razeth the foundation; but faith, which is the evidence of things not seen, says, even in the want of these, all is yet well and secure, Christ is what he was, the promise is what it was, the truth of God is what it was, however I be changed. These are the different thoughts of faith and unbelief; and what think ye? I suppose, when the meaning of the question is, what believe ye of Christ? the most part will find, that either they have no faith, or very little.

Thus Paul believed contrary to sense and feeling, when he got the promise of his own life, and the life of all that were in the ship with him; I believe God, says he, that it shall even be as it was told me, Acts xxiiv. 25. See in what circumstances he was, when he thus believed, verses 15, 18, 20.; their light was gone, the tempest was on them, and all hope from outward appearance was gone; yet Paul was assured and persuaded that God would do as he had said: why, might unbelief say, if the sun were shining, and a fair wind blowing; if the Sun of righteousness were shining on me, and the wind of heavenly influences blowing, and I were fair before the wind, then I would believe: but now, when there is nothing but darkness and tempests, how can I believe? No, indeed, you cannot, while you make sense and feeling the ground of your faith, and not the truth and veracity of God in his word of grace and promise. Thus it is in the matter of justification before God. The believer is to look upon himself as righteous, through the righteousness of Christ; to believe himself perfect in Christ, and fiducially to think himself righteous in Christ: no, says unbelief, I cannot think that, because I feel the contrary; I feel my own unrighteousness, sin, and corruption: why, if there were no sense or feeling of sin, there would be no room for faith; if you had a righteousness of your own, and a feeling thereof, then you would have no need of Chriſt's righteouſneſs; but now, that you have a feeling of your unrighteouſneſs and ſin, there is room for faith, according to ſuch a word as that, 2 Cor. v. 21. He hath made him to be ſin for us, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him. The very eſſence of faith here is to believe the quite contrary to what we ſee and feel in ourſelves, ſaying, In myſelf I have no righteouſneſs, no ſtrength; but, Surely in the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength.—Now, though I ſhould ſhew no more of the import of this queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? but theſe two, namely, What know ye of Chriſt? and what believe ye of Chriſt? Surely it is a matter of eternal conſequence to anſwer this queſtion, thus explained; for if you miſs the right anſwer to theſe two branches of this queſtion, your doom at the great day will be dreadful; 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8. He will be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know him not, and obey not the goſpel; that is, who never had ſuch thoughts of Chriſt, as to know him, and believe in him as the Chriſt of God. Again,

3. What think ye of Chriſt? That is, What love ye of Chriſt, and what favour have ye for him? As they that know him will believe, and put their truſt in him; ſo they that believe in him will love him; for, faith works by love. It muſt be a loving thought, that Chriſt here intended by this queſtion, while in the context he ſets forth himſelf, not only as David's ſon, but David's Lord; a God-man, and ſo a glorious object of love, altogether lovely. Were our affections enlarged wider than the higheſt heaven, there is lovelineſs enough in a God-man to fill it; and, could our hearts hold an ocean of love, there is infinite lovelineſs in Chriſt to beſtow it all upon: every thing in Chriſt is lovely; and therefore the queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? muſt be, What love ye of Chriſt? If any man love not our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, let him be ANATHEMA MARAN-ATHA, ſays the apoſtle; ſurely they are not believers, that are not lovers of Chriſt. It is true, Chriſt hath many pretended lovers, that love him only for his bounty, but not for his beauty, and that ſay they love him; but it is not ſo, if you conſider the qualities of their love.

(1.) It is an eaſy love, they came eaſily by it, without ever getting their natural enmity diſcovered or broken: they were never humbled for their want of love; ſuch a love is of little value; yea, not worth a farthing. Or,

(2.) It is an idle love; it does not lead them to his ſervice, nor draw them to their prayers; his commands are ſtill grievous to them, and they have no pleaſure and delight in them. Or,

(3.) If it be not an idle, it is a legal love: it may be the law comes to them, and ſays, as Pharaoh ſaid to the Iſraelites, Ye are idle, ye are idle, Exod. v. 17.; and ſo they fall a-doing for their life, according to the DO and LIVE of the firſt covenant. But it is not doing from love to Chriſt: it is not a goſpel-love to him, as a Lawfulfiller; but a legal love to him, as only a Lawgiver, and as if he was ſtill ſtanding upon the old-covenant terms with them. Or,

(4.) If it be not a legal love, it is a looſe and licentious love they have to him: it is love with a latitude, allowing as much room for the devil, as for Chriſt; as much room for the world, as for Chriſt; and as much room for luſts, as for Chriſt: ſurely, they that have no other love to Chriſt, but ſuch an eaſy, idle, legal, looſe, or licentious love, they are not true lovers; nay, they are true haters of him, and enemies to him. Let them ſay as they will, that they love Chriſt, yet in reality they think nothing of him.

But, believer, What think you of Chriſt? When the meaning of the queſtion to you is, Simon, ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me more than theſe? O! can you anſwer it with an appeal, Thou that knoweſt all things, knoweſt that I love thee? or, at leaſt, can you anſwer it with a ſigh, Wo's me that I cannot love him as I ought! Surely, if you have not a love of delight, rejoicing in him; ye have a love of deſire, lamenting after him. Sometimes the loving ſoul goes to a communion, and the ſecret groan is, Oh! let me find Chriſt at this occaſion! Oh! I muſt have him, I muſt have him! Why muſt you have him? Even becauſe he muſt have you; Other ſheep I have, which are not of this fold; theſe alſo I MUST bring, and they ſhall hear my voice, John x. 16. He hath ſaid firſt, I muſt have you; and that hath brought you to ſay, I muſt have him. Here are two neceſſities meeting; his neceſſity, and your neceſſity: his neceſſity, indeed, is a pure neceſſity of love; but your firſt neceſſity was the neceſſity of want: but, ſince he from love hath a need of you, as well as you from want have a need of him, you muſt of neceſſity meet together in love. You love him, becauſe he firſt loved you; you ſeek him, becauſe he firſt ſought you. Therefore henceforth, as he ſeeks you from love, ſo do you not only ſeek him from want, that is too ſelfiſh; but alſo let your way of ſeeking him grow up to more conformity to his way of ſeeking you, namely, from love, ſaying, Saw ye him whom my ſoul loveth? tell him that I am ſick of love. O! what think ye, what love ye of Chriſt? Again.

4. What think ye of Chriſt? That is, What eſteem ye of Chriſt, or what eſtimate and valuation have you for him? This is plainly imported in the queſtion here. Why, might Chriſt ſay, ye Phariſees are ſhewing your ignorant eſteem of the law, by all the queſtions you are propoſing about it; but, What think ye of Chriſt, who is the Lord of the law, as well as David's ſon and Lord? You have an ignorantly high opinion of Moſes, but, What think ye of Chriſt? what honour and reſpect do you put upon him? Surely, to them that believe he is precious; or, as the word imports, he is HONOURABLE. Where there is true knowledge of Chriſt, there is faith; where there is faith, there is love; and where there is love, there is a high eſteem. Some things, the more they are known, the leſs they are eſteemed: but it is not ſo with Chriſt; they that know him moſt, do eſteem him moſt; God the Father knows him beſt, and he eſteems him moſt highly, Iſa. xlii. 1. Saints and angels in heaven know him next beſt, and how they eſteem him, you may ſee, Rev. v. 8, 10, 11, 12. The more that any on earth knows him, the more do they eſteem him; and only theſe that do not know him, do not eſteem him, 1 Cor. i. 21,—24. They that are beſt judges, think highly of Chriſt. What judge ye, what eſteem have ye of him? There is a fourfold lodging or room that the eſteem of Chriſt hath in the ſouls of them that duly eſteem him.

(1.) In their intellective faculty; that is, in their underſtanding this eſteem lodges, ſaying, O! I determine to know nothing but Chriſt! O Sirs, if a man had the knowledge of all the univerſities verſities of the world concentred in him, and yet know not Chriſt, he is but a poor ſilly ſot. Paul, brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, had a great deal of knowledge, and human literature; but whenever he came to know Chriſt, O, ſays he, I count all but dung for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord.

(2.) In their elective faculty; that is, in their choice does this eſteem lodge. O they that eſteem Chriſt, they ſelect and ſingle him out for a Head and Huſband, with whom they reſolve to live and die, ſaying, Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon the earth that I deſire beſides thee.

(3.) In their proſecutive faculty; that is, in their affections does this eſteem lodge; theſe do ardently and vehemently purſue after him. As nothing can ſatisfy a hungry man but food, ſo nothing ſatisfies ſuch a ſoul but Chriſt; hence proceeds their induſtry in the uſe of means and ordinances.

(4.) In their retentive faculty; that is, in their memory will this eſteem alſo lodge; while their eſteem of him makes them remember him, and their meditation of him to be ſweet: When I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night-watches, my ſoul ſhall be ſatisfied as with marrow and fatneſs, and my mouth ſhall praiſe thee with joyful lips, Pſal. lxiii. 5, 6. What we love and eſteem, will have a lodging in our minds and thoughts. And, where does the ſtrain of our thoughts and meditations run? is, no doubt, implied in this queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? What room do you give him in your heart and thoughts? Now, theſe four particulars, namely, 1. What know ye; 2. What believe ye; 3. What love ye; 4. What eſteem ye of Chriſt? are here implied.

3*dly*, The third thing here propoſed was, to ſhew the import of this queſtion formally conſidered, with reſpect to the quality of the act. I have ſhewed what may be implied in this queſtion, with relation to the object, and alſo the act of thinking: now, the interrogative particle WHAT, pointing at the quality of this act, may furniſh us with ſome further thoughts concerning the import of the queſtion formally conſidered. It is the what in the text that now I am eſpecially upon; and beſides the general, What is your opinion of Chriſt? What is your judgment about Chriſt? There is a fourfold WHAT here implied.

1. What good do you think of him? you Phariſees think much good of yourſelves: who but you, and your righteouſneſs, your alms, your ſacrifices, your temple, your zeal for Moſes, and the law? but, what think ye of Chriſt? Is he no more in your view than a mortal ſon of a mortal man? no wonder then, in this caſe, you think little good of him. Can you aſcend no higher in your contemplation to apprehend him as the immortal Son of the immortal God; the eternal Son of the eternal Father: the righteouſneſs of God, the gift of God, the true ſacrifice, the true temple, the antitype of all the types, the ſubſtance of all the ſhadows, the fulneſs of all the prophecies and promiſes? What! do you think him good for nothing, but to be deſpiſed, debaſed, and trampled upon! What good do you think of him?

2. What glory do you think to be in him? Do you not darken his glory, when you look upon him only to be the ſon of David, and not alſo to be the Lord of David, and the Lord of glory, the root and off-ſpring of David; not only the off-ſpring of David, as man; but the root of David, as God? What think ye of him as the glory of God, and the God of glory, bringing in a diſpenſation much more glorious than that of Moſes, which glory was to be done away? 2 Cor. iii. 7, 8, 9. Chriſt, as the Sent of God, being anointed with the Spirit for that end. If the miniſtration of death, written and engraven on ſtones, was glorious,—how ſhall not the miniſtration of the Spirit be rather glorious? If the miniſtration of condemnation be glorious, much more does the miniſtration of righteouſneſs exceed in glory. And, what glory do you think to be in Chriſt, who is the glory of all this glory? Do you ſee Chriſt to be thus glorious, and me to be the Chriſt? Though now, might he ſay, this glory is under a vail of fleſh, a vail of exinanition and humiliation; yet this mean appearance that I am making now, as if I were no more but a frail mortal man, was clearly foretold to you by the prophets concerning Chriſt, even that he ſhould be a man, and a man of ſorrows: can you ſee nothing of my glory and excellency under this vail? Is there no glory in the ſun, becauſe there is a cloud betwixt you and it?

3. What uſe do you think he is of? for, if he were only the ſon of David, he could be of no great uſefulneſs to a periſhing world of ſinners: but, do you think and conſider, that herein is the myſtery of divine grace? God ſo loved the world, that he ſent his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him might not periſh, but have everlaſting life. If the brazen ſerpent, which was but a type of Chriſt, was of uſe to the ſtung Iſraelites, what think you of Chriſt? can any thing in the world be ſo uſeful to ſinners as Chriſt? Of what uſe is the law, whereof you are boaſting? it is but a dead letter, a killing word, a ſentence of condemnation, a death-ſummons, a dead warrant againſt them, without Chriſt, who is the end of the law for righteouſneſs. Who, but Chriſt, can reconcile God to man, and ingratiate man with God? Who, but he, can fulfil the law and ſatisfy juſtice for them, pay their debts, heal their diſeaſes, juſtify, ſanctify, and ſave them, vanquiſh ſin, death, and hell for them, and at laſt raiſe the mouldered carcaſe from corruption to incorruption, and inveſt it with a ſtate of everlaſting glory in the higheſt heaven, with fulneſs of joy, and pleaſures for evermore at his right-hand? Is he an uſeleſs Chriſt to you, though he fills all in all, and alone can give abundant ſatisfaction to the immortal ſoul, whereas all things elſe are but dry and empty without him, and leave men deſtitute? Oh! drymeans, dry miniſters, dry ordinances, dry ſacraments, dry ſermons, and dry prayers, if Chriſt be away! Oh! dry breaſts, if he be not the milk; dry branches, if he be not the ſap; dry clouds, dry wells, if he be not the water! O what uſe think ye he is for? what work and ſervice have ye for him?

4. What worth do you think he is of? Your thoughts are employed, might Chriſt ſay, how to tempt me with queſtions about the law, undervaluing that Lord God that gave the law, and that now is come in the perſon of the Meſſias to fulfil the law; and is he unworthy to have a room in your thoughts? or what worth do you think him of? If you judge rightly and think duly of him, you will find he hath more real worth than all the world beſide: for, put all the creatures in heaven and earth earth in one scale, and Christ in another, you will find them all to be lighter than vanity. This is plain, if you consider, that when all the world of men, and angels, and creatures were weighed in the balance with divine justice, they were found too light to counterpoise it, or give satisfaction to it; all they together could not make up the full sum or value that should satisfy that justice: it cost more to redeem a soul, than all that they were worth; The redemption of the soul is precious, and ceases for ever, says the psalmist. But Christ, having unsearchable riches, is a mass of treasure big enough for the purpose; and therefore, when he was laid in the balance with infinite justice, he was found of sufficient weight to poise it, without any creature's help to hold down the scale: nay, He looked, and there was none to help, none to uphold; therefore his own arm brought salvation. And he trode the wine-press alone, and of the people there were none with him, Isa. lxiii. 3, 5. Who, among the creatures, could go thorow conquering and to conquer, as Christ did, when he had heaven, earth, and hell to grapple with? What think ye of Christ then? what worth do you think he is of?

Upon the whole, before I leave this point, let me ask these two questions, to bring home this one, concerning what worth do you think Christ is of.

The first question is, What PRICE would you buy him at, if you were to buy him? Surely, if you had a due thought of Christ, and a discovery of the Pearl, you would, for joy, sell your all to buy it, Mat. xiii. 44. 45, 46. And when all is done, you would see, your all to be nothing at all, and the Pearl to be all in all. Indeed this treasure is so great, this Pearl is so precious, that it cannot be bought at any price; and therefore the price of it is, no money, no price; altogether free, Isa. lv. 1. Ho every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money, and without price. To buy here, is to beg, and take freely; yet, if the question be, What would you give for him, if he were to be bought? Surely, if you knew your own need, and his infinite fulness and suitableness for you, the question will suggest some great thought of Christ. O a thousand worlds, if I had them, would I give for him! Yea, but there are some that hold him at a very low price, they would not give a groat or sixpence for Christ or his interest; they would not part with a shilling, or a crown, for Christ or his cause, Christ or his gospel; nay, they will not part with a beastly lust for him, their idols and the world are of greater price to them. But there are others that know his worth better, and are willing to forsake all for him; We have forsaken all, and followed thee, Mat. xix. 27. The holy martyrs thought not their lives and their hearts-blood too dear for Christ; Rev. xii. 11. They loved not their lives unto the death; that is, they despised their lives in comparison of Christ; they exposed their bodies to horrible and painful deaths, their temporal estates to the spoil, taking joyfully the spoiling of their goods, and exposing their persons to all manner of shame and contempt for the cause of Christ. O but a soul that by faith apprehends the worth of Christ, will chearfully and willingly give all for him; and having got Christ, will go away rejoicing, and think his bargain to be very good, very great!

The second question is, What RATE would ye SELL him at, if ye were to sell him? Judas sold him, and the high priests bought him for thirty pieces of silver, A goodly price that I was prized at of them, Zech. xi. 13. It is ironically spoken, A bonny price for a God-man; Cast it to the potter, says the Lord. Men of darkened understandings, corrupt minds, and depraved affections, will sell Christ and his cause, Christ and a good conscience, for a trifle: yea, many betray his cause for some poor worldly consideration. O for such a spirit as I read of in the forty martyrs, that suffered under Licinius, Anno 300, that when Agricolaus his deputy, one of the devil's agents, set upon them several ways to draw them to deny Christ, and at last tempted them with an offer of money and preferment, they all cried out with one consent, Ὦ Αἰδιότης, ὦ Αἰδιότης, χρήματα δίδες τὰ απομένοντα: "O Eterni-" ty, Eternity! give us money that will last to " eternity, and gold that will abide for ever, " such as Christ can give us." They slighted that pitiful wealth which was current only in this beggarly world, when coming in competition with Christ and his durable riches; they would not sell Christ for a world, nay, not for a world of worlds. Oh! at what rate would you sell Christ! Surely, if you think duly and highly of him, you will buy him at any rate, but sell him at no rate. It is easy indeed to frame a passing thought, Oh! who would put Christ in the balance with any thing! But stay till a day of trial come, and the question be brought close home, Now, will you quit Christ and his cause, or will you quit with father and mother, and wife and children, and estate and fortune, houses and yards, and life and all? I imagine that would be a hard question; Skin for skin, and all that a man hath will he give for his life; he will quit all before he quit with his life. Surely, if Christ be your life, you would quit all other lives for him; a natural life, a temporal life, a life of pleasure, a life of honour, a life of ease and worldly accommodations; and if you think much of him, there is some life you have quit for him already, at least in part, and in desire and endeavour, namely, a life of sin, a life of self, a life of legal righteousness, that the life you live may be a life of faith on the Son of God. Now, I suppose, all these whats are imported in the question, 1. What good do you think of him? 2. What glory do you think to be in him? 3. What use do you think he is for? 4. What worth do you think he is of, when he is to be bought or sold? This question bears all these in its bosom, What think ye of Christ?

4*thly*, The fourth and last thing proposed upon the explication of the import of the question, was, to shew the import of it subjectively considered, or with respect to the persons that are the subjects thereof, or to whom the question is put, in the pronoun YE, What think YE of Christ? And under this consideration we may take a fourfold view of the question.

1. View it as it was put to the Jews in general, for so were these to whom Christ is here speaking: ye that are Jews, What think ye of Christ? Ye that are the people of whom concerning the flesh, Christ came, for (as ye own concerning Christ) he is the son of David; and ye are the people to whom he and his gospel behoved first to come; for, salvation is of the Jews, John iv. 22. Ye are his own people; and, What think ye of Christ? Alas! He came to his own, and and his own received him not; they thought nothing of him when he came: and therefore, as Paul says, Acts xxviii. 28. The salvation of God is sent to the Gentiles; and he adds, they will hear it. Now, of consequence, Christ and the gospel, and this question with it, comes to you, Gentiles, saying, What think ye of Christ? Oh! will ye think nothing of him? or, will ye make Paul a liar, who said, ye should hear it? or rather, will ye give the lie to the Spirit of God? Nay, whatever the most part do, yet as many as were ordained to eternal life will be brought to think highly of Christ, by getting the saving knowledge, faith, love, and esteem of him.

2. View the question as it was put to the Pharisees, a sett of hypocrites and self-righteous persons: ye that are Pharisees, What think ye of Christ? Ye are strict observers of the letter of the law, and think much of your long prayers, your giving alms of all that you possess, your fasting twice a week, your being no open drunkards, whoremongers, extortioners, nor like this or that publican; but while you think so much of yourselves and your own righteousness, and think nothing of Christ, publicans and harlots go into the kingdom before you; therefore, what think ye of Christ the son of David, the Lord of David, the Lord of the law, by whom alone everlasting righteousness is brought in, answering the spirit, and not the letter of the law only? The question then comes to be proposed to all of the same kidney with these Pharisees: Ye that are hypocrites, and self-justifying persons, What think ye of Christ? Ye that are thinking, O you are an honest man, you have always been a good neighbour, just in your dealing, civil in your carriage, and so you fancy yourself to be touching the law blameless; what, man! are you content to be judged by the law? then to Cæsar let us go; to the law let us go: but only look the law broad in the face, look not only to the out-side of the law, like a man looking only to the back and out-side of a looking-glass, or to the frame and edge of it, where he does not see himself; but look to the in-side of the looking-glass of the law, to the spirituality of it; set your face to the face of the glass, and you will see what a deformed filthy creature you are, so you will find it cursing you to your face, and cursing you to hell for every wicked thought, as well as action, saying, Cursed is every one that continues not in all things written in the book of the law to do them. Therefore, you have need to think again, and think better than ever you did, about a law-justifying righteousness, and to think there is need of this question, What think ye of Christ?

3. View the question as it was put to the Sadducees; for it seems they were combined with the Pharisees here against Christ, if you compare ver. 23. and 34. Now, these Sadducees were a sett of people that denied the immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the body, the existence of spirits and angels, Acts xxiii. 8.: In a word, they were half atheists, if not wholly so; like the graceless wits of our day, that call themselves Free-thinkers: Well, says Christ, What think ye of Christ? whose son is he? If you could view him as not only David's son, but David's Lord and God; and as the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, not the God of the dead, but of the living; would you persist in these atheistical tenets, concerning the resurrection of the body, the being of souls? No, no. The question then is applicable to all that sort of people: ye that are Atheists, Deists, and damnably erroneous Free-thinkers, Oh! what think ye of Christ? No doubt, with Herod and his men of war, you set him at nought! But, Oh! will you think again, and recal your thoughts? let them fix upon Christ a while, and you shall find all the truths of the Bible cleared and vindicated, by him who is the truth itself; and that this eternal Son of God is sent from the Father, of purpose to confirm them by his doctrine, life, death, and resurrection. Again,

4. View the question, with respect to its general design, which is (together with all other scriptures) the profit of all to whom it comes; for their reproof, correction, or instruction in righteousness, 2 Tim. iii. 16.; and for convincing of sinners, or confirming of saints: and so it comes to all and every one of us, ministers or people, high and low, rich and poor; What think ye of Christ? And here I have occasion to look round about me, and ask the question at all and every one that hears me; and indeed we may begin first at ourselves.

Q we that are MINISTERS, What think we of Christ? Is he the son and Lord of David, the eternal Son of God? Surely we cannot think, or speak, or preach too much of Christ. It is our honour, if we can say, We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and that to us, who are the least of all saints (may some of us say) should this grace be given, to preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ. But, while we speak of Christ to others, what do we think of Christ ourselves? To be sure, if we do not think of Christ as we ought, we will not speak of Christ as we should. Christ in the heart, and Christ in the mouth, make right preaching. If any preach Christ out of envy, as the apostle says, it is well that Christ is preached: but as it must be but bungling work to such; so they would do well to consider, that the question is not, What PREACH ye of Christ? but, What think ye of Christ? —Again, O ye that are the PEOPLE, What think ye of Christ? Whatever be your state or condition, sex or quality, the question comes to you; and let none of you dare to neglect the pondering on it, when Christ himself is posing you with it, What think ye of Christ? —Ye that are MAGISTRATES, or in places of power, trust, and authority, What think ye of Christ? Are you employing your power for Christ, and his cause and interest? —Ye that are MASTERS, or MISTRESSES of families, What think ye of Christ? Is it the language of your soul, As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord? Are you desiring, with Abraham, to command your children, and your household after you, to keep the ways of the Lord, and praying for them, and instructing them in the knowledge of Christ? —Again, Ye that are CHILDREN under your parents, O! What think ye of Christ? whose son is he? Do you know him to be the son of David, and the Son of God too? And would it not be your great happiness, to be the sons and children of God in him? Your father and mother may die, and leave you, therefore it is your best to seek an interest in him to be your everlasting Father. —Ye that are SERVANTS, What think ye of Christ? Would you have him for your Master and Lord? Is it not your greatest honour to be his servants, who is David's Lord? He that was David's son, was David's Master: and as David in spirit called him LORD; so, should not all that is within you you call him Lord? Serve your maſters honeſtly; but let him who is the Lord of lords be a maſter above all maſters to you.—Ye that are TRADESMEN, What think ye of Chriſt? Have you no trading with heaven? Does your civil trade in a world take up all your thoughts? Surely it is either an unlawful trade, or unlawfully uſed, that cannot conſiſt with this Chriſtian trade of giving the chief of your thoughts to him, that is the Chief among ten thouſand, Song v. 10.—Ye that are HUSBANDMEN, What think ye of Chriſt? Do you think more of your ploughs and oxen, or corn and cattle, and barns and goods, than of glorious Chriſt? Do you not know, whether you be tenants, feuars, or freeholders, that you are tenents to him, and hold your all of him? Are you more taken up in thinking of a great crop, or a good harveſt, than of him who is the Lord of the harveſt, both in a natural and ſpiritual ſenſe, and Lord of all that you have?—Ye that are mean COTTERS, What think ye of Chriſt? Wo's me, does your cote-houſe, and your cow, and your ſmall yard, ly nearer your heart than precious Chriſt? Oh! if you were acquainted with communion with him, you would find a mean cottage with Chriſt better than a princely palace without him.—Ye that are poor BEGGARS, What think ye of Chriſt? To the poor the goſpel is preached; to you is Chriſt and his unſearchable riches offered: but I fear there are ſome of you who think more of a half-penny than you think of Chriſt: everlaſting poverty and miſery will be your portion, if your thoughts be not changed and renewed. You come to communion-occaſions only to beg alms, not knowing that then you are at the beautiful gate of the temple, where you might get an alms that might enrich you for ever. You have the art of begging from men, and from door to door, but perhaps you never think of begging at Chriſt's door: Oh! will you begin to think, and to think of Chriſt, before the door of mercy be ſhut!—Again, ye that are RICH and WEALTHY in the world, What think ye of Chriſt? Hath he given you riches, think you, to ſteal away your hearts from him, or rather to improve them for, and conſecrate them to his honour, and for the good of others, eſpecially of the houſhold of faith? Men may court your favour, but you are to be pitied, as poor miſerable wretches, if you have your portion only in this life: though you had all the gold of Ophir, without Chriſt you have nothing but a ſhadow; you are deſtitute of the true ſubſtance.—You that are WISE, MIGHTY, or NOBLE, What think ye of Chriſt? May it not ſtartle you a little, that he hath ſaid, Not many wiſe after the fleſh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath choſen the fooliſh, weak, baſe and deſpicable things of the world: you have no reaſon to deſpair, for he hath not ſaid not any of them; but yet you have reaſon to think where you are, for he hath ſaid not many of them: and indeed, as an evidence of this, look to the great men of our day, you will ſee, that the generality of the nobility and gentry of Scotland and England, they think very little of Chriſt.—You that are SCHOLARS and STUDENTS, What think ye of Chriſt? What will all the wiſdom and literature, liberal arts and ſciences, and beſt accompliſhments in the world avail you, without Chriſt? They will qualify you to be more eminent ſervants to the devil, and his intereſt, if you learn not Chriſt together with them. You may be ſtudents of Latin, Greek, and Hebrew: ſtudents of philoſophy, aſtronomy, aſtrology, geography, and mathematics; yea, and ſtudents of divinity too; and yet loſe all your pains, if you do not ſtudy Chriſt.—Ye that are IGNORANT and ILLITERATE perſons, What think ye of Chriſt? It may be you cannot read the Bible; you was never at a ſchool; your parents died when you were young, or elſe were poor, and could not, or graceleſs, and would not ſet you to the ſchool; or if you can read, that is all: you know not ſo much as the firſt principles of the doctrine of Chriſt, and can hardly tell whoſe Son he is. If you could be brought this day to think highly of Chriſt, then ſhould you know, and follow on to know the Lord. Oh! neglect not henceforth the means of the knowledge of Chriſt! if you learn of him, he will make you wiſer than the reſt of the world, for as far behind as you are; even wiſe unto ſalvation.—Ye that are OLD men and women, What think ye of Chriſt? How many thouſands and millions of thoughts have you beſtowed upon the devil, the world, your luſts, and idols in your time, which would have been better beſtowed upon Chriſt, and the concerns of your eternal ſalvation? And now, that death, judgment, and eternity are hard at hand; Ah! how can you think of going down to the grave, and in to an everlaſting ſtate, without being in caſe to anſwer this queſtion to purpoſe, What think ye of Chriſt?—Ye that are YOUNG men and women, What think ye of Chriſt? Ye are now in the flower of your age; Oh! ſhall not Chriſt have the flower of your thoughts, that according to the Father's promiſe to him, he may have the dew of his youth, by your dedicating to him the dew of your youth, and fleeing all youthful luſts?—Ye that are CHILDREN and little-ones, lads and laſſes, boys and girls, capable to think, O! What think ye of Chriſt? Alas! my dear children, (to ſay a word to you) you may ſee what ill hearts you have, that make you think more of little plays and trifles, nignays and butterflies, than you think of Chriſt: you mind any thing ſooner than your Creator or Redeemer, whom God calls you to remember in the days of your youth. Therefore, after this, when you are playing, will you think more of praying? for God ſays, I love them that love me, and them than ſeek me early ſhall find me: and think more of reading the Bible, like young Timothy, who, from a child knew the holy ſcriptures.

In a word, if there be any perſons here who think I have not touched at their caſe, let them know, that the queſtion is to all and every one of you, What think ye of Chriſt? Oh graceleſs world! How unworthily do you think of Chriſt? The covetous man thinks more of a ſmall piece of money than of Chriſt, like Demas. Ambitious men think more of a hat than of Chriſt; like Haman, or as Saul, who ſaid to Samuel, Honour me before the people. The voluptuous man thinks more of a baſe luſt, than of Chriſt. The drunkard thinks more of a hearty cup, than of Chriſt. The glutton thinks more of a hearty meal, than of Chriſt. The proud man thinks more of himſelf, than of Chriſt. Pride of righteouſneſs thinks more of prayers, and attendance on ordinances, than of Chriſt. Pride of grace thinks more of a good frame, than of Chriſt. Pride of wiſdom thinks thinks more of a witticism, or of a fine discourse, than of Christ. Pride of beauty thinks more of a skin-deep complexion, than of Christ. Pride of bravery thinks more of a fine suit of clothes, than of Christ, though the silly sheep wore it on its back before them. Behold how Christ is vilified and undervalued in the world!

But, O BELIEVER! What think ye of Christ? Surely, if you be a gracious person, Christ will be to you a precious person; and you will wonder at the folly and madness of the world, that sets every thing above Christ, in their thoughts and esteem. Why, they are ignorant of Christ, and ignorant of themselves: if they were convinced of their sin and misery, they would think much of a Saviour and Redeemer; if they knew their disease, they would think much of such a physician to heal them; if they knew their nakedness, they would think much of such a garment to clothe them; if they knew their pollution, they would think much of such a fountain to wash them; if they knew their deep arrears to divine justice, and bankrupt-state, they would think much of such a Surety to pay their debt. Surely, if they knew, they would not thus despise the Lord of glory. However, be it known to all and every one of you, that this question is put to you; and you ought to put it to yourselves, before God, by discovering what you are, and where you stand. —And now, having opened the import of the question, in the several branches of it, I proceed next to

III. The third general head proposed, namely, to offer some reasons of the doctrine, why this is the great leading question in the Christian catechism, by which people are to try themselves; or why this question is put as a touch-stone, for discovering what metal we are of, What think ye of Christ? Why,

1. This question, What think ye of Christ? is put, because without right thoughts of Christ, there is no right thoughts of God; and without the knowledge of Christ, there is no true knowledge of God. God is an invisible God, and Christ only is the image of the invisible God, Col. i. 15. There are three ways to know, see, and comprehend God: one is, by the creatures he hath made; The invisible things of God are clearly seen from the creation of the world, even his eternal power and Godhead, Rom. i 20. Another is by the scriptures, for they make God known: but the third and only saving way of knowing and apprehending God, is by Christ. Now, the knowledge of God, that we have by the creatures, is like the knowledge we have of a man by his workmanship, which he hath wrought: if the workmanship be rare and excellent, such as hath required great art and strength, then we conceive the man that hath done it, hath been a wise man, a strong man, and the like, according to the nature of the workmanship: so, when we know God by the creatures, we conceive that the God that hath made them, must be a great God, a wise God, a powerful God. But next, the knowledge that we have of God by the scriptures; I mean, the literal knowledge, is like that knowledge that one gets of a famous learned man, by reading what he writes; if in his writing he hath discovered much learning, vast sense, and solid judgment, accordingly we conceive him to be a sensible judicious man: so, by reading the word, we conceive of God's excellency, as we do of a man by his writing; but the knowledge of God, that we get by Christ, is like that knowledge which one gets of a king, by having seen his image, or rather his son, who is as like him as he can look. Now, Christ is like the Father, and so truly and really his image, that though blind Arians cannot see the essential glory of the Father in him, yet he says to Philip, John xiv. 6. He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father. Now, in the book of the creature, we may see the being of God; in the book of the scripture, the will of God: but above all these, we have another book written, as it were, with the rays of the sun, even, CHRIST, whom we may call a book, for he is still ὁ Λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ, the Word of God, Rev. xix. 13.; but he is not made with ink and paper, he is a living book, a living picture and representative of the Father; the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, Heb. i. 3. The saving knowledge of God is by Christ, John i. 18. and in Christ, 2 Cor. iv. 6. And again, hence,

2. This question, What think ye of Christ? is put, because, without right thoughts of Christ, there can be no religion, and consequently no salvation. There is no coming to God, but in Christ; I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh to the Father, but by me, John xiv. 6. Without believing thoughts of Christ, then, we cannot worship God aright, or acceptably; for, Without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. xi. 6. And I have shewed you already, that right thinking is believing; and without believing in him, there is not salvation: He that believes not shall be damned; for, there is no other name given under heaven, whereby we must be saved; neither is there salvation in any other, Acts iv. 12. A man, that cannot think of Christ as he should, cannot perform a religious action as he ought: as the evil man, out of the evil treasure of his heart, brings forth evil things; so a good man, out of the good treasure of his heart, brings forth good things, Matt. xii. 35. Now, Christ in the heart, by his Spirit, is indeed a good treasure: and as natural thoughts produce natural actions, carnal thoughts carnal actions; so spiritual thoughts bring forth spiritual actions, and Christian thoughts Christian actions. True religion begins and advances with the right thoughts of God. I defy a man that knows the Lord, to pray or worship God comfortably, without some due apprehension of Christ: for, as in Christ alone God is well-pleased; so it is in the view of Christ, or of God in him, that the soul is well-pleased.

3. This question, What think ye of Christ? is put, because it is the best rule of self-examination, seeing, as mens thoughts of Christ are, so is their state; as men think in their heart, so are they, Prov. xxii. 9. If a man be risen with Christ, then his thoughts and affections are set on things above, where Christ sits on the right-hand of God, Col. iii. 1, 2. If you be Christians indeed, then you have Christ in you, the hope of glory, Col. i. 27.; and if Christ be in you, he will have a high room in your thought and esteem: and therefore it is laid down as the best rule of examination, 2 Cor. xiii. 5. Examine yourselves, whether you be in the faith; prove yourselves; know ye not your ownselves, how that Christ Jesus is in you, except ye be reprobates, ἀδόκιμοι, UNAPPROVED, or REJECTED? If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his, Rom. viii. 9. Now, they that that have the Spirit, do mind the things of the Spirit, the things of God, and particularly the CHRIST of God.

4. This queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? is put, becauſe this queſtion comprehends all other queſtions in religion. After the Phariſees had done with aſking their difficult queſtions about the law, Chriſt propoſes a queſtion, which ſwallows up all their queſtions, and comprehends all that is neceſſary to be known; and if we could anſwer this queſtion to purpoſe, we would be in caſe to anſwer all the queſtions that concerns both the law and the goſpel; for, Chriſt is the end of the law, and the ſum of the goſpel. They that know Chriſt, they know where to find all the righteouſneſs that the law requires, and all the grace that the goſpel promiſes: and ſo this queſtion is the compend of the Chriſtian catechiſm, and that not only with reſpect to knowledge, but alſo with reſpect to practice and experience. Chriſt is the ſum of practical godlineſs; for, without him you can do nothing; and by him ſtrengthening you, you can do all things. And Chriſt is the ſum of experimental religion alſo: that experience is not worth much, that hath not Chriſt for the ſum total of it; for, it is out of his fulneſs we receive grace for grace: and when a man can ſay, Beholding his glory, I have been changed into the ſame image, it is a rich experience. In a word, all queſtions that relate to Chriſtian experience may be reduced to this one, What think ye of Chriſt? If the queſtion be, what know ye of conviction? what know ye of converſion? what know ye of illumination? what know ye of regeneration? what know ye of juſtification? what know ye of ſanctification? what intereſt have ye in Chriſt? what part and portion have ye in the Son of Jeſſe? what ſhare have ye of his grace? and what hope of his glory? All ſuch queſtions may be anſwered with the anſwer of this, What think ye of Chriſt?

5. This queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? is put, becauſe he would, by this, put a ſtop, and give a check to all unneceſſary curious queſtions. They were but curious queſtions at beſt, that the Sadducees and Phariſees had aſked of Chriſt; but here Chriſt gives a check to them, by a queſtion of everlaſting moment. Some, that are but ſenſeleſs profeſſors, ſhew a deal of curioſity in ſome of their queſtions, ſuch as, Who was Melchizedeck's father? and the like: but, O here is a more neceſſary queſtion, Who was Chriſt's Father? What think ye of Chriſt? and whoſe Son is he? Here is an ocean of wiſdom, that you may profitably dive into, and yet never get to the bottom of it; for, who can anſwer that queſtion about Chriſt's Father, What is his name, and what is his Son's name, if thou canſt tell? Prov. xxx. 4.

6. This queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? is put, becauſe our thoughts are but loſt, if they be not beſtowed upon him. Till we be brought to think of Chriſt duly, all our thoughts are but loſt thoughts, and vain thoughts; O Jeruſalem, waſh thine heart from wickedneſs, how long ſhall vain thoughts lodge within thee? The Lord ſees the thoughts of men to be but vanity: our thoughts are like birds flying from mountain to mountain, and ſkipping from place to place; and like children running after butterflies, or ſuch like trifles, their pains are loſt; and ſo are our thoughts loſt, while they are not terminate upon Chriſt.

7. This queſtion is put, What think ye of Chriſt? becauſe there are ſo many miſtaken thoughts of Chriſt in the world: He is deſpiſed and rejected of men: the world is filled with prejudice againſt him, ſaying, Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? Therefore we ought to come and ſee, and conſider what he is, and whoſe ſon he is, that we may not run into the ſame common miſtake with the reſt of the world, and that we may not take him for a root out of a dry ground, having no form or comelineſs, Iſa. liii. 2.

8. This queſtion is put to us, What think ye of Chriſt? becauſe we have miſtaken thoughts of other things, while we have not right thoughts of Chriſt. The Phariſees had miſtaken thoughts of God and his law, becauſe they had not right thoughts of Chriſt; therefore Chriſt propoſes the queſtion. And indeed, Sirs, we miſtake God, we miſtake the law, we miſtake the goſpel, we miſtake ourſelves, we miſtake our duty, we miſtake every thing, as long as we have wrong notions of Chriſt. A man may miſtake ſo far, as to think that he is about his duty to God, and yet may be fighting againſt God, while Chriſt is not known or thought upon; Acts xxvi. 9. I verily thought that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jeſus of Nazareth, ſays Paul; and accordingly he was perſecuting Chriſt in his members: yet he thought he was doing God ſervice, till Chriſt diſcovered himſelf, and cried to him, ſaying, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? Then he began to think of Chriſt, ſaying, Who art thou, Lord? Why, I am Jeſus whom thou perſecuteſt. Whenever he began to think duly of Chriſt, then he ſaw he had been in a miſtake. People may think, verily they ought to do this and that againſt ſome of God's children; but, if they had other thoughts of Chriſt, they would have other thoughts of their duty, and would ſee that verily they ought not to do ſo.—Again, Paul thought his own righteouſneſs gain, before he knew Chriſt; but then he thought it loſs: What things were gain to me, theſe I counted loſs for Chriſt.

9. This queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? is put, becauſe thus you may come to underſtand what are his thoughts of you. It is true, His thoughts are not our thoughts, nor his ways our ways; for, as the heavens are higher than the earth, ſo are his thoughts higher than our thoughts: and hence he may have thoughts of mercy towards a poor ſoul, that thinks there is nothing but wrath in his heart againſt it. But this I ſay, that as to your knowing and underſtanding of his thoughts towards you; as, on the one hand, a man, in a natural ſtate, cannot have high, believing, and becoming thoughts of Chriſt, and ſo cannot conclude that Chriſt hath any favourable thoughts of him, while he remains thus in unbelief and deſpiſing of Chriſt; nay, he may know and underſtand, if he remain in that ſtate thoughtleſs of Chriſt, and diſregarding him, that Chriſt will come in flaming fire and take vengeance on him, 2 Theſ. i. 7, 8.: So, on the other hand, the man that hath got ſuch diſcoveries of Chriſt, as to create high, ſpiritual, and elevated thoughts of Chriſt, he may, from thence underſtand, that Chriſt thinks well of him, and that his thoughts towards him are thoughts of peace and not of evil, to give him an expected end. It is true, Chriſt's thoughts of the believer are not of a fleeting nature, up and down, high and low, as the believer's thoughts of him are; nay, Chriſt's thoughts are unchangeably the ſame: but, when the believer's thoughts of Christ are raised, then he is in best case to know and understand Christ's loving thoughts towards him. Why, even as a fountain may be known by the streams, so it is here; our knowledge, faith, love, and esteem of Christ, are but streams that flow from Christ's kind heart towards us; We love him, because he first loved us: we think of him, because he first thinks of us. And, therefore, by what we think of Christ, we may know what he thinks of us: if you think honourably of him, you may thence know he thinks favourably of you; if you think much of him, you may know he thinks much of you. O! may a believer say, I have reason to think much good of him; for, he is fairer than the sons of men, the spotless Lamb of God: but he hath reason to think much ill of me; for, I am all black and deformed, like hell and the devil. But I will tell you, believer, that all his thoughts of you make you to be in him, what he thinks you to be in him, however deformed you are in yourselves, and see yourselves to be; yet, I say, as his thoughts make things to be, (for he but thought there should be a world, and there was a world; whenever it was his mind that it should be, then it was; and whatever he thought to be, that it was, according to his thought:) and as his thoughts of you make you to be in him, what you are in him: so, if you think him fair, and altogether lovely, he is not behind with you, for he thinks you fair too; hence he says to the spouse, who was admiring his beauty, Thou art all fair, my love, there is no spot in thee, Song iv. 7. And he doth not say any thing, but what he thinks, his words express his thoughts; for, he cannot lye, who is the strength of Israel. Now, believer, if you cannot think, or believe, that you are altogether fair in him, because you see yourself altogether filthy in yourself; know, that if you saw yourself to be altogether fair in yourself, there would be no need of, or room for believing that you are all fair in him. Hence he hath left deformities about you, that there may be room for faith: therefore, let the feeling of your deformity make you humble; but let it not hinder your faith, which must not stand upon feeling, but must act contrary to it upon Christ's word: for, if you ground your faith upon what you feel in yourself, you will never believe what Christ says concerning your being all fair, and your being made the righteousness of God in him, 2 Cor. v. 21. If your faith then can act so as to raise your thoughts of Christ as altogether lovely, fair, and spotless, you have ground to conclude, by the same act of faith, that he hath high thoughts of you, as being all fair and spotless in him, whatever deformity you feel in yourself. Christ is infinitely more to you, believer, than you believe him to be: but, whatever you believe him to be, you may be sure he is that to you; for, faith's seeing, and having, is all one, even as believing is explained by receiving, and receiving by believing; As many as received him, to them gave he power [or PRIVILEGE] to become the sons of God, even to them who believe on his name, John i. 12. What you believe then, you receive; and what you receive, you have; and what you have in him, you are in him: having beauty, and riches, and righteousness in him; you are beautiful, rich, and righteous: and, consequently, when you believingly think he is all fair and glorious, you may know he thinks you all fair and glorious in him: and he thinks no more of you than what you really are in him.—The question then is put, because you may know, by what you think of Christ, what Christ thinks of you.

10. This question, What think ye of Christ? is put, because we can never think too much of him, who is the God-man, David's Son, and David's Lord; being God as well as man. O what a glorious object of our contemplation is here! You may think too much of yourselves, and your own righteousness; but you cannot think too much of Christ, and his righteousness: yea, when you think any thing of yourself, and your righteousness, you think too much of it; but when you think as much as you can of Christ, and his righteousness, you think too little of him.—You may think too much of creatures, but you cannot think too much of Christ. Yea, you may think too much of angels, as the apostle John did, when he fell down to worship towards the feet of the angel, Rev. xxii. 8. To think of the nature of angels, with that inward reverence and adoration which we are to have when we think of Christ, would be idolatry; and to think of Christ, with the same frame of heart as we do of angels, would be profaneness. Thus we may think too highly and reverently of angels; but we cannot think of Christ too highly, too reverently; nor can we think too much of him, who is the Lord of angels, and whom we are to honour even as we honour the Father.——These are the reasons of the question.

IV. The fourth general head proposed, was, To make Application of the whole. And it may be applied for the following uses. 1. For Information. 2. For Conviction. 3. For Trial. 4. For Lamentation. 5. For Exhortation. And, 6. For Direction.

First, It may be applied for Information, in these and the like lessons following.

1. Hence we may learn, seeing the great question in the Christian Catechism is, What think ye of Christ? then the sum of Christian knowledge lies in this one word, viz. CHRIST. It is not in Christ absolutely considered, by what he is in himself; but in God relatively considered, by what he is to us, namely, in Christ: therefore, I observe, the question is not, What think ye of GOD? but, What think ye of CHRIST? For, as God out of Christ stands in no relation to us sinners, but that of an enemy, and a consuming fire; so the nature, essence, and immensity of God, and what he is in himself, is not the great Christian question; but rather, what he is to us, and so what he is in Christ. All the saving manifestations of God to his people in scripture were still, not of God, absolutely and essentially, in what he was in himself, and in his nature; but relatively, in what he was to them: and so it was always in Christ. Thus, when he came to Abraham, he said, I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward, Gen. xv. 1. I am thy God, and the God of thy seed; which seed was Christ, Gal. iii. 16. in whom that covenant and promise was established to Abraham and his offspring. And when God manifested himself to the patriarchs that came of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, his ordinary way was to make himself known upon that ground of the new covenant established in Christ, Abraham's seed:

hence when he came to them, he uſed to ſay to them, I am the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob; that is, he manifeſted himſelf to them, not abſolutely, by what he was in his nature; but relatively, by what he was to them in Chriſt the promiſed ſeed.

If we begin to dive into that queſtion, What think ye of God? we may ſoon loſe ourſelves, and come to the philoſopher's demand of a day to anſwer that queſtion, and then a week, and then a month, and then tell it is impoſſible to anſwer it: nay, we ought not to be curious in ſearching into the nature of God, leſt we get a daſh; for, human philoſophy cannot reach it; yea, I doubt if angelical wiſdom can. It is the only pleaſant, ſaving, and profitable enquiry, to ſtudy this queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? Here we find what God is to us. To enquire what God is in himſelf, abſolutely and eſſentially, is no ſaving or profitable enquiry. What profit is it for a man, who lives under the north-pole, and ſees not the ſun for one half of the year, though he ſhould count the courſe of the ſun all that time that he ſees it not? Or, what profit were it for a man to go and count what rent the king of Morroco or emperor of China draws every year, and he gets none of it? As fooliſh is it for us to begin and ſtudy what God is abſolutely in himſelf, and not what he is relatively to us; therefore the queſtion is not, What think ye of GOD? but, What think ye of CHRIST? And this, by the bye, ſhews the difference that there is between learned fools and wiſe Chriſtians; why, the learned fools ſeek to know and comprehend what God is; what is this myſtery of the Trinity, and the like; and there he loſes himſelf: he ſeeks to know what God is himſelf, and not what he is to him. But the poor Chriſtian is herein wiſer than that learned clerk, for all his wit; for the Chriſtian ſtudies Chriſt, and ſo knows what God is to him, better than all the learned Rabbies with their curious ſpeculations: though yet the poor ſoul may otherwiſe be very ignorant and illiterate, yet it is wiſe unto ſalvation, becauſe he knows Chriſt, and Chriſt is made of God to him wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification and redemption: and when he knows Chriſt, he is upon the ſureſt and ſafeſt way to know God; for he ſees God in Chriſt, and God related to him in Chriſt; for Chriſt is our relation as God-man, Mediator. And indeed, Sirs, to believe in Chriſt, is to believe God's relation to us, and God reconciled to us: for, when we look to Chriſt, we ſee God in him; and when we ſee God in him, we ſee that he is reconciled in him to us, and well-pleaſed in him with us; 2 Cor. v. 19. God is in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelf. Mat. iii. 17. This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleaſed. I own, indeed, a man may be a believer, and yet apprehend God to be his enemy; but then he is not believing, he is not thinking of Chriſt by faith: it is an unbelieving thought he hath then of God; for a believing thought of Chriſt would give him another thought of God, even as a Friend and Father in him. This then, I hope, is an uſeful inference, That the ſum of Chriſtian knowledge is Chriſt.

2. Hence ſee what is the beſt matter for meditation, and the beſt rule for ſelf-examination. Here is the moſt noble ſubject of meditation, namely, to think of Chriſt; and here is the moſt excellent rule for examination, namely, to aſk our ſouls that queſtion, What think we of Chriſt? Meditation and ſelf-examination are duties much neglected among us; they are ſpiritual exerciſes, directly croſs and oppoſite to our vain, wandering, idle, and unfixed hearts. A man will rather go betwixt the ſtilts of a plough from morning to evening, than travel betwixt theſe two duties for one half hour, though yet they are like the ſtilts of that plough by which the fallow-ground of the heart muſt be plowed up; but when the thoughts begin to come in betwixt theſe two ſtilts of meditation and ſelf-examination, behold on a ſudden (to ſpeak it in broad Scots) they quit the plough, and run away with the harrows. No doubt, you will know this from ſad experience, that your thoughts are in this matter like wild vitious horſes, running mad here and there through the fields, without keeping any road, or obſerving any rule; but here is the beſt matter and rule, both for regulating our thoughts in meditation and ſelf-examination.—As for meditation, the beſt way is to think of Chriſt: why, you may think upon a promiſe, but out of Chriſt you will find no comfort in it; for, all the promiſes are Yea and Amen in him; and ſo you will not find it your own, but by looking to Chriſt: yea, you may think upon God, but out of Chriſt you will find no comfort in him; I remembered God, and was troubled, Pſal. lxxvii. 3.: but the antidote againſt that trouble is believing thoughts of Chriſt; therefore ſays Chriſt to his diſciples, Let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God, believe alſo in me, John xiv. 1. If you think upon the law, you will find there you are drowned in debt, both to the command and curſe, till once ye look to Chriſt, the end of the law for righteouſneſs. If you think upon your duties that God calls you to, you will find them a heavy taſk, till once you look to Chriſt, and then you will find his yoke is eaſy, and his commands are not grievous.—Again, as to ſelf-examination, the beſt rule here is to ſay to your ſouls, What think ye of Chriſt? They are but proud ſelf-conceited perſons that do not think highly of Chriſt, and God approves them not; 2 Cor. x. 17, 18. He that glories, ſays the apoſtle, let him glory in the Lord: for not he that commends himſelf is approved, but whom the Lord commends; intimating, that they that glory only in the Lord, they diſcommend themſelves, and are commended and approved of God; but they that do not glory in the Lord, nor think highly of him, they commend themſelves, but are diſcommended and diſapproved of God; yea, they deceive themſelves; If any man think himſelf to be ſomething, when he is nothing, he deceives himſelf, Gal. vi. 3. Self-conceit is ſelf-deceit: and as they are ſelf-deceivers who are ſelf-exalters: they think not much of Chriſt, who think much of themſelves; and ſo, to enquire what you think of Chriſt, is the beſt way to find yourſelf out, what you are in ſtate or frame. You may, by this rule, know how to judge of your own thoughts: you may think of a thouſand good things; you may think of ſermons, you may think of death, judgment, and eternity; but though you may think ſeriouſly on theſe ſubjects, yet the rule whereby to judge of the rectitude of your thoughts about them is here: do they lead you to high thoughts of Chriſt, in whom alone we can think of death, without horror; judgment, without terror; and eternity, without fear or dread?

3. Hence we may ſee, that Chriſt himſelf is the the beſt Judge of mens ſtate; for he can look in to the heart and thoughts of men, and ſay, What think ye of Chriſt? All judgment is committed to the Son of God, and he will caſt many whom the world approves; becauſe, whatever men think of them, yet he knows that they think little of him and his Father. Alſo, he will approve of ſome whom the world caſts; becauſe, however the world thinks little of them, yet he knows that they think much of him and his Father; for they know him, and whoſe ſon he is. Chriſt's queſtion ſhews, that he knows our thoughts; for, to whom ſhall we give an account of our anſwer to this queſtion? None in all the world knows what we think, but God himſelf; and Chriſt is God. Chriſt diſcovers the ignorance of the Phariſees here alſo, and ſhews that he knew their thoughts were amiſs: If he be David's ſon, ſays he, how does David in ſpirit call him Lord? Here they were confounded, and might have been convicted that their thoughts were naught. Indeed, this was one of theſe things that old Simeon declared concerning Chriſt, that he ſhould be a ſign that ſhould be ſpoken againſt, that the thoughts of many hearts might be revealed, Luke ii. 35. Thus, when Chriſt met with the woman of Samaria, he revealed many thoughts of her heart to her, and gave her a view of all her lewd tricks: Come and ſee a man, ſays ſhe, that told me all things that ever I did; is not this the Chriſt? As Satan preſented to our Lord Jeſus the whole body of the world at a glance; ſo Chriſt can let us ſee a black ſight of all our ſins at once, ſo as to force us to acknowledge that he is the Chriſt, that knows our hearts and thoughts. But,

4. Hence we may ſee, what is the great end and deſign of a goſpel-miniſtry, namely, to diſcover Chriſt, and remove the prejudices of people's minds againſt him; to rectify their miſtakes about him; and to fill them with a high opinion of him. The ſum of a goſpel miniſter's buſineſs, is, to commend his Maſter, ſaying, What think ye of Chriſt? and that both in his preaching, and praying, and catechiſing, and viſiting. The whole of their doctrine and practice is, as it were, a voice preaching Chriſt. If they preach the law, and its curſes and threatenings againſt Chriſtleſs and impenitent ſinners, it is to lead them to Chriſt, and to drive them to the city of refuge. If they preach faith, they make Chriſt the author and finiſher, as well as the object of it. If they preach repentance, they make Chriſt, as exalted by the right-hand of God to be a Prince and Saviour to give repentance, the fountain of it; and Chriſt crucified, viewed by faith, to be the immediate root of it. If they preach duties and new obedience, they make Chriſt the ALPHA and OMEGA of it.——Miniſters may indeed ſpeak much of Chriſt in their ſermons, and yet not preach Chriſt: As for example, If one ſhould preach of Chriſt mainly as a Law-giver, to be obeyed, and little or nothing of Chriſt as a Law-fulfiller, to be believed in, and ſerved from love, becauſe of his having ſaved us from the yoke of the law: for, a covenant of life and death, upon doing or not doing, may be preached, and called the goſpel of Chriſt, in a miſtake, while it is only the law that is preached, and not Chriſt, the end of the law for righteouſneſs: and you may know it by this among other things, the tendency of ſuch old-covenant doctrine, is to lead men to this queſtion, not, What think ye of Chriſt? but, What think ye of yourſelves? and, What are you doing, that you may have eternal life? Why, the man begins to think, God is ſtanding upon ſome doing terms yet with him; and therefore, in order to life, he muſt do ſo and ſo: thus he is led to himſelf, and not to Chriſt. But goſpel-doctrine tends to lead a man wholly out of himſelf, and wholly in to Chriſt; for, whatever be the text, the ſtrain of goſpel-doctrine is, What think ye of Chriſt? It is not the deſign of goſpel-miniſters to commend themſelves, but Chriſt. There is a ſett of miniſters, ſay ſome, that ſet up themſelves above others, and ſtudy only to commend themſelves, to the diſparagement of all others, as if none but they were goſpel-miniſters; but, my friends, if any man's concern for Chriſt's cauſe and intereſt, or for his Maſter's glory, ſhall commend him, he needs not think ſtrange though the world of Phariſees envy him, as they did Chriſt himſelf, when his doctrine and life commended him. I will tell you what commendation a goſpel-miniſter hunts moſt after; it is that of Paul, 2 Cor. iii. 1, 2, 3. to have an epiſtle commendatory in the hearts of hearers, by the power of the Spirit of God accompanying the word, and leaving an impreſſion there, that it is indeed the word of God, and not of men, and that God is in it of a truth; he would deſire, with the ſame apoſtle, 2 Cor. iv. 2. to commend himſelf, by the manifeſtation of the truth, to every man's conſcience in the ſight of God. Let truth be nick-named and reproached, as it will, the evidence of truth will commend itſelf to the conſciences of all the lovers thereof. Mean time, it is poſſible that a man may commend Chriſt, in order to commend himſelf as an evangelical preacher; for ſuch a good work he is indeed commendable, but for ſuch a bad end, it is to God only that he is accountable. But it is poſſible alſo to know if a man intend not himſelf by preaching Chriſt; for ſometimes there is ſuch a power and virtue attending the word, and ſuch a ſmell and ſavour of heaven with the preacher, as carries a ſecret demonſtration of his ſpirituality and purity of intention into the heart even of the carnal byſtanders, let be theſe whom he hath enlightened with the ſpirit of diſcerning, to know the voice of Chriſt from a ſtranger. However, Sirs, think of miniſters what ye will, the great queſtion is, What think ye of Chriſt? Wo to us, if our only deſign be to bring people to ſay, What think ye of ſuch a miniſter, and what think ye of ſuch a ſermon? If we make Chriſt a covert for raiſing our own applauſe, he can inſtantly command an angel to ſmite us, as he did Herod, and order us to be eaten up of worms, for not giving God the glory. Oh! what ſhould ye think of us? though we magnify our office as ambaſſadors of Chriſt, yet, in ourſelves, ſome of us are as frail, feeble, ſinful pieces of duſt as any of you; we are among the chief of ſinners, as well as you; we need the blood and Spirit of Chriſt to juſtify and ſanctify us, as well as you: let us decreaſe, but let Chriſt increaſe. If any of us be made inſtruments of good to your ſouls, let it engage you to think the more of Chriſt, that could work ſuch a work by ſuch weak and unlikely inſtruments: He puts the treaſure in earthen veſſels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us. Whatever honour God calls you to put upon them for their work's ſake, yet if your eſteem centre upon the miniſter, or his work, ſaying, O I think much of such a minister, and I think much of such a sermon, you need to begin to think better; for the grand question is, What think ye of Christ? It is indeed the best sermon that works the highest thoughts of Christ.

Secondly, The second use is for conviction and reproof to all those that are filled with unworthy and unbecoming thoughts of Christ, with ignorant and erroneous thoughts of him. Some have no thoughts of Christ at all; some that think of him, yet think nothing of him; some think little of him; some think hardly and harshly of him; some think meanly and basely of him: to speak of all the base and mean thoughts of Christ that the world is filled with, would be impossible. Oh! how basely do the Arians think of Christ, and his supreme Godhead! If I had not found it necessary to confine myself to the first branch of Christ's question here, What think ye of Christ? The other branch, namely, Whose Son is he? might have led me particularly to have treated the doctrine of Christ's Sonship, and eternal Godhead, and coequality with the Father, in opposition to the damnable heresy, which some tell us is creeping in to Scotland, as well as it is raging in England and Ireland: I shall only say, that the question concerns them, as well as the Pharisees of old, What think ye of Christ? and, Whose Son is he? Oh! can they say no more than, with the Pharisees, that he is the Son of David? Then, How does David in spirit call him Lord? And if he be David's Lord and God, how can he be so, and yet not co-equal with the Father? For we have not two Lords, or two Gods; The Lord our God is one Lord; therefore Christ, being Lord, must be One with the Father essentially: Christ is the true God, and eternal life. But I cannot now enlarge on this subject. Oh! may Arian doctors begin to read over the Christian catechism again, and learn to answer this question, What think ye of Christ?—Again, as Arians think nothing of his Godhead, but, as if it were, an inferior deity; so some, that pretend a greater respect to him, yet think but basely of him: Papists think nothing of the imputation of his righteousness; Socinians think nothing of the sacrifice of his death; Arminians think nothing of the power of his grace; Quakers think nothing of his word; Atheists think nothing of his Spirit; Deists think nothing of his revelations.—If we look out to the world, the Pagans have no thoughts of him at all: the Mahometans think him nothing but a great prophet at best, and inferior to Mahomet; the Jews think him nothing but an impostor, and that he is not the Christ, but only the carpenter's son; or, it may be, a blasphemer, that had a devil.—And, again, if we look in to the church, even the purest churches in this world, among which I would fain hope the poor church of Scotland hath not yet lost the vogue; yet, Oh! how many dark and confused notions; yea, unwarrantable and unworthy thoughts of Christ may be there discovered, even among these churches that are supposed to be pure, Christian, protestant, and reformed churches! It were endless, to speak of doctrinal and practical errors that swarm in the churches, whereby contempt is poured upon Christ and his doctrine, his truth, his gospel, and his yoke; his loving yoke of gospel-obedience. What low thoughts of Christ appear in the strain of doctrine, that tends to confound the old and new covenant, law and gospel, faith and works, without ridding marches duly betwixt Christ, and all his rivals and competitors, that seek to share with him in the glory of salvation-work! What low thoughts of Christ appear in that sort of practice, that consists either in a life of legal righteousness, or a life of open wickedness! What low thoughts of Christ, as our righteousness, appear from every thing that tends to lead sinners back to the law as a covenant of works! And what low thoughts of Christ, as our sanctification, appear from every thing that tends to lead sinners off from the law, as a rule of holiness! How is Christ, and his merit, and righteousness disesteemed, to the encouragement of self and self-righteousness! And, how is Christ, and his Spirit and grace disesteemed, to the encouragement of sin and licentiousness*! It is not my business to expose the nakedness of any: they are singular persons, that are helped to guard against all right-hand and left-hand extremes, so as to think no less of Christ as a Lord, than Christ as a Saviour; and to esteem a whole Christ, without setting up one part of Christ against another: but my work especially is, to strike at the root of all that disesteem of Christ, that takes place in the world, especially in the visible church. Whence is it, that the world thinks so little of Christ, and so naughtily of him? Why,

1. Ignorance is a cause of it, Ignoti nulla cupido; as it is impossible for them to undervalue Christ, who have the saving knowledge of him; so it is not possible that any can prize him, whom they do not know. Many are like Festus, Acts xxv. 19. who told Agrippa, that Paul's enemies had questions against him, concerning one JESUS; Christ is to them a certain man, one Jesus, but for their part they know little of him, and are indifferent about him: as a blind man, what he does not see, he cares not for, though he be told of it as never so fair and beautiful; so natural men are blind, 2 Cor. iv. 4.; they can see no beauty or comeliness in Christ, for which they should desire him. Therefore, though they may hear of his glory and comeliness, and be a little moved therewith, yet they care not so much for him, as to give him the highest room in their thoughts and esteem.

2. Unbelief is another cause why people think little of Christ; if they would believe, they would see the glory of God in him, and see him a glorious and lovely object: but, through unbelief, Christ is lothsome instead of lovely; hence his doctrine is lothsome, his righteousness, his holiness, his cross. Unbelief makes people think Christ is a cheat, and God is a liar, and that he says what he hath no mind to do; it makes them think that he is not able to save, or that he is not willing to save. Oh! how basely does unbelief think of Christ! Unbelief also will make a man think God like unto himself, and an approver of his sin, Psal. l. 21. Thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself; and so it makes them to think of Christ but very basely.

3. Pride and self-righteousness is another cause why people think little of Christ, Rom. x 3.

* The above topics are all touched at, and many of them treated at considerable length, in Serm. IV. VIII. X.

While people think much of themſelves, and their doing, they cannot think much of Chriſt, and his righteouſneſs. This is that legal righteouſneſs that makes men to do with the garment of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, as the Ammonites did with the garments of David's meſſengers, they clipt them ſo ſhort, that they were not able to hide their ſhame: but if it was a terror and ſmiting to David's heart, to cut off but a little of the lap of Saul's garment, ought it not to be a terror to us, to cut off a lap of Chriſt's garment, or to clip it ſo ſhort, as to think that it cannot cover us completely, without ſome of our own rotten righteouſneſs ſewed to it?—Again, it is this legal principle that makes believers themſelves think it cannot be that they are accepted as righteous, perfectly righteous in the ſight of God, through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed; why, becauſe they want a feeling of that righteouſneſs in themſelves, which the legal heart is ready to make the foundation of pardon and acceptance: but, as Luther ſaid, "We muſt not feel, but "believe, that we are thus righteous;" yea, it is this hidden principle of ſelf-righteouſneſs, that will make a miniſter preach Chriſt alone for righteouſneſs, as if he were as much for exalting Chriſt, as any that ever preached; and yet, before ever you know well where you are, you will find him bringing in ſome legal duty or qualification, in order to your being juſtified, that will ſpoil all; juſt like an untoward milk-cow, that will let down a good deal of milk very well, but then, with an unhappy kick of her foot, ſhe will tumble all down to the ground, when ſhe hath done: even ſo, the ſincere milk of the word of life, and juſtification through Chriſt's righteouſneſs alone, may be let down abundantly, that you would think the man as evangelical as Paul himſelf, or any body that ever preached the goſpel: but, behold, of a ſudden, the legal foot gives it a kick, and ſpills all when he hath done, or elſe the law ſets her foot among the midſt of the milk; I mean, mixes ſome dirty righteouſneſs, and qualification of our own, with the fair and clean milk of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, ſo as the poor ſoul loaths to take a drink of it. Why, I thought this milk was for me, and this righteouſneſs of Chriſt was for me; but there came in a qualification, that, before ever I could be juſtified, I behoved to do ſo and ſo, and be ſo and ſo humbled, and penitent; and ſure I am, I want ſuch a qualification, and therefore all is loſt to me. But, poor ſoul, whatever come in this way, tending to make you look in to yourſelf, and ſtand off from Chriſt, you may know it is but a ſwitch of the law of works; ſlight it, and ſet it of, if it hinder you from thinking of Chriſt as your ALL, and from buying and drinking his wine and milk, without money and without price.

4. Carnal reaſon is another cauſe, why people think little of Chriſt; for, the natural man receives not the things of the Spirit of God, they are fooliſhneſs to him, 1 Cor. ii. 14. There is natural reaſon, which is ſo much cried up at this day, when man goes about to meaſure God's truths, and ſpiritual myſteries, with this ſhort line of human reaſon; and finding, that reaſon agrees with theſe myſteries, no more than the ſound of ram-horns, in the view of carnal reaſon, was like to bring down the walls of Jericho; behold, no fault muſt be found with lady Reaſon, but Chriſt's goſpel, and the myſteries thereof, muſt bear the blame, namely, That they are fooliſh and abſurd; and therefore not to be received or eſteemed by ſuch wiſe heads as they are, who little remember the apoſtle's admonition, 1 Cor. iii. 18. If any man will be wiſe, let him become a fool, that he may be wiſe. Hence Luther gave it as an infallible mark that the goſpel was not truly preached, and was not the goſpel indeed, namely, "If it was ſo brewed, "fitted, and adapted unto reaſon, that all ap-"proved of it, and yielded to it peaceably; "for, how then ſhould Chriſt be a ſign that "ſhould be ſpoken againſt, Luke ii. 34. and a ſtone "of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence?" This leads me to a

5. Cauſe, why people think ſo little of Chriſt, namely, the calumny caſt upon the goſpel of Chriſt, and the diſpenſers of it. Is it poſſible for the wiſdom of the world to hold her peace from ſpeaking againſt that which ſhe judges to be fooliſhneſs? How then ſhall Chriſt be not only for the riſing, but the falling of many in Iſrael? "Mark, ſays Luther, where this fall is, even "in Iſrael, in that people that ſeemed to be "Chriſt's only people, and upon Chriſt's ſide." It is even in Iſrael that many fall, and in Iſrael that Chriſt is ſpoken againſt. Thus, when he came to be a miniſter of the old and antient truths of God, to confirm the promiſes made unto the fathers, Rom. xv. 8. when he began to preach the ſame, the greateſt part of the multitude cried out, What new doctrine is this? Mark i. 27. Whence we may ſee, that when a church hath gone off from any antient truth, or old way of expreſſing it, no ſooner are theſe old truths revived, or ſet in their antient frame, than preſently it is called a new ſcheme of doctrine †. However, by this means, Satan gets much of his will; for it tends to make people think little of Chriſt, and his goſpel.

6. Diviſion is another cauſe, why people think ſo little of Chriſt. There is a twofold diviſion that I mean; there is not only an outward church-diviſion, but an inward heart-diviſion. No doubt the former hath a great hand in making many to ſlight Chriſt; for, when a church is divided, the generality of people are apt to be ſtumbled: Why, ſay they, we know not whom to believe, and what ſide to turn to; every party ſays they are for Chriſt, and therefore the indifferent ſort of people think we will even let Chriſt and them both alone. But it is eſpecially inward heart-diviſion that I mean: when the heart is divided betwixt Chriſt and the world, betwixt Chriſt and idols or luſts: the world, and the luſts thereof, will be ſure to carry away the heart, that it cannot think highly of Chriſt, while it thinks ſo much of other things. A man may as ſoon, with one eye, obſerve the ſtars, and with the other, meaſure the earth at the ſame time, as he can think highly of Chriſt, and his idols too: therefore, when Satan, like the pretended mother, ſays, Let it be neither thine nor mine, but divide it; God, who is the Lord of the heart, ſays, Let the devil rather have all; for God will either have all, or none. Now, when men have any approved idol in the heart, Chriſt is deſpiſed, his rival gets all: the divided heart, then, is a heart ſeparate, and joined to idols; and this diviſion cauſes diſeſteem of Chriſt, ſo as the man cannot think of Chriſt, he muſt, of neceſſity, think of

ſome other thing. See how they that were invited to the great ſupper, the goſpel-banquet, put it off with excuſes; Luke xiv. 18. I have bought a piece of ground, and I muſt needs go and ſee it, ſays one: mark the phraſe, I muſt needs go; he pleads neceſſity, and neceſſity hath no law. When the heart is not wholly for Chriſt, of neceſſity it will be for the world, and the luſts thereof: and he that is not for Chriſt, Satan will conſtantly find him enough of buſineſs to take up his thoughts, and which the man will reckon ſo neceſſary, that he will have no leiſure to think of Chriſt. Now, when this queſtion is propoſed, What think ye of Chriſt? or, when Chriſt is offered, there are two ſorts of perſons that ſhew very little eſteem of him; yea, that ſhew they do nothing but deſpiſe him in their heart: the apoſtle compares them to dogs and ſwine, 2 Pet. ii. 22.

(1.) There are ſome like ſwine, namely, the profane worldly people; for, as ſwine think more of the mire, than any thing elſe; ſo, if one go to drive him away from the mire, he only gives a grunt, and away he goes to the mire again, or elſe rooting his ſnout in the earth: ſo profane and worldly people love to wallow in the mire of ſin, and to be rooting and rotting in the earth; and if any go about to drive them from ſin, and to pull their noſes out of the earth, they go away grunting and grumbling in their heart, that they cannot be allowed their neceſſary pleaſure and profit; and they return to the wallowing in the mire, and rooting in the earth, as eagerly as ever. All the anſwer they give to the queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? is a grunt; they are a little diſturbed about it, and moved a little to mutter ſome words, according as they are affected; but away they go grunting, with their mouth towards the duſt: it is not Chriſt they are thinking of.

(2.) There are others like dogs, namely, legaliſts, and ſelf-juſticiaries, that are worſe enemies to the goſpel of Chriſt, than the worldling, or openly profane; for, as a dog thinks more of a ſtinking carcaſe than any thing elſe; ſo, if you go about to drive the dog from his vomit, or ſtinking carrion, he will be ready either to bark or bite, or flee in your face: even ſo, legaliſts and ſelf-juſticiaries, think more of the ſtinking carcaſe of their own righteouſneſs, and legal duties, than any thing elſe; and when any goes about to draw them away from the high eſteem of the filthy rags of their own righteouſneſs, ſhewing the lothſomneſs and vileneſs thereof, the abſolute neceſſity of being wholly denied thereto, and adorned with nothing but Chriſt's perfect righteouſneſs for juſtification before God; if we ſhow them how God juſtifies the ungodly, and how the righteouſneſs of God, without the works of the law, is manifeſted in the goſpel; why, then they go away from ordinances, barking and biting, ſlandering, and calumniating the goſpel, which they do not underſtand or eſteem, as if it were a doctrine of licentiouſneſs, and an encouragement of ſin; and they return to their vomit, their ſtinking carrion, neglecting the heavenly carcaſe, to which the believing eagles gather together, that they may live by faith upon the Son of God.——Now, both theſe ſorts of perſons, however differently affected, yet agree in their ſlighting of Chriſt, upon different grounds. What do they think of Chriſt? Nothing at all. The Lord convince and awaken ſuch!

Thirdly, The third uſe may be for examination and trial. Let this great queſtion of the Chriſtian catechiſm be a touchſtone, to try what metal you are of, and to underſtand what is your ſtate now, and what will be your lot for ever: it is, and will be, according as you anſwer this queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? For helping you into this enquiry, I would direct you to try it, 1. By the quality of your thoughts. 2. By the object thereof.

1. Try yourſelves upon this queſtion, by the quality of your thoughts; for it is not a ſimple thought, like a flying vapour, that is here intended, but a qualified thought, that you are to try yourſelves by; for example,

1. Right and becoming thoughts of Chriſt are preferring and ſuperlative thoughts; Chriſt is beyond compariſon to the man: the language of ſuch a thought of Chriſt is this, O what can he be compared unto! If you compare him to a roſe; he is the Roſe of Sharon: If you compare him to a lily; he is the Lily of the valley: If you compare him to a ſun; he is the Sun of righteouſneſs: If you compare him to a ſtar; he is the bright and Morning-ſtar: If you compare him to a chief and honourable worthy; he is the Chief among ten thouſand: If you compare him to a head; he is the Head of principalities and powers: If you compare him to a flower; he is the Flower of the ſtem of Jeſſe: If you compare him to a branch; he is the Branch of righteouſneſs: If you compare him to an advocate; he is an Advocate with the Father: If you compare him to a counſellor; he is the wonderful Counſellor: If you compare him to a king; he is the King of kings and Lord of lords: If you compare him to a prince; he is the Prince of peace; the Prince of the kings of the earth: If you compare him with men; he is fairer than the ſons of men: If you compare him with angels; he is the Lord of angels; let all the angels of God worſhip him.—The man does in his thoughts prefer Chriſt to all things in heaven and earth; Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon the earth that I deſire beſides thee, Pſal. lxxiii. 25. In all things he gives him the pre-eminence, Col. i. 18. Then again,

2. Right and becoming thoughts of Chriſt are admiring and adoring thoughts; exalting and extolling thoughts: if you have due thoughts of him in your heart, you will find in your heart to bleſs him, ſaying, as Pſal. cxviii. 26.

Bleſſed is he, in God's great name,
That cometh us to ſave:
We, from the houſe which to the Lord
Pertains, you bleſſed have.

And, O magnify the Lord with me: you would wiſh that all the world would fall a bleſſing, and praiſing, and extolling him. They are glorying and glorifying thoughts: the man's heart glories in the Lord, and glorifies the Lord, and would deſire his glory may be advanced above the heavens. Why, becauſe,

3. Right and becoming thoughts of Chriſt are ſpiritual and ſublimating thoughts; natural thoughts can riſe no higher than nature, 1 Cor. ii. 14.; but ſpiritual thoughts, being managed by the conduct and influence of the Spirit of God; The Spirit ſearcheth all things, even the deep things of God. Indeed, the Spirit of God is the all in all of theſe thoughts; for he comes, according to the promiſe, and glorifies Chriſt, by receiving the things of Chriſt, and ſhewing them unto the ſoul, John xvi. 14. They that are after the fleſh, do do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit, the things of the Spirit, Rom. viii. 5. Indeed, the things of Christ, and the things of the Spirit, are the same; no human natural wisdom can reach to them: wise naturalists may indeed dream of them, and speak of them like a man speaking in his dream of the light of the sun, while yet it is dark night with him, and he was never awakened, convinced, and savingly illuminated.

4. Right and becoming thoughts of Christ are applying and appropriating thoughts; insomuch that the man takes Christ into his soul, as he takes meat and drink into his body; Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, John vi. 54. This is that believing thought, without which a man receives no benefit, any more than a man that wants meat can have benefit by thinking upon meat, without eating thereof. The man takes in Christ to himself for his own good. To think of Christ, without applying him, is like a man thinking of meat and drink, without taking it; which does no good.

QUEST. But can there be no right thinking of Christ, without applying? Indeed, man, the thought is but a vain thought, an unbelieving thought, an unprofitable thought, if it be not either an applying thought of Christ, or a thought of Christ in order to application; like a sick man receiving a cordial out of his physician's hand, he takes it from him, not to hold it in his hand, and no more, but in order to make it his own, by drinking it down for his refreshment, healing, and strengthening. The man's taking the cordial in his hand, is not properly the taking that the physician means, but his taking it in to himself, or down into his stomach, is the proper taking of it: yet the former taking of it in his hand is right, in so far as it is in order to the other; so here, a bare thinking of Christ is of no avail, unless it be an applying thought, or a thought in order to application: and though the thoughts of Christ, in order to application, be not application itself properly; yet it is good, in so far as it is a taking Christ into your hand, in order to take him into your heart, and that for your own soul's refreshment, life, health, and everlasting salvation.

5. Right thoughts of Christ are sinking and serious thoughts, in opposition to swimming, roving, and indifferent thoughts. Some have a wild thought about Christ, that if he be good for any thing, they shall have a share of him, as well as others: but what he is, and how they shall come by him, they never deeply pondered; for they were never touched with a sense of their sin, misery, and undone state without him. A swimming thought of Christ is like that of some ignorant creatures, crying out in a surprise, Christ, have mercy on us; but the thought that sinks deep is like that of the publican smiting on his breast, and crying, Lord, have mercy on me a sinner. But there are learned fools in the world, as well as ignorant ones, that have nothing but swimming thoughts, roving speculations; and yet, it may be, they can speak of Christ to better purpose, you would think, than one that is exercised to godliness: but yet these two sorts differ as far as the pleading of an orator differs from the pleading of a malefactor; the one vents his great wit, but the other his heart-concern. Again,

6. Right thoughts of Christ are trading and trafficking thoughts; the man hath it for his constant trade, to think highly of Christ, and give him the chief room in his heart and esteem. In this respect, his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord. The desire of our soul is to thy name, says the church, and to the remembrance of thee. With my soul have I desired thee in the night, and with my spirit within me will I seek thee early, Isa. xxvi. 8, 9. There was a trading with heaven late at night, and early in the morning. Yea, David makes it morning, and evening, and mid-time of the day; yea more, seven times a day; and yet most of all, when he says, My soul breaks for the longing that it hath to thy righteous judgments at ALL TIMES. It is a constant trading. True, indeed, there are innumerable intermissions in the believer's Christian thoughts and desires: but as we say, It is such a man's trade to buy and sell, while he follows that employment, though it is not every moment he is thus occupied; but though there be several intermissions in the exercise of his employment, yet the bent of his mind goes that way: so here, we may call this the believer's constant trade; because, whatever intermissions there are in this, his mental trading with heaven, yet the bent of his soul is towards Christ: yea, it is not only his business, but his pleasure; and that makes him go on. If a man thrive at his trade, he takes pleasure in it; and if not, he is in danger of giving it over. We go sometimes upon business to these we never saw, nor care for seeing again, and whom we take little pleasure to converse with: they that never go to Christ but merely upon business, and never find any pleasure in conversing with him, surely they are too great strangers to him. Certainly, believer, there is too much strangeness betwixt Christ and you, if your business you have ado with Christ be seldom your pleasure, or if it be merely business that takes you to him, saying, "I want "a pardon, I want a promise, I want this and "that." But, is there never a love-visit you make to him, saying, "Lord, I have got a par- "don, and I am come to bless thee for it; I "have got a promise, and I am come to praise "thee for it; thy company is sweet, and I am "come to get thee in my arms, that I may have "more of thy embraces?" O sweet trading! My meditation of him shall be sweet. Indeed, these thoughts of Christ that are right, are glad, joyful, satisfying thoughts.

7. Right thoughts of Christ are humbling thoughts, and yet emboldening thoughts. O but these that think highly of Christ, cannot but think meanly of themselves, saying with Job, Now mine eye seeth thee; wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes. The believer, that thinks duly of Christ, hath both the highest and lowest thoughts in the world; the highest thoughts of Christ, and the lowest thoughts of himself: and yet this humility doth not hinder his boldness; for, he hath boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, Heb. x. 19. The more he thinks of Christ, the more humble thoughts he has of himself; and yet, the more he thinks of Christ, the more bold he is towards God. It is a bold humility, and a humble boldness; hence, when he is worshipping God in the Spirit, two other things concur, namely, a rejoicing in Christ Jesus, and a having no confidence in the flesh, Phil. iii. 3. Oh! says the soul, I have no ground of confidence in myself, but I have all

all ground of confidence in Chriſt! Unworthy wretch am I, as ever was out of hell; but behold, there is the worthy blood, the worthy righteouſneſs of Chriſt, the Lord our righteouſneſs; therefore, unworthy as I am, I am warranted to be bold in claiming all through Chriſt. I ſee the holy of holies is open to me through this blood of Chriſt.

8. Right thoughts of Chriſt are aſſimulating thoughts, ſanctifying and transforming thoughts; 2 Cor. iii. 18. But we all with open face, beholding as in a glaſs the glory of the Lord, are changed into the ſame image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. They that ſee Chriſt, cannot but love him, and deſire to be like him; for there is a ſmitting favour in his face. They that are in heaven are like him, becauſe they ſee him as he is: the beatifical viſion brings in full conformity to him. Now, a ſpiritual thought, and a believing thought, is a mental ſight; a fiducial viſion of him: and the more of this, the more conformity to him in holineſs. The thought that endears Chriſt, imbitters ſin: a man cannot think duly of the lovelineſs of Chriſt, without thinking of the lothſomneſs of ſin. O! when the Sun of righteouſneſs ariſeth, there is a heat that accompanies the light, and warms the heart. And, indeed high thoughts of Chriſt do warm the heart, and make it burn within him; and heart-warming thoughts tend to burn up corruption; for, as Chriſt comes in to the heart, ſin muſt go out, according to the meaſure and degree of his coming. As a talent of gold, or ſome weighty metal, falling into a veſſel of water, daſhes out all that is in the veſſel, to make room for itſelf; ſo, Chriſt coming in to the heart, daſhes out ſin to make room for himſelf. And, indeed, they that have honourable thoughts of Chriſt in their hearts, cannot have favourable thoughts of ſin; becauſe, whenever Chriſt comes into the thoughts, if he do not daſh out the life, yet he daſhes out the love of ſin. What, man! will you ſay that Chriſt is in you, and that you have faith, and yet the love of ſin as great as ever, and you can indulge yourſelf in whoredom, and drunkenneſs, and lying, and ſwearing, and Sabbath-breaking, or any other piece of wickedneſs and profanity. You will never make a good man believe that Chriſt is in you, or that you have faith, even though you ſhould ſwear by your faith, as ſome do, who even thereby teſtify to the world, that they have no faith at all; being ſo prodigal of it, as to ſwear away the faith which they ſay or think they have. So far as Chriſt comes in, ſin goes out. It is poſſible indeed, that a believer that hath Chriſt in him, may think that he hath more ſin than ever, and that ſin is on the growing hand, inſtead of the decaying; but he is miſtaken: it is in this caſe as it is with a cup of water; put ſilver and gold in a cup, and the water ſwells up; and the more you put in, the more will the water ſwell and run over, that you would think there is ſtill more water than before, the more gold is put in: Chriſt is the tried gold; and the more the veſſel of the believer's heart is filled with it, the more may ſin appear to riſe and ſwell, and run over all its banks: this frightens and terrifies the poor ſoul, becauſe now he ſees that which, it may be, was hid in the veſſel of his heart before, and out of his ſight. But it is not that there is more ſin, more water than before, but more gold caſt in; only every daſh perhaps makes the water flee about, that he thinks he was never ſo full of ſin and corruption as now: yet ſtill it holds good, Chriſt's coming in makes ſin flee out; and the more it ſeems to riſe and ſwell, the more does the ſoul's indignation riſe and ſwell againſt it. All right thoughts of Chriſt are ſanctifying thoughts.

9. High thoughts of Chriſt are new thoughts: they that ſuppoſe they have thought well enough of Chriſt all their days, and have no better thoughts, no higher thoughts, no weightier thoughts, no clearer thoughts of him than ever they had, ſurely they are ſtrangers to this eſteem of Chriſt that we are enquiring into: If any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature; old things are done away, and all things are become new; and new thoughts among the reſt. Where grace comes, there the wicked man forſakes his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; his carnal thoughts, his legal thoughts: they are changed into ſpiritual thoughts, evangelical thoughts, ſuch as he never had before. And,

10. New thoughts of Chriſt will bring in new words and new actions; the words follow the thoughts. You may then turn the queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? to another, What ſpeak ye of him? for, Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth ſpeaketh. If you think it ill breeding, or ungenteel manners, as many do, to ſpeak of Chriſt and ſpiritual things, and cannot drop a word for him from Sabbath to Sabbath, who can believe that you think highly of Chriſt. Nay, that which is moſt in the heart and thoughts, will be moſt in your lips.—The actions alſo follow the thoughts: can you think highly of Chriſt, and yet do nothing for him? Nay, new and precious thoughts of Chriſt will bring in new goſpel-obedience from a principle of love to him.——Thus you may try yourſelves now on this queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? by the quality of your thoughts. Examination is the very deſign of the queſtion, namely, to diſcover what our thoughts of Chriſt are; and therefore I inſiſt mainly upon this.—— But, having tried yourſelves by the quality of your thoughts,

2*dly*, Try yourſelves by the object thereof, namely, CHRIST: What think ye of CHRIST? And here ſuch a large field preſents itſelf, that it is impoſſible I can go through it all. Beſides what was ſaid on the doctrinal part, I would aſk ſome further queſtions concerning Chriſt, not only for examination, but for raiſing your eſteem of him.

1. What think ye of his eminient ſtation he is in as Mediator betwixt God and you, and his relation to God and you; his relation to God by nature, as his eternal Son; and by office, as his righteous Servant? God calls you to wonder at him in this ſtation; Iſa. xlii. 1. Behold my Servant, whom I uphold; mine Elect, in whom my ſoul delighteth. His Father called him forth to ſerve him and you, and to ſerve him for your ſake; to ſerve him as a Redeemer, to ranſom you; to ſerve him as a Surety, to pay your debt; to ſerve him as a Phyſician, to heal your ſouls; to ſerve him in all the offices that your need requires: and what think ye of him?

2. What think ye of his travels, in order to accompliſh the work that belongs to that ſtation and relation wherein he ſtands to God and you? The travel of his eternal mind before time, when his delights were with the ſons of men; the travel of his ſoul, and the travel of his body body in time; his travel from heaven to earth, and from earth to heaven again; in all his mediatory actings; his incarnation, birth, life, death, reſurrection, aſcenſion, and interceſſion! O but the Lord can give a glance of his glory in the very naming of theſe things! How did he travel as in birth, when he went about his Father's buſineſs! Luke ii. 49.

3. What think ye of his treaſures; his unſearchable riches that are ſtored up in him for the benefit of poor ſinners, having received theſe gifts for men? All the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge are hid in him; all, and infinitely more than we loſt in the firſt Adam, is treaſured up in the ſecond Adam. O what may a poor, ignorant, witleſs ſinner think of a treaſure of wiſdom, for his illumination! What may a guilty ſinner think of a treaſure of righteouſneſs, for his juſtification! What may a filthy ſinner think of a treaſure of grace, for his ſanctification! And what may a miſerable ſinner think of a treaſure of mercy, for his complete redemption! Yet all theſe treaſures, and infinitely more than we can name, are in Chriſt; Who of God is made unto us wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption, 1 Cor. i. 30. O the fulneſs of grace that is in him, that out of his fulneſs we may receive grace for grace! He is the ſtore-houſe of all God's treaſures; for all is treaſured up in him, that we may be complete in him, who will by faith make uſe of him. And what think ye of him!

4. What think ye of his thoughts? Pſal. cxxxix. 17. How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the ſum of them! if I count them, ſays he, they are moe in number than the ſand: when I awake, I am ſtill with thee. O his thoughts! dwell with wonder and admiration upon God's thoughts. Is it nothing to you, that ever he had thoughts of love towards the like of you; thoughts of pardon, thoughts of peace; thoughts of good and not of evil, to give you an expected end! O believer, his thoughts are not precious to the reſt of the world; but what are they to you? Think you nothing that his thought and care ſhould have been about you from eternity, and now manifeſted in time? Having loved you with an everlaſting love, how is he drawing you with loving-kindneſs? Beſides all his providential care in bringing things about for your good, and that in a way beyond your contrivance and foreſight; yea, in ſuch a manner as never entered into your thoughts. You little thought what was his deſign in ordering your lot in ſuch a part of the world, and ſuch a ſpot of his vineyard, and bringing you to ſuch a ſermon, or under ſuch a miniſtry. O how innumerable are his precious thoughts! And what think ye of him?

5. What think ye of his words, as well as his thoughts? Surely, if you think duly, you will think them ſweet words; How ſweet are thy words unto my taſte! yea, ſweeter than honey to my mouth, Pſal. cxix. 103. Does the Spirit never take ſome of his words, and put a ſpiritual majeſty thereupon? Though many times, like Samuel, you miſtake the Lord's voice, believer, and think it is Eli that ſpeaks, and cannot diſcern the voice of Chriſt from the voice of Moſes; the voice of grace from the voice of the law; yet, when the Spirit comes, and whiſpers in a word from Chriſt ſometimes, what think ye of it? It is the voice of my Beloved, behold he cometh, ſkipping upon the mountains, and leaping upon the hills! — What think ye of his inviting words, ſaying, Come to me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden? — What think ye of his expoſtulating words, ſaying, Why will ye die, O houſe of Iſrael? — What think ye of his intreating words, and his promiſing words, his I wills, and ye ſhalls; I will be your God, and ye ſhall be my people? Do you think ſo much of them, that your hearts ſay AMEN to them? — What think ye of his may-be's? Believers will think right much of a may-be from him ſometimes. It MAY BE he will be gracious; It MAY BE ye ſhall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger. — What think ye of his ſhall be's? There are ſhall be's for the church in general: Upon all the glory there SHALL BE a defence: In the mount of the Lord it SHALL BE ſeen: What think ye of theſe? There are ſhall be's for yourſelf in particular: There is a ſhall be for your protection; A man SHALL BE a hiding-place from the ſtorm, This man SHALL BE the peace, when the Aſſyrian ſhall come into our land. There is a ſhall be for your proviſion; Bread SHALL BE given thee, and thy water SHALL BE ſure. There is a ſhall be for your inſtruction; They SHALL BE all taught of God. There is a ſhall be for your juſtification; His name SHALL BE called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. There is a ſhall be for your ſalvation from ſin and wrath; His name SHALL BE called JESUS, becauſe he ſaves his people from their ſins; even Jeſus, which delivers from the wrath to come. There is a ſhall be for a happy death; Death SHALL BE ſwallowed up in victory. There is a ſhall be for a happy welcome at the day of judgment; They SHALL BE mine, in the day that I make up my jewels. There is a ſhall be for a happy eternity; And ſo we SHALL BE ever with the Lord. What think ye of all theſe words and ſhall be's? Is there any faith here, ſaying, AMEN; ſo let it be; ſo ſhall it be? — What think ye of his verily's? We cannot go through theſe, to tell you how oft he hath confirmed his words with a Verily, verily, I ſay unto you: Many a WRATHFUL verily againſt his enemies, that think nothing of him; many a LOVING verily towards his people, that think much of him. O Sirs, do you eſteem them all to be the truth, and that verily it is, and ſhall be as he hath ſaid? — What think ye of his dying words, as when he ſaid upon the croſs, It is finiſhed? — What think ye of his living words; I am he that was dead, and am alive, and behold I live for evermore? —— O! what think ye of his words? Cannot your heart ſay, Lord, to whom ſhall I go? thou haſt the words of eternal life? O what think ye of him?

6. What think ye of his works? even his works of creation; what think ye of theſe? For by him all things were made that were made, and without him was nothing made, John i. 3. O when you behold the heavens, the works of his hands, the moon and the ſtars, which he hath ordained, may you not ſay, What is man that thou art mindful of him? and the ſon of man that thou viſiteſt him? —— What think ye of his works of providence? For he upholds all things by the word of his power, Heb. i. 3. If you wonder how he can raiſe your dead bodies at the great day, and ſever your duſt from other duſt; may you not as well wonder, how he every day raiſes up in your view innumerable ſtalks of corn out of the duſt, and gives to every pickle of ſeed his own body? as the apoſtle argues, 1 Cor. xv. 35. and downward. How will he raiſe the believer's vile body, out of the filthy duſt, where it rots, and make it like to his own glorious body? O fools that we are, and slow of heart to believe, how does he raiſe the beautiful lilies out of the dung? Solomon, in all his glory, is not comparable to one of theſe; and all the world cannot make one of them to riſe, without his powerful providence. Theſe miracles of providence are common every day in your view, and ſo we think nothing of them; but we might ſee the power of Chriſt in them. If you wonder how it was poſſible for Chriſt to turn the water into wine, or multiply a few loaves, and a few fiſhes, ſo as to feed ſo many thouſands; we needed not wonder ſo much, if we but thought how his providence is doing that every year: the water falls from the clouds, and the vine by his order turns it unto wine; and by the ſpawn of ſuch fiſhes, and the grain of ſuch loaves, he is feeding millions every day. Wo is us, that we cannot think of him, and his works as we ought!——Above all, what think ye of his works of grace, and redeeming love? All his other works are as the drop of a bucket, in compariſon of this ocean; for herein we may ſee him appear in his own, and Father's pomp and ſplendor, manifeſting all the glorious perfections of God; even his infinite power, and wiſdom, holineſs, juſtice, mercy, truth, faithfulneſs, and all God's attributes. I might here mention his works of grace for us and his works of grace in us; but it were endleſs to ſpeak of the thouſandth part. —His work of grace for us lies in his bringing in everlaſting righteouſneſs, eſpecially if we ſpeak of his good works; ſurely it is a good work, that can fulfil the holy precepts of that good law which we have broken, and can anſwer the righteous threatening of the juſt law which we have incurred. Well, here is the doing and dying of the Son of God, for both theſe ends, that divine holineſs may be vindicate, and juſtice ſatisfied, in the way and manner of our ſalvation through him. The law of God is a perfect law, and exceeding broad; but here is a righteouſneſs as broad as it can be, ſo as to magnify the law and make it honourable. O! what think ye of that good work?—His work of grace in us is alſo much to be thought of; and that lies mainly, I think, in imputing his perfect righteouſneſs to us for our juſtification, (which is indeed properly an act of grace upon us, Rom. iii. 22.) and implanting another righteouſneſs beſide it for our ſanctification, which he carries on to perfection. This internal work of grace may be begun with ſighs and groans, advanced in battles and conflicts; but it will be completed in victory and glory.—— Well, then, in this ſhort glance of his works, what think ye of them? May ye not ſay, as Pſal. cxi. 3. His work is honourable and glorious, and his righteouſneſs endures for ever? And when you notice his works, what think you of himſelf?

7. What think ye of his goſpel, and the terms of it? That goſpel, which we preach in his name, wherein his righteouſneſs is revealed from faith to faith: if you think highly of him, you will think highly of it, as the beſt news, and glad tidings that ever you heard; How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of thoſe that preach the goſpel of peace, that bring glad tidings of good things, that publiſheth ſalvation! Iſa. lv. 7. Rom. x. 15. Some are ready to think the goſpel of grace, and ſalvation through Chriſt, is too good news to be true with reſpect to them, as if it were not to be ſuppoſed that God will beſtow ſo great ſalvation ſo freely upon ſo great ſinners; not conſidering, that God in the goſpel aims not at our glory chiefly, but at the declaration of his own glory, and the magnifying of his own free grace; and that therefore we ought to take freely what he gives freely. It is a manifeſtation of free grace, ſovereign grace, which is neither hindered by our evil, nor furthered by our good, Rom. iii. 24.; and regards neither our worthineſs to deſerve it, nor our unworthineſs to impede it, Rom. ix. 15. Hence Luther alledged, that "mens minds were ſo oc-"cupied with fantaſtical imaginations of their "own works, that the glad tidings of the goſ-"pel will ſeem ſtrange matters to them." Men will be aſtoniſhed at the greatneſs of his grace, as it is, Jer. xxxiii. 9. Many think of the goſpel, as if it were a new law, wherein God ſtands upon ſome eaſier terms with us than in the covenant of works; thus confounding law and goſpel, and making a hotch-potch of both. Indeed, if we ſpeak of law-terms, upon which our ſalvation ſtands, they are no eaſier than ever they were: a perfect righteouſneſs is the only condition of ſalvation; and we not having that in ourſelves, the goſpel offers it in Chriſt, and there is the ground of our eternal ſalvation: but if we ſpeak of the goſpel-terms, we need not ſay, you muſt come up to them; but rather, Come down, Zacheus; for this day is ſalvation come to thy houſe: ſalvation is come to you, and offered freely to you, Without money, and without price; come down and take it. And indeed faith, which belongs to the order and method of God's applying the goſpel, is a coming down from all our legal hopes of ſalvation for ſomething to be done by us, in order to our being obliged to another, even to Chriſt for all, Iſa. lv. 1, 2. Rev. xxii. 17. Come down from the ſycomore-tree of your vain hopes, and get all freely: that is the goſpel. What think ye of it? This is indeed a hard ſaying to proud fleſh and blood, which thinks rather they ſhould go up, and do more for their juſtification and ſalvation, than come down, and be obliged to another to pay all their law-debt completely. He will do all for you, or nothing: and, O man, what think ye of him and his goſpel? But then,

8. What think ye of his ſervice, and his wages? When a man is once brought in to the goſpel-terms, and underſtands them, then, and not till then, does he come up to the goſpel-rule; for, Faith works by love, and love is the fulfilling of the law as a rule, from thankfulneſs to him that hath delivered from the law as a covenant. If you think his ſervice hard and uneaſy, it ſeems you are not thinking much of Chriſt, but rather of the law, which is a heavy yoke, that neither we nor our fathers were able to bear; but Chriſt's yoke is eaſy, and his burden is light, Mat. xi. 29, 30. becauſe in this ſervice the man hath no law-debt to pay, for Chriſt hath done that to his hand, but only a love-debt; If you love me, keep my commandments: and thus, his commandments are not grievous. Here grace is all and all, both of the ſervice and wages. Grace ſays, "Up and "be doing, man, in my ſtrength; for the great-"eſt work is done to your hand, and now my "grace ſhall be ſufficient for thee." Grace ſays alſo, "Behold a crown of glory, a reward of "grace awaiting you, after ye have fought "the good fight of faith; therefore have an eye

" to this recompence of reward." Death is the proper wages of ſin, and it is juſt debt; but grace's wages is free; The gift of God is eternal life, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; that is, there is here no promiſe of life upon our doing, but a promiſe of grace to do, and of glory to crown our doing, and of both grace and glory as the reward of Chriſt's doing all; and therefore, what think ye of him and his ſervice?

9. What think ye of his livery? If you would anſwer this queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? I would aſk, what wear ye of Chriſt? The raiment of his righteouſneſs, and the garment of his grace, ſo as to be all glorious within and without, like the king's daughter, will be precious to you. If you be clothed with the ſcarlet robe of his blood and righteouſneſs, by which you are perfectly righteous before God, then, to be ſure, you will think it very indecent for you to be clothed with naſty apparel before men. If a poor maid be married to a rich king, and yet go abroad like a beggar in filthy rags, would not every body cry, It is a ſhame for her, that, having ſuch a huſband, ſhe ſhould diſcredit him and herſelf? If you be married to Chriſt, and think much of your huſband and his righteouſneſs, ſurely you will think it becoming to wear his livery, and not go abroad with unclean mouths and filthy hands, like the reſt of the world, to the diſhonour of your Lord.

10. What think ye of his love, and the reaſon of it? Who can underſtand the height, and breadth, and depth, and length of his love? It is without all dimenſion. And why does he love any of the loſt poſterity of Adam? He tells us the reaſon, Deut. vii. 7, 8. He loved you, becauſe he loved you. Do you think he loves you for your beauty, O black and ugly ſinner! Nay, he profers his love and kindneſs upon you in the goſpel freely, not for your own beauty's ſake, but for his own name's ſake: and his grace, love, and good-will, as revealed in the goſpel, is to be believed with application to yourſelf, for no other reaſon but becauſe it is his will and pleaſure. His love muſt make you beautiful, but cannot find you ſo. And if you cannot believe his grace and good-will to you, becauſe you have no beauty, you are but rejecting the reaſon of his love, deſpiſing the freedom of his grace, and ſtanding upon the terms of the old covenant of works, ſlighting the grace of the new covenant. This is ſuch a diſeaſe to mankind, that even believers in Chriſt, when they are helped to perform duty, with any lively frame, they are ready to ſay, with Leah, Jacob's wife, when ſhe brought forth ſeveral children to him, Now my husband will love me, becauſe of my fruitfulneſs; ſo ſays the believer, when he is helped to bring forth fruit unto God, and finds his Spirit revived in duty, his ſoul ſtrengthened, his heart enlarged, and a great deal of comfort there, O now, ſays he, my Husband will love me, becauſe of my fruitfulneſs. But what comes of it? the perſon having ſuch a legal ſett, the Lord, to correct it, takes away all fruitfulneſs out of his view, in a manner, and leaves him barren; " O, ſays " the believer then, where is my former ſweet " hearing, and ſweet praying and praiſing, " and ſweet meditation?" Why, the Lord has cut off theſe, that he may cut off your legal pride of being loved for your beauty and fruitfulneſs, and that you may return to your firſt Huſband, for then it was better with you than now. You muſt begin, believer, where you began at firſt, and think of his loving you merely becauſe he loves you. They that build their conjugal comfort only, or mainly, upon their righteouſneſs of ſanctification, and ſo ſecretly incline to follow after the law, will find their ſouls very unſettled, even up and down with their changeable frame. But again,

11. I may aſk, what think ye of his lovelineſs? O! is he white and ruddy in your view? O! ſee how the ſpouſe deſcribes him, Song v. 10. and downward, in the beauty of his head, his locks, his eyes, and all and every part of him; his belly, or bowels of mercy: His mouth is moſt ſweet, ſays ſhe. O the words, the ſmiles, the kiſſes of his mouth, his kindly embraces! I have read of one Agatho, that was a man ſo holy, that with a kiſs he cured one of his leproſy; whether that be true or falſe, yet what I intend by telling it, is true, that ſuch is the virtue of Chriſt, that a kiſs of his mouth, a ſmile of his countenance, will cure the ſoul of ſpiritual leproſy; yea, a word of his mouth will do it; Now are you clean through the word that I have ſpoken, John xv. 3. Again,

12. What think ye of his favour and his bleſſing? Surely if you eſteem him duly, you will think his favour is life, and his loving-kindneſs better than life, and that his bleſſing only makes rich. Eſpecially, what think ye of his bleſſings and benefits that cannot be enjoyed by feeling, but by faith; nor by ſight of ſenſe, but by the ſight of faith? We walk by faith, and not by ſight, ſays the apoſtle. But it is the fault even of believers, that they can hardly believe they have any more than they feel: and hence, when they are in the darkneſs of deſertion, they think they have nothing; they have loſt his favour, becauſe they do not feel it; they have loſt his righteouſneſs, becauſe they do not feel it: but remember, that when Aſaph ſaid, Hath the Lord forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger ſhut up his tender mercies? he added, This was my infirmity, You know, in a houſe where it is dark, all things are there that were before, though you ſee them not; ſo it is with you, believer, though you be in darkneſs, all things are as they were before: do you think all is gone, becauſe you cannot ſee it? Well, you never walk by faith, but by feeling; nay, He that walks in darkneſs, and hath no light, let him truſt in the name of the Lord, and ſtay himſelf upon his God. The name of the Lord is to the fore; his God is to the fore; the object of faith is to the fore, as much as ever; and the juſt ſhall live by faith. Will you not believe the ſun is in the firmament where it was, becauſe a cloud hath come and intercepted the light of its beams? " Why, " ſays one, but my miſery is, when I am in " the dark night, I fear it was all but deluſi- " on that ever I met with, and that there was " nothing real or ſaving in it." This I find is a common thought among ſerious ſouls; but all that I ſhall ſay to it, is by enlarging the former ſimilitude; aſk a man when it is dark night, how do you know that ever you ſaw the natural ſun? it may be you was but dreaming, and deluding yourſelf; it was nothing but a ſtrong imagination. Why, ſays the man, I am ſure I ſaw it, becauſe my eyes were dazzled with the light of it, and I was warmed with the heat of it, and I ſaw to work by it, and by the light of it I saw every thing about me. So may you say, believer; when a dark night of desertion or temptation comes on, the tempter suggests, It may be all was but a delusion. Why, man, were not your eyes enlightened? was not your heart warmed? did you not see to work, and went on in your work joyfully, the joy of the Lord being your strength? and did you not see every thing about you? You saw God in his glory; you saw sin in its vileness; you saw holiness in its beauty; you saw the world in its vanity; you saw the creature in its emptiness; Christ in his fulness; you saw yourself in your lothsomness: but now, when the light is withdrawn, What think ye of Christ? Is there no sun, because it is set to your view? Do you think it never shone upon you, because it is not now shining? What think ye of an absent Christ? do you think nothing of him because he is absent? Surely, believer, that is not thought like a believer: sense is many times denied you, that you may learn to believe more than you do.

"But, say you, when he is not present with "me, I cannot believe." I shall tell you my mind here. There is a powerful presence necessary to believing: but there is a sensible presence that is not necessary to it, but rather usually comes upon the back of faith. Now, that powerful presence of God, that is necessary to believing, does open up the object of faith, namely, Christ's righteousness, God's promise, the truth of God, the blood of Christ; power is sometimes insensibly exerted, not by an outward open violence upon the man, but by an inward, secret, and sweet inchantment, as it were: ere he is aware, and before ever he knows that it is divine power that is doing the work, he finds the object of faith, that he is thinking upon, making room for itself in his heart, and drawing out his soul, as it were, insensibly to it: and thereupon comes in sensible presence upon the back of that; After ye believed, ye were sealed, Eph. i. 13. Now, if you say, You cannot believe without his powerful presence, that is true; divine power must be exerted to every act of faith, but then this power does ordinarily put forth itself insensibly and unawares, while we are thinking on, or viewing the object of faith; While I was musing, the fire burned, Psal. xxxix. 3. The Spirit of God clears the object of faith, that being viewed and applied, the heart is set on fire with it; there is his powerful presence ushering in the sensible presence. But if you say, You cannot believe till you have his sensible presence; that is to make sense the foundation of your faith, and not the word of God, or the Christ of God: therefore, in order to believe, let not your question be first, What find you in yourself? but rather, What think ye of Christ? You will find none of the sweet effects of faith, till you think on Christ the object of it. Again,

13. What think ye of his invisible glories? Faith is the evidence of things not seen. Faith sees not the things that are seen and felt; sensible enjoyments, for example, are not the object of faith, but sense: but faith sees the things that can neither be seen nor felt: it believes contrary to sense; yea, things impossible to nature, and incredible to carnal reason, considering only the power of God, that speaks in the word, as you see in the faith of Abraham. The greatest glory of Christ is invisible and incredible to nature; therefore we do not think much of him, if our faith does not terminate on things not seen. Again,

14. What think ye of his tabernacles and ordinances? Surely, if you think much of Christ, his tabernacles will be amiable to you. The slighter of his ordinances, is a slighter of Christ; a slighter of prayer, is a slighter of Christ; a slighter of the word, is a slighter of Christ: He that despises you, despises me; and he that despises me, despises him that sent me. Again,

15. What think of his cause and interest, such as the much forgotten Reformation-work in Scotland, which our forefathers established by solemn National Covenants? If, the more it is forgotten among ministers and people, the more nearly it lies to your heart, and the more you long for its reviving, it were an evidence you think something of Christ, when others think little of him. But, alas! How little is this thought of in the age we live in! If the generation thought more of Christ, there would be more zeal for his interest, honour, and public Reformation-work. And, perhaps, the confusions of our day, the heavy bondage we are complaining of through the land, will never cease to grow to a height of terrible wrath, till we be brought to a sense of our defection, and a humble confession and reformation. Further,

16. What think ye of his cross and crown? Is his cross your crown? Surely they think much of Christ, that can say with Paul, God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. Moses thought his cross better than a crown, esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than all the treasures of Egypt. They that think much of Christ, must resolve upon it, that the world will not think much of them, but that they will be crossed, reproached, and nicknamed; but if Christ was nicknamed for us, and endured the contradiction of sinners against himself, we may well bear a reproach for him, especially when he hath said, If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth on you: on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified; his cross makes way for his crown, and in the mean time his sweetness swallows up all the bitterness thereof.

17. What think ye of his friends? If you think highly of him, surely his friends and followers will be esteemed as the excellent ones of the earth, in whom is all your delight; and consequently his foes will be disesteemed by you: and therefore,

18. What think ye of his enemies? Though they were appearing in never so much worldly pomp, you will think very little of them, if you know them to be his enemies: O my soul, come not thou into their secret; to their assembly, mine honour, be thou not united.—What think ye of his enemies within you? When you find these like thorns in the flesh, like splinters run into the flesh, does it not make you, with Paul, to beseech the Lord thrice; yea, to pray thrice, and thrice, and a hundred times thrice, with sighs and groans, to be freed from them?—What think ye of his enemies about you? I mean, the world, and the lusts thereof; the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eye, and the pride of life. I have read a pretty story, which I reckon useful no other way than for the moral of it, how an angel and an hermit should have been travelling together: when first they went by a dead carcase, the the hermit ſtopt his noſe, and the angel ſmiled; and, after that, they went by a wanton ſtrumpet proudly dreſſed, at which the hermit ſmiled, and the angel ſtopt his noſe. The moral ſhews us, that in the ſight of God and angels, no carrion is ſo noiſom as pride is. But the more highly that any think of Chriſt, ſurely the more humble they are; and pride will accordingly be hid from their eyes. Again,

19. What think ye of the world's thoughts of Chriſt? If you think highly of him yourſelf, you will be mightily ſurprized, and look upon it as a great wonder why the world think ſo little of him. O ſtrange! that all the world are not taken up with him!

20. What think ye of your own thoughts of him? Surely, if you think duly of him, you will think you have but very poor, mean, low, contemptible, and unworthy thoughts of him; you will think that you cannot think enough of him, who is fairer than the ſons of men; the Prince of the kings of the earth; altogether lovely. ——Theſe are ſome probationary queſtions, by which you may take your own hearts to taſk before the Lord.

But I cannot ſtand to enlarge theſe things; and I muſt own the thouſandth part is not ſaid that might be ſpoken from this text; for, as the whole ſcripture does teſtify of Chriſt, either directly or indirectly; ſo I might go through all the ſcriptures, and aſk what ye think of Chriſt, in a ſuitableneſs to what is ſaid of him, in this or that place of ſcripture.

Fourthly, This doctrine might again be applied by way of lamentation over all Chriſt-deſpiſers, who either ſtand upon a legal bottom, truſting in themſelves, and their own righteouſneſs; or who ſlight Chriſt and his ordinances, not loving the place where his honour dwells; who delay and poſtpone their cloſing with him, giving away the prime and virginity of their affections to the world, proſtituting their precious ſouls to their luſts and the ignoble things of time; who ſit down ſatisfied and content without Chriſt, never miſs him, nor feel a want of him, nor ſeek after union and communion with him. Oh! whence is it that you deſpiſe Chriſt at this rate! Alas! it is through ignorance and unbelief, that you ſee no form or comelineſs in Chriſt, why he ſhould be deſired; and the god of this world hath blinded your minds who believe not, leſt the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt, who is the image of God, ſhould ſhine into them. Do you conſider what a miſerable caſe you are in, while you deſpiſe and think ſo little of Chriſt?—You are in imminent danger of temporal judgments; for God, in his holy providence, may reſent the injuries done to his Son; he may leave your houſe deſolate.—You are expoſed to ſpiritual judgments, ſuch as that, Iſa. vi. 10. of having your heart made fat, your ears heavy, and your eyes ſhut; and to eternal wrath, even everlaſting deſtruction from his preſence; He that believes not ſhall be damned. Now, Fifthly, Let me offer a word of exhortation. O Sirs, ſeek that the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of Chriſt may be ſent, that, beholding his glory, your thoughts concerning Chriſt may be changed; and you may be brought to eſteem him, and to go home with the Roſe of Sharon in your boſom; Chriſt in your heart. O ſinner, will you tell me, do you think it worth your while to take Chriſt, and embrace him before you go? If you ſay you cannot believe, you cannot repent, you cannot mourn for ſin, you cannot pray, you cannot obey; and ſo, becauſe you have no grace, no ſtrength to do any thing, you are diſcouraged: I muſt tell you, ſinner, when you conceive religion to be ſome great difficulty above your power, and thereupon are diſcouraged and damped, you do not think of Chriſt as you ought, but of yourſelf, forſooth, as if you were the fountain from whence theſe good things ſhould flow. The law may and does diſcourage ſinners; yea, curſes every Chriſtleſs ſinner unto hell; but the goſpel offers no diſcouragement to ſinners, but all encouragement. Perhaps you will find us that are miniſters, ſometimes going off from our moſt goſpel-texts that we can chooſe; and when we explain faith, we will tell you how many things it includes; ſuch as, the forſaking of all ſin, and the performing of all duty, and ſtudying univerſal holineſs: but whatever be the fruits of faith, which the Lord makes to grow out of it, yet faith itſelf is a great myſtery; and whatever you hear us ſay, that leads you off from this queſtion, What think ye of Chriſt? ſuſpect it. I will tell you, in the Lord's name, that to believe imports no more than to take Chriſt for all; it is to think you have nothing, and can do nothing; but that he hath all, and can do all; and therefore you will take him for all.—You think you cannot believe: well ſaid, but, What think ye of Chriſt? If you think to bring faith out of your own bowels, you think unworthily of Chriſt, who is the author of faith; and of his Father, who is the giver of it.—You think you cannot repent: true, but, What think ye of Chriſt? If you think to bring repentance out of yourſelves, you think unworthily of him, who is exalted by the right-hand of God, to give repentance.—You think you cannot do this, or that duty you are called to; but, What think ye of Chriſt? If you ſit poring on yourſelf, and your own abilities, never a good turn will you do: nay, you think unworthily of Chriſt, who hath ſaid, Without me ye can do nothing, but by me ſtrengthening you, ye can do all things. You are diſcouraged, becauſe you think you have not this thing in yourſelf, or that thing in yourſelf: but that is unbelief, man; for, faith lies in thinking, what am I in Chriſt? Iſa. xlv. 24. Surely ſhall one ſay, [and they ſhall not only ſay it with their mouth verbally, but think it in their heart believingly] In the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength. And becauſe, by the mouth of two or three witneſſes, every word is confirmed, there are three in the Lords in that one chapter, ver. 17. Iſrael ſhall be ſaved IN THE LORD, with an everlaſting ſalvation; ver. 25. IN THE LORD ſhall all the ſeed of Iſrael be juſtified, and ſhall glory; and in this 24th ver. IN THE LORD have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength. And if you be once brought to this believing thought, In the Lord have I righteouſneſs; in the Lord have I ſtrength; in the Lord I have ſalvation; in the Lord I have all; then you will find your work eaſy, and all going right.

Now, you that cannot be brought to think much of Chriſt: O pray God, if perhaps the thoughts of your heart may be forgiven you! and whereas you think nothing of him now, O conſider what you will think of him in a day of challenges, when conſcience awakens! in a day of deſolation, Iſa. x. in the day of death, in the day of judgment! What will you think of of him, when you see him mounting the tribunal, and when pronouncing the fearful sentence, Depart from me, ye cursed? Surely you must have dreadful thoughts of him then, if you cannot be brought to think highly of him now; now, when he is not come to destroy mens lives, but to save. But you, believer, that now think highly of him, whatever great thoughts you have of Christ now, yet what will you think of him in that day, when he who is your life shall appear, and ye shall appear with him in glory? O believer, what will ye think of him, when he pronounces the sentence of absolution, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you? O! what will ye think of his palace, his attendants, his throne, crown, and glory?

Sixthly, I would offer an advice to you that think much of Christ, and have a high esteem of him.

1*st*, That you would evidence your hearty esteem of him; and that,

1. By the degrees of it; so as to esteem him above all things else, above all your relations; He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me, Mat. x. 37. Our love to them must be hatred, when it comes to compete with Christ; If any man come after me, and hate not father and mother, he is not worthy of me. Above all worldly advantages; yea, above life; Rev. xxi. 11. They loved not their lives to the death; their pangs of love were stronger than the pangs of death.

2. By the effects of it; such as,

(1.) Desire of converse: if you think much of Christ, you will desire his company in all ordinances; you will seek him in the temple, you will seek him in the closet; in every ordinance, public or private, you will earnestly seek and desire him.

(2.) Entertaining no rival that comes in competition with him, but saying, What have I to do any more with idols? giving chearfully up with all other lords and lovers.

(3.) Sympathy; grieving at these things that are grievous to him.

(4.) Preserving his memory, living upon him: like the woman that drank the powder of her dead husband's body, mingled with her daily drink; so should ye, by faith, daily eat the flesh, and drink the blood of the Son of God.

2*dly*, A second advice is, that you would do all that you can, to make others think as much of him as you do; and that,

1. By commending him, and telling others of his beauty, that they may admire him. See the practice of the spouse for this, Song v.; and what influence it had upon the daughters of Jerusalem their beginning to think much of him, and seek after him also, Song vi. 1. O then, commend him to your families, your children, and your neighbours.

2. By adorning the gospel, and walking worthy of him, and wearing his livery. It is a master's honour and credit to have a good servant, and well arrayed; they think much of the master that hath such a servant. And how does it proclaim the praises of Christ, when they that profess him are eminent for piety, 1 Pet. ii. 9.

3. In a word, Let your light so shine before men, that others, seeing your good works, may glorify God, and think much of Christ. O let your hearts be still thinking of him, your life praising, and your tongue speaking of him! Here is a fountain for spiritual discourse: if you have an opportunity of conversing with any, concerning the great solemnity you have been witnesses to here; or if any ask you, Where was such or such a minister's text? here is a fair occasion for spiritual converse; for, you cannot, in a manner tell them this text, without asking them a question, What think ye of Christ?

SERMON XXXII.–XXXVIII.

The PREGNANT PROMISE with her Issue; or, the Children of Promise brought forth, and described *.

GAL. iv. 28. Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise.

THIS text presents a subject that concerns all here present, and particularly believing communicants. The sacrament of the Lord's supper is a seal of the covenant of grace; the covenant of grace is a covenant of promise; the promise of the covenant is the prolific womb that bears and brings forth all God's children, and so the children of God are the children of promise. As it concerns us all therefore to enquire to what family we belong, and whose children we are; so believers in particular, or believing communicants, upon this subject may, in order to the increase of their faith, love, and holy evangelical obedience, find themselves distinguished from the rest of the world, by that sovereign grace that is manifested in the covenant of promise. And upon the back of such a great solemnity, it may not be unsuitable to point them out with a now, or give them their proper name and character in the words of our text; Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise.

As the law and the gospel differ especially in this, as well as in other things, that whereas in short the law is a word of precept, the gospel is a word of promise; so the covenant of works and of grace differ in this, that whereas, in the covenant of works, all the benefits thereof

* This subject was discussed in seven sermons, mostly preached on sacramental occasions. The first two were delivered at the sacrament of the Lord's supper at Torphichen, on the Sabbath evening and Monday, June 19th and 20th. The third at the sacrament at Portmoak, on Monday July 17th. The fourth probably at Dunfermline, July 23. The three last at the sacramental solemnity of Glendovan July 31st, all in the year 1726. This piece hath undergone four editions.

depend upon man's fulfilling of a precept; in the covenant of grace, all depends upon God's fulfilling of a promiſe in Chriſt. Hence the covenant of works is called the law, and the covenant of grace the promiſe, particularly in this epiſtle, chap. iii. 18. Hence alſo, in oppoſition to all theſe that are under the covenant of works, believers in Chriſt, who are brought within the bond of the covenant of grace, are called the children of promiſe; Now we, brethren, as Iſaac was, are the children of promiſe. Concerning theſe two covenants of works and grace, the apoſtle elegantly diſcourſes in the preceding verſes, particularly from ver. 21. and downward; where having upbraided the Galatians for deſiring to be under the law, and ſo for diſcovering their folly and weakneſs in ſuffering themſelves to be drawn away from the goſpel-doctrine of juſtification, and to be deprived of their freedom from the bondage of the law, he aſks them a queſtion, Do you not hear the law? q. d. How ignorantly do you hold yourſelves bound to fulfil the law, and look for eternal life thereby; while, though you hear, you do not underſtand the law, but miſtake the end and deſign of it, not conſidering Chriſt to be the end of the law, but ſuppoſing that the very obſervance of it, even ſince the fall of Adam, does give life, and juſtify? This ignorance was, to the Jews, as a vail before their eyes in the reading of the law, 2 Cor. iii. 14.; yea, this ignorance is the vail by which thouſands, that are called Chriſtians, are blinded. Now, from ver. 22. the apoſtle ſhews how their liberty from the law was prefigured in the family of Abraham; where notice the narration, the explication, the confirmation, and the application.

1. The narration of the hiſtory, ver. 22, 23. Here Iſhmael is ſaid to be born after the fleſh; that is, by the ſtrength of nature, and according to the fleſhly counſel of Sarah, when ſhe ſubſtitute Hagar into her own room: but Iſaac was by promiſe; that is, though according to the order of nature, yet not by the ſtrength of nature, but by virtue of the promiſe of God.

2. The explication of this hiſtory, ver. 24,—27. Which things are an allegory, ſays the apoſtle, for theſe are the two covenants; that is, not merely the two different diſpenſations of the covenant of grace, the old legal, and the new evangelical diſpenſation; but the two covenants themſelves, namely, that of works made with the firſt Adam, and all his ſeed in him, promiſing life upon condition of man's own perfect obedience to the will of God, Gen. ii. 17. and that of grace, made with the ſecond Adam, and with his ſeed in him, promiſing eternal life, and all ſpiritual bleſſings, upon condition and conſideration of his undergoing the curſe, and yielding perfect obedience to the law in their room, Iſa. liii. 10, 11. Rom. v. 6, 21.—Hence the apoſtle expreſly calls them the two covenants. Though Iſrael, even at Sinai, was under a diſpenſation of the covenant of grace, however dark, as is evident from the preface to the ten commands, and many other arguments; yet, that there was alſo an addition, repetition, and promulgation of the covenant of works at Sinai, is not only plain from the concurring teſtimony of many orthodox writers, but from manifold ſcriptural accounts thereof. The apoſtle here tells us, Gal. iii. 18, 19. that the law, or covenant of works, was added becauſe of tranſgreſſion, till the ſeed ſhould come, to whom the promiſe was made; it was added to be ſubſervient to the other, and for furthering the ends thereof. This is plain alſo from the context here, where the apoſtle is ſhewing, that the children of the Sinai covenant are excluded from the eternal inheritance, as Iſhmael was from Canaan, the type of it, ver. 30. Caſt out the bond-woman, and her ſon; for the ſon of the bond-woman ſhall not be heir with the ſon of the free-woman. But this could never be ſaid of the children of the covenant of grace, whether under the old or new diſpenſation thereof; whereas the children of the legal covenant, or covenant of works, whereof there was a repetition at Sinai, have been always under a ſentence of excluſion ever ſince Adam fell, and under bondage to death and the curſe: therefore it is the two covenants, that of works and of grace, that the apoſtle is here ſetting in oppoſition to one another; the one is prefigured by Hagar, and the other by Sarah. The covenant of works is here compared to Iſhmael, that was born after the fleſh; the covenant of grace to Iſaac, who was a child of promiſe, produced by the Spirit of God working mightily in Abraham and Sarah, and breathing in the promiſe. Here is an allegory, a great myſtery, that people think not of, when they read of Iſhmael and Iſaac. Now Hagar, which is the law, or covenant of works, is ſaid to gender into bondage; becauſe it makes them bond-men that look to be ſaved and juſtified thereby; and ſo it is called the miniſtration of death, 2 Cor. iii. 6.: whereas the goſpel, and the new covenant, is a diſpenſation of life and liberty, being the channel in which the Spirit of life does run, chap. iii. 2. And while Jeruſalem that now is, is ſaid to be in bondage with her children; it ſhews the miſery of the Jewiſh church, by refuſing Chriſt, and eſtabliſhing their own righteouſneſs, ſeeking to be ſaved by the deeds of the law, and ſo being in bondage, and depriving herſelf of the heavenly inheritance. As Hagar then ſignifies the law, ſo does Iſhmael all legaliſts, and ſelf-juſticiaries, who look to be ſaved by the law: they that have not fled to Chriſt for refuge and righteouſneſs, but remain under the law, they are Iſhmaelites, and in ſpiritual bondage to ſin, and legal bondage unto death and wrath, according to the tenor of the law they are under. But now, Jeruſalem, which is above, ſays the apoſtle, is free, which is the mother of us all, ver. 26. Here Paul ſhews what was figured by Sarah, namely, the new Jeruſalem; that is, the catholic church, Heb. xii. 22, 23. and Rev. xxi. 2. By the new Jeruſalem, then underſtand all the inviſible church, whereof Jeruſalem was a type in many reſpects: hence ſaid to be above; becauſe all that are within the bond of the new covenant are from above; their election, redemption, effectual vocation, juſtification, ſanctification, and all is from above; and they dwell above in heaven by faith, according to the meaſure of the Spirit of faith. This Jeruſalem that is above is free, ſays the apoſtle, in oppoſition to the bondage that the Iſhmaelites and unbelievers are under; they are freed from the bondage of ſin, death, and the curſe of the law. Now, this Jeruſalem, or the church, is ſaid to be the mother of us all; becauſe the miniſtry of the word, which is committed to the church's keeping, and which is compared to ſeed and milk, 1 Pet. i. 23. and ii. 2. is that by which children are brought forth to God in her:

her: hence of Zion it is said, This man and that man was born there, Psal. lxxxvii. 4, 5, 6.

3. The confirmation is next, by the apostle's adducing the testimony of the prophets; Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child: for more are the children of the desolate, than the children of the married wife, saith the Lord, Isa. liv. 1. The Christian church is called barren; because, by the virtue and strength of nature, it bears no children to God, no more than Sarah did to Abraham: but when the Spirit of Christ comes to impregnate the word and ordinances with almighty efficacy, then a numerous seed is brought forth to the Lord Jesus, by virtue of the new-covenant promise. And so,

4. The application of it follows in the words of the text; where the apostle shews, that as Sarah was a figure of the church catholic, so Isaac was a figure of all true believers, and children of God; Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise.

In which words you may notice the transition, the compellation, and the description.

1. A transition, in the particle now, or therefore; importing, the apostle's proceeding next to make an application of what he had been saying to the case in hand, and adapting of it to their present circumstances. Now, q. d. After what hath been said, let it be considered, that this is a matter that concerns you, and me, therefore let us bring it home to ourselves.

2. A compellation, BRETHREN; intimating, that there is a spiritual fraternity and brotherhood betwixt all true believers: they are all brethren by the Father's side; for, they have all one Father, even the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. They are also all brethren by the mother's side; for, they all ly in the same womb of the church. And they are all brethren by Christ's side; for they have all the self-same elder Brother, Jesus Christ; begotten with the same incorruptible seed of the word; and fed at the same table, with the same spiritual food. This spiritual brotherhood far exceeds the natural, even as far as God's Fatherhood, towards us, exceeds the natural fatherhood among men.

3. A description, particularly of believers, in a suitableness to the former doctrine; We, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. Here they are described in relation to the promise, and in allusion unto Isaac.

(1.) In relation to the promise; We are the children of promise. By the promise here you may understand the covenant of grace, called the covenant of promise; and so you may take it either for the promise made to Christ, such as that, He shall see his seed; or the promise made to Abraham, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed; or the promise made to the church, that being barren, she should bear many children, as it is in the preceding verse. Now, believers are called the children of promise, not only because they believe the promise, but because they are made the children of God by virtue of God's promise.

(2.) In allusion to ISAAC; or they are described to be the children of the promise in the manner that Isaac was, in that he was born to Abraham, not by the strength of nature, but by the virtue of God's promise: as Isaac was not born by natural power, but by the mere promise and power of God; so believers are children of the promise, being born, as Isaac, not by the power of flesh and blood, but by the power of God putting virtue in the promise. The further explication I refer to the prosecution of the following doctrine.

OBSERV. That all the children of God, or true believers, are, like Isaac, the children of promise.

I shall not enlarge the proof of so clear a point. You may read what our apostle says, to this same purpose, Rom. ix. 7, 8. where the children of the promise, such as Isaac was, are opposed to the children of the flesh. The promise is the believer's parent, by which he is begotten to a lively hope, and made a partaker of the divine nature, 2 Pet. i. 4. When a poor soul is converted, it is the promise that does the business; the power and efficacy of the promise, in its performance, does change and renew the heart; James i. 18. Of his own will begat he us, by the word of truth; that is, by the word of promise.

The method we lay down, for illustrating this doctrinal observation, through divine assistance, shall be the following.

I. I would open up the promise, whereof believers are the children.

II. Open up this character of their being the children of promise; and enquire how they are so.

III. I would state the comparison, or run the parallel betwixt them and Isaac; and so shew, that as Isaac was, so they are the children of promise.

IV. I would offer some grounds of the doctrine, both with reference to the prolific virtue of the promise for begetting children to God, and also with reference to the blest will and pleasure of the Promiser, why he will have all his children to be the children of promise.

V. Deduce inferences for application.

I. The first head proposed, is, to open up the promise whereof believers are the children. Before I proceed to this, there are two things I would mention, which this doctrine doth presuppose,

1. In that some are the children of promise by grace, it supposes that all are children of wrath by nature, Eph. ii. 3. Because of the breach and violation of the law of works in Adam, we forfeited the promise of life, and incurred the threatening of death, according to the tenor of the covenant, Do and live; and, if thou do not, thou shalt die: and being children of disobedience, we are children of the curse, and not of the promise; for, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things, written in the book of the law to do them, Gal. iii. 10. There is the sad state wherein all Adam's natural off-spring are since the fall: we are Ishmaelites; children of the bondwoman; born after the flesh; under the curse; and in bondage to sin, Satan, death, and hell; aliens to the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to the covenants of promise, Eph. ii. 12. It is true, there was a promise of life in the covenant of works, under which we are by nature; but it being upon the condition of our perfect and personal obedience, now impossible, it can give no relief to the awakened conscience, but leaves all, whose eyes are open, to everlasting despair, if they get not a view of the covenant, and better promise. Therefore,

2. In that some are the children of promise, it supposes that surely there is another promise, according to which God proposes to deal with some ſome of the children of men; a promiſe, not built upon the ſilly foundation of any mere man's perſonal obedience, but a promiſe eſtabliſhed on a better foundation, and ſtanding faſt in another Head; and it is called a promiſe of life in Chriſt Jeſus, 2 Tim. i. 1. And that not according to our works, but according to his own purpoſe and grace, which was given us in Chriſt Jeſus before the world began, ver. 9. compared with Tit. i. 2. Not according to the tenor of the covenant of works; for, while ſinners look to that covenant, nothing is to be ſeen there but conſuming fire; nothing to be heard but thunder and threatenings; nothing to be expected but death and vengeance; therefore man is under no diſpenſation but that of a terrible threatening, till the promiſe in Chriſt appear. There is a fourfold capacity wherein man hath had to do with God,

(1.) As a commanding God; men, even as creatures, being obliged to yield obedience to the great Creator's law and commandment, which was engraven on their hearts, in the original make and conſtitution of our firſt parents, when they dropt out of his creating hand.

(2.) As a covenanting God; I mean, in the covenant of works, which God entered into with man, as a covenant of life and death, upon his doing or not doing what God commanded.

(3.) As a threatening God, upon the violation of that covenant; and this is the capacity wherein all mankind have to do with God; they that ſee God out of Chriſt with their eyes open, while they are in a natural ſtate, can ſee him no other ways than arrayed with threatenings and wrath, until he pleaſe to diſcover himſelf.

(4.) As a promiſing God, upon a better foundation than the firſt covenant, even his promiſe in Jeſus Chriſt before the world began. Now, there is no dealing with God for eternal life and ſalvation, unleſs he ſhew himſelf to be God in a promiſe.

Having premiſed theſe things, I come now to ſpeak a little concerning the promiſe, whereof believers are the children. And, in general, the promiſe is the ſame with the covenant of grace, in oppoſition to the covenant of works: or, the promiſe is the ſame with the goſpel, in oppoſition to the law; hence the promiſe and the goſpel are made one and the ſame thing in this epiſtle, Gal. iii. 8.; and hence the promiſe and the law are ſet in oppoſition to one another, ver. 18. But, more particularly, for opening up the promiſe, whereof believers are children; we may conſider, concerning the promiſe, 1. The Subject, or Author of it. 2. The matter of it. 3. The nature of it. 4. The object of it.

1ſt, The Subject of this promiſe, or whoſe promiſe it is. And,

1. It is the promiſe of GOD, even God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt; therefore called the promiſe of God, Gal. iii. 21. Indeed all the divine perfections are engaged for the accompliſhment thereof, that our faith and hope might be in God. God the Father is the great author, the grand contriver, and original fountain of the covenant; In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promiſed before the world began, Tit. i. 2. And the great promiſe of the covenant is called the promiſe of the Father, Acts i. 4. And hence the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is ſaid to bleſs us with all ſpiritual bleſſings, Eph. i. 3.

2. It is the promiſe of CHRIST; he alſo is the promiſer; and therefore, when he left his people, and went out of this world, he opened his mouth to them in manifold promiſes, John xv, xvi, xvii chapters. And hence alſo he invites ſinners to himſelf, by the encouragement of a promiſe; Come to me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt, Mat. xi. 28.

3. It is the promiſe of the SPIRIT; hence he is called the Spirit of promiſe, Eph. i. 13. both becauſe he is promiſed, and becauſe he is the promiſer: and what are all the promiſes of the new covenant, but the language of the Holy Ghoſt, the voice of the Spirit, the Spirit of the Father, and of the Son, whoſe voice we are called to hear? And hence in the epilogue of all the epiſtles to the ſeven churches of Aſia, Rev. ii, and iii. chapters. the concluſory promiſes are all backed with this advertiſement, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith to the churches. And again,

4. It is the promiſe of GOD in CHRIST, by the HOLY GHOST. That it is the promiſe of God in Chriſt, is plain from Gal. iii. 17. where it is called the covenant confirmed of God in Chriſt; and, 2 Tim. i. 1. The promiſe of life which is in Chriſt Jeſus; and given us in Chriſt, ver. 9.; yea, 2 Cor. i. 20. All the promiſes of God are in him Yea, and in him Amen; they have all their eſtabliſhment and ratification in his blood: hence that joyful ſound and glad tidings, 2 Cor. v. 19. God was in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelf, and not imputing their treſpaſſes to them; and hath committed to us the word of reconciliation, bearing that he hath made him to be ſin for us, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him. Again, that it is the promiſe of God in Chriſt, by the Holy Ghoſt, is plain, not only from his being the third perſon exiſting in the Godhead, and proceeding from the Father and the Son; but alſo from his office in the work of redemption, which is to make the powerful application thereof, as the great Teacher and Remembrancer, for bringing home the promiſe to the hearts of his people appointed unto life; The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghoſt, whom the Father will ſend in my name; he ſhall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatſoever I have ſaid unto you, John xiv. 26. Again, He ſhall convince the world of ſin, righteouſneſs, and judgment; He ſhall glorify me, for he ſhall receive of mine, and ſhew it unto you, John xvi. 8, 14.——So much for the ſubject, the Author of the promiſe, or whoſe promiſe it is.

2dly, Let us conſider a little the matter of the promiſe, whereof believers are the children; what is the good contained in God's promiſe. And,

1. GOD himſelf is the great matter of the promiſe, as well as the author of it; as he is the promiſer, ſo he is the thing promiſed, Ezek. xxxvi. 28. compared with Jer. xxxi. 33. and Heb. viii. 10. I will be to them a God, and they ſhall be to me a people: I will be your God, and you ſhall be my people. It is the greateſt promiſe in all the Bible, and contains the moſt ineſtimable and invaluable treaſure in heaven and earth. O what a great matter is here! God himſelf giving over himſelf, and a true propriety in himſelf, to every ſoul that will receive him, and ſay AMEN, by a faith of divine operation: even as the huſband gives himſelf up to his wife in marriage, so does God to the believer; I will betrothe thee to me for ever, in truth, in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving-kindness. Wherever the covenant of grace, the covenant of promise is repeated in scripture, that is always the burden of the song, I will be their God, and they shall be my people. O what excellent matter is here! Eternity diving into this deep, will never reach the bottom of it. Again,

2. CHRIST himself is the great matter of the promise: as God promises himself, so he promises his Son; Christ is the great promise, the great sum, centre, and substance of the covenant; yea, the all, the sum total of it: I will give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation to the end of the earth, Isa. xlii. 6. and xlix. 9. It is he, that is made of God to us, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, 1 Cor. i. 30. He is called the mercy promised, Luke i. 72. The gospel-promises are nothing else but that opening up of the unsearchable riches of Christ, where there is more precious treasure than ever can be told by all the arithmetic of men and angels to eternity. The first promise that ever was made after the fall, was a promise of Christ, The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent; and all the rest of the promises of the new covenant are streams flowing from that spring. God never designed to save any man by a covenant of works, but he designed to take occasion by man's fall to glorify his grace; therefore, no sooner does sin come, and a curse with it, than grace comes in, and a promise with it: so soon as Adam is arranged before God for sin, the womb of the promise is open, and it is a promise of Christ, which, in all the after-promises, is made always gradually more and more clear: and ever since God drew up the sluice of the promise, it hath been running to this day; and it is flowing to this day, while the promise of Christ, as the Lord our righteousness and strength, is set before us as the ground of our faith and hope.

3. The SPIRIT himself is also the great matter of the promise, or the good thing promised; I will put my Spirit within you, says God, Ezek. xxxvi. 27. I will send the Comforter, says Christ, John xvi. 7. So that, as God promises himself, and promises his Christ; so God and Christ promise the Spirit: the Spirit in his mission and motions is here promised, in his influences and operations, graces and fruits; the Spirit of faith, the Spirit of love, the Spirit of repentance, the Spirit of grace and supplication, the Spirit of glory and sanctification, the Spirit of conviction and consolation, the Spirit of light, the Spirit of life, the Spirit of liberty, the Spirit of power and a sound mind: whatever be the hopeless and helpless, the dead, drooping, and desperate-like case that the soul can be in, there is a promise of the Spirit suitable thereto, if I might enlarge. And, indeed, the promise of the Spirit is the first promise that is accomplished in begetting children to God; all the children of promise are made so by the promise of the Spirit taking effect upon them, as a Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Christ, testifying of Christ, and giving the soul Paul's experiences, He revealed his Son in me. It is not the promised blessing of the Spirit, that quickens dead souls, and begets children unto God; The wind blows where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound therof, but canst not tell whence it comes, nor whither it goes; so is every one that is born of the Spirit, John iii. 8. Awake, O north wind; come thou south; blow upon my garden that the spices may flow out, Song iv. 16. It is the promised flowing of the Spirit, that alone can make happy communion-days. O for that flood promised! I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground; even my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing on thine offspring, Isa. xliv. 3. Yea, he is promised, not only as an overflowing flood, but as an ever-flowing spring; The water that I shall give him, shall be in him a well of water springing up to everlasting life, John iv. 14.

4. All things else, in and with these three, are matter of the promise; He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? Rom. viii. 32. And, indeed, where there is a promise of God, a promise of Christ, a promise of the Spirit, there must be a promise of all things: All things are yours, for ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's. She that hath the husband, hath all things that are the husband's; and seeing Christ is the Heir of all things, his bride cannot but inherit all things, Rev. 21. 7. I have read of an antient deed of gift made by one of the first kings of England, giving all that is from heaven to the centre of the earth; so that, if there be minerals in the bowels of the earth, they are comprehended in the gift: so God, in promising and giving himself, and his Son, and his Spirit, does in and with him give all that he hath, and all that he is worth; all the mines in the bowels of God, all the mines in the bowels of Christ, and all the mines of the bowels of the Spirit, are promised: and, O consider with yourself, what unsearchable riches, what unfathomable treasures of grace and glory, are in these mines! and what sweet and blessed fruits grow upon this tree of the new-covenant promise! and what a blessed thing it is to be the children of promise! And here the matter of the promise might be enlarged into innumerable particulars. Why, they are the children of that promise, A new heart will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh. They are the children of that promise, They shall be all taught of God. They are the children of these promises, I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and you shall be clean; from all your filthiness, and from all your idols will I cleanse you. Children of that promise, I will be merciful to your unrighteousness, your sins and your iniquities will I remember no more. I will subdue your iniquities; and, sin shall not have dominion over you, for you are not under the law, but under grace. I will never leave thee nor forsake thee. Fear not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God. When thou passest through the fire, I will be with thee, that the flames kindle not upon thee: and when thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee, that the floods do not overflow thee. — There is a promise of peace with God, they are children of; This man shall be the Peace. There is a promise of pardon they are children of; I, even I, am he that blotteth out thine iniquity, for mine own name's sake, and will remember thy sins no more. There is a promise of protection they are children of; A man shall be a hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the storm; as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. There is a promise of provision they are children of; Bread shall be given thee, and thy water shall be made sure. There is a promise of healing they are children of; I will heal your backslidings, flidings, and love you freely. There is a promiſe of knowledge and illumination they are children of; They ſhall all know me, from the leaſt to the greateſt. There is a promiſe of faith they are children of; I will leave in the midſt of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they ſhall truſt in the name of the Lord, Zeph. iii. 12. There is a promiſe of love they are children of; I will circumciſe their heart to love. There is a promiſe of repentance they are children of; They ſhall look on him whom they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn. There is a promiſe of holineſs; Sanctify them through thy truth, thy Word is truth. It is true, that it is a part of Chriſt's prayer to his Father, John xvii. 17.; but his prayer is as good as any promiſe in all the Bible. There is a promiſe of perſeverance that they are the children of; I will make an everlaſting covenant with thee; I will not depart from thee to do thee good; yea, I will put my fear in thy heart, and thou ſhalt not depart from me. In a word, there is the promiſe of victory over death; Death ſhall be ſwallowed up in victory. Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. There is a promiſe of everlaſting enjoyment of him; So ſhall we ever be with the Lord.—It were endleſs to tell of all the promiſes they are the children of; not that all and every one of the promiſes are in the ſame manner clearly applied to every believer; but if they be the children of one new-covenant promiſe, they are the children of all: even as all the curſes of the law are linked together like an iron chain, inſomuch that when a man is under one curſe, he is under all the curſes of the Bible; ſo all the promiſes of the goſpel are linked together like a golden chain, inſomuch that he that gets one promiſe, gets all: though perhaps it is but one link of the chain that he finds his heart faſtened to, or one promiſe that is applied, yet the application of that infers an intereſt in all the reſt.——Thus you ſee what is the matter of the promiſe, and ſurely you may ſee much matter here for faith to feed and work upon.

3dly, Let us conſider the nature and quality of the promiſe. And,

1. It is a great and precious promiſe; Whereby are given to us exceeding great and precious promiſes, that by theſe you might be partakers of the divine nature, 2 Pet. i. 4. And, indeed, the matter of the promiſe, as already deſcribed, declares that it is exceeding great and precious; and the effect of it, as here deſcribed, making the believer a partaker of the divine nature, O how does it diſcover the greatneſs and precioufneſs thereof! And the relation of the promiſe to God as the author, to Chriſt as the purchaſer, and to the Spirit as the applier thereof; the relation of it, I ſay, to this great God, ſhews what a great promiſe it is: beſides that, it is the price of precious blood, and the object of precious faith, and the channel of the communication of great and precious bleſſings. But of theſe, perhaps, more afterwards.

2. It is a new promiſe; hence ſo frequently called the new covenant, as Heb. viii. 8. It is a new promiſe, in oppoſition to the old promiſe of life to man's perfect perſonal obedience in the covenant of works. The old promiſe was a promiſe of life, upon condition of perfect obedience of our own; but there was no promiſe of grace to do: but the new promiſe is a promiſe upon the perfect obedience of another, and of grace to do alſo; not to obtain life and ſalvation again by our doing, but to glorify the God of our life, by whom we have obtained ſalvation, 1 Theſſ. v. 9. The old promiſe of life ſtood upon the changeable righteouſneſs of man; and ſo was forfeited: the new promiſe ſtands upon the unchangeable righteouſneſs of a God-man; and ſo cannot be forfeited by theſe that, through grace, take hold of it; or rather on whom it takes hold. Therefore,

3. It is a ſure promiſe, ſure to all the ſeed; Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace, to the end the promiſe might be ſure to all the ſeed, Rom. iv. 16. Hence it is called, The ſure mercies of David, Iſa. lv. 3. Heaven and earth ſhall paſs away, but not one jot nor title of God's word, nor of God's promiſe. See Iſa. liv. 18. For the mountains ſhall depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindneſs ſhall not depart from thee, neither ſhall the covenant of my peace be removed, ſaith the Lord, that hath mercy on thee. It is an everlaſting covenant, well ordered in all things, and ſure, 2 Sam. xxxiii. 5. Indeed, the better ordered it is, the more ſure and unchangeable it is: and ſo well is it ordered of infinite wiſdom, that there is nothing in it, that ſhould be out; and nothing out of it, that ſhould be in; nothing wanting for God's glory, and the ſinner's welfare. What can be wanting therein, when he, who is All in all, is in it? And ſo well is it ordered, that both the firſt grace, the laſt grace, and all grace, is promiſed therein; beginning grace, advancing grace, and crowning grace, is promiſed in it; therefore it muſt be ſure. O may faith be ſet a-work, when we are ſpeaking of theſe things!

4. It was a dear-bought and conditional promiſe to Chriſt; to Chriſt, I ſay, the Mediator of the covenant, it was a dear-bought and conditional promiſe; it was upon the condition of his obedience unto death: and here is the great ground and foundation of the promiſe, next to the ſovereign grace and good-will of God to poor miſerable ſinners; it is Chriſt coming under the law, to redeem them that were under it, Gal. iv. 4, 5. Hence the covenant of promiſe is called the new teſtament in his blood; his blood is called the blood of the covenant: this is what makes all ſure, that Chriſt's obedience and ſatisfaction was the condition of the promiſe; and the condition is fulfilled by his bringing in everlaſting righteouſneſs, and giving his life a ranſom for many. All the promiſes here are dipt in his blood; and the great condition of all the promiſes of the goſpel, is, Chriſt fulfilling, in our room and ſtead, the condition of the violated covenant of works; that is, perfect obedience to the precept of it, which we had broken; and compleat ſatisfaction to the penalty, threatening, and curſe of it, which we had incurred. Though Chriſt, indeed, hath not believed, repented, and performed the law for us, as a law ſimply, or a rule of holineſs and righteouſneſs, as if theſe were not duties incumbent upon us; no doubt they are our duty, as well as there are promiſes of them in the goſpel to bring them forth. I know none that can aſſert any ſuch Antinomian poſitions, as thus diſſolve the obligation of the moral law; yet I aſſert, that Chriſt hath even freed us from theſe, as the proper pleadable condition for juſtification and eternal life before God*; and that his ſanctification, righteouſneſs, and merit is the only proper plead-able condition, and ground of all that grace and ſalvation that lies in the promiſe, and upon which it is made ſure and faſt to his people the children of promiſe; My covenant ſhall ſtand faſt with him, Pſal. lxxxix. 28. This is that foundation of faith laid in Zion, as ſufficient for all the hearers of the goſpel to build their hope and confidence upon for ſalvation, Iſa. xxviii. 16. Rom. ix. 33. 1 Pet. ii. 6. 1 Cor. iii. 11. Other foundation can no man lay, than that is laid, which is Jeſus Chriſt. Hence, as Chriſt is promiſed for a covenant of the people, ſo the promiſes are ſaid to be made to him. Gal. iii. 16.; and to be all yea and amen in him, 2 Cor. i. 20: and the whole covenant of grace is called a promiſe of grace in Chriſt, 2 Tim. i. 1.; and thus given to us. Hence, of conſequence.

5. It is a free and abſolute promiſe to us, and unconditional: it is freely given; Whereby are given to us exceeding great and precious promiſes, 2 Pet. i. 4. All the great things of the promiſe are freely given, and theſe are, Chriſt, and all things with him freely, Rom. 8. 32. Though the uſe of means is required both of ſinners and ſaints, and though we be under a command and obligation to faith, repentance, and all other duties and graces; yet the covenant of grace is ſuch a free, abſolute, and unconditional promiſe, wherein the Spirit of grace is promiſed ſo freely, that no act or deed of ours is the condition thereof. There is a condition of order and connexion betwixt one covenant-bleſſing and another, they being like ſo many links of a chain cloſed within each other: and hence many promiſes are expreſt, as it were, in a conditional way, in the diſpenſation of the goſpel; whereupon many miſtake this matter, while they diſtinguiſh not betwixt the diſpenſation of the covenant, and the tenor of the covenant itſelf, wherein grace and glory, and all, is promiſed freely. The covenant of promiſe cannot be properly conditional to us; otherwiſe, wo would be to us, whoſe condition is nothing but ſin and miſery by nature: this covenant ſtands upon abſolute foundations; ſuch as the electing grace of the Father, the redeeming grace of the Son, and the applying grace of the Holy Ghoſt. They are all abſolutely free and unconditional; there is no ſpiritual act of ours previous to the application of the covenant of promiſe. The Spirit coming to work faith, by his creating power, is promiſed abſolutely in the covenant; Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power; They ſhall look to him whom they have pierced: faith is caſt out of the womb of the abſolute promiſe, and begotten by it. And, indeed, there is not a conditional promiſe in all the Bible, but what is reductively abſolute; becauſe both the thing promiſed, and the condition of it, is contained in the womb of the abſolute promiſe. Some worthy divines make faith the condition of the covenant; but their ſound explication of what they mean, ſhews they dare not make it the proper condition. If any that pretend to ſoundneſs do ſo, they but expoſe their darkneſs, and diſcover their miſtake concerning the covenant of grace, which is a free promiſe in Chriſt Jeſus: faith itſelf, and all the bleſſings that attend and follow it, being free and abſolutely promiſed. Indeed, conditions on our part, properly ſo called, would deſtroy the nature of the goſpel, which is a free promiſe. Where is the freedom of grace, if conditional? It would turn the goſpel to the law, and the free covenant of grace to the conditional covenant of works: yea, it would thus deſtroy the peace of the poor humbled ſinner; for when he thinks there is ſuch and ſuch a condition that muſt be fulfilled by him before he hath a right to meddle with the promiſe, then he ſtands aback, he dares not believe, becauſe he ſuppoſes he wants this and that condition and qualification; and ſo his legal dream hardens his heart againſt the goſpel, and foſters his unbelief, to the diſhonour of God, and to his own ruin. But if he could ſee the promiſe free and abſolute, Without money and without price, and that there is no condition in this covenant, but Chriſt's obedience unto death, which is performed to God's ſatisfaction, then a door is open to him to plead for all upon this ground, ſaying, Lord, give me faith, for Chriſt's ſake; give me repentance, for Chriſt's ſake; give me grace, for Chriſt's ſake; who hath performed the condition of all the grace of the new covenant, and through whom all the promiſes run out freely. He that clogs the goſpel-offer with ſo many terms and conditions, is like a man, as I noticed in a former occaſion, offering a cup of wine to a friend, but he makes it ſcalding hot upon the fire, that his friend dare not touch it with his lip, leſt he be burnt. It is the ſpecial property of the promiſe, that it is free, and abſolute, and unconditional to us: and if it were not ſo, none would believe at all; for, if faith itſelf were a proper condition, then the grand objection is, Oh! but I cannot believe: why, if faith be not abſolutely promiſed, there is no relief in that ſtrait, the goſpel could not be a joyful ſound to ſinners that are humbled to ſee their want of faith, but only to them that are believers, and have faith already; and ſo it were needleſs to preach the goſpel to any but believers: but faith, as well as other bleſſings, being freely promiſed, unbelievers may put in for a ſhare of this free-grace; Whoſoever will, let him come, and take of the water of life freely. And it is this free offer and promiſe that uſes to create faith; Faith comes by hearing of it. Therefore,

6. It is a powerful and prolific promiſe; hence the goſpel, which is the promiſe of Chriſt, as the Lord our righteouſneſs, is called the power of God to ſalvation; becauſe therein is revealed the righteouſneſs of God, from faith to faith, Rom. i. 16, 17. It is the goſpel-promiſe that is the miniſtration of the Spirit and ſo the organ of almighty power and ſovereign efficacy for converting ſouls, and ſo for ſaving of ſinners: When God comes, he comes in the promiſe. But here it may be aſked, May not the Lord convey himſelf in a command, as well as a promiſe? To which we reply, As the Lord can convey himſelf graciouſly to us, in a threatening to the devil, ſuch as that was, Gen. iii. 15.; yet there was a ſweet promiſe to our firſt parents wrapt up in it, The ſeed of the woman ſhall bruiſe the head of the ſerpent: So the Lord can, and many times does, convey himſelf powerfully into the ſoul by a command; ſuch as that, Look to me and be ſaved; or ſuch as that, Fear not, for I am with thee: but ſtill it is ſuch a command, as hath the goſpel mixed with it, and a promiſe wrapt up in the boſom of it, and wherein the Lord undertakes to work what he commands, according to his promiſe in Chriſt: and no command, without a relation to the goſpel, or the promiſe, is the channel of ſaving power; for there is no ſalvation to a ſinner but in the virtue thereof: ſo that ſtill it is the promiſe that is powerful and efficacious for begetting children unto God, who are therefore called the children of promiſe. But more of this afterwards. —In a word, it is an extenſive promiſe; and this leads me to the laſt thing propoſed upon this firſt general head, and that was,

4*thly*, To conſider the object of the promiſe, or to whom it belongs. And here three things belong to this purpoſe concerning the promiſe. 1. For whom it is deſigned. 2. By whom it is poſſeſt. 3. To whom it is preſented.

1. Who are the objects of the promiſe, for whom it is deſigned; I mean, for whom it is appointed of God from eternity, ſo as they ſhall reap the ſaving benefit, and obtain all the good that is in it? I anſwer, The election ſhall obtain, though the reſt be blinded, Rom. xi. 7. Eph. i. 11. And hence all the elect and choſen of God, ſuch of them, I mean, as are ſubjects capable of actual believing, they, and they only, are brought, by the power of divine grace, to believe the promiſe, to the ſaving of their ſouls; As many as were ordained to eternal life, believed, Acts xiii. 48.; and, All that the Father hath given me, ſhall come to me, John vi. 37. If any think, O! how can this doctrine of particular election agree with the univerſal offer of the goſpel, and the promiſe thereof? And how is it evident that God deals fairly with men in this matter, ſeeing ſome only are elected and deſigned of God to the good of the promiſe? Why, Sirs, does not God deal fairly, when he tells us plainly what he is doing, and that he deſigns to ſhow his mercy towards ſome, and his juſtice towards others, Rom. ix. 22, 23.; that he deſigns the revelation of Chriſt for the falling and riſing of many in Iſrael; and the goſpel for a ſavour of life to ſome, and of death to others? If a gardiner (as a great divine exemplifies it) watering his garden, where there are many weeds; yea, more weeds than herbs, declares that he waters the whole garden, both weeds and herbs together, that he may make both to come up above ground, and appear what they are, and, after that, that he may pull out the weeds, and foſter the herbs for ſpecial uſe; is not this very right, and fair, and reaſonable, inſomuch that none needs inquire further, why does he water the weeds? Even ſo, the church is God's garden, and many reprobate weeds are therein; and when God orders the watering of a goſpel-diſpenſation to a mixed multitude of elect and reprobate, declaring that the offer of the goſpel is to both, for the converſion of the elect from their natural enmity, and for bringing to light the hatred and enmity of the reprobate againſt him and the offer of his grace; is it not fair dealing, and a reaſonable anſwer to the cavils of men againſt the goſpel-offer, God by his word makes it manifeſt, that all men, elect and reprobate, are under ſin and unbelief, and that no man can come to Chriſt in the goſpel-promiſe, unleſs the Father draw him? And none would come, unleſs he ſhewed mercy on ſome. And this manner of proving men, and ſhewing them to be what they are, by a common offer of grace unto all, and caſting in the net of the goſpel-promiſe among them, is a part of that wonderful prudence, whereby Chriſt makes all theſe that are outwardly called to be without excuſe, and at the ſame time fiſhes out the elect from the ſea of ſin and miſery, when the reſt periſh: of which prudence ſpeaks God by the prophet, Iſa. lii. 13. Behold my Servant ſhall deal prudently, and proſper, and be extolled. O but this wiſdom of God, then, in converting the elect, for whom the promiſe is eſpecially deſigned, without giving cauſe of ſtumbling to the reſt, is rather to be admired and praiſed, than diſputed againſt! Rom. xi. 33. O the depth of the riches both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! How unſearchable are his judgments, and his ways paſt finding out! God will have mercy on whom he will have mercy; and whom he will he hardeneth. Say not you, why does he yet find fault? for, who hath reſiſted his will? nay, but, O man, who art thou that replieſt againſt God? Rom. ix. 18, 19, 20. If you be diſputing for the devil and the reprobate againſt God's righteous decree, you muſt be left, with all ſuch proud and preſumptuous unbelieving deſpiſers of plain doctrine, to reckon with your judge, who can well anſwer for all his decrees and deſigns; mean time you cannot anſwer for your preſumption. Withal, know, that God hath diſcharged all men to meddle with his ſecret council; Secret things belong to the Lord our God, but to us the things that are revealed, Deut. xxix. 29. Our great inquiry, therefore, ſhould be, not what is God's ſecret will and promiſe, but rather who poſſeſſes it, and how we may be poſſeſt of it. Therefore,

2. Who are the objects of the promiſe, by whom it is poſſeſt? Why, even all believers; for, He that believeth, hath everlaſting life, ſays Chriſt, John vi. 47. Believers are in covenant actually, and the promiſe of the covenant is in their poſſeſſion, the begun poſſeſſion of eternal life is commenced with reſpect to them, and the charter of the promiſe is delivered to them, and eſtabliſhed in their perſon, they being actually members of the myſtical body of Chriſt; They, as Iſaac was, are children of the promiſe. Of which more afterwards.

3. Who are the objects of the promiſe, to whom it is preſented, that they may take poſſeſſion, and build their faith and hope thereupon? And here, as the firſt queſtion related to the object of the promiſe, with reſpect to God's eternal deſtination; and the ſecond, to the object of it with reſpect to the Spirit's internal ſaving operation; ſo this third concerns the object thereof with reſpect to the goſpel external diſpenſation: the firſt ſhews us by whom the promiſe ſhall be poſſeſt; the ſecond, by whom it is poſſeſt; and the third, by whom it may be poſſeſt. Here, I ſay, the promiſe is preſented and given in the external goſpel diſpenſation unto ſinners; particularly,

(1.) To ſinners of mankind; not to fallen angels, but to fallen men: theſe are the only kind of ſinners that God deſigned to ſave, and for whoſe behoof, Chriſt, the promiſed ſeed, was ſent, came, died, and ſuffered; 1 Tim. i. 15. This is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jeſus Chriſt came to ſave ſinners: and ſo the promiſe is made, and the call to believe the ſame is given to them; To you, O men, do I call, and my voice is to the ſons of men: and the miniſter's commiſſion is, Go preach the goſpel to every creature.

(2.) To ſinners in Zion, or the viſible church. As the promiſe of Canaan was made to the whole people of Iſrael; ſo the promiſe of Chriſt, and all bleſſings in him, even the everlaſting reſt above, of which Canaan was a type; that such a promise is given forth to the visible church, see Heb. iv. 1, 2, 3. And hence, whereas these that are without the church are said to be aliens to the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to the covenant of promise, Eph. ii. 12.; so the members of the visible church are these to whom the promises are said to belong, as it was with the Jewish church, and much more with the Christian New-Testament church, where the privileges are not lessened, but enlarged. See Acts ii. 39. For the promise is to you and to your children; yea, even all that are afar off, even to as many as the Lord our God shall call, namely, externally call; for the apostle is there using this as a motive to their faith, who were yet only pricked in their hearts, and not believers with the heart. Compare ver. 37, 38, 41. This was the common privilege of the Jews; To them belonged the promise, Rom. ix. 4.; and so do they belong to us. Here is a foundation of faith laid in Zion, Isa. xxviii. 16.; you have all a right of access and warrant to come and take possession. Yea, I will certify you, in respect of the external gospel-dispensation, there is not a soul here but hath as good a right to the promise, as ever any believer had the moment before he believed. Yea,

(3.) It is to great sinners that the promise is presented and given forth; The promise is to you, Acts ii. 39. To whom was the apostle speaking? Even to the crucifiers of Christ; to the murderers of the Lord of glory; and to whom he had said immediately before, Him you have taken, and by wicked hands crucified and slain, ver. 23. It is presented as a ground of faith to enemies, rebels, fools, mockers, and scorners; Prov. i. 22, 23. The scorners that delight in scorning, fools that hate knowledge, turn ye at my reproof. And what is the motive? Just a promise, a glorious promise presented to them; Behold, I will pour out my Spirit upon you; and will make known my words unto you.

(4.) It is given not only to humbled and penitent sinners, that see their need, and are convinced of their sin and misery, but even to the unhumbled and impenitent: though none indeed will flee to the promise, or to Christ therein, except they be convinced of their need. And though the promise is given forth to such, preaching good tidings to the meek, for binding up the broken-hearted, Isa. lxi. 1.; yet, because these that are humbled are ordinarily the persons that complain, saying, Alas! I am neither humbled nor convinced; therefore I must tell you, that the promise is presented, and given out, not only to the humbled and legally penitent, but to the most unhumbled, impenitent, unconvinced, and hardened sinner that hears this gospel; even such as see nothing of their need, but think they are well enough without Christ. See Rev. iii. 17, 18. Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched: where their very want of conviction and knowledge of their own sad state, is made the reason of the gospel-offer by Christ; I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be cloathed; and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see. See also, Isa. lv. 1, 2. where these that are thirsting after vanity, are called to look to the free promise of life in Christ; Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money, come ye; buy and eat; yea, come; buy wine and milk, without money, and without price. What sort of thirsters they were, the challenge in the second verse sheweth; Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Hence the gospel-promise is given out to these whose hearts are hardened against God and all good; Hearken unto me, ye stout-hearted, and far from righteousness; I bring near my righteousness, it shall not be far off, and my salvation shall not tarry: I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory, Isa. xlvi. 12, 13.

Thus you see the promise is given forth to all sinners in the visible church, in a general indefinite way and manner, in the external dispensation of the word, which names no particular person of any sinner, but speaks to all, without distinction of nation, state, or condition, and under such names and characters as are applicable to all alike, in their natural, lost, dead, and undone circumstances. Thus run all the promises of the new covenant, both in the Old and New Testament, Gen. iii. 15. and xxii. 18. Gal. iii. 8. Jer. xxxvi. 25, 26. and xxxi. 31, 33, 34. compared with Heb. viii. 9, 10, 11, 12.; where you see the promises come directed to all nations that shall hear of them, and to all persons indefinitely, and supposes them to be in a cursed, condemned, dead, and wretched state, to whom they are thus directed, presented, and offered; and this makes it indeed to be the joyful sound of glad news to all people, Luke ii. 10. But here several questions may be propounded, and a solution of them attempted.

QUEST. 1. You will perhaps say, If the free and absolute promise be thus given forth to all in a gospel-dispensation, then, what need the use of means?

I answer, 1. In favour of the sovereign grace of God, which is a thing that is neither furthered, by our good, not hindered by our evil, that God will have his elect saved and brought within the covenant, though they were even living in the contempt and neglect of good means: and therefore, I ask, What was Manasses doing, when God apprehended him in the briars and thorns of Babylon? And what was Paul doing, when God first took hold of him by his converting grace; I suppose he was furiously persecuting all that were using any good means; yea, breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the church of God, and persecuting the Son of God: yea, no mean will be used rightly by any, till God begin the work, and pour some grace out of the absolute promise, which is indefinitely dispensed; and therefore, not knowing but this same sovereign grace may take hold of some gospel-despisers, who are yet slighting all the means of grace, this doctrine of grace, absolutely free grace, must be preached, though reprobates should break their neck upon it. Yet,

2. In favour of the holiness of God, who hath appointed the use of means as the ordinary channel wherein his grace runs. I must tell you, that this doctrine carries no prejudice against the use of means, but rather fortifies the same; for the promises are absolute, in opposition to all conditionality on our part, but not in opposition to the diligent use of means: even as the decree of God in election is free and absolute, and yet does not exclude, but include God's executing and accomplishing his decree by

by such and such means, and ordering our use of them; even so the promise of God is absolute, yet it does not exclude the use of means, no more than the absolute promise that Paul got, that none in the ship should die, did exclude the mean, which was their abiding in the ship, Acts xxvii. 24, 31. And therefore, though the natural use of means, which is all the use that can be made of them by natural men, is not connected with the promise necessarily; yet they that wilfully neglect the means of reading, hearing, praying, and the like, they are so far out of God's way, that they are excluding themselves from the benefits of the promise. If a man wilfully refuse to eat and drink, and use the means of natural life, will he not be accounted a self-murderer, notwithstanding of the absolute decree concerning the number of his days? And so, if a man wilfully refuse the word of life, and obstinately neglect the means of grace, will not God judge him for a self-damner, notwithstanding of the absolute promise given forth, generally and indefinitely, for the encouragement and excitement of faith, in the external dispensation of the gospel?

QUEST. 2. Why, but say you, If the absolute promise be presented to us all, how is it true, if it be not fulfilled in us all?

ANSW. A man may give his word, his promise, his charter to us; and yet, if we will not take his word, nor make use of his charter, we may reap no good of his word, while yet his word is true: Even so here; God in the external dispensation of the gospel, presents his promise and word of grace to us; but, if we will not take his word, this does not hinder but his word is true, though yet his truth will not be to our advantage, while we will not credit his word, believe his promise, and receive his testimony. There is a great difference betwixt the unbelief of believers, and the incredulity of unbelievers: the unbelief of believers does them much harm; though it shall not make the promise of God of no effect, yet it may breed much wo to them in the mean time: but the incredulity of unbelievers, if they live and die in it, is just the cause of their utter ruin; and yet it makes not the truth of God of no effect: his truth in the promise does not profit us but in a way of believing. It is the best charter and security for heaven and salvation: but as for these that reject this security, and will not take it, it is what will aggravate their damnation; for, he that believeth not shall be damned: but they that, by a faith of God's operation, embrace the promise, and take it as their only security, they shall find him faithful to make out every word of promise to them.

QUEST. 3. But, say you, If God hath given a promise to me, will it not be accomplished whether I believe or not?

ANSW. If he give you grace to believe, and so give you it in possession, then it infers an obligation on God to accomplish it; because, to the believer, that receives the promise, it is given definitely and particularly, saying, Thou art the man to whom it is given; but when it is given only in the gospel-offer, and external dispensation, as it is to all the hearers of the gospel, this infers no obligation upon God to make good the promise to any or every particular man, because it is made only generally and indefinitely, without defining the person in particular, but only pointing at sinners in general; and it remains only general and indefinite in the offer, till, in a way of believing, you make it your own particular good; and therefore God is faithful in denying this offered benefit, so long as you, through unbelief, reject it. If you offer a man your bond for a sum of money, and he reject it, then you are under no obligation, by that bond, to give him the contents of it: if he accept the bond, then you oblige yourself; but if he reject, then you are free, and cannot be accused of unfaithfulness to your promise, or bond. So here, if you truly and believingly take God at his word, then he is bound, by his own promise, to make out all; for then you, believing, have everlasting life: but if you will not take God's bond, nor receive his record, but reject it by unbelief, saying, in effect, that it is not good enough security for your salvation and eternal life; then you, through unbelief, make him a liar, and his word a lye, his promise an untruth: in which case, if you live and die there, he is so far from being bound to give you the blessing contained in that charter, that he is bound, on the contrary, to execute his threatening upon you; He that believeth not, shall be damned. The promise, in the external dispensation, is like a blank bond, or an indefinite obligation to blank persons, that it might be a standing claim to all sinners of mankind to whom it comes: sinners in general are named, no person's name is particularly inserted therein; but if you, by faith, fill up your name, then the bond gives right to you in particular; and that which was yours only generally and indefinitely before, becomes yours actually and particularly, upon your receiving it with particular application to yourself.

4. Then, say you, after all that is said, it seems the promise is still conditional, namely, upon believing.

ANSW. Faith and believing is also promised absolutely; and therefore I ask, What is the condition of that promise of faith and the Spirit of faith? If this be not free and absolute, where is the man that can tell me what is the condition upon which one may have faith, and the Spirit of faith to work it? Nay, the promise of it is free and absolute, though yet general and indefinite. And as the promise of faith is free, so justification, sanctification, glory, and all that follows faith, is freely promised; not to it, but on the back of it, in the new-covenant order. So that still the promise is absolute, free, and unconditional to us; the proper condition of them all is fulfilled by, and to be found in the glorious new-covenant Head, Christ Jesus: and upon this condition of his obedience unto death, you ought to plead them; for, though they be absolute in point of proper conditionality in us, yet not exclusively of the use of means. Therefore, O pray, pray; and cry that you may find the power of the promise upon your souls: God allows you to plead for this, Ezek. xxxvi. 37.; where, after the enumeration of many absolute promises, the Lord says, For this will I be enquired of by the house of Israel. O cry and wrestle in prayer, and use the means: only take care that you use not the means as a condition, thinking now you have done your part, and therefore God is obliged to do his, and to grant the promised grace: for thus you will turn the free covenant of promise miſe to a conditional covenant of works; and ſo you turn quite off from the goſpel-way of believing, to the old legal way of doing; and conſequently you will diſappoint yourſelf, and make Chriſt of no effect to you, Gal. v. 4, 5. and iii. 29.

QUEST. 5. But, ſay you, What though I cry and groan for the grace of the promiſe; yet if the abſolute promiſe be not particular to me, I can never be a partaker of it?

ANSW. In order to clear up this point, and ſet it in a proper light, let it be conſidered,

1. That though the promiſe be abſolute, yet it is alſo indefinite: though diſpenſed in general, yet it excludes no particular man; ſo that no man in the world, living under the goſpel, can truly ſay he is not intended in this promiſe, as well as others; and ſeeing, therefore, that God hath not excluded thee by name, and that there is no clauſe that ſhuts thee out, it is a grievous ſin in thee to exclude thyſelf: theſe cavilling thoughts and diſcouragements then do ariſe from hell; it is the devil, and thy own black heart, and not this doctrine, that diſcourages thee. You think, if you had a particular promiſe bearing your name, you would believe: but, is it not all one, when there is a general promiſe to ſinners, and the chief of ſinners, with a command to you to come, and receive, and apply the promiſe particularly to yourſelf, that thus all may be your own?

2. As the general promiſe lays an argument to your hand, whereby you may plead, ſaying, Lord, thou that tenders thy grace to me, do thou powerfully apply it: thou who has left me a promiſe, O let me not come ſhort through unbelief: thou who gives the outward means, O give the inward grace. So, if thou thus groan after the Lord, it would be a ſign that the promiſe, which belongs to all in general, belongs to you in particular; and that by virtue of the promiſe, ſomething of ſpiritual life was begun in you; even as a ſigh and a groan, in a man, is a ſign of natural life. If you be acquaint with any inward heart-groaning after the grace of the promiſe, ſuch as, perhaps, you cannot put into words, groanings that cannot be uttered, I will tell you for your comfort, it is a ſign that the Spirit of grace is already come, Rom. viii. 26.: the foundation is laid; Chriſt will not break the bruiſed reed, nor quench the ſmoaking flax; he will ſatisfy the longing ſoul, and fill the hungry with good things. That hunger and thirſt, that groaning and longing hath a particular promiſe of being ſatisfied; Bleſſed are they which hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs; for they ſhall be filled, Mat. v. 6. Let this therefore turn your water into wine preſently. Take your food, poor ſoul, and feaſt upon it; and let me ſpeak to others, that are not ſo far forward as you, ſince I am opening the net of the goſpel to all.

O ſinner, the promiſe is held out to you; it is tendered to you, and Chriſt in it: or, Chriſt, and the promiſe in him, is preſented to you; for the promiſe holds out the very remedy for your malady.—Are you dead in ſins? the promiſe holds out life to you; The hour cometh, and now is, that the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of man, and live. O if power would come along with the promiſe!—Are you under wrath? the promiſe holds out Jeſus, who delivers us from the wrath to come.—Are you loſt and undone? the promiſe holds out redemption through his blood, even the remiſſion of ſins.—Are you unable to ſave yourſelf? the promiſe holds out Chriſt as the Lord our righteouſneſs and ſtrength; as able to ſave to the uttermoſt; and that help is laid upon one that is mighty.—Are you unwilling, as well as unable? the promiſe holds out a power for breaking that enmity and reſiſtance; Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power.—Have you a deviliſh heart within you? the promiſe holds out renewing grace; A new heart will I give you.—Are you poor, blind, and naked? the promiſe holds out tried gold, to remedy your poverty; eye-ſalve, to heal your blindneſs; and white raiment, to cover your nakedneſs.—Are you a poor, fooliſh, guilty, filthy, miſerable creature? the promiſe holds out Chriſt to you, as made of God, for your behoof, wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption.—Tell me a caſe that the promiſe does not reach; nay, it is juſt propoſed, O ſinner, as a remedy for your malady! and therefore ſay not, Ah! what ſhall I do with theſe promiſes? or, what have I ado with them? Why, man, woman; To you is the word of this ſalvation ſent: and I will acquaint you, in God's great name, what you are to do with it; you are juſt to take him at his word, ſaying, AMEN, Lord; even ſo do, I take thee upon thy promiſe: O let it take hold of me, for it is good news to me.

What is it to believe the goſpel? Why, it is juſt to hearken to a promiſing God, and to welcome a promiſe into the heart. Faith hath relation to the promiſe, and takes it as a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, ſaying, O good news to me; for faith makes particular application of the promiſe held forth in the general diſpenſation. Take away the promiſe out of the Bible, and you take away the goſpel: all the commands and threatenings of the law will not make a ſingle ſentence of goſpel of themſelves, and yet infinite wiſdom makes a good uſe of them in a ſubſerviency to the goſpel; for, though no precept or threatening be properly any part of the goſpel, yet they may make preparation for it; they are, like John's rough ſermon, to prepare Chriſt's way: the threatening ſerves to chaſe us into God's way, like a flaming ſword; and the precept ſerves to direct us how to keep the way when we are in it. But the goſpel itſelf is God in a promiſe; it is compoſed and made up of promiſes, whereof Chriſt is the ſum total; the Yea and Amen. God in the goſpel ſays, Notify to me what is the matter with you, and I will certainly help you; tell me what you would have, and I will undoubtedly give it you; ſignify to me what you are afraid of, and I will really deliver you. I will tell you, in a word, what the law ſays, what the goſpel ſays, and what faith ſays: By the law is the knowlege of ſin; and accordingly the law ſays, Man, you have a lawleſs mind, there is no ordering of it, no order in it: the goſpel anſwers, I will put my law in thy mind, and bring it to order: and faith ſays, Welcome the promiſe; O Lord, I am glad that thou do ſo; AMEN, Do as thou haſt ſaid, (to uſe the words of David, 2 Sam. vii. 25.)—The law ſays, Man, woman, your mind is ill, but your heart is worſe; you have a wicked nature, a ſtubborn and rebellious heart: the goſpel anſwers, I will take away the heart of ſtone, and give the heart of fleſh: then faith ſays, O welcome, Lord, with ſuch a promiſe; O! do as thou haſt ſaid.—The law ſays, Man, woman, you have a dea devil within you, an evil ſpirit, inclined to every evil: the goſpel anſwers, I will put my Spirit within you, and cauſe you to walk in my ſtatutes: and then faith ſays, O welcome, ſweet promiſe; Lord, I take thee at thy word; do as thou haſt ſaid.—The law ſays, Man, woman, you have committed many grievous ſins, and hainous iniquities: the goſpel anſwers, Your ſins and iniquities will I remember no more; and, I will blot out you ſins as a cloud: and then faith ſays, O bleſſed promiſe! welcome, welcome; Lord, I take thee at thy word; I embrace thy promiſe; O! do as thou haſt ſaid.—Again, the law ſays, Man, woman, your backſlidings are increaſed; you are but a backſliding hiefer: the goſpel ſays, I will heal your backſlidings, and love you freely: then faith ſays, O welcome, Lord, with the promiſe in thy hand; Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord: O! do as thou haſt ſaid.—Again, the law ſays, Man, woman, you are but an ignorant mortal; you know nothing of God, as you ought to know; the convinced ſoul takes with the charge of the law: and the goſpel anſwers, You ſhall be all taught of God; and then ſhall you know; you ſhall follow on to know the Lord, as that word may be read, Hoſ. vi. 3.: then ſays faith, O good is the word of the Lord! welcome a promiſing God; Lord, I take thee at thy word; do as thou haſt ſaid, for I will look to thee for the performance of it.—Further, the law ſays, Man, woman, you deſerve to be thruſt to the bottom of hell, to the darkeſt and deepeſt part of the pit of perdition; and the convinced ſoul ſubſcribes to the truth of it: but the goſpel anſwers, Deliver his ſoul from going down to the pit, for I have found a ranſom: then faith ſays, O welcome, welcome word of grace! Lord, I embrace thy promiſe, and I will hope in thy word.—The law ſays, Man, woman, thy plagues are great, and thy diſeaſe incurable: nay, but the goſpel anſwers, I am the Lord that healeth thee; the leaves of the tree of life are for the healing of the nations: then ſays faith, Lord, I will take thee at thy word; O! do as thou haſt ſaid. Yes, ſays the Lord, but I will take a day to it, and my own time of accompliſhing my promiſe; for the viſion is for an appointed time: then ſays faith, Lord, I will wait upon thee; I will look to the Lord; I will wait for the God of my ſalvation; my God will hear me. Well, the Lord is a God of judgment, and bleſſed are all they that wait for him.

Thus God is ſetting about his charter among you; who will ſign and ſet to their name? The promiſes are flying about your heads and ears; is there none of them flying into your hearts? Have you no uſe, man, woman, for any of theſe promiſes? Wo is me, if God, with a promiſe in his hand, can get no credit among you! But if you be for the promiſe, then take it, and God's bleſſing with it, and Chriſt in the boſom of it; for, the promiſe is the place where the Lord lies. Say not, Who will aſcend to heaven to bring down Chriſt, or deſcend to the deep to bring him up? Faith may ſee him lying in the promiſe; and if you take the promiſe into your heart, you take Chriſt in: and if you thus embrace the promiſe, then may I ſay, as Iſaac was, you are the children of the promiſe *. This leads to

II. The ſecond general head, which was, To open up the character of their being the children of promiſe. Now, to open up the nature of this filiation, I would ſhew, 1. In what reſpects believers, or the children of God, are the children of promiſe. 2. In what method and order they come to be actually the children of the promiſe.

1ſt, In what reſpects they are the children of promiſe; and, I think, they may be called ſo, in reſpect of ſpiritual conception, generation, nutrition, education, aſſimulation, and amplectation.

1. Believers are the children of promiſe in reſpect of ſpiritual conception: they are conceived in the womb of the promiſe, before ever they are born again, and long before they were believers; they were conceived, by the gracious purpoſe and ſovereign good pleaſure of God, in the womb of the covenant that was made betwixt the Father and the Son from eternity, which is the promiſe in its original conſtitution: the elect, ſubjects of this promiſe, are the ſeed ſown in the womb thereof; the ſeed promiſed to the Mediator, of which it is ſaid, Iſa. liii. 10. He ſhall ſee his ſeed; and Pſal. cx. 3. that from the womb of the morning he ſhall have the dew of his youth. All that come to be actually, in time, the children of the promiſe, were virtually ſo from all eternity; According as he hath choſen us in Chriſt, before the foundation of the world, Eph. i. 4. According to the promiſe of life which is in Chriſt Jeſus, 2 Tim. i. 1.; even eternal life, which God, that cannot lye, promiſed before the world began, Tit. i. 1. Not according to our works, but according to his own purpoſe and grace, which was given us in Chriſt before the world began, 2 Tim. i. 9. Here is a glorious conception, that can never prove abortive. The children of the promiſe are the ſeed, Rom. ix. 8.; and Chriſt will want none of the ſeed which the father gave him; All that the Father hath given me, ſhall come to me: Hence he is brought in ſaying, Behold I, and the children which God hath given me, Heb. ii. 13. He ſhall ſee the travel of his ſoul, and be ſatisfied, when, in the fulneſs of time, the pregnant womb of the promiſe is opened by the power of God; for, whenever the time of love comes, then the promiſe is come to its full time of bringing forth ſome child of grace, and heir of mercy, that is in the womb of it. Therefore,

2. Believers are the children of the promiſe, in reſpect of ſpiritual generation, and actual production: they are begotten and brought forth out of the womb of the promiſe; Of his own will begat he us, by the word of truth, Jam. i. 18. Where, as the efficient of the new birth is God, he begets us; and the moving cauſe is the good pleaſure of God, Of his own WILL he begat us; ſo the inſtrumental cauſe, and the immediate parent is the promiſe, the word of truth, impregnated with the power and Spirit of Chriſt: and thus believers are brought forth by the virtue of the promiſe. It is ſaid of Ephram, Hoſea xiii. 13. that he ſhould not ſtay long in the breaking forth of children. Why? how ſhall he be brought forth? Behold the promiſe immediately follows for that end; I will ranſom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem from death: O death! I will be thy plagues; O grave! I will be thy deſtruction. Which promiſe, whatever other mercy it imports, includes alſo the ſpiritual reſurrection from the grave of ſin, to a ſpiritual life, in and through Jeſus Chriſt his death and reſurrection; on which account, believers are taught to ſay, Bleſſed be the God and Father of our our Lord Jesus Christ; who, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, 1 Pet. i. 3. Christ's death and resurrection is the confirmation of all the promises, by which believers are begotten again to a lively hope: and what is a believer, but a child of hope, brought forth out of the womb of the promise, impregnate with the almighty efficacy of the Holy Ghost, causing him to hope upon that promise, by which he was begotten again to that lively hope? Hence the native cry of the new-born child of the promise, is, Lord, remember the word on which thou hast caused me to hope, Psalm cxix. 49. And hence his over-word, again and again, is, I hope in thy word; I hope in thy word, ver. 74, 81, 114. 147. What is faith, and hope, and other graces, but parts of the new creature cast out of the womb of the promise? yea, the promise, you see, is both the mother and the nurse of hope; the mother brings forth that child of hope, being the instrument of begetting us thereunto; and then hope sucks her mother's breasts, saying, I hope in thy word. And hence,

3. Believers are the children of promise, in respect of spiritual nutrition, or nourishment; as the promise hath a generative virtue, for begetting children; so it hath a nutritive virtue, for maintaining them: it hath both a fertile womb, for begetting children; and a full breast for nourishing of them. The children of God are nourished and suckled at the breast of the promise. Read to this purpose, Isa. lxvi. 8,—11. The children of God are the children of Zion, or of the church, the spiritual society, where the pure ordinances are dispensed: hence the child of God is taught to say, It is my mother's house, and the chamber of her that conceived me, Song iii. 4. And what are the promises, but the mother's breasts for the spiritual nourishment of her children, and of this man, or that man, that is born in her? And hence the word of grace is compared to the milk of the breasts; As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby, 1 Pet. ii. 2. I will tell you some properties of this milk that is in the promise.—It is very free milk, a very free breast; Come, buy wine and milk without money, and without price.—It is very fatning milk; it is just the feast of fat things full of marrow, that makes the child of promise grow.—It is very sweet and delicious milk; Sweeter than the honey, and the honey-comb: How sweet are thy words to my taste? Sweeter than honey to my mouth.—It is warm milk; the babe's heart is warmed with it when applied by the Spirit; Did not our hearts burn within us, when he talked with us by the way?—It is very medicinal milk; were the child of the promise under a spiritual decay and consumption, a new draught of this will cure the child; He sent his word and healed them. Hence they come to ordinances, sometimes all full of plagues and diseases, just pained to death, as it were; but a word comes, and some drop of this milk, that makes them whole and sound, and go away triumphing in the consolations of God.—And why hath it these qualities? Even because it is pure milk; The words of the Lord are pure, Psal. xii. 6. It is the sincere milk of the word; that is, without sophistication, without mixture; without erroneous mixture, or legal mixture. If we that are ministers should unduly mix any legal qualification with the gospel-milk of the free and absolute promise, it is enough to make the children loath the milk, and so hinder their growth in holiness and comfort: why? Oh! says the child, I dare not apply such a promise, for I want such and such a qualification that the minister speaks of. I will tell you, man, it is the law that says, Hold off, for you are not meet, you are a sinner; but the gospel says, come, and take freely, be what you will. And therefore, whatever hinders you from applying the promise, and sucking the milk of it, you may suspect it is no gospel.

4. Believers are the children of promise in respect of education: they are trained up and educate by the grace and virtue that flows from the divine promise. The children of the promise are but babes at best, and children, while here; therefore they are never weaned from the breast of the promise so long as they are in this world, and always till faith and hope, grounded on the promise, be turned to vision and fruition in heaven, where all the promises will have their full accomplishment. And therefore the sons and daughters of Zion, To whom belong the covenant and the promises, are said to be nursed at her side, Isa. lx. 4. And hence, as children depend upon their parents, and in an ordinary way cannot live without them; so the life of believers here is a life of dependence upon the promise; their light, life, liberty, strength, comfort, and all issuing from the promise. As Moses's own mother brought him up for the princess, namely, Pharaoh's daughter, who adopted him for a prince, her own son, and so he was a prince in Pharoah's family; thus believers are brought up by the seed of the promise, and their mother breeds them kings and princes unto their God; Instead of thy fathers shall be thy children, whom thou mayest make princes in all the earth, Psal. xlv. 16. Hence,

5. Believers are the children of promise in respect of assimulation, likeness, and conformity; 2 Cor. iii. 18. Beholding his glory as in a glass; [that is, in the glass of the gospel,] we are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, by the Spirit of the Lord. 2 Pet. i. 4. Great and precious promises are given us, that by these we may be made partakers of the divine nature. The law, as it is a rule of holiness, is the transcript of God's holiness in a command; the gospel is the image of his holiness in a promise: and when power accompanies the promise for begetting children unto God, what the law teaches preceptively, the gospel teaches effectively; The grace of God, that bringeth salvation, hath appeared to all men, teaching us, that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, Tit. ii. 11, 12. Indeed, holiness is a child of the promise, it is a daughter of the holy covenant; as children are like their parents, so believers, by virtue of the promise, are brought to a conformity thereunto: Rom. vi. 17. But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered to you; or rather, as it is in the margin and in the Greek, WHERETO YE WERE DELIVERED; delivered into it as into a mould, as the wax is cast into the impression of the seal, answering it line for line, stroke for stroke, and wholly representing the shape and figure of it. Believers are, according to their measure, transformed into the likeness and similitude of the gospel, conformed unto it; understanding, will, affections, aims, principles, actions, and conversation, all becoming the gospel, and the promises thereof: hence the promises are made the springs of gospel-holiness; 2 Cor. vii. 1. Having these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. The promise in Christ is the door of hope; and, He that hath this hope, purifies himself, even as he is pure, 1 John. iii. 3. The law, as a covenant, makes a man hopeless, and consequently heartless in every duty; it never purified a sinner to this day: it is the gospel that is the ministration of the Spirit, even the Spirit of holiness. I imagine, you will know it even to your experience, believer. Let the law, or the legal preaching, press upon you with a hundred commands, and a hundred moral arguments to back it; yet all it does is but to make you dead, till life come out of a promise; and whenever a word of grace or promise is let into the heart, it joyfully conceives there, and brings forth the child, whose name is Holiness to the Lord. When are you most holy, but when the promise is most sweetly and powerfully applied, and when the grace of the promise comes and takes you in its arms? Therefore,

6. Believers are the children of promise, in respect of amplectation (I only use that word, Sirs, as comprehensive of what I have a mind to say upon it; I do not love to express myself in words that you cannot all understand, but what I mean by it is this;) they are children of promise, in respect of the promise's coming to embrace, and hug, and dandle them, as a mother does her child. Do you understand that? Yea, perhaps, you know the meaning of the word; but happy you, that know the thing itself to your experience, namely, the promise coming and embracing you in its arms. The promise is the joyful mother of all the children she brings forth; and therefore they are born upon her sides, and dandled upon her knees, as the expression is, Isa. lxvi. 12. There are some rare folk in the world, Sirs, that are Christ's favourites; all his children are so, but there are some of them in a more special manner that are his darlings: and how does he caress and dandle them? Why, there comes a promise, and in the bosom of it Christ the first-born child of the promise; and Christ by his Spirit, as the Spirit of promise, embraces the soul, and takes hold of it, and hugs it in his arms, and intimates the love and good-will of God, saying, perhaps such a word as that, I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with everlasting kindness have I drawn thee. Son, daughter, be of good chear, thy sins are forgiven thee. O how sweet is it to be thus within the arms and embraces of a promise! Then is the soul in the very arms of a God in Christ. Believers are said to embrace the promise, Heb. xi. 13. But though this be the duty of all, when the question is about the ground and warrant to believe; yet, when the question is about God's method of working faith, none will embrace the promise, till first the promise embrace them: never a soul took hold of the promise, with his whole heart, till first the promise, took hold of his heart. God comes, by his powerful grace, breaking the natural enmity of the man, and killing him with his kindness. This is both the first and the last thing in the import of this designation, the children of promise; for still the promise is the mother and maintainer of faith, repentance, love, and all the graces; they have no being, till they be brought forth out of the womb of the promise: and still the believer is at a loss to believe and embrace the promise, till the promise take a new grip of him, and give him a new embracement.—Thus you see in what respect they are the children of promise.

I have not yet said that believers are the children of promise in an active sense, as they are believers of the promise, or improvers of the promise, and the like; for though that be true, and may come in in its own proper place, yet it would not be suitable to the scope or meaning of the text, where they are considered as passively, and without their own concurrence, as Isaac was, when born to Abraham by the mere virtue of the promise. The promise is of the mere grace of God in Christ; and to be a child of the promise, is to be a child of God, by the grace of God in Christ. The question here is not, how believers act as believers? but, how the grace of God makes them believers? and that is by virtue of their being the children of promise, in the respects that I have already named.

2*dly*, In what method and manner they become actually the children of promise; actually, I say, because there are many, even all the elect of God, not yet converted, who are virtually the children of promise; but the womb of the promise is not yet open to bring them forth. Therefore the question is about the method of their being the actual children of promise, and so actually believers. And here you would notice, I am not speaking of the ground and object of faith, namely, the promise, of which formerly; but the way and method of God's working it; for these two ought not to be confounded, but distinctly considered in their own place. The word of God is the warrant, the Spirit of God is the worker of faith. Now, what hath been said already, may give some light to this inquiry; but there are these four things that I would further say concerning the method, speaking only of God's ordinary way of begetting children to himself.

1. The Lord brings home the threatening of the law, and applies it to their conscience, in a work of conviction. The conscience is naturally seared as with a hot iron; like these that have a part of their flesh burnt with an iron, though it be touched, yet they do not feel: this hard skin must be pierced; and therefore God makes the knife of conviction go to the quick; makes the man see that he is a child of the devil, a child of wrath, puts him in fear of hell, and shews him that there is a standing quarrel betwixt God and him, and that this must be removed; hence a concern will be raised in the heart, What shall I do to be saved? Acts xvi. 30. They that are actual children of the promise, have found themselves actually under the dispensation of threatenings from Sinai; for the law is the schoolmaster, to awaken the sinner, and let him see his need of Christ.

2. The Lord imbitters sin, which gave force to the threatening, in a work of compunction. Both the spirituality of the law, in its command; and the severity of the law, in its threatening, are set before the man; in the consideration whereof, the soul not only cries out, Oh! unclean, unclean! but, Oh! undone, undone! The infinite infinite majesty of God appears; the infinite malignity of sin appears; and the man is pricked in his heart, Acts ii. 37. The commandment comes, sin revives, and he dies, who before was alive without the law, Rom. vii. 9. Hence,

3. He discovers the absolute need of the promise of the gospel in a work of humiliation, and his undone state without it. A holy God stares the man in the face; the unholy soul sees this holy God, and is afraid, and ashamed, and humbled; humbled so far, as to take with the whole charge of God and his law against him. When ministers charge people with sins, they will either deny them, or cast a cloak over them, by manifold excuses; and perhaps say, I was mistaken, or in a passion, or under such and such temptation: but that is a plain evidence they are not humbled before God; for, when God humbles the man, he is more exercised in condemning himself, than any minister can be capable to do: he takes with the law-charge, saying, as Nathan to David, I am the man, I am the devil, I am the monster. Indeed, this and other steps of humiliation may, perhaps, run along with him in his whole Christian course, after his first believing, as well as before; but I speak now of the common and natural order.—He is humbled, likewise, to a clearing of God's equity and righteousness, in sentencing him by the law, to the pit of perdition, and is made to clear and justify God, though he should condemn him. Some will say, We cannot think God will be so cruel, as to damn the most part of the world for their sin: why, that is an evidence your soul was never humbled under a sense of sin. But, Oh! says the humbled soul, death and damnation is the true wages of sin; and if God should send me to hell, he is just; I might preach his righteousness there, and declare that he never wronged me; yea, it is my wonder that I have been so long out of the bottomless pit. Again, he is humbled to see, that as his damnation would be an act of justice, infinite justice; so his salvation, if ever he share thereof, will be an act of sovereignty, glorious sovereignty, and pure grace. He is humbled to see, that he cannot save himself; that he is neither able to save himself, nor worthy that God should save him; and that he is so far from having any righteousness of his own to plead, that his best righteousness is filthy rags; and that God may justly damn him for his duties, as well as for his sins.

4. He discovers to the man, in this case, the excellency of the promise, and of the new-covenant way of salvation; the excellency of Christ, and the glory of his righteousness in a work of saving illumination: and now the good work, the saving work begins, when the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Christ is given, Eph. i. 17.; and Christ is revealed in the man, Gal. i. 16.: and this light is the light of life, whereby the soul is quickened to embrace the promise, to believe in Christ and hope in his word.

The promise is opened up and applied to the begetting of faith. As Christ manifested for thhis glory, and his disciples believed in him, John ii. 11.; so, when he manifests his glory in a word of grace or promise, then the soul believes; for then the righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith, Rom. i. 16. Power accompanies the revelation for the working of faith; for the faith of God's elect is the faith of God's operation, Col. ii. 12. Then the man believes, now he credits the truth and goodness of the promise, 1 Tim. i. 15. He cordially accepts, and receives, appropriates, and applies the great and good things promised to himself, with a confident persuasion of the accomplishment of the promise, resting upon the faithfulness, power, and grace of the promiser for the same, according to the measure of the communication of the Spirit of faith, Rom. x. 10. Heb. xi. 13. Rom. iv. 20, 21. Heb. xi. 11. And now, the man is actually a child of the promise; for the promise hath taken hold of him; and he hath, through grace, taken hold of it: the promise hath embraced him, and he hath embraced it; the embracement is mutual: now he is graciously inclined and engaged.

Let me tell you, in order to the further clearing of this method or manner of their becoming actually the children of promise, the ministry of the gospel is a kind of fishery; ministers are called fishers of men, and so men and women are the fish. Now, God hath hung a bundle of promises together, as so many hooks upon a line, for taking all sort of fishes to bring them ashore to himself: here are large hooks for taking large fishes, were they as large as a leviathan; here are little hooks for taking little fishes, were they as little as a mennon.—Oh! says one, I am a great sinner, and my sins are mountaneous: well, there is a hook for you; Who art thou, O great mountain, before our Zerubbabel? Thou shalt become a plain: and he shall bring forth the head-stone thereof with shooting, crying, Grace, grace unto it, Zech. iv. 7.—Oh! says another, I am a poor insignificant worm, a worthless, mean, impotent creature: well, there is a hook for you; Fear not, worm Jacob, I will help thee, Isa. xiv. 14.—Are you poor and needy? There is a hook for you; When the poor and needy seek water, and there is none, and their tongues fail for thirst, I the Lord will hear them, I the God of Jacob will not forsake them, Isa. xli. 17, 18.—Are you a poor blind creature, that knows not what way to go? There is a hook for you, Isa. xlii. 16. I will bring the blind by a way they know not, I will lead them in paths that they have not known.—Are you a piece of parched ground, like a parched wilderness? There is a hook for you, Isa. xliv. iii. I will pour water on him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground.—Are you troubled that you cannot get a heart to pray? Well, there is a hook for taking you, Zech. xii. 10. I will pour out upon the house of David, the Spirit of grace and supplication.—Are you unable to believe and repent? Well, there is a hook for catching you, in the following words, They shall look on him whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him; where both faith and repentance are promised.—Are you a lost and undone creature? There is a hook for you; Jesus Christ came to seek and save that which was lost, Luke xix. 10.—Are you a plagued wretch, oppress with the plague of atheism and unbelief, with the plague of blasphemy and enmity, saying, Oh! there are deviliſh plagues, and helliſh diseases in my heart? Well, there is a hook for you, Rev. xxii. 2. The leaves of the tree of life are for the healing of all nations; and Mal. iv. 2. To you that fear my name, shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing under his wings.—Oh! but say you, there is a conditional promise, it is to them that fear his name: I will tell you, man, there is no conditional ditional form put upon any promiſe in the Bible, to keep back a ſoul from applying and taking hold of the promiſe, but to draw it in to embrace the condition, either by taking Chriſt for the condition, or running to an abſolute promiſe, where that condition is promiſed: for inſtance, are you apprehenſive that you are deſtitute of that fear of God? Then there is a hook for you to ſwallow down, that you may be taken by it, Jer. xxxii. 40. I will put my fear in your hearts, that you ſhall not depart from me. And thus you are to do with all the promiſes that ſeem to run in a conditional form. Let not the condition fright you from opening your mouth wide to catch the hook of the promiſe; or, if ſtill you dare not meddle with it, then run to the abſolute promiſe, where the condition itſelf is promiſed; if you cannot find out that, then run to Chriſt himſelf, in whom all fulneſs is, and in whom all the promiſes are yea and amen; having him, you will have the condition of all the promiſes. If you ſtand aback from the promiſe, and will not open your mouth to receive it, or if you, reject it for want of this condition or qualification, you miſtake the nature of the goſpel, and are ignorant of the free covenant of promiſe. There is no evil you would have removed, no want you would have ſupplied, but you may get a promiſe for it; and if one cannot make for you (as none of them but will, if rightly underſtood) go to another: if one hook be too large for you to ſwallow down, you may get another, more meet for you; therefore, go about, and ſeek thy meat, and take faſt hold of the promiſe that makes beſt for thee. And, O happy ſoul, if you be taken! For the hook will not hurt you, but only hale you to the ſame happy ſhore with all the children of promiſe.

Perhaps there is a ſecret thought in ſome body's breaſt, Alas! Sir, but I do not find the promiſe taking hold of me; and therefore, how ſhall I take hold of it? You have been ſaying, none embraces the promiſe, till the promiſe embrace them; now, I do not find, I do not feel the promiſe taking hold of me.

ANSW. I fear, by this way of ſpeaking, you are making ſenſe and feeling the ground of your faith, and not the promiſe: this is not believing, but feeling; like Thomas, that would not believe till he felt and ſaw Chriſt: but, Bleſſed is he that believeth, and hath not ſeen.

QUEST. But, ſay you, Muſt I not feel the power of God making me believe, before I can believe?

ANSW. Yea, it is the power of God only that can make you believe: but make not your feeling of that power to be your warrant to believe; for the word of promiſe is your warrant, and alſo the immediate object and ground of faith: therefore, when there is a promiſe meet for you, and ſuited of God to your caſe, ſtretch out the withered hand to receive it at his call, never ſtopping for fear that the power of God be not enabling you; for, no ſooner will you eſſay to ſtretch out your hand, than the power of God will be before-hand with you, though, perhaps, in an inſenſible manner: whereas, if you wait for a ſenſible feeling of his power, you are not believing, nor truſting in his word. If you would believe, it muſt be when you feel him not: for, believing is not feeling; and feeling is not believing.

OBJECT. But, if I believe his word without feeling his power, I fear I ſhall but preſume, and take the promiſe only in my own ſtrength; or, like the ſtony-ground hearers, receive the word with joy, by a temporary faith, which will fail.

ANSW. People may indeed ſay they believe, and fancy they believe, and deceive themſelves: but fancy is one thing, and faith is another; true, right, and ſolid belief, is what you need not fear can be done in your own ſtrength. What! to take the word of a God for your ſecurity; to quit the law-way of ſalvation, and flee to the goſpel-promiſe; and to truſt the faithfulneſs of a God pledged in his promiſe, for your ſalvation from ſin and corruption, as well as from hell and damnation; to ſet to your ſeal that God is true, and to receive his record with particular application to yourſelf: if you do this, never fear that you are doing it by your own ſtrength; for it is not natural, but ſupernatural power that is dealing, when you are ſo acting. If you get a heart to embrace the promiſe, you may be ſure the promiſe is embracing you; for it is only virtue coming out of it, that enables you to embrace it: before your embracing of it, the virtue may be inſenſible and inviſible; but after the embracement, you may find ſenſible virtue. When the woman touched the hem of Chriſt's garment, ſenſible virtue came out of him; but there was ſome inviſible and inſenſible virtue came firſt from him to enable her to touch him; but ſhe never wiſt of that precedent virtue, till once ſhe touched him. A man may not know, till he believe, that it is the power of God that is dealing with him to make him believe, God's power deals and works ſo wonderfully in this matter; No man can tell whence it comes, and whither it goes, John iii. 8. What impreſſions the ſtamp of his power hath made, and how it makes the impreſſion, cannot be ſeen till on the back of it, or afterward, in order of nature at leaſt; even as the impreſſion that the ſeal makes upon the melted wax is not ſeen till the ſeal be lifted, and there the impreſſion remains. You cannot ſee yourſelf in a glaſs, till you look to it; but, look to it when you will, your image in the glaſs is before-hand with you: ſo, look to God in the promiſe; but lo, his looking to you therein prevents you. Your embracing the promiſe will flow from the promiſe embracing you; therefore, when the promiſe is ſet before you, and held out to you to be believed, take it in God's name, without any more ado; and then ſay with yourſelf, now there is a word for me, and it is the word of the God of truth; therefore that word and I ſhall never part: welcome, O bleſſed word, death ſhall not ſeparate you and me; I will hing by this hook, I will rely upon his word, till all be made good to me. And thus you will receive the ingrafted word, that is able to ſave your ſoul.

III. The third head of the method was, To ſtate the compariſon, and run the parallel betwixt believers and Iſaac; and ſo to ſhew more particularly, how they are, as Iſaac, the children of promiſe. And here the parallel may be ſtated in theſe following particulars.

1. As Iſaac was the child of Abraham; ſo are believers children of Abraham; Know ye, therefore, that they which are of faith, the ſame are the children of Abraham, Gal. iii. 17. See alſo ver. 29. And if ye be Chriſt's, then are ye Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe. As Iſaac was a child child of Abraham, not by natural power, for both his body and Sarah's were dead; but by a gracious promiſe, Gen. xvii. 19.; even ſo, believers are the children of Abraham, not by natural deſcent, ſuch as the Jews boaſted of, when they ſaid, We have Abraham for our father; but by virtue of the gracious promiſe made to Abraham, that in his ſeed, [i. e. in Chriſt,] all nations of the earth ſhall be bleſſed, Gal. iii. 8. compared with Gen. xviii. 18. To Abraham and his ſeed was the promiſe made: He ſays not, unto ſeeds, as of many; but as of one; and to thy ſeed, which is Chriſt, Gal. iii. 16. Thus, as Iſaac was a child of the promiſe made to Abraham; ſo believers are not only children of the promiſe made to Abraham, but alſo the children of the promiſe made to Chriſt, the ſeed of Abraham; In thy ſeed, [that is, in Chriſt,] ſhall they be bleſſed. To Abraham and his ſeed were the promiſes made; and as Abraham truſted God for the accompliſhment of the promiſe of Iſaac, Rom. iv. 19, 20, 31.; even ſo, Chriſt truſted his Father for the accompliſhment of the promiſe made to him concerning his elect children, Heb. ii. 13.; there he is brought in ſaying, I will put my truſt in him; and then, Behold I, and the children which God hath given me. Abraham's confidence was ſtrong, but Chriſt's confidence in his Father was perfect; it was not poſſible that the Mediator could diſtruſt his Father.

2. As Iſaac was the ſpecial ſeed of Abraham, of whom it was ſaid, In Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called, Heb. xi. 18. Gen. xxi. 12. Rom. ix. 7.: even ſo, believers are God's peculiar people, a choſen generation; To you that believe he is precious: —You are a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that you ſhould ſhew forth the praiſes of him who hath called us out of darkneſs to his marvellous light, 1 Pet. ii. 7, 8. Abraham had another ſon, namely, Iſhmael; but the promiſe was not to Iſhmael, but to Iſaac: ſo God hath other people that are his children, not only by creation, but by general adoption, and church-membership, and whoſe right to the promiſes is but general in point of acceſs and warrant to believe, ſealed in the ſacrament of baptiſm; which yet is ſuch as renders them inexcuſable, when they do not improve that right of acceſs they have: but believers are the children of God by a ſpecial adoption, having a ſpecial intereſt in, and poſſeſſion of the promiſe.

3. Iſaac was, the fruit of prayer, as well as the child of promiſe to Abraham. You may ſee the prayer of Abraham concerning a ſeed, Gen. xv. 3. Lord God, what wilt thou give me, ſeeing I go childleſs? May we not allude to this here? The children of God are not only the children of the promiſe made to the Mediator, but alſo the children of prayer made by him; they are the fruit of Chriſt's prayer, mediation, and interceſſion, John xvii. 20. He prayed not only for all that are believers, but for all that ſhould believe on him; and he prays them all to heaven, ver. 24. Father, I will, that they alſo whom thou haſt given me, may be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory which thou haſt given me; for thou loved me before the foundation of the world.

4. Iſaac was the child of a promiſe, whereof the accompliſhment was long delayed; though yet the delay did carry no prejudice to the certainty of the promiſe as to its accompliſhment, which took place in the fulneſs of time appointed of God, Gen. xvii. 21. and xxi. 2. Thus it is with believers, the children of the promiſe; there is a ſet time of their birth, or their being brought forth out of the womb of the promiſe; and the Lord waits, as it were, for that time which he hath ſet; He waits to be gracious, Iſa. xxx. 18. And after they are actually the children of the promiſe by converting grace, there is a ſet time for accompliſhing particular promiſes to them, for which they are to wait; The viſion is for an appointed time, but at the end it ſhall ſpeak, and not lye; though it tarry, wait for it, becauſe it will ſurely come, it will not tarry, Hab. ii. 3. It was more than twenty years after God promiſed Abraham a ſeed, that Iſaac was born. Perhaps there is a twenty year old promiſe, or a ten year old promiſe, or what you got ſo many years ago, not yet like to be accompliſhed. But, believer, the time is drawing near: as a man that is far off, every ſtep he takes in his return, he draws nearer and nearer home; ſo the fulneſs of time is coming for the promiſe to bring forth, and the viſion to ſpeak; it does not tarry in the day, nor in the night, though it ſeems to tarry, but approaches every moment: the longer you live, believer, the nearer you come to the accompliſhment of the promiſe; Now is your ſalvation nearer than when you believed. The promiſe of Iſaac, however long delayed, was as certain as the promiſe of Chriſt's coming; for Chriſt was to come of him: even ſo, the children of promiſe ſhall all as certainly be brought forth, and the promiſe as certainly be accompliſhed to them, as it is certain that Chriſt the promiſed ſeed is come. Indeed, the accompliſhment of that promiſe of his coming is a certain pledge of the accompliſhment of all the reſt of the promiſes; for, they are all chained to that great link: it was the leading promiſe, though about four thouſand years before it was accompliſhed; yet, In the fulneſs of time, God ſent his Son, made of a woman, and ſo accompliſhed that promiſe on which all the reſt depended. God will not forget to keep his day, were it never ſo long betwixt the promiſe and the day that he hath ſet, Exod. xii. 41. compared with Gen. xv. 13.

5. Iſaac was a child of the promiſe, born in a very unlikely, unexpected, and wonderful manner. Inſuperable difficulties ſtood in the way; outward means did fail; and, by the courſe of nature, no ſuch thing could be expected as the promiſed Iſaac. Abraham was an hundred years old, and his body was dead and withered; Sarah was ninety years old, and her womb was dead and barren, Rom. iv. 19. Heb. xi. 11. Even ſo it is with believers, the children of promiſe; when the promiſe comes to its full time of bringing forth its iſſue, the birth of any of the children of promiſe is always ſurprizing, wonderful, and moſt unlikely to natural ſenſe and carnal reaſon, when mountains of ſin and guilt, and inſuperable difficulties are in the way. Thus we will find the goſpel coming in with the ſweeteſt cordial, even when the law is raiſing the greateſt difficulty; as in Iſa. xliii. 22,—25. Thou haſt not called upon me, O Jacob; thou haſt been weary of me, O Iſrael;—thou haſt made me to ſerve with thy ſins, and wearied me with thine iniquities. Who could expect immediately after this to hear God ſaying, as it juſt follows, I, even I am he that blotteth out thy tranſgreſſions, for mine own ſake, and will not remember thy ſins! So Iſa. lvii. 17, 18. For the iniquity of his covetouſneſs I was was wroth, and smote him; I hid me and was wroth, and he went on frowardly in the way of his heart. O what a wonderful and surprising birth of free grace is that which follows! I have seen his ways and will heal him; I will lead him also, and restore comfort unto him, and to his mourners. When one would think, now the threatning is big with child, and ready to bring forth vengeance; then, to the praise of free grace, the promise, being big with a blessing, brings forth mercy and salvation. This is what makes Abraham's faith necessary, according to its measure, in all the children of promise; because some resemblance of the difficulties that Abraham's faith had to encounter, does present to them. Why, say you, it was a thing incredible that was promised to Abraham, he being so superannuate and dead, and Sarah likewise so old and barren. Well, man, woman, but the case is yours in other respects: you have the old man of sin and corruption, and your heart is dead and barren of any spiritual good; and it is as impossible for you to bring forth any spiritual issue, as it was for Abraham and Sarah to have an Isaac, if he had not been a child of promise, brought forth, not by the power of nature, but by the virtue of the promise: Even so it is with you; you need Abraham's faith; and faith of the same nature you will have, if you be a child of Abraham. Sense and reason will oppose and say, It is incredible that spiritual life and fruit can issue out of such a dead and barren soul; but now the language of faith is, What says the promise? As Abraham considered not the deadness of his own body, or of Sarah's womb, nor the difficulties that stood in the way of the promise; but the truth, faithfulness, and power of the promiser: even so, faith considers not the deadness, hardness, and barrenness of the heart; but the truth and veracity of that God, who is able, of stones, to raise up children to Abraham, according to his promise. And thus the promise brings forth its happy issue, and the child of promise owns that it is not by the power of nature, but merely by the power of grace, and virtue of the promise, that any spiritual good is brought forth, saying, By grace I am what I am.—Thus we are the children of God by faith; and, as Isaac, the children of the promise.

6. Isaac's birth was the joy of his parents; the comfort of Abraham, the laughter of Sarah, Gen. xxi. 6.: Even so, the birth of the promise is the joy of their heavenly relations. It is a day wherein God is evidencing that he is well-pleased in Christ: it is a day of the gladness of Christ's heart; saints and angels are glad; the church militant and triumphant rejoice; There is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, Luke xv. 7, 10. See how, in the preceeding verse, where our text lies, the barren Christian church is called to rejoice when children are born to God within her, Gal. iv. 27. Rejoice, thou barren, that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travellest not: for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband. Then is the church in joyful circumstances, when, by virtue of the gospel promise, children are brought forth in her, even this man and that man there. Such happy days have been in the church of Scotland, when the spirit of reformation was poured out; but when that spirit is much quenched, and reformation-light obscured, and reformation-zeal cooled, when the edge of it is blunted, when the carved work thereof is burnt, the covenanted work buried much in oblivion, and when old reformation-principles, together with the gospel-doctrine of free grace, which was the great instrument of conversion, is brought under much contempt and reproach; little wonder, when God is like to give the mother-church a bill of divorce, that she be not the joyful mother of many children to him. The gospel promise, and the free revelation of grace in Christ, is the very womb of the church, that brings forth her children: but, now-a-days, the doctrine of the gospel is brought under much disparagement, under much suspicion, as if it were some new dangerous scheme of doctrine; as the Athenians said of Paul's, Acts xvii. 19. Yea, it was said of Christ's, What new doctrine is this? Mark i. 27. Such is the natural bias towards the law, as a covenant, and so natively does a church and people fall into it, even after and under a profession of sound principles, that when evangelical doctrine comes to be revived, in any measure, it is still branded with novelty †. Thus it was with Christ himself; his doctrine was called new, when he came to be a minister of the old and antient truths of God, even to confirm the promises made unto the fathers, Rom. xv. 8. But it is the free promise, the free grace of God, that begets holy children to God; and therefore an unholy devil will raise up all the calumnies in the world against it, that so when it is brought under an ill report, and universal suspicion, none may receive or get good of it; for all the saving good that is gotten, is by the power of grace, by the virtue of the promise: however, the election shall obtain; but, if the devil could get his will, the promise should never be the joyful mother of any children.

7. Isaac was born, not after the flesh, but by the promise; not of the bond-woman, but of the free. See the context, Gal. iv. 22, 23. And how this is explained, you see in the following vers. 24, 25, 26.; and how it is applied, both in the text, and ver. 31.; where it is, in like manner, said of all believers, So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond-woman, but of the free. As HAGAR and SARAH here signify the old and new covenant, as I shewed in the explication; so ISHMAEL and ISAAC hold forth these that are under the law, and these that are under grace. Now, believers are thus distinguished from all unbelieving Ishmaelites, that they are not under the law, but under grace; and hence sin cannot have dominion over them, Rom. vi. 14.—There is a threefold bondage to the law that unbelievers are under, which the children of the promise and the free-woman are delivered from.

(1.) The commanding power of the law; that is, the precept of it, under this conditional form, Do and live. The law of works, that they are under, says, Do and live, Rom. x. 5. That law that they are under, says to them, If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments; which, no doubt, is galling to the conscience, as it was to that young man in the gospel, to whom Christ thus speaks, for his awakening and conviction. How galling must it be to them that are under the law, to understand that they are under such an impretable command, Do perfectly, and live eternally; considering the holiness and spirituality of that law, and also the wickedness and inability of the creature? Therefore, continues not in all things written in the book of the law to do them, Gal. iii. 10. The law not only curſes its tranſgreſſors from heaven, which they have forfeited, but curſes them to hell, which they have incurred; for, all have ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God, Rom. iii. 23.; yea, the wages of ſin is death; and, the wrath of God is revealed from heaven againſt all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men, Rom. i. 18.

(3.) They are under the bondage of the irritating power of the law; The motions of ſin, which are by the law, work in their members to bring forth fruit unto death, Rom. vii. 5. The ſpiritual law mightily irritates the corruption of a man in nature, ſo as he becomes angry, and chaft, and ſins more and more; for, The carnal mind is enmity againſt God, and is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. The law inrages his corruption, like a mad horſe, that rages the more that he is checked with the bridle: here is a ſad bondage, that all unbelievers, Iſhmaelites, children of the bond-woman, are under. Now, believers, the children of promiſe, are, with Iſaac, the children of the free-woman, being delivered from that bondage: from the firſt, by Chriſt's obedience imputed, Rom. v. 19.; from the ſecond, by his ſatisfaction imputed, Gal. iii. 13.; from the third, by his grace imparted, and his Spirit implanted, according to the new covenant, Rom. viii. 2. The believer is not under the law of works, becauſe Chriſt hath done all for him: he is not under the threatening of it, becauſe Chriſt hath ſuffered all for him; he is not under the irritation of it, for the law, as a rule, is written in his heart, and Chriſt, by his Spirit, works in him both to will and to do of his good pleaſure. He is not under the law as a covenant of works, to be thereby either juſtified or condemned: hence he is neither under the bondage of doing duty, from hope that he ſhall be juſtified by doing it; nor from the fear that he ſhall be condemned for not doing it, ſeeing that, as by the deeds of the law no fleſh living can be juſtified; ſo, there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt. He is freed both from the legal hope of getting to heaven by his doing, and ſlaviſh fear of going to hell for not doing; for, as his title to heaven is founded on Chriſt's obedience only, and his ſecurity from hell upon Chriſt's death and ſatisfaction only; ſo his motives to obedience are more evangelical, and ſuited to the goſpel-liberty that he is under, ſuch as love and gratitude towards that God who hath ſaved him. I ſpeak of believers now, as ſuch, and in ſo far as freed from the law, and not in ſo far as unbelief and a legal temper, in the ſad remains thereof, may hold them under much bondage: but ſuch is their freedom, as I have expreſſed, in ſo far as they hold faſt the liberty wherewith Chriſt hath made them free, Gal. v. 1. — I might here alſo ſpeak of the freedom of God's children even from the ceremonial law, which may be a part of the apoſtle's intent; a bondage which the Jews, by their own conſent, are ſtill under: this is called, by that famous council, Acts xv. 10. A yoke, upon the neck of the diſciples, which neither we, nor our fathers, were able to bear. And if inſtituted ceremonies were ſuch, how much more muſt uninſtituted ones be? This is a yoke which many in our land are wreathing about their own necks, embracing the abjured Engliſh popiſh ceremonies, and new modes of divine ſervice, which have no ſtamp of divine authority. We ſhould even pity and pray for thoſe who are fond of ſuch a yoke, as cannot but, in the iſſue, gall their necks; and that this generation may not run wholly back to Rome.— Now, I ſaid, that as Iſaac was born of the free-woman, ſo are believers free indeed, becauſe the Son makes them free: they are from Jeruſalem which is above, and is free, ver. 26. They are not under the law, but under grace.

8. Iſaac was no ſooner born, than he was mocked and perſecuted by Iſhmael, the ſon of the bond-woman; As he that was born after the fleſh perſecuted him that was born after the Spirit, ſo it is now, ſaid the apoſtle, in his day, Gal. iv. 29.; and ſo it is now, ſay I, in our day; and ſo it will be to the end of the world. Our apoſtle here deſigns to prevent the believing Galatians their ſtumbling at the oppoſition they might meet with from the Jews, who were ſo tenacious of their law, as to be ready to perſecute theſe that would not ſubmit to it: he tells them, that this was no more than what was pointed out in the type; and, as it was betwixt Iſaac and Iſhmael, ſo will it be betwixt believers and unbelievers, theſe that are under the law, and theſe that are under grace. The ſeed of the woman, and the ſeed of the ſerpent cannot agree; All that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, muſt ſuffer perſecution, 2 Tim. iii. 12. ALL, without exception, that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, muſt lay their account with perſecution; and more eſpecially theſe that preach and profeſs the goſpel, muſt look to be hated and reproached; You ſhall be hated of all men for my name's ſake, Luke xxi. 17. Mat. x. 22. Of all men; that is, of all that do not embrace the goſpel, you in particular ſhall be hated; for, the devil ſhoots his arrows at the whiteſt marks. The apoſtle here ſeems to point at ſecret enemies, and falſe brethren, that pretend to religion, and are ſeemingly holy, Gal. ii. 4. compared with chap. i. 6, 7. And here it was a circumciſed Iſhmael that ſcoft at Iſaac, Gal. vi. 29. compared with Gen. xxi. 9. The moſt deadly enemies of Chriſt, were theſe who ſtiled themſelves Abraham's ſeed, and were ſo according to the fleſh: hence the church complains, Song i. 6. My mother's children were angry with me; i. e. my mother's children by external profeſſion. The greateſt enemies of the church, for the moſt part, are theſe vipers that ly in her own bowels: the children of the promiſe may look to be caſt out by their ſeeming brethren, Iſa. lxi. 5.; and to be counted as monſters, ſigns, and wonders, and that even in Iſrael, Iſa. viii. 18.; and men wondered at, Zech. iii. 8. If it be ſo to this very day, think it not ſtrange, for the world will be like itſelf. "I "would be offended, ſaid Luther, if the world "were not offended at me." There is perſecution in reproachful words; Iſhmael's mocking of Iſaac is here called perſecution. We read of fourteen or fifteen ſeveral trials that the Old-Teſtament martyrs endured, Heb. xi. 35.—38. whereof this was one, cruel mockings. To be ſmitten with the tongue, is ſometimes a very cruel thing; to be called mad, drunk, peſtilent, turbulent fellows, as the apoſtles were, Acts ii. 13. xvii. 18, 19. xxvii. 24. xxviii. 22.; to be counted the offſcourings of all things; yea, and fire-brands of contention, are grievous charges, and afflicting to the godly: Wo is me, my mother, that thou haſt born me a man of ſtrife, and a man of contention to the whole earth! Jer. xv. 10. The beſt cordial for a child of God, in that caſe, is the like of that word,

If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth on you, 1 Pet. iv. 13, 14. On their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified, Mat. v. 11, 12.

9. Isaac was the heir by promise, though thus persecuted, Gal. iv. 30. compared with Gen. xxi. 10. xv. 3, 4.; Even so, believers, the children of promise, are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; If children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together, Rom. viii. 17. They are born heirs of the crown of glory; as children of the promise, they are just begotten to a lively hope by the resurrection of Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and which fadeth not away, 1 Pet. iii. 4, 5. They that are effectually hooked by the promise, though they may swim for a while in the sea of this sinful and troublesome world, yet the line on which the hook of the promise hings, will draw them at length to the shore of glory; Faithful is he that promiseth, who also will do it. Yea, the gospel-believer only is the heir, Rom. iv. 14.

10. The trials and difficulties that encountered Isaac in the way of the accomplishment of the promise, were very great; and so may it be with all believers, the children of promise, before they be put in full possession of the promised inheritance. We touched already the trial of Abraham's faith with respect to the birth of Isaac, and the difficulties that stood in the way of that promise, Abraham's body being dead, and Sarah also being of a barren sterile constitution naturally, and now past the prolific age.—But after Isaac was given in this extraordinary manner, and entered heir of the promise, such difficulties presented themselves, as seemed, at one blow, to cut off the intail of the promise for ever: Behold, Abraham is ordered to go and sacrifice Isaac, Gen. xxii. 2. compared with Heb. xi. 17, 18, 19. A greater trial was never put upon any creature after he had received the promise: what promise? that in Isaac should his seed be called; that he should be one of the progenitors of the Messias, and all nations blessed in him: so that, in being called to offer up his Isaac, the hope of his family, his only Son whom he loved; he seemed, at the same time, to be called to go and cut off the promises of God, to prevent the coming of Christ, and so destroy the whole world; to sacrifice his own soul, and his hopes of salvation in Christ, promised to come of Isaac; and to cut off the church of God at one blow: a very terrible trial! Isaac was the only one that he was to have by his wife Sarah, the only one that was to be the child and heir of the promise; the only son that could convey to all nations the promised blessing; a son for whom he waited so long, received in so wonderful a manner, on whom his heart was set; and to offer up his son as a sacrifice, and that by his own hand, which looked like the murder forbidden in the sixth command; it was a trial that would have overset the firmest and strongest mind that ever informed a human body: Yet he offered up Isaac by faith; he did it intentionally, and was ready to have done it actually, and went as far in it as the critical moment, and would have gone through with it, if God had not prevented him; for, the ground of his faith was, that he accounted that God was able to raise him from the dead; so that it would seem that Abraham had no expectation of being countermanded. Thus the trial went to the last extremity; and then, you know, how the Lord appeared.—Now, in like manner, the children of promise, believers in Christ, after they are entered heirs of the promise, extraordinary difficulties may appear, which their faith will have to struggle with; providences may run so cross to the promise, as that the fatal knife may seem to be at the very throat of the promise, to cut it off for ever from being accomplished. Isaac was given up for dead; and Abraham received him, as it were, from the dead, Heb. xi. 19.: His return to him was no less than a resurrection. The children and heirs of the promise are not then to think strange concerning the fiery trial, that is to try them, as though some strange thing happened to them, 1 Pet. iv. 12.; but are to believe that the promise will make its way through fire, and water, and death, and dreadful extremities; That the trial of faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, may be found unto praise, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of Christ Jesus, 1 Pet. i. 7.—— Thus you may observe the parallel, in manifold particulars, betwixt believers and Isaac; and see how, as Isaac was, they are the children of promise.

IV. The fourth general head, which was, To offer the grounds and reasons of the doctrine, whence and why it is that the children of God are the children of promise. And here three distinct questions may be accounted for: 1. Whence it is that the promise hath such a prolific virtue for begetting children to God? 2. Why God will have his children to be so by the promise? 3. Why will he have them, and them only, to be the children of the promise? A word to each of these.

1st, Whence it is that the promise hath such a prolific virtue for begetting children to God? or, how is it the mean of bringing forth children? In general, it is by the divine destination and appointment made the great instrument of begetting God's children; Of his own will begat he us, with the word of truth, Jam. i. 18. And more particularly, it hath virtue for producing this effect, in the following respects.

1. As it is the discovery of divine love, the manifestation of divine grace in Christ; The grace of God, that bringeth salvation, hath appeared unto all men, Tit. ii. 11.; and this revelation is the channel of divine power; I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek: for therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith, Rom. i. 16, 17. The riches of God's grace and love to sinners are manifested in the gospel-promise, and the freedom thereof, namely, his loving them because he loves them, Deut. vii. 6, 7, 8.; and that he will pity for his own name's sake, as is often intimate in the promise. And when the Lord offers, in the promise, to break through all the unworthiness and deservings of the creature, this tends to melt the greatest sinner to the greatest self-abasement, and the deepest sense of his own nothingness, saying, Lord, what am I? It tends also to make the soul break forth into the highest admiration of God, saying, O! who is like unto thee? And to fall in love with that wonderful device of salvation by free grace, through Christ Jesus, as the Lord our righteousness; and thus to bring the soul to God, as a child of pro-promise, conquered by the irresistible grace thereof.

2. The promise hath prolific virtue, as it is the object of faith, and the mean thereof; Rom. i. 16. It is revealed to faith; that is, to be believed: there is the immediate object of faith; and it is this revelation that is appointed of God to be the very mean of faith; therefore it is said, Rom. x. 17. Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God: and when faith comes this way, then persons are the children of God by faith in Christ.

3. The promise hath this prolific virtue, as it is the ground of hope to the poor perishing sinner; and when he begins to hope upon this ground, then regeneration begins; 1 Pet. i. 3. He hath begotten us again to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Christ from the dead; that is, I suppose, by the revelation of Christ as the sinner's righteousness for justification, confirmed and manifested in his resurrection from the dead: hence Christ speaks of his Spirit convincing men of righteousness, because he hath ascended to his Father, after he arose for our justification, John xvi. 10. compared with Rom. iv. 25.

4. And consequently, the promise hath this prolific virtue, as it is the seed of regeneration; the incorruptible seed, 1 Pet. i. 23, 25. When the word of grace, the promise, is sown into the heart, then the incorruptible seed is sown there, which hath a generative virtue for begetting the person to a lively hope, and making him a child of promise by regeneration; Of his own will begat he us, by the word of truth.

5. The promise hath this prolific virtue, as it is the impartation and communication of grace. In the new covenant there are not only promises of blessings, and of more grace to them that have grace, which may be called conditional promises; but promises of grace to them that want, which are absolute promises, and necessarily presuppose a total want: and so runs the covenant, Heb. viii. 8,—12. Every dram of grace is the fruit, result, and issue of an absolute promise, they all being so reductively; every good condition and qualification being promises therein, and no good condition or qualification takes place in the soul till that be accomplished: the instant before the promise of quickening be accomplished, the soul is dead in trespasses and sins, Eph. ii. 4.; the moment before reconciliation, it stands in enmity against the Lord, Col. i. 21.; and immediately before the promise of sanctification be made good, it is under sin and pollution. Hereupon the sinner hath encouragement to come to Christ, and the free promise, notwithstanding of the want of all good qualifications, because all gracious qualifications are derived to the sinner through the promise. The Lord is a free agent, and may work how he pleases; but hath not warranted any soul to stay one moment from closing with the Lord Jesus Christ, upon the want of any qualification, or upon any account whatsoever; otherwise he would allow their staying so long in unbelief, whereas that is hateful and abominable to him. Now, seeing grace is here dispensed, to the graceless; faith, to the faithless; repentance, to the impenitent; holiness, to the unholy; and all good things, to them that have nothing but all evil about them; thence the prolific virtue of the gospel of grace does proceed: and hence the gospel-dispensation comes with a commission to open the eyes of the blind; to turn them from darkness unto light, and from the power of Satan unto God; that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith that is in Christ Jesus, Acts xxvi. 18. And, indeed, if grace were not freely imparted and communicated by the gospel unto sinners, that by nature are destitute of all good, and all grace; none of Adam's sinful race could be the better of the gospel, for they are all graceless, cursed enemies to God: but it hath virtue to beget grace, because it is the channel in which grace runs out towards them freely.

6. The gospel-promise hath this prolific virtue, as it is the chariot of the Spirit, in which he rides; hence called the ministration of the Spirit, 2 Cor. iii. 8. The doctrine of the gospel is that in which the Spirit is received, Gal. iii. 2.: yea, the promise is so much the chariot of the Spirit, that it is called the promise of the Spirit, Gal. iii. 14.; and the Spirit is called the Spirit of promise, Eph. i. 13. This, indeed, is the great thing that is the source and spring of the prolific virtue of the promise, and what all that hath been said, is reducible unto, namely, its being the Spirit's chariot, wherein he rides prosperously, conquering and to conquer. The Spirit of faith, mixing in with the doctrine of faith, makes it the rod of his strength sent out of Zion, Psal. cx. 2.; upon which it follows, Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power. Now, the word of grace, and the Spirit of grace, joining hand in hand, to beget children unto God, is a promise made to the God-man Mediator, to take place to the end of time; As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord, my Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seeds seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and for ever, Isa. lix. 21. And thus the promise, with the Spirit in it, is productive of children to Christ. The Spirit promised was first upon Christ the head, and from the head descends to the members: and all believers are his seed; and the mean by which a seed is perpetuate and keep up for him, is the word and Spirit. The word is said to be first in Christ's mouth, he is our Prophet; and then in the mouth of this seed, the church; for there the promise shall be published: and thus, by the word and Spirit going together, the seed is maintained, and the children brought forth. O cry for the Spirit, then, to put virtue in the promise! Happy they that know the promise, given by the Father, sealed by the Son, and applied by the Holy Ghost!—So much for the question here, how the promise is a mean of begetting children to God?

2*dly*, Why will God have his children to be so by the promise? Believers are the children of God, by being the children of promise, for these following reasons, briefly touched at.

1. Because there is no life or salvation any other way. There are but two ways to eternal life supposable; the one is by the law, and the other by promise: by the law it is impossible, Gal. iii. 16.; therefore it must be by promise. These two ways you see set in opposition to each other, Rom. iv. 14. Gal. iii. 18. If the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise; and why? Even because it was not possible to have it by the law, ver. 21. For if there had been a law given, which could have have given life, then verily righteousness should have been by the law: but so it is, that no law was given, which could give life to any sinner; therefore righteousness and justification must be by promise in Christ. This argument stands confirmed by the very death of Christ, Gal. ii. 21. If righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain: but now, to assert that Christ is dead in vain, were blasphemy; why then, righteousness and life come not by the law, but by the promise in Christ.

2. God will have his children to be so by promise, that their salvation may be sure. What surer than the promise of God, confirmed by the oath of God, and sealed by the blood of God? It is therefore called the sure mercies of David, Isa. lv. 3. This covenant of promise stands first in Christ. The promise of the covenant of works, which promised life upon our doing, is forfeited by our disobedience, insomuch that nothing remains to these that are under that covenant, but a precept that is impresstible, every way unperformable, by sinful creatures; and a penalty that is intolerable by finite creatures; a command that cannot be obeyed; and a threatening that cannot be endured: hence, as life eternal is impossible to be obtained by them, and death eternal is inevitable while they remain there out of Christ; so, even to Adam in innocence, the promise of life, by that covenant, was very unsure, as the effect shewed: but now, the children of God, being the children of promise, have eternal life insured upon a law-biding righteousness, which is everlasting and immutable; through which righteousness, Grace reigns to eternal life, Rom. v. 21. Therefore,

3. God will have his children to be the children of promise, that their salvation may be free, as well as sure. See these two joined, Rom. iv. 16. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace, to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed. Indeed, if the promise were not free, salvation could not be sure: for, a properly conditional promise were a covenant of works; and if we failed in the condition of such a covenant even in a state of innocency, what would we do now in a state of sin and misery? Could that be sure? No, no; therefore, that it may be sure, it is of grace, Rom. 11. 6. I dare say, believer, you will put your seal to it, that your salvation could not be sure, if it were not of grace, of free grace manifested in the free promise.

4. God will have his children to be so by promise, that their salvation may be full and complete; for the children of promise are the heirs: and, what are they heirs of? Why, they inherit all things, Rev. xxi. 7. for they are heirs of God, Rom. viii. 17. Gal. iii. 29. The children of the promise in Christ, are complete in him, in whom is all the fulness of the God-head; and who is made of God to them, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. The law of works did not hold forth a full and complete salvation; for though it promised life upon doing, yet it did not promise grace to do and persevere: but here is a covenant of better promises, wherein Christ, and all grace in him, is held forth; and not only eternal life, comprehending grace and glory, salvation from sin and from hell; all upon the condition fulfilled by the Lord Jesus Christ, even his everlasting righteousness; but eternal life to the greatest advantage, both with respect to God's greater glory, and man's greater happiness; for, he came to give life, and to give it more abundantly, John x. 11.

5. God will have his children to be so by promise, that their salvation may be surprising and wonderful. To be saved by a free promise, is to be saved in a way that is the world's wonder. It crosses and confounds the wisdom of the world; it is a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence to them, Rom. ix. 33. They cannot think it possible that God will save us for nothing; that he will save us without our cost, without our charge, without our assistance, without our desert, without our desire: yet so it is, that none, by nature, have so much as a desire after Christ; nay, they say, There is no beauty in him that we should desire him; he is despised and rejected of men, Isa. liii. 2, 3. Men will not take with it, that they are downright enemies to Christ, and his gospel of free grace: but yet they are miserable enough, if they be but, as it were, enemies to it. There are two sad and ominous AS IT WERES, in scripture, to this purpose; one is, Isa. liii. 3. We hid AS IT WERE our faces from him; that is, they disesteemed Christ: another is, Rom. ix. 32. They sought righteousness and life AS IT WERE by the works of the law, and that is explained to be a stumbling at Christ. Well, these that sought life in this manner, lost it; who then found it? Even these that were not seeking it at all, were not desiring it; in consequence to this word, I am found of them that sought me not. This the apostle expresses, with wonder at the free grace of God, Rom. ix. 30, 31. This doctrine is so wonderful and mysterious, so opposite to the legal bias of the children of men, that the world cannot admit of it. The children of promise themselves can hardly believe the promise, it is so free. What! will God save me, upon no consideration in me, but that of sin and misery, and upon no other terms but as I am a sinner, and he a Saviour? Indeed, one of the great things that makes believing to be difficult, is, because we cannot admit it into our thoughts that salvation is to be had at such an easy rate: the old conditional covenant of works is so ingrained in our nature; Do and live, is so stampt on our hearts, that God will give us heaven, while yet we do nothing for it: yet so it is, that if we seek life even AS IT WERE by the works of the law, we stumble at the grace of God. O how wonderfully is this grace of God in Christ displayed in the promise!

6. God will have his children to be children of promise, that their salvation may be in a way exclusive of boasting; Rom. iii. 27. Where is boasting then? It is excluded: By what law? Of works? Nay, but by the law of faith. He will have them saved in a way that is most for his exaltation, and their humiliation; That he that glories, may glory in the Lord; and that no flesh may glory in his presence; that the haughtiness of man may be humbled, and the Lord alone exalted, Isa. ii. 11. The works of the law, and the faith of the promise, differ extremely; in that the former encourages boasting, and the latter excludes it. The promise of life, by the law, is to him that works for his life; this foasters pride and boasting, therefore it is out of doors: but the promise of life, by the gospel, is to him that works not, but believes on him that justifies the ungodly, Rom. iv. 5. This excludes boasting; it brings down the pride of man, and exalts the grace of

of God: therefore it is God's way. Man's way is quite contrary to God's; through their natural pride, they cannot ſubmit to the righteouſneſs of God, without their own legal righteouſneſs mixt with it, Rom. x. 3; even when, by the goſpel, the righteouſneſs of God, without the law, is manifeſted, Rom. iii. 21. Now, it is the property of faith to come empty-handed, without the law, or any expectation by the works thereof; and being empty-handed of its own works and righteouſneſs, it is fit for taking in the righteouſneſs of another: whereas the full-handed legaliſt hath no room, cannot take Chriſt and a promiſe in his hand; the law fills both his hands: or, if he takes the promiſe in one hand, and the law in another, Chriſt's righteouſneſs in one hand, and his own righteouſneſs in another, and think to make up a perfect righteouſneſs of both together; how does he thus bewray his proud boaſting of a perſonal righteouſneſs, to the reproach of the perſonal righteouſneſs of Chriſt, as if it were not perfect? Faith excludes boaſting, becauſe it lives on a promiſe of free grace; and whatever we have, or ſeem to have of our own, whether it be work or worthineſs, faith caſts it wholly to the ground, and itſelf alſo, that Chriſt may be All in all, for wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption. —— Thus you ſee ſome of the reaſons why God will have his children to be the children of promiſe.

3dly, The third queſtion was, why will he have them, and them only, to be the actual children of promiſe? Why will he have his children thus diſtinguiſhed from the reſt of the world?

1. Becauſe they are the children of his purpoſe, they are the fruit of his eternal predeſtination; Having predeſtinate us into the adoption of children by Jeſus Chriſt to himſelf, according to the good pleaſure of his will, Eph. i. 4, 5. He had a purpoſe of grace concerning them; therefore they are effectually called according to his purpoſe. See Rom. viii. 28, 29, 30.

2. They are the children of promiſe, becauſe they are the children of his donation. How many times does Chriſt ſpeak of the bleſſed number that was given him of the Father? John xvii. and thereupon he gives this as a reaſon why he made known his word of grace to them, ver. 8, 14. I have given them thy word. And again, Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth. Hence alſo the connexion betwixt their being given to him from eternity, and coming to him in time, is declared, John vi. 37. All that the Father hath given me, ſhall come to me.

3. They are the children of promiſe, becauſe they are the children of his affection, and of his everlaſting loving-kindneſs: this follows upon the former; and this is given as a reaſon why the Lord draws them by his grace in time; I have loved thee with an everlaſting love; therefore with loving-kindneſs will I draw thee, Jer. xiii. 3. His love of complacence muſt be manifeſted in time to theſe whom he hath loved with a love of deſtination from eternity; His delights were with the ſons of men.

4. They are the children of promiſe, becauſe they are the children of his purchaſe. They are dearly bought; and therefore ſhall not be eaſily loſt: redeemed by the price of his blood upon the croſs; and therefore ſhall be redeemed by the power of his Spirit, in the application of the promiſe, which is Yea and Amen in Chriſt, ratified by his blood. The promiſe ſhall take hold of them, and bring them forth: hence, Iſa. liii. 10, 11. upon his making his ſoul an offering for ſin, it is ſaid, He ſhall ſee his ſeed; the pleaſure of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand: he ſhall ſee the travel of his ſoul, and ſhall be ſatisfied: by his knowledge ſhall my righteous Servant juſtify many; for he ſhall bear their iniquities.

5. They are the children of promiſe, becauſe they are the children of his prayers; Iſa. liii. 21. He made interceſſion for the tranſgreſſors. John xvii. 8. I pray for them, I pray not for the world, but for them which thou haſt given me, for they are thine. And what Chriſt prays for, you ſee, John xiv. 16, 17, 26. Even the Spirit of truth, the Spirit of promiſe, to teach them all things, and make application of the promiſe in its prolific virtue.

6. They are the children of promiſe, becauſe they are the children of his praiſe; Iſa. xliii. 21. This people have I formed for myſelf, they ſhall ſhew forth my praiſe: upon which follows that free promiſe, ver. 25. I, even I, am he that blotteth out thine iniquities, for mine own name's ſake, and will not remember thy ſins. They are the children of promiſe, that they may ſhew forth the praiſe of a promiſing God, 1 Pet. ii. 9. God ſays of one and all his children, that are ſo by the promiſe, as it is, Iſa. lxix. 3. Thou art my ſervant, O Iſrael, in whom I will be glorified. I will have all my perfections glorified in thee, by virtue of thy being a child of promiſe in Chriſt, in whom, as the centre of all the promiſes, Glory to God in the higheſt does accrue: I will glorify my mercy, in making the promiſe; I will glorify my truth in fulfilling the promiſe; as it is ſaid, Mic. vii. 20. Thou wilt perform the truth unto Jacob, and the mercy unto Abraham. It is MERCY to Abraham, becauſe to him it was made; and TRUTH to Jacob, becauſe to him it was fulfilled: even ſo, God is upon a deſign of glorifying his mercy in promiſing, his truth in performing the promiſe.—How does he glorify his wiſdom? In ordering it to run through ſo many intricacies; and his power, in guarding it againſt ſo many difficulties and oppoſitions.—How does he glorify his holineſs and juſtice? Herein alſo, and that both in reſpect of the Surety, by whom it is ſealed; and the ſinner, to whom it is applied. In reſpect of the Surety by whom it is ſealed, how does he glorify his holineſs? Seeing Chriſt's perfect obedience makes it ſtand good, without prejudice to the precept of the law. And how does he glorify his juſtice? Seeing Chriſt's complete ſatisfaction makes it ſtand good, without prejudice to the ſanction of the law. And then, with reſpect to the ſinner, to whom it is applied, how does he glorify his holineſs? In making the promiſe the very means of ſanctification, 2 Pet. i 4. For thereby the ſoul is made a partaker of the divine nature.—And, how does he glorify his juſtice? In ſprinkling the promiſe of mercy with the juſtice-ſatisfying blood of Chriſt, that ſo the ſoul to whom it is applied may not doubt of his mercy for fear of his juſtice, and that the promiſe in Chriſt may appear white and ruddy like himſelf; white, with the marvellous mercy that it brings; and ruddy, with the juſtice-ſatisfying blood in which it is conveyed. And hence the child of promiſe may ſee, to his unſpeakable joy, that God is not only merciful, but juſt alſo, in giving the promiſe of grace and glory to him, however vile and unworthy in himſelf; that he

he is not only merciful, but juſt, in forgiving of ſin; Rom. iii. 24, 25. He hath ſet forth Chriſt to be the propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs for the remiſſion of ſin,—that he may be juſt, and the juſtifier of them that believe in Jeſus: not only to declare his mercy, but to declare his juſtice. O Sirs, his great deſign is to glorify himſelf in this matter; and indeed his glorifying himſelf thus, in ſaving us by the new-covenant promiſe, is ground of everlaſting praiſe; Iſa. xliv. 23. Sing, O ye heavens; for the Lord hath done it, ſhout, ye lower parts of the earth: break forth into ſinging, ye mountains, O foreſt, and every tree therein; for the Lord hath redeemed Jacob, and glorified himſelf in Iſrael. Here will be the ſweeteſt part of the ſong of heaven to eternity, that God hath ſo redeemed and ſaved his people, as to glorify himſelf in all his glorious perfections; mercy and juſtice, and all his other attributes, glorioufly and harmonioufly embracing each other. Oh! what poor, baſe, legal, ſelfiſh, mean, pitiful, and unworthy notions and dreams have we about the goſpel, if our thoughts concerning it be not ſunk into this ocean of divine glory! A ſovereign God, who ſhews mercy on whom he will, hath this as his main view in creating any the children of his promiſe, even that they may be children of his praiſe.—So much for the grounds of the doctrine, with reference to the virtue of the promiſe, and the children thereof. I now proceed

V. To the fifth general head of the method, which was to make application of the whole. Manifold uſes may be made of this doctrine: I ſhall compriſe what I have to ſay in theſe four, viz. an uſe of information, examination, caution, and exhortation. I begin,

1*ſt*, With an uſe of information. Is it ſo, that all the children of God, or true believers, are, like Iſaac, the children of promiſe, in the manner that I have explained this text and doctrine? Then hence ſee,

1. What is the nature of the goſpel properly taken: it is a promiſe, a free promiſe of life and ſalvation, through Chriſt; as declares our apoſtle here, Gal. iii. 8. The ſcripture foreſeeing that God would juſtify the heathen through faith, preached before the goſpel to Abraham, ſaying, In thee ſhall all nations be bleſſed. What makes he the goſpel to be then? Even a free promiſe, ſuch as that given to Abraham, In thy ſeed, [that is, in Chriſt,] ſhall all nations of the earth be bleſſed. It is true, if we take the goſpel largely for the manner of the diſpenſation of it, we find commands and threatenings both intermixed with this diſpenſation, to be a fence to the goſpel, that people may know both their duty as to the improving of it; hence ſuch commands as that, Believe in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and thou ſhalt be ſaved: and alſo their danger in abuſing and miſ-improving it; hence ſuch threatenings as that, He that believeth not, ſhall be damned. Theſe, and the like commands and threatenings, intermixed with the goſpel-diſpenſation, are a fence to the goſpel; the law is thus ſubſervient to it: but the goſpel, ſtrictly taken, is neither the command nor the threatening, with relation to believing; but it is the thing itſelf to be believed, namely, the good news of ſalvation to ſinners through Chriſt; or, which is all one, the promiſe of life to be had in him. And the reaſon why we aſſert this, is, not only becauſe the ſcripture is plain herein, but alſo for the honour of God's law, which is perfect, containing every duty incumbent on us; which it could not be, if the goſpel taught us ſome new duty which was not contained in the law; and alſo for the ſecurity of the goſpel, that it may not be adulterated and abuſed with legal mixtures, to the ſubverſion of the glorious end and deſign thereof, which is to manifeſt the righteouſneſs of God without the law, Rom. iii. 21. If the goſpel were a new law, with new precepts and ſanction, beſide that law which Chriſt came under to fulfil in our room; then it behoved to be a new covenant of works, and there behoved to be a new righteouſneſs correſponding to that law, beſide the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, for our juſtification: and how dangerous and deſtructive this is to the nature of the goſpel, is evident from the deluſions of ſome, that hereupon make the act of believing, in obedience to the new command, to be our juſtifying righteouſneſs before God: in oppoſition to which, our excellent Standards, the Confeſſion of Faith and Catechiſms, exclude the very act of believing, as well as the fruits of faith, from the matter of our juſtification before God; and that for a good reaſon, becauſe we are not juſtified by the works of the law, among which faith itſelf is, as it is our act, even through grace: yea, they who make the goſpel properly a new law, cannot evite the darkening and perverting of the goſpel, even though they would ſeem to befriend it, Gal. i. 6, 7 †. This doctrine ſhews that the goſpel properly is a promiſe.

2. Hence ſee the power and efficacy of the goſpel, under the influence of the eternal Spirit accompanying it; ſeeing it, being a divine promiſe, hath virtue for bringing forth children to God, who are therefore called the children of promiſe: hence ſays the apoſtle, Rom. i. 16, 17. I am not aſhamed of the goſpel of Chriſt; for it is the power of God unto ſalvation, while therein is revealed the righteouſneſs of God, from faith to faith. They that are the children of God, are begotten by the word of truth, by the virtue of the promiſe, as Iſaac was. O Sirs, the goſpel ſhould be valued and prized; for, all the ſaving good that is done to the ſoul, is by the goſpel. The law, rightly uſed, is the mean of conviction, Rom. iii. 20. By the law is the knowledge of ſin, ſo as a man may ſee his need of Chriſt; alſo the law, as a rule, rightly applied is for the direction of our paths in the way of holineſs, when once we are got in to Chriſt: but it is the goſpel only, that converts a man, and brings him to fellowſhip with God in Chriſt; it is the preaching of Chriſt and the promiſe, the preaching of the goſpel, that hath converted all the converts that ever were to this day: for that only is the miniſtration of the Spirit; and it hath the ſame effect to this day, when it comes not in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance, 1 Theſ. i. 5. It is true, the preaching that is all goſpel, may yet do no good, if it come in word only; but yet ſo it is, that when converting power comes at all, it comes by the goſpel. It is true alſo, that a preaching that hath much droſs, a legal mixture, and but little goſpel in it, may perhaps be the inſtrument of converſion; but ſo it is, that it is only the goſpel-part of it that does the ſaving good. O Sirs, let the goſpel-promiſe promiſe be prized; for it is that which hath the virtue to draw out the ſoul to Chriſt.

3. Hence ſee the freedom of grace in the new covenant. Seeing all the parts of ſalvation are the fruit and offspring of the promiſe ſealed by the blood of Chriſt, believers being children of promiſe, whatever conſtitutes their character and privilege, muſt be the offspring of the promiſe; all the graces they poſſeſs, and benefits they enjoy in time, or ſhall enjoy to eternity, are children of promiſe.——Thus all the new-covenant graces are children of promiſe, and free born children.—Faith is a child of promiſe; Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power.—Repentance, as a fruit of faith, is a child of promiſe; They ſhall look on him whom they have pierced, and mourn.—Love is a child of promiſe; I will circumciſe their hearts to love me.—The Spirit of prayer is a child of promiſe; I will pour out upon the houſe of David the Spirit of grace and ſupplication.—Holy fear is a child of promiſe; I will put my fear in your heart.—The Spirit of praiſe is a child of promiſe; They ſhall ſing in the ways of the Lord; for great is the glory of the Lord. Tell me a grace that is not the offspring of the promiſe.——Again, all the benefits and bleſſings of the new covenant are the children of promiſe in Chriſt; of whom, in general, it is ſaid, Men ſhall be bleſt in him, and all nations ſhall call him bleſſed.—Implantation and union unto Chriſt, the foundation of all ſpiritual bleſſings, is a child of promiſe; They ſhall be called trees of righteouſneſs, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified, Iſa. lxi. 3. compared with Iſa. lxii. 21. This planting of the Lord is alſo a planting in the Lord; Iſrael ſhall be ſaved in the Lord with an everlaſting ſalvation: ſurely ſhall one ſay, In the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength: and again, In the Lord ſhall all the ſeed of Iſrael be juſtified, and ſhall glory, Iſa. xlv. 17, 24, 25.—Hence juſtification is a child of promiſe; In the Lord ſhall they be juſtified; By his knowledge ſhall my righteous Servant juſtify many.—Pardon is a child of promiſe; Their ſins and iniquities will I remember no more.—Sanctification is a child of promiſe; I am the Lord that ſanctifies you; I will put my Spirit within you, and cauſe you to walk in my ſtatutes.—Adoption is a child of promiſe; I will be a Father to you, and ye ſhall be my ſons and daughters, ſaith the Lord Almighty, 2 Cor. vi. 12.—Peace with God is a child of promiſe; This man ſhall be the peace.—Growth in grace and holineſs is a child of promiſe; I will be as the dew unto Iſrael; he ſhall grow as the lily, and caſt forth his roots as Lebanon; his branches ſhall ſpread, and his beauty ſhall be as the olive-tree, and his ſmell as Lebanon.—Recovery after falls is a child of promiſe; I will heal their backſlidings, and love them freely.—Reverting after decays is a child of promiſe; They that dwell under his ſhadow ſhall return, they ſhall revive as the corn: I am a green fir-tree, from me is thy fruit found.—Renewed viſits after deſertion is a child of promiſe; For a ſmall moment have I forſaken thee, but with great mercy will I gather thee: in a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment, but with everlaſting kindneſs will I have mercy on thee, Iſa. liv. 7, 8.—Continuation of divine favour amidſt all changes is a child of promiſe; I am the God of Bethel, where thou anointedſt the pillar, and vowedſt the vow: The mountains ſhall depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindneſs ſhall not depart from thee, neither ſhall the covenant of my peace be removed, Iſa. liv. 10. Even the mountains of myrrh and of ſenſible preſence may depart, theſe of which you are apt to ſay, My mountain ſtands ſtrong, and I ſhall never be moved. Mountains of myrrh, and hills of frankincenſe; mountains of ſenſible enjoyments, and hills of ſweet frames, may depart, but my kindneſs ſhall not depart from thee, neither ſhall the covenant of my peace be removed.—In a word, heaven, and eternal life, and victory over death, are all children of promiſe; Death ſhall be ſwallowed up in victory: and ſo ſhall we be ever with the Lord.——I might go through all the covenant of promiſe here, and tell you how every bleſſing of the covenant that can be named is a free-born child of promiſe. O ſee the freedom of the grace of the new covenant, and take faſt hold of this grace, for it is your life!

4. Hence ſee the freedom of God's children from the law, and their ſecurity from the power of a covenant of works, becauſe they are the children of promiſe. As to the precept of the law, they do not owe it a cup of cold water, as it is a covenant of works; Chriſt's obedience diſcharges them from that debt. As to the threatening of the law, they do not owe it a drop of warm blood; Chriſt's ſatisfaction diſcharges them from that debt: the perſon of the believer in Chriſt, is ſo far from being liable to death, and hell, and everlaſting wrath, whatever be his ſins and infirmities that in their own nature deſerve it, that he is not liable to the ſmalleſt ſtroak of vindictive wrath; that ſtroak hath gone by him, and lighted upon his Surety with a vengeance, and got all the ſatisfaction upon him that infinite juſtice can demand: There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt; they are diſcharged from all the law-debt; and, therefore, Who will lay any thing to the charge of God's elect?

5. Hence ſee the miſerable ſtate of all unbelievers; they are not actually children of promiſe: what then, O ye that are without Chriſt? Ye are the children of wrath by nature; the children of diſobedience, by practice; the children of the devil; the children of the bond-woman; and not of the free; under bondage to the law, as a covenant of works; curſed children; bond-men, and bond-women; in bondage, as Iſhmael; under bondage to the mandatory part of the law in its utmoſt rigour, Gal. v. 3. being debtors to do the whole law; under bondage to the minatory part of the law, under the curſe thereof; for, Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law to do them, Gal. iii. 10. Why? For as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curſe; that is, as many as are under the command, are under the penalty and threatening alſo: and ſo you are expoſed to everlaſting wrath and indignation. Oh! know and be concerned about this ſad ſtate that you are under, who have never yet fled for refuge to the hope ſet before you: you are not yet, as Iſaac, the children of promiſe, and of the free-woman; but, as Iſhmael, the children of the bond-woman: and being under the bondage of the law, you are under the bondage of death, hell, and wrath; curſed in your baſket and in your ſtore; curſed in your ſoul and in your body: and, if you continue there, you are curſed in your life and in your death; curſed in time, and will be ſo through eternity. Oh! conſider where you are, and how you ſhall eſcape the wrath you are under; otherwiſe wo to you for ever, as ſure as God lives; for your name is ANATHEMA MARAN-ATHA, curſed here, and curſed at the coming of Chriſt.—And, to provoke you to flee for for refuge to this Jesus, and to take hold of a promise, consider the following inferences;

6. Hence, from this doctrine, see the happy state of all believers in Christ: they are actually, as Isaac, the children of promise, and so they are the children of all the grace, all the glory promised in the new covenant; being the children of promise, they are the children of God, the children of light, the children of liberty, the children of the free-woman; free from the bondage, rigour, and malediction of the law; free from the guilt and power of sin; free from the sting and horror of death; free from the tyranny and dominion of the devil; free from the wrath and displeasure of God; free from hell and eternal damnation; free-born children, and heirs of the promise; children of the kingdom, in the strictest sense, that can never be cast out; for, it is their Father's good pleasure to give them the kingdom, and to give them all the contents of the covenant of promise, whereof they are children, and whereof they have evidence by their being believers; that is, such as have, through grace, embraced the promise as their only security, having no hope or expectation from the law; no hope or expectation from themselves, or their own best endeavours, but all their hope and expectation from the promise of God in Christ, as revealed in the gospel freely and absolutely.

7. Hence see the duty of all gospel-hearers in general, namely, to plead the gospel-promise, and lay hold upon it, that they may have evidence of their being the children of promise, and so be the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, Gal. iii. 26. Let us therefore fear, says the apostle, Heb. iv. 1. lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it; for, though the gospel of promises be preached to us, yet the word preached does not profit, not being mixed with faith in them that hear it. We do not profit by the promise, if it be not believed, or received by faith, with application to ourselves. It is true, faith itself is a child of the promise; and the mother must bring forth the child out of her prolific womb, before the child can have a breath in the gospel-air: and therefore do not dream of drawing faith out of your own bowels, or of believing in your own strength or power; for, believing includes rather a renouncing of your own power and strength, and a trusting in the Lord JEHOVAH, in whom there is everlasting strength: it is a laying hold of his strength exhibite to you in a free promise. Neither is it a laying hold on his strength by your own strength; but even the poor feeble soul laying hold on his strength for grace to lay hold on his strength. If the promise were only the object of faith, on which faith depends; then, where shall we look for grace to depend upon it? But it being also the mother, or prolific womb, that brings it forth under the influence of heaven; then it is not only an embracing of the promise, but a drawing power from the promise to embrace the promise. Faith, in some respect, is the weakest thing in all the world, though it can do all things: why? it is weak in itself, but strong in the Lord; for faith's acting on a promise, speaks to this purpose, saying, "O JEHOVAH, thou knowest that "I have no strength to make use of that word, "that promise, no more than I can make a "world: but, O there is the promise of the "God of truth, who is also a God of power, "able to give a being to his promise; there- "fore my heart says AMEN to that word; be "it to me according to thy word; and even so "I take it, through thy grace." Is that the way of your believing, man, woman? However weak in the degree of it, yet I will tell you, for your encouragement, that it is as good believing in the kind of it, as ever was in a believer in this world.

Now, I say, it is the duty of all that hear this gospel, to believe the gospel, by setting to their seal that God is true; and by receiving the record of God, that he hath given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. The law and the promise differ in this, that the law cannot be satisfied but by doing, but the promise cannot be profitably received but by believing; and believing in contradistinction from doing, yea, in contradiction to it: for legal doing and work, into whatever evangelical shape the world may cast it, is the very reverse of believing. Expect not the promised mercies and blessings, then, in a way of doing and working; for that is the law-way; but in a way of believing the promise. It is true, there may be abusers of the promise, and abusers of grace, that may say, "God be "thanked we have nothing ado for heaven but "believe; and therefore we will live as we list "in the pursuit of our lusts, and yet believe "all will be well." What, man! believe, and yet resolve to live in your lusts and sins! You do not know what believing is in that case, otherwise you could not speak or think a thing so contradictory to common sense; so blasphemous to our holy Jesus, as if he that were the object of faith, were the minister of sin. To believe in Christ, beside what I have said, is to employ him as a Saviour to save you from sin; and, therefore, to say you will believe in Christ, and yet live in sin, is both nonsense and blasphemy. You may fancy you believe in such a case, but that sort of believing is not believing, but blaspheming; and it is not a saving, but a damning faith: and the object of that faith is not God's word, but the devil's delusion. The true and glorious object of genuine and saving faith, is CHRIST, as made of God to us, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, and so for complete salvation from sin and wrath: and the immediate object, wherein this Christ is presented to us, is the promise. God, in the law, deals with sinners merely by commands and threatenings; and if that were all the dispensation we were under, wo would be to us for ever! But God, in the gospel, strictly considered, deals with us sinners by promises; and, therefore, we are called to deal with him by believing in him, and relying on his word of grace, for all the salvation that we, as poor miserable sinners, stand in need of. The promise comes to sinners as sinners; and there would be no promise of mercy, if there were no sinners. The promise is God's letter from heaven, signed with the hand of Christ, and sealed with the blood of Christ; and if you be a sinner, the letter is backed for you, saying, To you is the word of this salvation sent, that Jesus Christ came to save sinners. Your duty, then, O sinner, is to open the letter, read it, and apply it as all to you; and then bless God for such a dispensation of grace.

8. Hence see the duty of EVERY believer in particular. If believers are the children of promise, then, as it is the duty of sinners to believe the promise;

promiſe; ſo it is the duty of believers to live by faith upon the promiſe: as children live upon their mother, and babes upon the breaſt, ſo ye that are the children of promiſe, live upon the promiſe, and ſuck the milk that is in the breaſt thereof; for it is your life, it is your food, it is your proviſion and maintenance, in every caſe, till you come to live at the fountain-head in glory, where the promiſing God will be enjoyed for ever, as the performing God. This was Paul's life; I am crucified with Chriſt, nevertheleſs I live; yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me; and the life that I live is by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himſelf for me, Gal. ii. 20. What is it to live by the faith of the Son of God? Why, it is even to live upon Chriſt, as held forth in a promiſe; for faith's immediate object is the word. To live upon Chriſt, abſtract from the word, would be the life of viſion and fruition, which only takes place in heaven: but to live on Chriſt by faith, is to live upon him in a word of grace, a goſpel-promiſe; and ſeeing there are promiſes ſuited unto every caſe, therefore live upon the promiſe in every caſe.—In caſe of darkneſs, live upon the promiſe of enlightening grace; I will lead the blind in a way they know not, in paths that they have not known: I will make darkneſs light before thee, and crooked things ſtraight.—In caſe of deadneſs, live upon the promiſe of life, and reviving grace; ſuch as that, I am the reſurrection and the life; and, becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo.—In caſe of deſertion, live upon the promiſe of never-leaving nor forſaking grace; ſuch as that, I will never leave thee nor forſake thee, Heb. xiii. 5. In the Greek it is, οὐ μή σε ἀνῶ, οὐδ' οὐ μή σε ἐγκαταλίπω; that is, I will never, never, never, never leave thee, nor forſake thee.—In caſe of weakneſs, live upon the promiſe of ſtrengthening grace; My grace ſhall be ſufficient for thee, and my ſtrength ſhall be perfected in thy weakneſs.—In caſe of deſertion, live upon the promiſe of comforting grace; I have ſeen his ways, and will heal him; I will alſo reſtore comforts to him, and to his mourners.—In caſe of fainting and affliction, live upon the promiſe of ſupporting and upholding grace; ſuch as that, Fear not, for I am with thee; be not diſmaid, for I am thy God: I will ſtrengthen thee; yea, I will uphold thee, with the right-hand of my righteouſneſs.—In caſe of temptation, live upon the promiſe of devil-conquering grace; The God of peace ſhall bruiſe Satan under your feet ſhortly.—In caſe of the power and prevalancy of ſin, look to the promiſe of ſin-conquering grace; Sin ſhall not have dominion over you; for you are not under the law, but under grace.—In caſe of the fear of death, look to the promiſe of death-conquering grace; O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy deſtruction.——In whatever caſe you are, look to, and live upon the promiſe. And ſeeing you are called to glorify God before the world, by obeying him in your life, as well as to glorify him by believing with your heart; therefore, ſee that your faith be a working faith, Faith working by love: this will evidence to the world, and to yourſelf alſo, that your faith is unfeigned. If a man would have an evidence that the ſun is juſt riſen within our hemiſphere, though it be not within his view as yet, he will ſee it better, as I noticed on another occaſion, by looking weſt, than by looking eaſt; for, before he can ſee the body of the ſun, he may ſee the light of it ſhining upon ſome high tower or mountain; and ſo by looking weſt, he will ſee the ſun is riſen, or riſing in the eaſt: ſo, when the world would have an evidence of your being a believer, they will not look to your faith, but to your works, and the rays and beams that flow from faith: and to look towards your works, is to look a way quite contrary to your faith; for, as faith and works are contrary in the matter of juſtification, ſo faith renounces all works in point of dependence, though it produces them in point of performance. Therefore, ſeeing the world will not look to your heart, which they cannot ſee, but to your life; and will not look to your faith, which God only ſees, but to your works which the world may ſee; O take care that it be a working faith; Shew me thy faith by thy works. And if you would have faith work to good purpoſe, ſee that faith be fixt upon Chriſt in the promiſe, wherein he engages to work in you both to will and to do; otherwiſe the fruits of your faith will be very unconſtant and uneven: for faith hath two feet, as I obſerved elſewhere, the one a fixed, and the other a running foot; like the feet of a pair of compaſſes, the one is fixt in the centre, and the other turns about to make the circle; but if the foot that is in the centre do not remain fixt, but waver hither and thither, then the other foot will make a very uneven and excentrical motion. So it is here, one foot of faith is fixt upon Chriſt the centre, and the other runs a courſe of holy, ſpiritual, goſpel-obedience; but if that foot that ſhould be kept fixt upon Chriſt and the promiſe, ſhall waver hither and thither, then your motion will be very uneven in obedience. Therefore, as you would glorify God your heavenly Father, O look to him for grace to live by faith on the promiſe, and ſo evidence yourſelves to be the children of promiſe.*

THE ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper is a ſeal either of a curſe, or of a bleſſing; either of a threatening, or a promiſe: to the unbeliever it ſeals a curſe and a threatening; He that eats and drinks unworthily, eats and drinks damnation, [or, JUDGMENT] to himſelf. To the believer it ſeals a bleſſing and a promiſe, being the ſeal of the covenant of promiſe. This is the very tenor of the inſtitution, This cup is the new teſtament in my blood: it is the new covenant, and all the promiſes thereof ſealed and ratified by the blood of Chriſt; therefore theſe that have right to it, are the children of promiſe: conſequently the text is fitted for the day.

Among the manifold characters given to the children of God in ſcripture, here is one of the moſt ſweet and ſignificant, that they are the children of promiſe. It is a great privilege and dignity to be a child of promiſe; for ſuch a relation to the promiſe, will argue a near relation to Chriſt: Chriſt is the neareſt relation to the promiſe; it is Yea and Amen in him: YEA, in point of affirmation; and AMEN, in point of confirmation. All the promiſes are affirmed and confirmed by him; affirmed by his word, confirmed by his blood: and ſo, to be a child of promiſe, is to be Chriſt's near relation; Chriſt himſelf is the firſt-born child of the promiſe, and next to him are all believers the children of promiſe.

Having formerly diſcourſed the doctrinal

* The following ſermon, which is the third on this text, was preached at Portmoak, on Monday, July 17th, 1726. after the celebration of the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper.—The two firſt paragraphs are introductory.

part of the ſubject, we entered upon the application, and deduced eight inferences for information; I come now to offer ſome further leſſons from this doctrine, by way of information.

1. Hence ſee the NATURE of faith. If all believers, as believers, are the children of promiſe, then faith itſelf is a child of promiſe, as well as all the reſt of the graces, bleſſings, benefits, and privileges, in time, and through eternity, that believers do and ſhall enjoy; they are all children of promiſe, or promiſed mercies. Particularly, faith is a child of promiſe, in two reſpects; the one is breeding, and the other is feeding: the promiſe is the womb that breeds faith, and the promiſe is the breaſt that feeds it. Faith is firſt brought forth out of the womb of the promiſe, it is begotten by the word of truth; James i. 18. Of his own will begat he us thereby. Indeed, the faith of God's elect, is the faith of God's operation; and God works it by the means of the word: faith comes by hearing. While the power of the Spirit of faith comes along with the doctrine of grace, then the womb of the promiſe is impregnate with almighty efficacy, and comes to its time of bringing forth the grace of faith in the heart: and then faith, when it is brought forth, or caſt out of the promiſe into the heart of the ſinner, he becomes a believer; and when that child that is called Faith is born, how does it actually exert itſelf? Why, being a daughter of the promiſe, ſhe ſucks her mother's breaſt, by embracing the promiſe; as a child embracing the parent that bore her, and cleaving cloſe to her breaſt; and, according to the meaſure of its ſtrength, drawing in, and applying to itſelf the milk. The metaphor agrees here with reſpect to the application and appropriation that is in the nature of faith: only the child's taking the breaſt, is a natural act of the body; but faith's taking the promiſe, is the ſpiritual act of the ſoul, and particularly of the underſtanding; for, to embrace the promiſe, is to believe it; to believe it, is to give a cordial aſſent thereunto, with particular application. It is a taking God's word as a ſufficient ſecurity to me for life and ſalvation. Therefore, if any aſk, whether aſſurance be in the nature of faith; I would aſk how the particular faith of a promiſe can be, without aſſurance in the nature of it. To believe, is to take the promiſe to yourſelf; and to take the promiſe to yourſelf, is to believe, or be ſure of it with reſpect to yourſelf. If one promiſe ſome good thing to you, what do you, when you take his word, or take his promiſe? If you be not aſſured and perſuaded of it with reſpect to yourſelf, then you do not take it; but if you take it, then, upon the fidelity of the promiſer, you are aſſured and perſuaded of it with reſpect to yourſelf: even ſo it is here, faith is a taking God's word, a reſting on God's promiſe, and truſting to the fidelity of the Promiſer, Rom. iv. 20, 21. It is the nature of unbelief to ſtagger at the promiſe: and, indeed, the believer may have many doubtings and ſtaggerings, becauſe he hath much unbelief; and the moſt part of believers, in our day, are unbelieving believers; ſtaggering believers: but it is not faith that ſtaggers, it is unbelief. The queſtion is, What he does when he believes? Why, it is the nature of faith, to be perſuaded of the promiſe, and to take God at his word; and it is by the virtue and power of the promiſe, to believe the truth and accompliſhment of the promiſe, ſaying, Faithful is he that hath promiſed, who alſo will do it.

2. Hence ſee the difference betwixt faith and ſpiritual ſenſe; or the aſſurance of faith, and the aſſurance of ſenſe. Faith is a taking poſſeſſion of the promiſe, but ſenſe is a begun poſſeſſion of the thing promiſed; faith is a believing the promiſe, ſenſe is an enjoying what is promiſed; faith is a taking of his word, ſenſe is a feeling of his work in conformity to his word. The aſſurance, that is ordinarily ſo called, is not faith as all, but ſenſe; for it is not grounded upon God's word without, but upon his work within; it is the fruit and effect of faith, and not in the direct act of it; it is the man's reflecting upon his faith, and other graces, and ſeeing, in the light of the Spirit of God, that he hath faith: faith lives upon the promiſe, ſenſe lives upon the performance of the promiſe: by faith the believer credits the truth of the promiſe, by ſenſe he taſtes the ſweetneſs of it: the aſſurance of faith ſays, I am ſure, becauſe God ſays it; and the aſſurance of ſenſe ſays, I am ſure, becauſe I feel it. To rid marches thus diſtinctly betwixt theſe two, would be of great uſe: for, when you hear one aſſert, that there can be no faith without aſſurance; why, it is true, when it is meant of the aſſurance of faith. If another aſſert, that there may be faith where there is no aſſurance; why, that is true alſo, if he ſpeak of the aſſurance of ſenſe. But if this diſtinction be not obſerved, then a man cannot but ſpeak confuſedly on this head; nor can he reconcile himſelf either with the doctrine of the word, or the doctrine of our Reformers, and the doctrine of our received Standards, which we are ſolemnly bound to maintain. But, by ſtating the matter fairly, we will be in caſe to ſhow the conſiſtency betwixt our faith, and the faith of our believing forefathers, who placed aſſurance in the nature of it; and alſo the conſiſtency betwixt our older and later Standards, which differ not at all in this matter, when it is diſtinctly explained.

3. Hence ſee the difference betwixt faith and hope, with relation to the promiſe, whereof believers are the children. Why, faith reſpects the promiſe itſelf, and hope reſpects the thing promiſed; faith reſpects the truth of the promiſe, hope reſpects the good of the promiſe: like a king ſending his meſſenger to acquaint his favourite that he is to come to his houſe; the favourite receives the meſſenger, and then goes out to meet the prince: ſo faith receives the meſſenger, the promiſe; and then hope goes out to meet the King, and waits for the thing promiſed. The object of faith, then, is the truth of God; for it looks to the word of promiſe: the object of hope is the goodneſs of God; it looks out towards the good thing promiſed.

4. Hence ſee the difference betwixt the law and the goſpel. See here how they differ in their nature; the law is a precept, and the goſpel a promiſe: hence the law and the promiſe are ſet in oppoſition to each other, Gal. iii. 18, 21. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promiſe; but God gave it to Abraham by promiſe. Is the law then againſt the promiſes of God? God forbid. The goſpel is not a new law, otherwiſe it would be a new covenant of works; if there were new commands in it, that were not imported in the law, either directly or indirectly, then theſe new commands behoved to have a new righteouſneſs anſwering them, in order to our juſtification, beſides the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and ſo we would need another righteouſneſs to juſtify us, than Chriſt's righteouſneſs fulfilling the law in our room.

QUEST. What ſay you? Is not faith and repentance new goſpel-commands, that were not in the law?

ANSW. They may be called goſpel-commands, as they are brought in to the goſpel-diſpenſation; but, ſtrictly as commands, they belong to the law. Faith and repentance, and the like, may be conſidered three ways, 1. As they are conditions. 2. As they are duties. 3. As they are graces.

(1.) As they are conditions; I mean, made ſo by men, they belong to the covenant of works, which is the conditional covenant: and though the covenant of works required nothing leſs than perfection as its condition, nor accepts of repentance, yet men make a new covenant of works to themſelves, when they make faith and repentance the conditions of life. Now, as conditions we have nothing ado with them: for the only condition of our eternal life is Chriſt's obedience unto death.

(2.) Conſider them as duties, and thus they belong to the moral law in the hand of Chriſt, and the general diſpenſation of the goſpel; or to the goſpel largely taken, which comprehends all the duties of the moral law: and, in this ſenſe, we are ſtill under obligation to do theſe duties; for Chriſt came not under the law as a rule, to diſſolve our obligation to obedience to it as a rule; though he came under the law as a covenant, to diſſolve our obligation to obedience to it as a condition of life.

(3.) If you conſider them as graces, then they belong to the goſpel ſtrictly ſo called; for they are both promiſes thereof, even as all grace and glory is promiſed therein. Now, it is neceſſary that we conſider the goſpel ſtrictly taken as a promiſe, even as the ſcripture calls it, that ſo we may not confound the law and the promiſe together, and ſo confound the old and new covenant, namely, the covenant of works and grace. Thus the apoſtle, Rom. xi. 6. And if by grace, then is it no more of works; otherwiſe grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace, otherwiſe work is no more work. The law and the promiſe cannot be mixt together, no more than fire and water: the law joined with the free promiſe diſanuls that promiſe; If life come by the law, then it comes not by the promiſe, ſays Paul, Rom. iv. 14. If they which are of the law be heirs, then the promiſe is of none effect. The law promiſes life upon condition of our doing; the goſpel promiſes life only upon the condition of Chriſt's doing.

QUEST. Does not the goſpel promiſe life upon condition of our faith?

ANSW. As faith is the free gift of God, as well as eternal life; ſo it is to be conſidered, not as a work done by us, but as an inſtrument to receive the promiſe, and the things promiſed; and true faith never looked upon itſelf as a proper condition, but diſclaimed itſelf always, and took on with Chriſt for wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, redemption, and all. The difference betwixt the law and the goſpel muſt be kept as a treaſure, for it is the ground of many other goſpel truths; and ignorance of this point, hath been the decay of religion in all ages of the church. When faith and works, in the matter of juſtification, are confounded, goſpel-holineſs and ſanctification itſelf is marred; becauſe no holineſs comes by the law, but by grace. Therefore the goſpel conſiders not faith in itſelf as a work; for it does not cauſe, effect, or procure our ſalvation or juſtification; but, as the beggar's hand, it receives them, being wholly wrought and given of God. Hence, the law, being a word of precept to be done; the goſpel, a word of promiſe to be believed: believing and doing, faith and works, are, by the apoſtle, ſet in direct oppoſition to each other; and the miſtaking of this diſtinction betwixt the law and the goſpel, hath been the ruin of the goſpel. "Men dangerouſly fail, "ſays Luther, if they do not heedfully diſtin-"guiſh betwixt the voice of the law, and the "voice of the goſpel, in this eſſential differ-"ence, that the law only teaches what we "ought to do, but the goſpel teaches what "we ought to receive."

5. See the difference betwixt the law and [illegible]t only in their nature, but in their effects: the law is a killing letter; the miniſtration of death and condemnation, 2 Cor. iii. 6, 7. But [illegible]el is the miniſtration of the Spirit, and life, righteouſneſs, ver. 8, 9. It is the goſpel-promiſe that is the prolific womb for bringing forth children to God; therefore they are called the children of promiſe. Here law and goſpel differ as much as life and death. Since the law was broken, it was never able to quicken the ſoul, or to bring it from death to life; nay, it is weak through the fleſh, Rom. viii. 3. The law may convince and awaken, but it cannot convert and quicken: God hath reſerved that honour for the goſpel-promiſe, to beget children to him, becauſe it is the channel in which the Spirit runs, Gal. iii. 2. Hence, take a man who underſtands the goſpel, and let the law come home upon him with a thouſand precepts, and a thouſand moral arguments to back them; yet all its urging is good for nothing, but to make him dead and ſtupid, till once the promiſe be preſented, by the Spirit of God, and then life comes in, and the ſoul is quickned: Why? becauſe then relief is preſented, and ſo his heart and hope riſe out of the depths, in which they were ſunk.

6. Hence alſo ſee the difference betwixt theſe things that may be called legal, and theſe that are evangelical; ſuch as,

(1.) Here you may ſee the difference betwixt a goſpel and a legal hypocrite. Why? the goſpel-hypocrite is indeed all for the promiſe, but he is an abuſer thereof, and a mangler of the promiſe; he is not for the whole promiſe: he hugs the promiſe of indemnity, but he hates the promiſe of ſanctity; he takes the promiſe of pardon, but he rejects the promiſe of purity; he likes the promiſe of happineſs, but diſlikes the promiſe of holineſs: and ſo he is a injurer and mangler of the goſpel, and of the promiſe.—On the other hand, the legal hypocrite, he is all for the law; but he is an unaccountable abuſer and mangler of the law: inſtead of ſatisfying the law, by the perfect obedience of Chriſt, he thinks to ſatisfy the law by his own imperfect, ſilly, trifling duties. Paul calls all his own righteouſneſs dung; and what better is your obedience, man? and, think you to ſatisfy God's holy law with a piece of dung? Oh! what an affront does that man caſt upon the law, who does not come to Chriſt for for righteousness! Nay, say you, It is my obedience and Christ's together, by which I hope to satisfy the law. Nay, but, man, if you think to be justified by the law, in part or in whole, to the neglect of the free promise of life and justification through Christ only; the apostle tells you, that Christ is of no effect to you; and that, if you will pay any of the debt to the law, you must pay all, and art a debtor to do the whole law, Gal. v. 2, 3, 4. Besides, as the law requires a perfect, so it requires a personal obedience; that is, the obedience of one person only: you must not think to join the obedience of two persons, to make up one perfect obedience; for, in that case, the obedience both of the one and of the other is imperfect, and so not conform to the law, therefore it cannot be accepted for righteousness: but the soul that has it must die, because it is a sinful soul, Ezek. xviii. 4.

(2.) Here you may see the difference betwixt a legal and a gospel-believer. There may be some true believers that are more [illegible] than others that are more evangelical [illegible] believer deals most with promises, [illegible] believing, and living by faith; and [illegible] is the most holy, the most joyful, and [illegible] most chearful Christian: whereas the legal believer, though, so far as he is a believer, he is not under the law; yet, through unbelief, he keeps himself much under it, and deals more with the precept than with the promise: hence, upon every short-coming and defect in his obedience, he is discouraged and heartless, and filled with doubts and fears. Some people are like these the apostle speaks of, Gal. iv. 21. that desire to be under the law.

QUEST. When may a person, even a believer, DESIRE to be under the law?

ANSW. When, according to the legal temper in them, they incline to ground their acceptance with God upon their own duties and performances, instead of grounding it upon Christ's obedience; and more upon grace within inherent, than upon the imputed righteousness of Christ.—Also, when he is more influenced in obedience by the terror of the law, and the curse thereof, than by the alurement of grace in the free promise; and when there is a looking for what is promised only in a conditional way, then there is a keeping up of the old covenant, which did run upon a conditional promise, Do so and so, and live.—When they have been helped to duty, and think the Lord engaged to give out mercy upon their performing thereof; when they look for nothing but upon their performing of some condition, like these, Isa. lviii. 3. Wherefore have we fasted, and thou seest not? wherefore have we afflicted our soul, and thou takest no knowledge?—And when their hope of mercy rises and falls with their own performances, rather than by the rule of free grace and faithfulness of God: then is a man a legal believer with a witness, if he can be called a believer at all. Little wonder than he be a staggering one. Happy is the believer that is more enlightened in the mystery of the gospel! Surely he is more in case to glorify God.

(3.) Here you may see the difference between a legal and a gospel-strain of doctrine. Why, the legal strain sets forth God more especially as a commanding and a threatening God; the gospel-strain sets him forth more especially as a promising God: the legal strain makes God, as it were, nothing but a commander; but the gospel exhibites him as a promiser. Why, the law is God in a command; but the gospel is God in a promise, God in Christ.—The legal strain humours the natural pride of man, as if life were to be sought, as it were, by the works of the law; but the gospel-strain humbles the pride of men, while it shews life to be had only by the free promise. Hence the gospel is such a strange thing to carnal reason: learning cannot reach it; worldly wisdom is offended at it; nature is astonished at it: what! life and salvation for nothing! life and salvation in a free promise! This gospel is foolishness to the world; it is hard to believe it: why, the world cannot think that God will give salvation at such a low rate.—In a word, the legal strain gives men more to do for salvation, than they are able to do; the gospel-strain gives men less ado for salvation than they are willing to do; for no man is willing to be saved by absolutely free grace, till God make them willing in a day of power.—A legal strain speaks as if all depended upon our obeying a command; a gospel-strain speaks on the contrary, as if all depended upon God's fulfilling of a promise.—As the law gives man all the work, and the gospel gives grace all the work, that it may get all the glory; so the legal strain leads a man to himself, the gospel-strain leads a man out of himself to Christ for all.—Hence also the legal strain genders unto fear and bondage; but the gospel-strain to hope and liberty.

(4.) Here you may see the difference betwixt legal and gospel-repentance, and betwixt legal and gospel-obedience.—Repentance is a fruit of faith, whatever kind it be of: legal repentance is influenced by the faith of the law, and its threatenings; hence it hath a mixture of dreadful horror and terror in it: gospel-repentance is influenced by the faith of the gospel, and its promises; hence it hath a mixture of joy and gladness, the man reads the promise of pardon with tears of joy. To speak of gospel-repentance before faith, is a strange dream: No gospel-repentance can take place till faith apprehend the mercy of God in Christ through the glass of a gospel-promise.—Again, for obedience; legal obedience is influenced by the legal hope of heaven, or the slavish fear of hell, according to the tenor of the law, Do and live; or, If not, thou shalt die: but gospel-obedience is influenced by the faith of God's free love and favour in Christ, manifested in the promise.——Thus, this doctrine shews us the difference betwixt legal and evangelical matters.

7. Hence see the difference betwixt believers and unbelievers. Believers of the promise are the children of the promise; and they are distinguished from others that pretend to faith, even by their faith. Believers credit the promise, and apply what they believe to themselves: the wicked may believe like the devil, that knows all to be true, but cannot apply. The faith of many is like the gadding hen, that carries her eggs to another, but never lays them at home: so they believe that others shall be saved but not themselves; they believe the promise with reference to others, but not with reference to themselves. How believers and unbelievers differ in point of quality and disposition, may appear afterwards, in the use of examination: but how they differ in point of priviledge, the text and doctrine declare to us; particularly, they are free-born children of children of the promiſe; children of the free-woman, as the context ſays; whereas unbelievers are the children of the bond-woman: that is, believers are freed from the law, as a covenant of works, and unbelievers are in bondage to it; and being in bondage to the law, they are in bondage to their luſts, Rom. vi. 12. It is only the privilege of the believer, that however ſin may domineer ſome time, yet ſin ſhall not have dominion over him, becauſe he is not under the law, but under grace: but, on the contrary, it is the miſery of the wicked and unbelievers, that ſin muſt have dominion over them, becauſe they are not under grace, but under the law. And the law hath no promiſe of ſanctity to the ſinner: the law that he is under, curſes and condemns him to hell for his ſin, but cannot ſave him from ſin or hell either. But believers are free from the law, as a covenant of works, and conſequently free from the guilt and power of ſin both, being not under the law, but under grace: grace makes him free; juſtifying grace frees from the guilt, and ſanctifying grace from the power of ſin. Hence, does the doctrine of the believer's freedom from the law, as a covenant, open a door to him for looſneſs and licentiouſneſs? Oh! groſs ignorance! It is the only thing that liberates him from ſin, according to the apoſtle's experience, I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live unto God: do we then make void the law, through faith? God forbid; nay, we eſtabliſh the law.

8. Hence ſee the difference betwixt the ſecurity of the covenant of works, and the ſecurity of the covenant of grace, with reference to eternal life: the former depended upon a promiſe made to man's changeable righteouſneſs, and ſo it failed; the latter depends upon a promiſe made in Chriſt Jeſus, upon his everlaſting righteouſneſs; and now the believer's title to eternal life ſtands upon the ſure bottom of Chriſt's perfect obedience to the precept of the law, not upon the ſandy foundation of any perſonal obedience of his own: and as his ſecurity for eternal life ſtands upon Chriſt's obedience to the precept of the law, ſo his ſecurity from eternal death ſtands upon Chriſt's ſatisfaction given to the threatening of the law; he cannot any more be under the threatening of eternal death, becauſe he is a child of promiſe. How falſe is it then to aſſert, That believers, by their new ſins, become liable to death and hell? Their ſins deſerve hell, but they can never be liable to it, ſo long as they are children of a promiſe, ratified by the oath of God, and the blood of Chriſt. God hath other ways of correcting his children, than by caſting them out of his family, or turning them off from being children of promiſe to be children of wrath again, as they were by nature: nay, as they cannot again incur the forfeiture of eternal life, becauſe Chriſt's active obedience does confirm the promiſe of life to them; ſo they cannot incur a liableneſs to eternal death, becauſe Chriſt's paſſive obedience and ſuffering to death hath confirmed the promiſe of their freedom from it; There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt: and to make them liable to it, were to invalidate both the virtue of Chriſt's death, and the truth of God's promiſe at once. We are ſo far from being aſhamed or afraid to preach theſe truths, Sirs, however oppoſed by ſome, that we look upon them as a moſt ſacred treaſure, worthy to be contended for, were it even unto blood.

9. Hence ſee where it is that both the hope of a ſinner, and the portion of a ſaint, doth ly; namely, in the free promiſe of God in Chriſt, whereof believers are the children. I ſaid, both the hope of a ſinner, and treaſure of a ſaint, ly in the promiſe; that is, in the mercy of God in Chriſt, that gives forth the promiſe unto ſinners; and the truth of God in Chriſt, that is engaged to make out the promiſe to the ſaints or believers: therefore, the giving a promiſe, is called mercy; and the accompliſhing, truth. Mic. 7. 20. Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham. It is MERCY to Abraham, becauſe God glorified his mercy in giving the promiſe to him; and TRUTH to Jacob, becauſe God glorified his faithfulneſs, which was now concerned to make out the promiſe which he had made: and it teaches us this, that the hope of a ſinner lies no where but in the promiſe, which God, as a merciful God in Chriſt, gives forth to him, to be received and applied by him; and that the treaſure of a ſaint lies nowhere but in the promiſe, which God, as a true and faithful God in Chriſt, is concerned to accompliſh to him, as being actually a child of promiſe.

O then, ſinner, ſee a door of hope open to you: that very promiſe, which is the ſaint's treaſure, comprehending God, and Chriſt, and the Spirit, and grace, and glory; that very promiſe is preſented to you, in this goſpel, by a merciful God in Chriſt, that you may take it for your treaſure, even all the unſearchable riches of Chriſt. It is not your own peculiar treaſure indeed, till, through grace, you take it for your own: but, be who you will, you are as welcome to take it for you own, as the offer of the goſpel, and the command of the God of heaven can make you. I ſpeak even to you, O graceleſs, Chriſtleſs, and hitherto impenitent and unbelieving ſinner! you have as good a right to come and take the promiſe, and Chriſt in it, as ever a believer had the day or hour before he believed. It is true, none will come, unleſs the Lord draw them by his powerful grace; yet the foundation of God ſtands ſure, and the Lord knows them that are his, and whom he hath a mind to draw. But ſince he draws by ſuch means as theſe, namely, the goſpel-offer, and univerſal call to all ſinners to whom the goſpel comes; and hence hath ordered us to preach the goſpel to every creature, that he may take whom he hath a mind, and leave the reſt inexcuſable in their wilful enmity, to ſhew how juſtly he will proceed againſt them in judgment: and ſince he hath a mind to glorify his mercy on the veſſels of mercy, therefore, like a merciful God, he holds forth himſelf as a promiſing God, opening his treaſures to you in free promiſes; and he hath put his treaſure in earthen veſſels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of man. What are poor miniſters ſent here for, but as earthen veſſels preſenting to you all the divine treaſures in the goſpel-promiſe? Whether you will take the treaſure or not, yet be it known to you, O ſinner, that there is no other door of hope, no other ground of hope to you, with reference to eternal life and ſalvation, but this promiſe of life in Chriſt Jeſus, which the mercy of God is holding out to you, as a treaſure to enrich you to eternity, and holding out to you in the like of this earthen veſſel that is now preſenting it to you in God's name.

O miſerable ſinner, that hath loſt God, and all good by the loſs of him, here is a treaſure for you to come to, in that promiſe, I will be thy God.—O bewildered ſinner, that hath loſt your way to God, and knows not where to find him, here is a treaſure for you, in that promiſe, I will lead the blind in a way they know not; that is, in Chriſt, who ſays, I am the way.—O ſtupid ignorant ſinner, that cannot ſee this way, nor know Chriſt, unleſs you have a guide and inſtructor, here is a treaſure for you, in that promiſe that Chriſt hath made of his Spirit, I will ſend the Comforter, and he ſhall teſtify of me; he ſhall convince the world of ſin, righteouſneſs, and judgment. He ſhall glorify me, for he ſhall receive of mine, and ſhew it unto you.—O guilty ſinner, whoſe ſins are of a ſcarlet colour, and of a deep dye, there is a treaſure of pardoning mercy held out to you, in that promiſe, Come and let us reaſon together, ſaith the Lord; though your ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be white as ſnow; though they be red like crimſon, they ſhall be as wool: I will be merciful to their unrighteouſneſs, their ſins and iniquities will I remember no more. I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy tranſgreſſ—O filthy, filthy ſinner, whoſe heart is nothing but a neſt of unclean devils, and whoſe life hath been nothing but a maſs of unclean practices, here is a treaſure of purifying mercy; if you will not wilfully reject it, you may have it for the taking, in that free promiſe, There ſhall be a fountain open for the houſe of David, and inhabitants of Jeruſalem, for ſin and for uncleanneſs both; that is, not only for ſin and guilt, but for pollution and defilement: the fountain that is open to you, is juſt the fountain of the blood of the Lamb, the blood of Chriſt, that cleanſes from all ſin.—O prodigious ſinner, whoſe ſins are of ſuch a nature, that may be you are thinking God cannot be calling me by that offer of grace; for there are ſome ſecret abominations about me, that are about none of the world; there is ſome thing horrid, ſome thing monſtrous, that none but God and my conſcience knows of, and that would make the hair of a man's head to ſtand to hear tell of it; and if it were known what I am, I would be a diſgrace to all living, I would be the reproach of men, and the ſport of devils; I think my neighbours would either ſtone me to death, or cauſe burn me alive, if they knew what I were: even to you, man, I ſay, there is a treaſure of welcoming mercy for you, held out in the offer and promiſe of the Goſpel; Whoſoever will, let him come; and, Him that comes, I will in no wiſe caſt out; that is, I will by no means caſt out; I will on no account caſt him out; and for no fault, or folly, or blaſphemy that ever he was guilty of, will I caſt him out. If you welcome the grace that is welcoming you, you ſhall find, in the Lord's time, that you ſhall be made as kindly welcome as ever a ſinner was ſince Adam's fall, and as ever any ſinners were that are now glorified ſaints.—Again, O plentiful ſinner; I mean, whoſe ſins are more numerous and plentiful than the piles of graſs upon the ground; here is a treaſure of plentiful mercy for you, in that promiſe, With the Lord there is mercy, and with him there is plentiful redemption; therefore will he redeem Iſrael from all his iniquity. His mercies are more plentiful than drops in the ocean; the cloud of mercy breaks in plentiful ſhowers.—O hard-hearted ſinner, that cannot be wrought upon by the grace and kindneſs of God manifeſted in the goſpel, here is a treaſure of heart-melting grace preſented to you, in the promiſe, I will take away the heart of ſtone: and again, Hearken to me, ye ſtout-hearted and far from righteouſneſs, I bring near my righteouſneſs, and my ſalvation ſhall not tarry.—O rebellious ſinner, whoſe heart and nature is nothing but a hoord of rebellion and enmity againſt God and Chriſt, here is a treaſure of conquering grace for you, held out in the promiſe, He hath aſcended up on high, and led captivity captive, and received gifts for men, even for the rebellious, that God the Lord might dwell among them: he hath received the Spirit above meaſure, and it is for rebels, ſuch as you and I are by nature. O let your heart claſp about the promiſe, take hold of it, and take him at his word.—O curſed ſinner; curſed in the firſt Adam, and for ever under the curſe of God, if you die without taking hold of the promiſe; here is a treaſure of bleſſings, ſpiritual and eternal bleſſings, held out to you, in the promiſe, ſaying, In him ſhall all nations of the earth be bleſſed; men ſhall be bleſt in him, and all nations ſhall call him bleſſed.

Chriſt is here knocking at the door of your hearts; Oh can you find in your hearts to hold him out, and his bleſſing too? or, will you let him in with a hearty AMEN to the word of promiſe, ſaying, Even ſo come, Lord Jeſus; and, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord?—Are you a powerleſs ſinner, that finds you cannot take what God is offering you? Here is a treaſure of ſtrengthening grace laid to your hand, in the promiſe, He gives power to the faint; and to him that hath no might, he encreaſeth ſtrength: Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power. There is power promiſed, and there would be hope in Iſrael concerning you, if, under a ſenſe of your own weakneſs, you were crying, O for power, divine power, to enable me to apply the promiſe! Faith is never acted in the ſenſe of ſtrength, but in the ſenſe of weakneſs: faith never hath any language like this, Lo, now I have power, now I have ſtrength in myſelf; and therefore, in the ſtrength that I have received, I will do ſo and ſo: no; that is never faith's way of ſpeaking: but it ſays, Oh! I have no power, no ſtrength in myſelf, nor ever had; therefore I will go quite out of myſelf, ſaying, In the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength, according to the promiſe, Surely ſhall one ſay, In the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength.—Are you a witleſs ſinner, perhaps, fearing that you miſmanage in the way of believing and applying of the promiſe? Here is a treaſure of conducting and inſtructing grace for you to take hold of, in the promiſe, They ſhall be all taught of God; every man therefore that hath heard and learned of the Father, cometh unto me, John vi. 45. Chriſt, who is the ſum total of the treaſure held forth to you in the promiſe, is both the power of God and the wiſdom of God; and in him are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge. Treaſures of inſtruction are laid to your hand, in the promiſe; and if you take God's word of promiſe for it, as it is yours in the offer to warrant your taking it, ſo it ſhall be yours in poſſeſſion. All the treaſures you need to enrich you, O poor ſinner, are hid in the field of the goſpel-promiſe; yea, it is God's treaſure-houſe, and the door is open, that you may go in and take what promiſe ſoever you need; and if you come in and take, you are a child of promiſe, as well as the beſt.

Say not, I am a ſinner, and I muſt ſtay till I turn from ſin, before I venture to meddle with a promiſe: indeed, if you think you can turn from ſin, before you come to Chriſt to turn you, you do not know the power of ſin, nor the office of Chriſt as a Saviour to ſave from ſin. Beware of ignorant miſinterpretations of ſcripture-texts concerning turning to the Lord; for example, that text, Iſa. lix. 20. The Redeemer ſhall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from tranſgreſſion in Jacob, ſays the Lord. I own, Sirs, I have ſometimes been kept in bondage by ſuch ſcriptures as that, while miſunderſtood; and, perhaps, ſome miſtake them the ſame way, ſaying, O there is no benefit to be expected from Chriſt, till I turn from my tranſgreſſions; and yet I can no more turn aright from ſin, than I can turn the ſun in the firmament that is going weſt, and make it turn back and go eaſt. And what ſhall I do? Indeed, Sirs, if I were of their opinion that make goſpel-repentance, and turning from ſin, to be before faith, I could preach no relief to you in that caſe; but I know and believe otherwiſe from God's word: therefore I only deſire you to remember to take that text, and ſuch like, in the goſpel-ſenſe of it. Why, ſay you, what is the goſpel-ſenſe of it? Indeed I ſhall not gloſs it to you out of my own head, for then you needed little regard it; but ſee the goſpel-gloſs that the apoſtle, or rather the Spirit of God, gives it, Rom. xi. 26. There ſhall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and ſhall turn away ungodlineſs from Jacob. Why, then, the meaning of the prophet's words, He will come to them that turn, is this, he will come and turn them, and turn away ungodlineſs from them. O ſinner, how like you that gloſs? Is there not a door of hope open here? Cannot the Lord Jeſus, by virtue of his office, turn you, and according to his promiſe, which you are called to plead, ſaying, Lord, turn me, and I ſhall be turned? This is his covenant, his promiſe, that he will turn ſinners, Rom. xi. 27. For this is my covenant unto them, when I ſhall take away their ſin. Why, then, for the Lord's ſake, do not think, poor brat of old Adam by nature, without ſtrength, able to do nothing; do not think to take Chriſt's work out of his hand. Expect not ſalvation from him under the notion of ſaints, but of ſinners: he will not ſave you upon any other terms, but as you are a ſinner, and he a Saviour. The promiſe comes to you as a ſinner; and Chriſt in the promiſe comes to you as ſinners; and there would be no need of ſuch a perſon as Chriſt, if there were no ſinners; there would be no need of any of his ſaving offices. If there were no blind ſinners, there would be no need of Chriſt as a Prophet; if there were no ſinners, there would be no need of Chriſt as a Prieſt; if there were no bound and enſlaved ſinners, under captivity to the devil and luſts, there would be no need of Chriſt as a King. He hath no office as Redeemer, but what concerns ſinners; and he would get no glory as a Saviour, if there were no ſinners: therefore ſinners, as ſinners, and nothing but ſinners, are the only perſons that God calls to come to Chriſt in the promiſe. In all the world I know no uſe you have for Chriſt, if you have no ſin to be pardoned, no luſts to be conquered, no plagues to be healed, no hard heart to be ſoftened, no broken bones to be helped, no dead and dry bones to be quickened, no devil to be caſt out of you, no unbelief, atheiſm, enmity, ſtupidity, carnality, or any ſuch like diſeaſes, to be cured. If there were nothing ado to this purpoſe among ſinners, why then, Chriſt, and the goſpel, and the promiſe, would be the moſt uſeleſs things in all the world.

Therefore, O my dear fellow-creatures, he that enjoins me to preach the goſpel to every creature; even that goſpel, that Jeſus Chriſt came to ſave ſinners, commands me to warn you that you ſtand not at a diſtance from Chriſt becauſe you are ſinners, but rather come to Chriſt becauſe you are ſinners; and the more work of this nature you have for Chriſt, the more welcome will you be to him, and the more glory will he get in ſaving you. He looks on it as his honour to ſave ſinners; and of all the ſins that ever you was guilty of, here is the greateſt, if you will not let Chriſt have the credit of ſaving you according to the goſpel-promiſe.

But, ſhould I not be ſo humbled and convinced before I come to Chriſt as held out to me in the goſpel-promiſe, and before I apply the promiſe to myſelf? Why, man, if you be even ſo far humbled as to ſee that Chriſt would be of any uſe to you, and that you would be the better of him if you had him; then, for the Lord's ſake, ſtay not away from Chriſt, waiting for other ſort of preparation; for otherwiſe the law will get ſuch hold of you by the way, that it will not ſuffer you to apply the promiſe at all. The law ſays, You muſt have this and that qualification, before you come to Chriſt, or apply the promiſe; and if they were obtained, it will ſay, Stand back yet, for you are a ſinner, and muſt have perfection before you come; and ſo there will be no end of it. Never will you come to Chriſt at all, if you will hear nothing but the voice of the law, and the legal bias, and the legal conſcience that is by nature within you: but the voice of the goſpel is, Whoſoever will, let him come; be what you will, come: whatever qualification you want, it is lying within the boſom of the promiſe; therefore come and take freely, without fear of preſuming.

Indeed, man, if you come to Chriſt, or the promiſe, with any conditions or qualifications, and fancy that you muſt do ſo, it is preſumption, and not faith; you are preſuming to deal with God in the old conditional way of the covenant of works, and ſo you will make no hand of it, and have no ſucceſs: but if you come to Chriſt as held out in the promiſe, in order to get all, and all freely, and all for nothing, except it be for God's own name's ſake, and for his Chriſt's ſake; then you may come boldly, there is no fear of preſuming. This the law ſays, Give, and give all, even to perfection; the goſpel ſays, Take all, for you have nothing to give: and ſince God is here dealing with you by the goſpel, and not by the law, it is preſumption for you to pretend to come and give, when God is ſaying, Come, and take.

The legal heart, and the legal ſtrain of doctrine, would make it preſumption for you to come to Chriſt, or apply the promiſe, without ſome good qualification before-hand; but I will tell you, in God's name, that it is not only impoſſible for you to bring, but preſumptuous for you to pretend to bring any good qualifica-qualification with you. It is nothing but a proud treating with God upon the old-covenant footing, and that even when God is treating with you, as a promising God, upon the ground of the free, absolute, unconditional promise of the new covenant, whereof Christ hath fulfilled the condition by his death, to God's full satisfaction. If ever the second Adam find you, it will be where the first Adam left you; that is, plunged into the gulf of a sinful, miserable, guilty, and condemned state, destitute of all good qualification, except hell and enmity, death and confusion, can be so called; and it is just in these doleful circumstances, that you are called to come, and embrace the gospel-promise, for your complete relief. Hence, whenever the Spirit of faith is sent, it makes the man come under the notion of a lost sinner to a Saviour, and as a bankrupt to a Surety; and as a filthy vessel, empty of all good, to an immense ocean of all fulness, where all good is to be had.

Now, I have insisted the longer upon this, because it is of the greatest concernment to all Christless sinners, to all sorts of sinners that hear the gospel, to know what door of hope there is for them to enter in at; and that is, Christ presented to you in the promise, to be received and applied by you. I know no other door: and, if you do not think yourself concerned in this matter, poor sinner, know that the day is coming, when judgment and eternity will stare you in the face, and it may be sooner than you are aware of, when you shall find no relief for you under heaven, if you have never treated with God in Christ as held out in the gospel-promise. If you find not God cloathed with a promise, a gracious promise in Christ, you will find him arrayed in a terrible threatening; yea, if you meet not with God in a promise, you will meet him in a flame of fire and vengeance. God in a promise, is God as a Redeemer, a God in Christ, a Father, a friend, all love and mercy; but God out of a promise, is God out of Christ, a consuming fire, according to the tenor of the violated covenant of works, commanding, threatening, judging, condemning, and avenging himself upon his enemies: there is no hope then, but through the promise; and if, by the virtue of the promise, you were begotten again to a new and lively hope, then you would be, with Isaac, the children of promise.

But now, as hence we see where the hope of a sinner lies, so hence you see where the portion of the saint lies. By the saints, I mean, they who, though they still look upon themselves as sinners, and nothing but sinners in themselves, yet have fled out of themselves to Christ as held forth in the gospel-promise, and who are brought forth from the prolific womb of the promise, like Isaac, and by the generative virtue thereof are begotten again to a lively hope, and so are actually children of promise. Your portion lies in the promise; for God, and Christ, and the Spirit, and all things else, are conveyed to you by promise; and it is secure enough; it is God's band of provision for you, in time and through eternity: hence the children of promise only are the heirs, Gal. iv. 30. Rom. iv. 13, 14. As Isaac was the heir, so are believers heirs of all the promises; having not only a right of access thereto, as other sinners have, this being a door of hope to them, as I was saying; but also a right of possession, as children begotten by the word of truth, born and bred up by the side of the promise, insomuch that now the promise is their portion, their inheritance, their bond of provision, till they come to the full possession of all the inheritance therein secured to them by the word and oath of God, the two immutable things, by which it is impossible for God to lye, that they may have strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to the hope set before them, Heb. vi. 18. Christ, in the promise, is the hope set before sinners; but believers are these who have fled for refuge thereto; and so, being actually children of promise, they are infeft (may I so express it) into their Father's estate; If children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. Your name, believer, is filled up in the bond: and so the promise is no more given forth generally and indefinitely to you, as to the rest that hear the gospel, but particularly and definitely your portion is secured there, and it is your bond of provision by name. How many items soever you have to give in, by way of charge, for your daily supply, till you get to heaven, so many articles there are, by way of discharge, to be found in the bond of provision for you, among the rest of the children of promise. What items, and what articles answering them are here, cannot be all mentioned; I only name a few of them.

Item, So much of a charge for bread and water, for daily necessaries; the article for discharging thereof, is, Isa. xxxiii. 16. Bread shall be given them, and their water shall be sure. — Item, So much necessary for wine and milk to maintain the children: well, the article for answering that, is, Joel iii. 18. The mountains shall drop down new wine, and the hills shall flow with milk; and it is wine and milk without money and without price; a feast of fat things, and wines on the lees. — Item, For clearing of all bygone accounts, and discharging all debts that were owing to the law: the article is, Jer. xxiii. 6. His name shall be called, The Lord our righteousness; therefore will I be merciful to their unrighteousness, their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. He was made sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. — Item, For clearing all the debts that may be afterwards contracted, through the power of corruption, and daily infirmities: the article is, Jer. l. 20. The iniquities of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found: Why? what will become of them? He will cast all their sins into the depths of the sea, Micah vii. 19. What sea? even that of Christ's blood; The Lamb of God, that takes away the sins of the world; when he takes them away, they shall not be found any more. — Item, For cloathing to the children of promise: the article is, Isa. lxi. 3. I will give them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; hence, ver. 10. I will rejoice in the Lord, for he hath cloathed me with the garments of salvation, and covered me with the robe of righteousness. — Item, For washing the childrens garments, or rather of their feet, when they are ready to puddle and defile themselves: the article is, Isa. iv. 4. where the Lord is said to wash away the filth of the daughter of Zion, by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning. If I wash thee not, thou hast no part in me, said Christ to Peter. Indeed the children need daily washing. Though the garment of imputed righteousness they have, needs no washing; it is the perfect, ſpotleſs righteouſneſs of God: yet the garment of their imparted righteouſneſs, their graces and duties, need conſtant waſhing. —Item, For teaching and ſchooling of the children in the knowledge of the myſteries of the goſpel: the article is, Iſa. liv. 11,—13. O thou afflicted, etc. All thy children ſhall be taught of God.—Item, For correcting the children for their faults, yet ſo as they ſhall never incur any liableneſs to the forfeiture of the promiſe: the article is, Pſal. lxxxix. 30. If his children break my law, and walk not in my judgments; if they break my ſtatutes, and keep not my commandments; then will I viſit their tranſgreſſion with the rod, and their iniquity with ſtripes: nevertheleſs my loving-kindneſs will I not take from him, nor ſuffer my faithfulneſs to fail.—Item, For cordials to the corrected child, leſt he ſhould faint under affliction: the article is, Iſa. lvii. 16. I will not contend for ever, neither will I be always wroth, leſt the Spirit ſhould fail before me, and the ſoul which I have made. For the iniquity of his covetouſneſs I was wroth, and ſmote him: I hid me, and was wroth, and he went on frowardly in the way of his heart: therefore I have ſeen his ways, and will heal him. O wonder! as if a God of infinite grace ſhould ſay, Simple correction will not do with my children, and therefore I muſt even go and careſs and dandle them again; I will reſtore comforts to him and to his mourners.—Item, For reviving of the child, when under deadneſs of frame and indiſpoſition: the article is, I am the reſurrection and the life; and becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo.—Item, For ſtrengthening of the child, when under weakneſs, ready to be overcome with corruption, or to ſuccumb in duty: the article is, My grace ſhall be ſufficient for thee; my ſtrength ſhall be made perfect in thy weakneſs.—Item, So much for light and candle; I mean, the candle of the Lord to enlighten them, when they are in the dark, and ready to miſtake their way: the article is, They ſhall hear a voice behind them, ſaying, This is the way, walk ye in it: I will lead the blind in a way they know not.—Item, So much neceſſary for bearing the charges, both of their work and warfare, in the wilderneſs: the article is, He will ſend none a warfare on their own charges; He will perform all our works in us and for us; I will ſtrengthen, I will uphold with the right-hand of my righteouſneſs.—Item, For medicine to cure the falling-ſickneſs of the child, and for raiſing him up when he falls and hurts himſelf: the article is, I will heal thy backſliding, I will love thee freely.—Item, For antidotes and preventives, to hinder the child's falling totally and utterly away: the article is, Pſal. xxxvii. 24. He ſhall not be utterly caſt down, for the Lord upholds him with his hand: I will put my fear in their hearts, and they ſhall not depart from me.—Item, For ſanatives to heal ſome deſperate diſeaſes, and dreadful hardneſs of heart: the article is, I am JEHOVAH-ROPHI, the Lord that healeth thee: the leaves of the tree of life are for the healing of the nations, even of their deadly wound.—Item, For corroſives, to eat out ſin and corruption, and all theſe noxious humors that diſtemper the child: the article is, I will ſubdue your iniquity; and, ſin ſhall not have dominion over you, for you are not under the law, but under grace.—Item, For purgatives to make the child of grace to grow in grace, and the planting of the Lord to flouriſh: the article is, Every branch in me that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit: and, I will be as the dew to Iſrael, he ſhall grow as the lily, and caſt forth his roots as Lebanon; his branches ſhall ſpread, his beauty ſhall be as the olive-tree, and his ſmell as Lebanon.—Item, For reſtoratives, to make the child recover and revert after decays of grace: the article is, They that dwell under his ſhadow ſhall return; they ſhall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine; the ſcent thereof ſhall be as the wine of Lebanon: I am like a green fir-tree, and from me is thy fruit found.——What ſhall I ſay? tell me the item, and I will tell you the article or the promiſe that will anſwer it.—Item, For antidotes againſt the temptations of the devil: the article is, The God of peace ſhall bruiſe Satan under your feet ſhortly; the ſeed of the woman ſhall bruiſe the head of the ſerpent.—Item, For ſecuring of renewed viſits after deſertion: the article is, For a ſmall moment have I forſaken thee; but with great mercy will I gather thee: in a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment, but with everlaſting kindneſs will I have mercy on thee.—Item, For ſecuring the continuation of divine favour amidſt all the changes, either of frames or providences: the article is, I am the God of Bethel, where thou anointedſt the pillar, and vowedſt the vow unto me. The mountains ſhall depart, and the hills be removed, [even mountains of myrrh, and hills of frankincenſe, of which you are ready ſometimes to ſay, My mountain ſtands ſtrong, and I ſhall never be moved, even theſe mountains of ſenſible enjoyments, and hills of ſweet frames may depart;] but my kindneſs ſhall not depart from thee.—Item, For victory over the world, not only over the god of this world, the devil; but over the things of this world, The luſts of the fleſh, the luſts of the eye, and the pride of life; alſo the loſſes and croſſes, the allurements or entanglements of the world: the article is, Though in the world ye ſhall have tribulation; yet, be of good chear, I have overcome the world, that my victory may be yours.—Item, For a bleſſing upon all providences, and for ſanctifying of all croſſes and calamities they meet with: the article is, All things ſhall work together for good to them that love God, and are the called according to his purpoſe.—Item, For the want of love to God, or the weakneſs of it; for the want or weakneſs of faith, repentance, zeal, and other graces: the article is, In him dwells all the fulneſs of the Godhead; and, Ye are complete in him; and, It pleaſed the Father that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell, that out of his fulneſs ye might receive grace for grace: He is the author and finiſher of faith; the author and finiſher of love; the ALPHA and OMEGA of all grace. ——Are there any more items in the charge, for which there is no article in the bond of proviſion to diſcharge it? Nay, nay; ſit down and deviſe items; the child of promiſe may find articles in the bond to anſwer them.—Item, For conduct through all ſnares and difficulties in your way: the article is, I will guide thee with mine eye; I will guide thee by my counſel.—Item, For victory over death, and a happy entrance to eternal life: the article is, Death ſhall be ſwallowed up in victory; and, The ranſomed of the Lord ſhall return, and come unto Zion with ſongs; they ſhall obtain joy and gladneſs, and ſorrow and ſighing ſhall flee away; and ſo ſhall we ever be with the Lord.—What think you, believing child, of the promiſe? What think you of your bond of proviſion? Come read over the charge and diſcharge, compare them together, and ſee if there be any thing wanting in the covenant of promiſe, and ſee if it hath not all your ſalvation in it. If I have paſſed by or forgot any thing, I ſhall make it up in one word; Item, For defraying the charge of the want of all things: the article for anſwering it is, Rom. viii. 32. He that ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up to the death for us all, how ſhall he not with him freely give us all things? All things are yours, and ye are Chriſt's: yea, ten thouſand times more than all things is in the bond of the promiſe; God himſelf is in it, I will be thy God; Chriſt himſelf is in it, God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, etc.; The Spirit himſelf is in the bond, to be the Spirit of faith, love, light, life, and liberty, grace, and glory; I will pour water upon him that is thirſty, and floods upon the dry ground; even my Spirit upon thy ſeed, and my bleſſing on thine offspring. And if God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, be in the bond of proviſion; pray, what is wanting, when he who is all in all is in the bond? What want you, believer, that is not here? If you converſe only with the law, you will find all wanting; item, all ſpent; but when you come to the promiſe, you will find a ſtock that can never be exhauſted.

Now, believer, you ſee where your portion lies; rejoice in your heirſhip: being a child of promiſe, you have won Chriſt in it, and you are called to live upon your winning; being a child of the promiſe, you ſhould live upon the promiſe in every caſe; ſuck the breaſts of the promiſe, as the child does the mother's breaſt, for that is to live by faith. As you would be holy, as you would be happy, as you would be grateful and fruitful, as you would glorify God, and edify your neighbour, make more uſe of the promiſe, by pleading the promiſe by prayer, and feeding on the promiſe by faith, and applying the promiſe for anſwering all charges of the law: for in the law you will never find any thing, either for paying your debt, or performing your duty; but the diſcharge that is in the goſpel-promiſe, and that only, can anſwer it.

I will tell you my friends, what would make notable religion among us; if the charge of the law were duly known, and conſcience taking home that; and if the diſcharge of the goſpel were duly known alſo, and faith were taking home that: therefore conſider what the law-charge is, and what conſcience ſays to it; alſo what the goſpel-diſcharge is, and what faith ſays to that.

(1.) The law-charge is, Man, you have a wicked, deviliſh, hard heart; you are nothing but a maſs of ſin; for, by the law is the knowledge of ſin. What ſays conſcience to that? does it take with the charge? Then hear how the goſpel-diſcharge runs, I will take away the heart of ſtone, and give the heart of fleſh. What ſays faith to that? O welcome promiſe! Lord, I take thee at thy word; Be it to me according to thy word.

(2.) Again, the law-charge is, Man, you are a grievous, hainous ſinner, that juſtly ſhould be thruſt down to the bottom of hell, to be burnt in the fire of God's wrath for ever. What ſays conſcience to that charge? does it take with the charge, ſaying, True, true? Then hear how the goſpel-diſcharge runs, Deliver his ſoul from going down to the pit, for I have found a ranſom. What ſays faith to that? O welcome ſweet word of grace! Lord, I take hold of thy promiſe, and I will hope in thy word.

(3.) Again, the law-charge and challenge is, Man, woman, you are deſtitute of all holineſs, and unable to ſerve God, or honour him, by walking in his way. What ſays conſcience to that? Why, if it be not ſeared, it takes with the charge. Well, the goſpel-diſcharge anſwers, I will put my Spirit within you, and cauſe you to walk in my ſtatutes. What ſays faith to that? Why, if you have any, it will ſay, O welcome, welcome bleſſed promiſe! Lord, I will take thee at thy word; AMEN, even ſo be it unto me according to it.

(4.) Again, the law-charge runs thus, Man, woman, you are an ignorant creature, you know nothing of God as you ought to know. What ſays conſcience to that? if it be not ſleeping, it will ſay, Oh! a true charge, a true challenge; I take with it. Well, the goſpel-diſcharge anſwers, They ſhall be all taught of God: I will ſend the Comforter, and he ſhall teach you all things: He ſhall open the eyes of the blind, and bring them from darkneſs to light. What ſays faith to that? Even, O welcome good tidings! welcome ſweet promiſe! Lord, I know no other ſchool but thine, where I can be ſavingly inſtructed; therefore, I will take thee at thy word; Do as thou haſt ſaid.

(5.) Again, the law-charge runs thus, Man, woman, you are curſed and condemned; for, Curſed is every one that continues not in all things written in the book of the law to do them. What ſays conſcience? If it be not dumb, it will ſay, then, according to the tenor of the law, I am the man, the curſed man, that hath broken God's law; the charge is juſt and true. Well, the goſpel-diſcharge anſwers, Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us. What ſays faith to this? O it will ſay, Welcome, ſweet goſpel-promiſe! Lord, I take thee at thy word, I embrace thy promiſe with application to myſelf, for there is all my ſalvation.

(6.) In a word, the law-charge is, Man, woman, you are in every reſpect a broken bankrupt: your debt of obedience to the precept of the law is impoſſible, you cannot do it; your debt of ſatisfaction to the penalty of the law is intolerable, you cannot bear it: and as your debt of obedience and ſatisfaction to the law, as a covenant, is inſolvable, ſo your duty of obedience and obſervance of the law, as a rule, is impracticable by you. What ſays conſcience to this? If it be awakened, it takes with the charge, ſaying, O true, true; I am every way, indeed, broken and inſolvent. Well, the goſpel-diſcharge runs thus, Chriſt is a Surety of a better teſtament; the Lord our righteouſneſs and ſtrength: our righteouſneſs, for paying all the debt we owe to the law, as a covenant, by his juſtifying merit; our ſtrength, for defraying the charge of all the duty we owe in point of gratitude to the law, as a rule, and that by his ſanctifying Spirit. Now, what ſays faith to this? Why, if it ſpeak, it will now ſay, O welcome promiſe! O welcome Surety! welcome debt-payer and burden-bearer! It takes God at his word, and ſays, Surely in the Lord only have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength. *

Now, then, does a man act like a child of promiſe, when conſcience takes with the law-charge, and owns it; and when, at the ſame time, faith takes the goſpel-diſcharge, and anſwers the law with it, by a particular application: for, as it is with conſcience in applying the threatening of the law for conviction, it is with particular application; ſo it is with faith in applying the promiſe of the goſpel, it is with a particular cloſe application. I am concerned with that charge of the law, ſays conſcience; I take it to myſelf; I am the ſinful guilty man: well, ſo ſays faith, I am concerned with this diſcharge of the goſpel-promiſe, I take it to myſelf, myſelf, and believe, through grace, I am the abſolved man. Something of this particular appropriation, more or leſs, muſt be in faith; otherwiſe there is no relief comes in by the goſpel. As it is with the law, if there were no cloſe application of the threatening, with ſome aſſurance that the threatening is to me, I would have no conviction by the law; ſo it is with the goſpel, if there were no cloſe application of the promiſe, with ſome aſſurance that it is to me, I would have no relief or conſolation by the goſpel. Let this be marked, I pray you; if a man hear the law-charge, without reckoning himſelf much concerned, he may think he believes it, and yet be but an atheiſt; his conſcience was never wounded by it: and if a man hear the goſpel-diſcharge, or promiſe, without reckoning himſelf much concerned in the matter, he may think he believes the goſpel, but he deceives himſelf, his heart was never healed by it: why? there is no application. If any think that it is eaſy to believe with application, let it be conſidered, that this application, in the nature of faith, is the beſt way to find out whether your faith be but a fancy or not: for, if you ſay you believe, and yet it is with no particular concern and application to yourſelf; it is not faith, but a ſtrong fancy, a ſtrong imagination, yea, a ſtrong deluſion; if it can be called faith, yet it is not the faith of God's elect. If you ſhould hear that there is a great man in America, that hath ſo many thouſands a year; why, if a man of ordinary credit tell you this, you readily believe it, becauſe you are not much concerned about it: but if at the ſame time you are made to underſtand that you will turn to beggary, and have nothing in the world but what you muſt receive from that great man, and that you muſt be ſupplied out of his ſtore, and that he is heartily content to impart it for your uſe; why, if you find yourſelf ſo much concerned, you would begin to be a little more ſcrupulous in believing the point, and entertain a thouſand ſuſpicions about it; or, if you got his bond, I ſuppoſe you would receive it with application, and ſee if you could draw any bills of exchange upon it: even ſo it is here; while you hear that there is a great Saviour in heaven, that hath unſearchable riches, and all the fulneſs of the Godhead, perhaps you never ſaw what concern you had in him; you are able, you think, to do your own buſineſs without him, and ſo you think you believe well enough, and never doubted of your faith; you have an eaſy credulity about that in which you have little or no concern: but did you once know, that as you are poor and needy, ſo you will die a bankrupt, and be ſent for ever to the priſon of hell for the debt that you owe to God's juſtice, unleſs Chriſt be your Surety for paying your debt; then it is another matter to believe, when it comes to a believing with application. While men are ſtill ſleeping in their natural ſecurity, and ſee no need of Chriſt, they think they can eaſily believe all that the goſpel reports to them, and ſo never doubt. What! would you have us to be ſuch atheiſts and infidels, as not to believe the Bible? Yea, but when God awakens the conſcience, to ſee how much depends upon it, with reſpect to their own particular concern, then they find believing is another thing than they imagined.

Therefore, you that think you have been good enough believers all your days, and never doubted of your faith, you may ſuſpect your faith is but a fancy. O man, do not hazard your ſoul upon a ſtrong imagination; yet withal, faith in its nature does not conſiſt in doubting, for it is juſt the oppoſite of it. Do not think you believe, becauſe you doubt; for doubting is unbelief; and unbelief is neither a negative nor a poſitive mark of faith: I mean, doubting of God's word of promiſe, ſo as not to receive it with application; which differs vaſtly from doubting about your faith. When the object of a man's doubting is about his own faith, there is good reaſon for his doubting of that, until once he believe God's word of promiſe with application; which, when, through grace he does, then he hath no more reaſon to doubt of his faith: but when the object of a man's doubting is God's word of promiſe, which God commands him to believe with application, there is no reaſon in the world for his doubting of that; nay, his doubting of it will be ſtill his ſin, as long as unbelief is his ſin: and while he doubts of that word of grace, and does not receive the promiſe with application to himſelf, he hath good reaſon to doubt of his faith; for application and appropriation of the promiſe, and of Chriſt in it, is the very heart and ſoul of faith, and the moſt vital act of the child of promiſe, whereby he takes it as God's bond to himſelf, and thereupon draws bills of exchange upon Chriſt, as made of God to him, wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption; and looks to him as a promiſing God in Chriſt; pleads the promiſe for all neceſſary ſupply that is held forth there; and lives upon the promiſe, like a child upon the breaſt, till the full performance come.

May the Lord give you underſtanding in all things, and help you thus to believe to the ſaving of your ſouls, and to the evidencing that you are the children of the promiſe. *

HAVING thus given you a ſuccinct view of what we had formerly offered upon this ſubject elſewhere, in the brief recapitulation of ſome of the principal topics inſiſted upon, I proceed now to ſome further inferences.

1o. Hence ſee what is the reaſon that all men, by nature, are not only under the curſe of the law, but alſo, at the ſame time, under a curſed byaſs and inclination to the law-way of juſtification. Why? becauſe they are, with Iſhmael, children of the bond-woman; and not, like Iſaac, children of the promiſe. We are all by nature curſed Iſhmaelites; born under bondage to the law as a covenant of works. Hence ſinners, that remain in that ſtate, though the law curſe them, yet they deſire to be under the law; that is, to be ſaved by their doing, or in ſome conditional way, and cannot think it poſſible to be ſaved by a free and abſolute promiſe; yea, they will run down and perſecute all theſe that would vilify their works, and repreſent them as dung in point of juſtification before God. What, ſay they, theſe men are certainly ill

* Where this ſermon, which is the fourth upon the text, was delivered cannot be poſitively aſcertained, in regard the Author omitted to mark it in his notes; but it is probable it was preached at Dunfermline, July 23d, 1726. his ordinary place of preaching; for, by noticing the place and date of the preceding one, viz. Portmoak, July 17th, and the date and place of the following ones, viz. Glendovan July 31. there is juſt one free Sabbath between theſe two ſacramental ſolemnities; and therefore the more likely he was at home.

men, enemies to the law and good works, that would have us caſt away all our hope built upon our religious duties, and would have us building upon a quite contrary foundation. Hence perſecution ariſes, as it is ſaid in the verſe following our text. The children of the promiſe, like Iſaac, need not think it ſtrange though they be perſecute in the world by the Iſhmaelites, the children of the bond-woman, and that particularly by mocking tongues; for ſo was Iſaac by Iſhmael. The ſcripture foreſaw this, and God therein forewarned us, that when ſuch a diſpenſation takes place, we may not be ſurprized at it. However, the main ground of the difference is the ſame that the text and context does ſpeak of, namely, the law and the promiſe. The one is ignorantly zealous for the law; and the other is ſpiritually zealous for the promiſe; the one is for ſalvation, as it were, by the law; the other is for ſalvation merely by the promiſe: the one cries up ſanctity and holineſs, and that in a conformity to the law; the other is for ſanctity and holineſs alſo, but not by the law, but by the promiſe, and as the fruit of the faith of free juſtification, without the deeds of the law, knowing that this faith, and this only, works by love. Hence Papiſts and ignorant Proteſtants alſo declare themſelves to be Iſhmaelites, and children of the bond-woman, even though they pretend to be zealous for the goſpel, while they turn the goſpel to a new law, a conditional covenant betwixt God and man, with ſo much on his part, and ſo much on ours. But all the children of promiſe, that have any tolerable inſight into the goſpel, will own it to be a "free and "abſolute promiſe, unconditional to us; and "that, ever ſince the covenant of works was "broken, God never made any covenant with "us, for life and ſalvation, but that covenant "that he made with Chriſt, and in him with "all the elect as his ſeed," as our Larger Catechiſm declares. Mean time, think not ſtrange, when either you find in yourſelf, or others, a ſtrange propenſity towards the old-covenant way of ſalvation and juſtification; for, we are all by nature the children of the bond-woman. And, O believer, bleſs God, if he hath opened your eyes to know the goſpel-liberty wherewith Chriſt hath made you free: happy are they that are the children of the free-woman! they are the children of promiſe.

11. Hence ſee the freedom and ſovereignty of the grace of God, in the adoption of any child to himſelf. Why, all his children are children of promiſe, as Iſaac, who was not born by the ſtrength of nature; for Abraham and Sarah were both old, and his body was dead, and her womb was barren; and, beſides natural barrenneſs, ſhe was paſt the prolific age; ſo that Iſaac was not born by the ſtrength of nature, but merely by the virtue of the promiſe: ſo believers are made the children of God, not by the power of nature, but by the virtue of the promiſe, when the Spirit of God puts a generative virtue therein. It is the promiſe of God in Chriſt, that makes us children; and the promiſe is of the mere free grace of God; therefore they that are God's children, are ſo by the mere free grace of God; Having predeſtinate us to the adoption of children by Jeſus Chriſt to himſelf, according to the good pleaſure of his will, to the praiſe of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved, Eph. i. 5. How diſhonourable then to the doctrine of God's free grace and ſovereignty is it, for any to aſſert, "That "election and adoption is according to God's "foreknowledge of our faith and obedience?" For, thus would we elect ourſelves, and be children, not by divine promiſe, but of our own free-will and faith. God foreſaw the faith of his elect, indeed, becauſe he firſt decreed to give the grace of faith to them; for the foreknowledge of things to come to paſs, depends upon a precedent will in God; nothing comes to paſs without his will. The friends and favourites of the free-will of man, in converting themſelves, are enemies to the free grace of God in begetting children to himſelf, by virtue of his promiſe in Chriſt, and by the means thereof. Neither does this aboliſh the freedom of the will; for, as the generative promiſe is juſt the abſolute will of God, ſo the determination of man's will by the will of God, is the liberty of the will, and not the bondage of it: when he works powerfully on the will of man, he gives both to will and to do, he makes the man willing; and this is the perfection of liberty, when man's will is made conform to the will of God.—Thus all the children of God are the children of promiſe.

12. Hence ſee what is the great buſineſs of miniſters, if they would be the happy inſtruments of begetting children to God. If all that are his children, are the children of promiſe, then his miniſters had need to be the heralds of the promiſe, miniſters of the New Teſtament, which is the covenant of promiſe, not of the letter, but of the Spirit. It is the goſpel, in contradiſtinction from the law, that is the miniſtration of the Spirit, 2 Cor. iii. 6, 7, 8. The law is to be preached, indeed, but it is only in a ſubſerviency to the goſpel. The ſinner muſt hear what the law hath to charge upon him, that ſo, when he takes with the charge of the law, he may haſte to flee to the diſcharge that is preſented in the goſpel-promiſe, or to Chriſt as the end of the law for righteouſneſs, to every one that believeth. None can lawfully preach the law as a covenant, unleſs they preach Chriſt as the end of it; nay, nor can any rightly preach the law as a rule, unleſs they preach Chriſt as the beginning of it; I mean, Chriſt for our righteouſneſs, is the end of the law as a covenant; and Chriſt for our ſtrength, is the ſpring of our obedience to the law as a rule. Think not ſtrange that we harp ſo much upon this ſtring, eſpecially in a day wherein the goſpel is brought under ſo much contempt, reproach, and ſuſpicion, as if it were a door of licentiouſneſs †. As the expreſs words of our commiſſion are, Go preach the goſpel to every creature, to every rational creature; ſo it is the goſpel only that ſaves all that are ſaved, and that ſanctifies all that are ſanctified; for it is the miniſtration of the Spirit, and the power of God to ſalvation; and it is the goſpel-promiſe, and that alone, that is the prolific womb from whence all the children of God have their new birth, for they are the children of the promiſe. O then, Sirs, let us then put honour and reſpect upon the promiſe. A throne without a promiſe, is but the devil's dungeon; wealth, without a promiſe, is but fewel for hell; temporal enjoyments, without a promiſe, are but dreadful curſes; life, and health, and merriment, without a promiſe, are nothing but but a ſilk threed, by which you are hinging over the gulf of death and eternal damnation: therefore, O intreat God to manifeſt himſelf to you in the promiſe, and to make you know the myſtery of the goſpel!—Religious duties themſelves, without a promiſe, are nothing but a building of your habitation about the old ruinous walls of a covenant of works, which will tumble down and fall upon you with a vengeance: therefore, O ſeek to know God in Chriſt, God in a promiſe, where alone you can find him reconciled!—God, in a promiſe, is all love; Chriſt, in a promiſe, is all heaven; the Spirit, in a promiſe, is all holineſs and comfort; and every thing, with a promiſe, is ſweet.—Outward bleſſings, with a promiſe, are bleſſings indeed; a cup of cold water, with a promiſe, is a feaſt; yea, a croſs, with a promiſe, is a cordial; a dungeon, a priſon, with a promiſe, is a paradiſe; a bloody ſcaffold, with a promiſe, is a place of honour; death, with a promiſe, is a door of life: O then, ſeek to know God in a promiſe!—God as a lawgiver and commander, is no myſtery to the world, for nature's light ſhows ſomething of that; but God in a promiſe, is indeed a myſtery. Hence more errors have ariſen about the goſpel than about the law, becauſe the principles of the law are written in man's nature. Heathens have made laws againſt all manner of outward vices forbidden by the moral law; but the goſpel is ſupernatural, and the goſpel-promiſe of writing the law in the heart, by a new creation in Chriſt unto good works.—It is the greateſt honour of any nation to be the ſeat of the goſpel: as the ark was the glory of Iſrael; ſo is Chriſt, in the promiſe, the glory of the church of God. And what is it that makes a flouriſhing church, but the goſpel-promiſe, impregnated with the power of the Spirit for bringing forth children unto God? As you ſee in the verſe preceding our text, Rejoice thou barren, that beareſt not; break forth and cry, thou that traveleſt not: for the deſolate hath many moe children, than ſhe which hath a husband.—What made our reformation-days and Scotland's covenanting-days to be ſuch joyful and heartſom days of the church, in bringing forth many children unto God? Why, the matter was, a goſpel-ſpirit was poured out, in oppoſition to the old Popiſh legal ſtrain; and when the free-promiſe, the free-grace of God in Chriſt took a vent, then was the church a joyful mother of many children to God, a nation, as it were, born at once; a multitude of converts was born in her.—But, alas! Whence is the barren womb of the church of Scotland in theſe covenant-breaking days, wherein our ſolemn covenants are much buried in oblivion; yea, the obligation thereof impunged and denied by many, who conſequently juſtify the burning and burial of our covenant, and condemn the principles of our covenanting reformers, and pureſt aſſemblies, that laid the foundation of the Lord's houſe among us; and travelled night and day, to get the work of reformation brought to the ſcripture-pattern; and tranſmitted goſpel-truths down to us at the expence of their blood, ſome ſealing it by their martyrdom; while we, their ungrateful poſterity, are either forgetting their labours, or caſting a reproach upon them, as if they had been more led by phrenzy than true zeal; notwithſtanding all their prayers, and tears, and wreſtling with God in behalf of our Zion? But, as their remarkable ſucceſs, ſhewed how much they were honoured of God; ſo our remarkable barrenneſs ſhows how much we are left of God.—The glorious goſpel is brought under much contempt, and the goſpel-preaching marked out with notes of ignominy and calumny, whereby God is diſhonoured, Chriſt is deſpiſed, the Spirit is grieved, the goſpel is ſlighted, and the edification of ſouls marred, and many led to ſuſpect the truth as if it were error, and few or none honoured to do any good to ſouls. The legal preacher is not honoured, becauſe the law is not the miniſtration of the Spirit; the goſpel-preacher is not honoured, becauſe God is angry at his mother-church, and ſhe, and all her children, are under a cloud. Oh! ſeek that the Lord may pity us, and return with a day of power, that he may appear in his glory, and build up Zion.—Mean time, you may ſee what our great buſineſs ſhould be in preaching the word to you; particularly, rightly to rid marches betwixt the law and the promiſe: for, when law and goſpel are mixed and confounded together, neither true law nor true goſpel can be preached, but a hotch-potch of both, to the marring of both; juſt like the mingling together of water and wine, which makes flaſh matter of both, and is rejected of God, Iſa. i. 22. And how miſerable are you that are goſpel hearers, if you can never come to underſtand what is the goſpel, and what is the law, and whether your ſalvation be in this or that? My text leads me to no more of the difference betwixt the law and the goſpel at preſent, than to tell you that the goſpel is a promiſe, or a revelation of God's grace and good-will to ſinners in Chriſt; and that it is the goſpel-promiſe only, under the influence of the Spirit, that begets children unto God. And if this one point were obſerved, it might be of uſe to you all your lifetime, in hearing the word preached, for making you underſtand what is the voice of the law, and what is the voice of the goſpel therein: for the law runs always in a mandatory or minatory ſtrain; that is, in commands and threatenings; but the goſpel runs in a promiſſory ſtrain: the former begets fear and dread, and the latter begets hope; and happy they, who, being terrified by the law, are made to flee away to the goſpel, and thereby are begotten to a lively hope: but wo will be to you, if you can never diſtinguiſh betwixt God in a threatening, and God in a promiſe, ſo as to flee from a threatening to a promiſing God; that is, from a God out of Chriſt, clothed with threatenings and wrath, to a God in Chriſt, clothed with promiſes, and mercy, and grace; for there lies all your ſalvation. Oh! Sirs, ſeek that the diſpenſation of the goſpel may be powerful towards you!*

HAVING elſewhere finiſhed the doctrinal part of this ſubject, and proſecuted an uſe of information at conſiderable length, the ſecond uſe, I propoſe, is by way of examination and trial; namely, for reſolving this inquiry, Whether or not you be children of promiſe? Much depends upon this inquiry: for, if you be a child of promiſe, you are a child of God, and an heir of glory; if you be not a child of promiſe, you are yet under the curſe of the law, and upon the very brink of hell and damnation, and under the power of sin and Satan; a servant unto sin, and a slave to the devil. Try then, whether you be a child of promise or not; I mean, an actual child of promise, for the Lord only knows who are the children of promise virtually. Isaac was a child of promise virtually, before ever he was born by the power of the promise; he was lying in the womb of the promise, till the promise came to the full time of bringing him forth: so, I hope, there may be some here that are the children of promise virtually, but they are not yet brought forth, they are lying in the womb of God's gracious purpose and promise, and such will be brought forth in the fulness of time; for, All that the Father hath given me, shall come to me, says Christ: but as to themselves, and their natural state, they are in the same common mass of sin and misery with the rest of the world, and may be worse than their neighbours, and are yet strangers to the covenant of promise. The question and inquiry is not concerning these; no marks can be given of these, but such as will find them out to be children of the devil, enemies to God, aliens and strangers to Christ: understand the question then to be meant of these that are the actual children of promise, adopted, regenerated, and begotten by the word of truth.

* What follows of this ſubject was delivered in three ſermons, at diſpenſing the ſacrament of the Lord's Supper at Glendovan, July 31ſt, 1726. on the Saturday, Sabbath, and Monday.

Now, I might here offer negative marks, to shew who are not the children of the promise; particularly,

1. None that are mocking Ishmaelites, that hate and oppose, mock and ridicule the free gospel-dispensation, and the close followers thereof; for here the children of promise, as Isaac, are set in opposition to mocking Ishmael, the son of the bond-woman. These, then, that mock, persecute, and malign the freedom of the gospel, when it is set forth in contradistinction to the law, and reproach the believers and professors thereof, as if it were a new invention, to expect salvation by a free promise, and not by the law. Mockers of the free grace of God had need to take care what they are doing: for, if that same grace do not marvellously prevent, they shall be cast out of God's family; though for a time they may bear sway therein, as Ishmael did in Abraham's family, till it came to this, Cast forth the bond-woman and her son. Mockers of the gospel then, are not the children of promise.

2. None that live in the practice, and under the power of any known sin whatsoever, secret or open, are the children of promise; for, the faith of the promise purifies the heart. The children of the promise are begotten again to a lively hope, by the promise; and, He that hath this hope, purifieth himself. It is true, the children of promise may feel the power of sin, and sometimes fear they be under the power of it, because of the strength of corruption hurrying them oft down the stream; but yet their pleading of the promise of God against the power of sin, and their secret wrestling with God on that head, declares that they are not under the power of sin, and that sin shall not have dominion over them, because they are not under the law, but under grace: but as for these that sin with a high hand, that live in drunkenness, whoredom, swearing, sabbath-breaking, and in the neglect of secret and family-prayer, or in any other sin without controul; it is evident they are not under the power of the gospel-promise; sin hath dominion over them, because they are not under grace, but under the law. Therefore,

3. None that are self-justiciaries, people looking to be saved and justified by the law, and the works of the law, either in whole or in part; none of these are the children of promise: nay, such can have no part in the kingdom of heaven, they are to be cast out of the church and family of God, as you see in the context; Cast out the bound-woman and her son. There is the voice of God, casting down from heaven to hell the greatest part of the earth, the Turk, the Jew, the Pagan, and the Papist, together with all the grossly ignorant protestants and professors, that know no other way of salvation and justification but by their works, or, seek salvation, as it were, by the works of the law. Oh! how is the world perishing in a legal dream, imagining to deal with God in the law, not knowing God in Christ, or in the promise! And some that hear of Christ, and that there is no salvation but in him, how do they dream of salvation partly by the law, and partly by the promise! and so they divide salvation betwixt themselves and Christ; and, in doing so, they take all the honour to themselves, and Christ hath but the name by way of compliment. How expect you to be saved, man? Why, say you, it is only by Christ? Well said: but, why expect you to be saved by Christ? Why, say you, because I do as well as I can, and am a good honest neighbour, that never wronged any body; I am just in my dealings, and frugal in my calling, and sober in my conversation; yea, I read, and pray, and communicate: and though I be not perfect, for none are without faults; yet I am sincere, and have a good meaning. Very well, man; but what of all that? Why, say you, therefore I hope Christ will save me, or God will save me for Christ's sake, because I do my best. Nay, man, I tell you, therefore God will cast you out, because you give Christ but the compliment of being your Saviour, and you take the honour to yourself; your hope is not built upon God's promise, but upon your own practice. What, Sir, would you have us giving up with all good works and good practice, and running in to Antinomian laxness? Oh! gross ignorance of the grace of God! Do you think that your giving up with your dead works, will be the ruin of good works. All your works before faith in the free promise, are dead works; and you are lost for ever, if you get not the blood of Christ to purge your conscience from these dead works, to serve the living God, Heb. ix. 14. And there is no serving of the living God acceptably, till the old dead works be purged out. You cannot be too much occupied in reading, and praying, and hearing, and using the means; but your turning the means to conditions, as if you were to deal with God upon the terms of the old covenant, this is a siding with the conditional law, against the free absolute promise.

4. None are children of the promise, who are strangers to the power and virtue of it; for all the true-born children thereof, are brought forth by the virtue thereof. If your religion spring only from education, from custom, from example, from your own free-will, and the refinement and improvement of natural parts, not from the virtue and efficacy of the promise, under under the influence of the powerful Spirit of God, you are but ſtill-born, or a baſtard, like Iſhmael; not a free-born child, like Iſaac. The promiſe bears all the expences of her own children; they cannot do without a promiſe and power in it, or without Chriſt and virtue from him, for bearing the charges of their religion, and of all their religious actions. As Chriſt hath ſaid, Without me ye can do nothing; ſo they find and know, to their experience, that they are not ſufficient of themſelves, to think any thing as of themſelves; therefore, their dependence is upon, and their ſuccour is from the free promiſe, the free grace of God in Chriſt. Whereas, theſe that are not born by virtue of the promiſe, as Iſaac, but by the power of nature, as Iſhmael, they can do all by their own natural power: indeed they may learn to ſay, O without Chriſt we can do nothing; but they lye, for they have a rooted perſuaſion in their heart, that they can defray their own charges well enough; they can hear, they can read, they can pray, they can believe, they can communicate, and all, with the greateſt eaſe, and without any difficulty; and may be think ſtrange to hear ſome of God's people complaining of difficulties, and making it impoſſible kind of work to them, for they never found any difficulty; it was always poſſible and practicable enough for them. Why, what is the matter? Indeed, it is juſt here, they were never acted by the ſtrength and virtue of the promiſe, but merely by the power of nature, and common influences; for they are not the children of promiſe.

But now I proceed to offer ſome poſitive marks of the children of promiſe. And 1. I would offer ſome antecedent marks. 2. Lay down ſome concluſive and determining evidences of them.

I would, firſt, offer ſome antecedent marks of the children of promiſe. Such as,

1. Theſe that are actually by grace the children of promiſe, have well known and underſtood that by nature they are the children of diſobedience, and by practice alſo, Eph. ii. 2. They have been convinced of ſin in breaking the commands of the law, which makes them value that ſalvation from ſin, that is held forth in the promiſe of the goſpel. They that have not known God in the command, as offended and diſhonoured by them; ſurely they have not yet known God in a promiſe, as reconciled to them. Till the commandment come, the man is alive to the law, Rom. vii. 9.; or, alive without the law; but when the command comes, and the man ſees the ſpirituality of the precept, then ſin revives, and he dies. Some look only to the letter of the law, and ſo think they are very innocent: but if the Spirit of God had once diſcovered the ſpirit of the law, then the ſoul will cry out, Unclean, unclean! I have broken every command. If you will believe ſome people, I mean, ignorant legaliſts, they ſpeak as if they had never broken one of the ten commands: why, I was never given to idolatry, ſuperſtition, profaning of God's name, nor his Sabbath; never diſobedient to my parents, nor a murderer, adulterer, thief, nor a falſe ſwearer, nor a coveter of my neighbour's wife, houſe, or goods, &c. Oh! but they that are humbled, by the coming of the commandment, they ſee what a huge maſs of corruption the natural heart is, even the reverſe of all God's commands.

The language of the child of promiſe, that hath got a view of God in the command to his conviction, is not, All theſe things have I done from my youth up; but, In all theſe things have I offended.—In oppoſition to the firſt command, my heart is but a throne of iniquity, a receptacle of falſe gods: I have broken it a thouſand times; for, ſo many luſts and idols as I have had, ſo many ſtrange gods have taken away my heart.—In oppoſition to the ſecond command, my heart is but a chamber of imagery: as oft as I have neglected God's worſhip, or worſhipped him in an unſuitable manner, ſo oft have I broken this command, and that is, times without number.—In oppoſition to the third command, my heart is but a dungeon of profanity: and as oft as I have thought amiſs of God's holy name, and ſpoken irreverently of it, or of any of his titles, attributes, ordinances, words, and works, ſo oft am I chargeable with guilt here.—In oppoſition to the fourth command, my heart is but a ſacrilegious waſter of holy time, a play-houſe of idleneſs: and as oft as I have entertained carnal and worldly thoughts, and ſpoken vain and fooliſh words, and put off God with dead and formal prayers, and roving affections, in reading, hearing, ſinging, and praying on the Lord's day; ſo oft have I been a damnable breaker of God's Sabbath.—In oppoſition to the fifth command, my heart is but a palace of pride, the ſpring of all my haughty carriage towards my neighbour, whether ſuperiors, inferiors, or equals: and as oft as I have failed in the duties of my ſtation, as a magiſtrate, miniſter, elder, huſband or wife, parent or child, maſter or miſtreſs, or ſervant, not inſtructing my children and ſervants, not receiving inſtruction from maſter or ſuperior, &c. ſo oft have I miſerably thwarted this command.—In oppoſition to the ſixth command, Oh! my heart is but a houſe of ſlaughter; many cruel thoughts againſt my neighbour make my heart but a ſlaughter-houſe: for God hath ſaid, He that hates his brother in his heart is a murderer; yea, He that is angry with his brother, and ſays to him, RACA, Thou fool, is in danger of hell fire: therefore, ſo oft as I have been guilty of angry thoughts, angry words, and mocking carriage, ſo oft have I broken this command.—In oppoſition to the ſeventh command, my heart is but a cage of unclean birds, a fountain of pollution: Chriſt charges the luſtful eye to be a committing adultery in the heart; and as often as I have had unclean thoughts, obſcene words, an immodeſt carriage, or a wanton garb or dreſs, ſo oft have I broken this command.—In oppoſition to the eighth command, Oh! my heart is but a den of thieves, and a field of robbery: for, as oft as I have deviſed fraud, and contrived how to have advantage of my neighbour, ſo as to gain at his loſs, ſo oft have I offended here.—In oppoſition to the ninth command, my heart is but a fountain of backbiting, and a ſeed-pot of ſlander, debate, and reviling: and as oft as I have reproached his name, received an ill report, and been glad to hear an ill tale of him, and fond to repeat it; ſo oft have I tranſgreſſed this command.—In oppoſition to the tenth command, my heart is but a temple of idolatry; for covetouſneſs is idolatry: and ſo oft as I have not been fully content with my own eſtate, nor pulled out the eyes of envy with reſpect to my neighbour's goods and poſſeſſion, wiſhing what is his were mine; ſo oft have I broken this command.

command.——Alas! Sirs, you that ſay or think you have a good heart, or a good nature, did you ever look to your heart and nature in this glaſs of God's commands? No, no: if you ſee the ſpirituality of God's law, you cannot but ſee the carnality and corruption of your heart and nature, Rom. viii. 7. If you have ſeen God in a command, you cannot but cry out, Oh! I am a tranſgreſſor from the womb; the law is ſpiritual, but I am carnal, ſold under ſin. Surely, if you have not ſeen God in the law-command to your conviction, you have not known him in the goſpel-promiſe to your conſolation; you are not a child of promiſe.

2. The ſecond antecedent mark is this, That theſe that are actually by grace the children of promiſe, have well known and underſtood, that as, by nature, they are children of diſobedience, ſo of conſequence that, by nature, they are children of wrath, Eph. ii. 3. And as they have not only ſeen God in the command, whoſe authority was affronted by them; but God in a threatening, whoſe curſe was gone out againſt them, according to the tenor of the law; Curſed is every one that continues not in all things written in the book of the law to do them, Gal. iii. 10. I ſpeak not of the meaſure of this diſpenſation; but ſo it is, that the children of promiſe are perſons that have been ſo far awakened, by the threatening of God's wrath, to a ſight of their miſery, as to make them ſee their need of Chriſt held out in the promiſe, and to flee for refuge to that quarter. I ſpeak not juſt now of the warrant that all have to flee to the promiſe, but of the method wherein God brings them to it, whom he calls effectually to be the children of promiſe: he convinces them of ſin and miſery; not only of ſin, by opening up the ſpirituality of the command; but alſo of miſery, by opening up the ſeverity of the threatening, ſhewing them that the wages of ſin is death; that the ſoul that ſinneth ſhall die; tribulation and anguiſh to every ſoul that doth evil. If you was never put in fear of hell and damnation, which all Chriſtleſs unbelieving ſinners ought to fear, or if you have never been terrified at the ſight of God manifeſted in the threatening, it is much to be feared you have never been truly relieved, by the ſight of God manifeſted in a promiſe. God manifeſting himſelf in a command, makes way for Chriſt's perfect obedience to be eſteemed; and God manifeſting himſelf in a threatening, makes way for Chriſt's complete ſatisfaction to be prized: and it is no wonder that Chriſt, the great promiſe, be ſlighted, ſo long as people have not, in the light of the command, ſeen themſelves to be children of diſobedience; and in the light of the threatening, ſeen themſelves to be children of wrath.

A man's being a child of promiſe, does therefore preſuppoſe both theſe; yet theſe are but antecedent marks, and cannot determine the caſe, except in conjunction with what is to follow: for it is poſſible a man may be convinced both of his ſin and miſery, and ſee himſelf both a child of diſobedience, and a child of wrath by reaſon thereof, and yet not be a child of promiſe. Though all the children of promiſe are thus conceived, yet all that are thus conceived are not the children of promiſe. The following marks, therefore, are concluſive and determining, being either concomitant with, or conſequent unto, your being the children of promiſe.

1*ſt*, The firſt mark then is, they that are children of promiſe, are the ſpecial diſcerners of the promiſe. Their eyes are enlightned by the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of Chriſt: Enlightend to ſee God in a promiſe, as the only door of hope and relief in that extremity I was ſpeaking of; or to ſee God in ſome goſpel-truth and revelation equivalent to the promiſe. This is that knowledge of God in Chriſt, ſpoken of, 2 Cor. iv. 6. The God who commanded light to ſhine out of darkneſs, hath ſhined in our hearts, to give us the light of the glory of God, in the face of Jeſus Chriſt: and the glaſs wherein that bleſſed face is to be ſeen, is the goſpel-promiſe, or word of grace. When a limner draws a picture, he begins at the eye: ſo, when God draws his image on the ſoul, he opens the eyes, and diſcovers his glory in the goſpel. The child of promiſe, then, I ſay, is a ſpecial diſcerner of the promiſe; I mean, he hath got a ſpiritual diſcerning of the goſpel, and of the things of God: for, the natural man receives not the things of the Spirit of God, they are fooliſhneſs to him, neither can he know them, for they are ſpiritually diſcerned. Natural men think the goſpel fooliſhneſs, but the child of promiſe hath another kind of diſcerning knowledge of Chriſt and the goſpel.

QUEST. How ſhall I underſtand if my knowledge of Chriſt and the goſpel, be of a ſpecial nature?

To this I anſwer, by aſking theſe queſtions following.

1. Have you ſeen your utter darkneſs, that you had not a ſpark of ſaving light and knowledge, ſaying, Once I was blind? This is a good appearance.

2. Have you ſeen the wiſdom of God, in inveſting Chriſt with the office of a prophet; and that he could never have been ſo fit a Saviour, unleſs he had been a light to lighten the Gentiles?

3. Have you ſeen the abſolute need of divine teaching, and ſtill ſee it, being humbled under a ſenſe of your utter want of light, ſaying with Agur, Prov. xxx. 2. I am more fooliſh than any man, and have not the underſtanding of a man; and with Aſaph, Pſal. lxxiii. 22. So fooliſh was I and ignorant, I was as a beaſt before thee; humbled as the moſt confuſed creature, and greateſt fool in the world? Why, in that caſe, it would ſeem you are one of God's fools. Let him become a fool, that he may be wiſe.

4. Have you been made to cry for light and knowledge, ſaying, as Pſalm xliii. 3. O ſend forth thy light and thy truth, and let them be guides unto me? And do you prize every degree of light, knowing it pleaſant to ſee the ſun, pleaſant to ſee God in a promiſe; for there is the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, and there is all your ſalvation, all your relief?—Why, man, if you can anſwer theſe queſtions, it ſeems you are a ſpecial diſcerner of the promiſe.

2*dly*, They that are the children of promiſe, are the ſpecial deſcendents of the promiſe, and the free and powerful offſpring thereof. As Iſaac was a child of Abraham, not by the power of nature, but by the virtue and efficacy of the promiſe; ſo here, the child of promiſe is not ſo by works, but by grace: There is a remnant according to the election of grace; and, if by grace, then it is no more of works, otherwiſe grace is no more grace: but if it be of works, then is it no more grace; otherwiſe work is no more work, Rom. xi. 5, 6.

QUEST. How ſhall I know if I be thus a ſpecial deſcendent of the promiſe?

To which we reply; If you be a ſpecial deſcend-fcendent of the promiſe, to be ſure, the Spirit of God hath put power into the promiſe for this end, and given the promiſe ſtrength to bring you forth; the goſpel hath been the power of God to your ſalvation, Rom. i. 16. Knowing, brethren, your election of God; for our goſpel came not in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance, 1 Theſſ. i. 4, 5. The goſpel hath come to you, not in the external objective revelation only, but in the internal ſubjective efficacy and demonſtration of the Spirit. What have you experienced of this power? If you be the children of promiſe, you have been begotten of God's own will, by the word of truth; begotten to a lively hope; not by the power of nature, but by the power of grace; not by the power of the law, but by the power of the promiſe.

But here again it may be urged, How ſhall one know, that it is not by the power of the law, but by the power of the promiſe, that he hath been begotten to a profeſſion of religion? For the law, the bond-woman, hath power to beget children, like Iſhmael, that are not the children of promiſe, or of grace. How then ſhall I know that it was not the power of the law, but the power of the goſpel-grace and promiſe that I was touched with?

Whereunto it might be replied; If you have been begotten by the promiſe, and ſo by the power of divine ſovereign grace, then you have found, that God hath ſhewn no regard either to your good or evil, in making you his child. If you be a child of promiſe, you have found he hath ſhewn no regard to your good or goodneſs; for you had no good to move him: and that he hath ſhewn no regard to your evil; for you had enough of that to hinder him. What then hath moved him? Nothing but his own free ſovereign grace; ſovereign grace is a thing that can neither be hindered by our ill, nor furthered by our good. Do you ſee it is nothing but free, free and ſovereign grace that hath done it? Of his own will begat he us, by the word of truth. If you be a child of promiſe, and not a deſcendent of the bond-woman, the law, then you have ſeen that your ſalvation and juſtification is wholly of grace, and not of works; Not of works, leſt any man ſhould boaſt, Eph. ii. 9. NOT OF WORKS; that is, neither for works, nor in works, nor by works, nor according to your works.

1. You will ſee that your ſalvation is no for your works, and that the promiſe comes not for your ſake; Not for your ſake do I this, ſays the Lord God, be it known unto you; be aſhamed and confounded for your own way, Ezek. xxxvi. 32. Tho' the Lord ſave his people to good works, Eph. ii. 10. Creating them in Chriſt unto good works; yet all the children of promiſe know full well, that he does not ſave them for their good works; for that is juſt the old-covenant way, which now is impaſſible: By the deeds of the law ſhall no fleſh be juſtified.

2. You will ſee, that as you are not ſaved for, ſo you are not ſaved in your good works: for you was juſt in your ſins when the Lord ſaved you; in the law dungeon of helliſh enmity, unbelief, and when dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, Eph. ii. 1. Hence your ſong will be with the church, Pſal. cxxxvi. 24. He remembered us in our low eſtate; for his mercy endureth for ever. When you was in the gall of bitterneſs and bond of iniquity, in the pit wherein there is no water, he delivered by the blood of the covenant.

3. You will ſee alſo that it is not by your good works; Not by works of righteouſneſs which we have done, but of his mercy he ſaved us, by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, Tit. iii. 5. You will know that by grace you are ſaved, and not by the works of the law.

4. You will ſee that you are not ſaved according to your good works; He hath ſaved us, and called us with a holy calling; not according to our works, but according to his own purpoſe and grace, which was given us in Chriſt Jeſus before the world began, 2 Tim. i. 9. If you be a child of promiſe, then you are a ſpecial deſcendent and offſpring of the promiſe, and not a brat and offſpring of the law, the bond-woman: you will ſee and know, that your ſalvation is neither for works, as the cauſe; nor in works, as the motive and riſe; nor by works, as the mean; nor according to works, as the rule of your juſtification.

Know, Sirs, indeed, that God will judge all the world according to their works, but he will ſave none in all the world according to their works. God will judge the world to hell according to their works, Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity; and he will judge the ſaints, and adjudge them to heaven, for the perfect righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which they will be clothed with: and whatever good works the faith of that righteouſneſs influences them unto, will be made honourable mention of; and ſo far they will be judged according to their works: but as none are ſaved according to their works, but according to his purpoſe and grace; ſo, all that are the children of promiſe, will be taught this leſſon. Whereas, the children of the bond-woman, the Iſhmaelites, and legaliſts, are indocible and untractable on this head; though they may compliment grace with the name of their ſalvation, yet, in the reality of the thing, they make their works either the moving cauſe, or the meritorious cauſe, or the procuring cauſe, or the inſtrumental cauſe, of their ſalvation.—Either they make their works, I ſay, the moving cauſe of ſalvation, thinking that their good performances will move God to ſave them; and ſo they put their works in the room of free grace, the only moving cauſe.—Or they make their works the meritorious cauſe of their ſalvation, thinking their pains and endeavours will make a purchaſe of heaven for them; and ſo they put their works in the room and place of Chriſt's blood and righteouſneſs, the only meritorious cauſe.—Or they make their works the procuring cauſe of their ſalvation, ſaying, Well, though we cannot merit, it is only Chriſt's merit can ſave us, yet what was merited by his blood, muſt be procured by our prayers and good duties; if they cannot be whole, they muſt be half Saviours, by procuring to themſelves, by their works, what Chriſt hath purchaſed by his blood; and ſo they put their works in the room and place of Chriſt's interceſſion, which is the only procuring cauſe.—Or, finally, they make their works the inſtrumental cauſe of their ſalvation; why, ſay they, muſt we not do ſome good works, that we may be ſaved by them? And here they put their works in the room of faith, which is the only inſtrument for receiving Chriſt, not knowing that there can be no good works before faith; faith; and that without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; becauſe, out of Chriſt, and out of a promiſe, apprehended by faith, nothing will pleaſe him. And, therefore, try if you be thus the children of promiſe, by your being the deſcendents of the promiſe, the powerful and free offspring of the free promiſe, and free grace of God, in oppoſition to the works of the law; ſince ſalvation is not of works, but of grace: By grace ye are ſaved, through faith. Hence,

3*dly*, The third mark I give is, they that are the children of promiſe, are the ſpecial believers of the promiſe, and receivers of the promiſe by faith, Gal. iii. 14. Unbelief and infidelity is the ſin of ſins; faith, and perſuaſion of the promiſe, is the grace of graces, and the leading mark of the children of promiſe: for, as none can be ſaved, except they be the children of promiſe, as Iſaac; and as none can be the children of promiſe, as Iſaac, except they become the children of Abraham, Luke xix. 6.: ſo we cannot become the children of Abraham, but by walking in the ſteps of the faith of Abraham, Rom. iv. 11, 12. And the apoſtle plainly declares, that as many as are of the faith, the ſame are the children of Abraham, and bleſſed with faithful Abraham, Gal. iii. 7, 9. Therefore, as we would value the very life of our ſouls, as well as the glory of God, we would enquire into the deſcription of Abraham's faith, in order to try our faith by.

QUEST. How ſhall I know if my faith be right, and if I be a ſpecial believer of the promiſe?

ANSW. Try it by the deſcription of Abraham's faith, from the ground, the battle, the victory, and the triumph of it, Rom. iv.

1. Try your faith by the ground and object of it; and the ground and object of it by that of Abraham's. What was the matter whereupon Abraham's faith did reſt? It was the promiſe of God concerning ISAAC, and CHRIST in him, Rom. iv. 16, 17. God promiſed to him a numerous ſeed; and Abraham ſaw and felt both in himſelf and in his wife nothing but barrenneſs: but yet that was nothing, conſidering in whom Abraham believed, even the God who quickens the dead, and calls thoſe things that are not as though they were: even ſo, the immediate object of faith, is God's promiſe; the word of a powerful God, that can give a being to his word.

2. Try your faith by the battles of it. And what was the battle of Abraham's faith? Why, the order of nature, and ſenſe and reaſon, grounded upon natural cauſes, did ſhow a flat contrariety to, and impoſſibility of the matter promiſed: againſt which his faith oppoſed the mere word and power of God that ſpake. And this battle of faith is expreſſed, ver. 18. Againſt hope, he believed in hope;—according to that which was ſpoken. AGAINST HOPE; that is, againſt the hope which he might conceive by the conſideration of natural cauſes: he BELIEVED IN HOPE; that is, in the bope which he did conceive by the conſideration of the power and promiſe of God. So, where faith is, there will be a battle of hope againſt hope; againſt natural hope, there will be a believing in ſpiritual and ſupernatural hope, grounded on God's word.

3. Try it by the victory of faith. And what was the victory of Abraham's faith? It lay in the neglecting of the conſideration of, and overlooking the order of nature and natural cauſes, and all things that, to ſenſe and reaſon, ſight and feeling, ſhow a contrariety and impoſſibility in the matter promiſed; and a reſting wholly and only upon the word, promiſe, and power of the God that ſpeaks: whereby viſible things, that to reaſon are contrary to the promiſe, do become as things of nothing, and as it were having no being; and inviſible things, ſpoken by God, become the only things that have a being and foundation with us. This victory of faith you ſee expreſſed, ver. 19. And being not weak in faith, he conſidered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadneſs of Sarah's womb. Thus it is with true faith in the divine promiſe: whatever the man beholds in and about himſelf, that is againſt, and contrary to the accompliſhment of God's promiſe, that he does not conſider; but, giving place to the truth and power of God, the man forgets himſelf, as it were, and withdraws his mind from all things that he ſees and feels in himſelf to be contrary to the promiſe, be it felt deadneſs, barrenneſs, nothingneſs, emptineſs, ſin, and guilt, and whatever elſe, all that is buried in oblivion, and the ſoul ſwallowed up in the conſideration of nothing but God's promiſe and power. The man believes things that are impoſſible to nature, ſenſe, and reaſon; yea, and contrary thereunto; becauſe he believes the word of that God that quickens the dead: he conſiders God's word, and drops the conſideration of all things elſe.—See if ever your faith acted thus upon a promiſe.

4. Try it by the triumph of faith. And now the triumph of Abraham's faith here, is his yielding unto God the glory of his truth and power, ver. 20, 21. He ſtaggered not at the promiſe of God through unbelief; but was ſtrong in the faith, giving glory to God: And being fully perſuaded, that what he had promiſed, he was able alſo to perform. And compare this with the account of Sarah's faith, Heb. xi. 11. Through faith alſo Sarah herſelf received ſtrength to conceive ſeed, and was delivered of a child when ſhe was paſt age, becauſe ſhe judged him faithful who had promiſed. Faith triumphant over all its enemies, does, in ſpite of ſenſe and feeling, reaſon, and outward appearance, give God the glory of his truth and faithfulneſs. Hereupon faith believes things that to nature are impoſſible, and to carnal reaſon incredible: it marks what ſenſe and reaſon ſay, but ſcores it by, and believes quite contrary. How? even by removing, what they pretend, out of ſight and mind; as Abraham did the deadneſs of his body, and the deadneſs of Sarah's womb, not conſidering the ſame, but truſting in the word of God alone, even though God himſelf, in his providence, ſeem to ſpeak otherwiſe than the word, as Chriſt dealt at firſt with the woman of Canaan; and though all the creatures ſpeak otherwiſe than the word ſpeaks: which indeed may make the ſtouteſt believer ſtumble at the firſt view, till he mind what God ſays, and forget what other things ſay. Thus Sarah ſtumbled at the firſt, but at length got the victory over her doubting, by forgetting her barrenneſs and old age, that pretended impoſſibility, and by judging him faithful that had promiſed.

But, to prevent miſtakes, there is a fourfold faith that will not amount to this which the children of promiſe have, namely, 1. A natural faith. 2. An opinionative faith. 3. A rational faith. 4. A temporary faith.

(1.) Some have a natural faith, which they brought brought from the cradle with them. They have always believed, they ſay; and there is no perſuading them but they believe well enough. This faith grows upon a bad ſoil, even a corrupt unrenewed nature: it is not a faith of God's planting; it grows of its own accord: it is not a faith of God's watering, nor keeping alive by influences from heaven; it does not hold its life, nor its all of Chriſt, but carries the ſoul ſtraightway to God's mercy, without ever owning Chriſt. Yea, this faith is rooted in groſs ignorance of God: and as the tree is, ſo is the fruit; not the fruit of true holineſs, but the fruit of formality and indifferency about ſalvation, and about the glory of God; fruits that will ripen unto damnation. This natural faith is not the faith of the children of promiſe.

(2.) There is an opinionative faith; that is, a faith or credit founded upon probability and opinion. Some men have an opinion, or probable gueſs, that the goſpel is the ſound way to ſalvation; but this is no laying hold upon the goſpel as an infallible truth: yet many ſnapper into this by-road, making the goſpel a probable problem. There is an opinion that is very probable, ſay they; and there they hold, till another come and contradict it. Why, ſays the man, Indeed that is very probable too; and ſo he wavers too and fro, carried about with every wind of doctrine. He takes the one end of it this day, and the other end of it the other day; and, ſo he that offers laſt carries away the prize. The Sceptics, and probable opiniators, are not among the number of believers, nor reckoned in Chriſt's roll; for the goſpel was never fathomed by them as an infallible truth, nor rooted in their heart and mouth. The goſpel to ſuch is not Yea, as the apoſtle ſays, 2 Cor. i. 18.; but Yea and Nay: the one day Yea, and the next day Nay. Theſe are clouds without water, carried about of winds; trees whoſe fruit wither; raging waves of the ſea, foaming out their own ſhame; wandering ſtars, to whom is reſerved the blackneſs of darkneſs for ever, Jude ver. 19. if they come not to a ſolid faith.

(3.) There is a rational faith. The former two take place, eſpecially among the more ignorant ſort of people, and this takes place among the learned: they ſearch into the reaſons of things, and what they ſhould believe; which is ſo far well done: they will not receive the truth upon truſt from others, but they ſearch into it themſelves, that they may give their aſſent upon rational grounds; and this they take for ſaving faith: yet they are deſtitute of the Spirit of faith; this is not the faith of the children of promiſe, it is at beſt but a faith founded upon rational grounds, and hiſtorical evidence. They ſeem to take a better grip of the goſpel than the former, yet not firm enough: for their credit is only grounded upon ſcience, or natural reaſon; they lay down ſome ſuppoſitions by way of demonſtrations, and from thence draw concluſions, which they think cannot but hold their feet. But there is an error in the firſt building; therefore, all that they build becomes ruinous, and cannot but totter when it gets a ſhake: for, in comes a better ſpeaker, with a ſyllogiſm; and, by way of demonſtration, overturns the foundation he ſtood upon, and there lies he: ſo that he, who embraces the goſpel by way of ſcholar-craft, or philoſophy, quits it again. Natural reaſon and philoſophy brings him to it, and natural reaſon and philoſophy robs him of it again; for, whenever the merely rational foundation, on which his faith is built, comes to be ſhaken and overturned, then his faith built upon it fails: give ſuch a man an anſwerable temptation, or a plauſible argument, and he will deny even the divinity of Chriſt, as many are doing at this day, and turn where-away you will; but divine faith ſtands upon a divine teſtimony.

(4.) There is a temporary faith, that goes beyond all the former, and is effected by the common operation of the Spirit of God: nor is it merely taken up with the truth of the goſpel, but alſo hath ſome reliſh of the goodneſs and ſweetneſs of it; and hence the ſtony-ground hearers are ſaid to receive the word with joy, Mat. xiii. 20.; yet this belief hath no root, no abiding principle: it is not the faith of the promiſe that takes place in the children of promiſe. Here is the moſt ſubtile deceit in the matter of faith: ſome people may take hold of Chriſt, as it were, and really get ſome ſap and virtue from him, for their refreſhment, and yet never get in to him. They are like the ivy, that grows up by the tree, and claſps about the tree, and draws ſap from the tree, and yet grows upon its own root, and is never one and the ſame with the tree: ſo here, ſome profeſſors may receive Chriſt, in the promiſe, by a temporary faith, they claſp about him cloſely, and draw ſome ſap and virtue from him; but ſtill they are never rooted in Chriſt, but rooted in the old Adam; ſtill rooted in the old covenant, were never cut off from the old root, and ingrafted into Chriſt, but only draw virtue from Chriſt to maintain their old-covenant fruit. I imagine it will be a hard chapter for ſome here to read, How ſhall I know but I am one of theſe that have only that faith which takes hold of Chriſt, like an ivy to the tree, drawing ſap from him, without ever being rooted in him? I ſhall offer you but one key for the opening of this difficulty, and you have need to have it opened; for it is as much as your eternal ſalvation is worth, to miſtake here. If you have no other but that temporary faith, you may believe and be damned with the devil, but cannot believe unto ſalvation.

The key for opening the matter, then, is this queſtion, What know you of the difference betwixt righteouſneſs IN Chriſt, and righteouſneſs FROM him?

Temporary faith may ſay, FROM the Lord I have righteouſneſs and ſtrength; but true faith ſays, IN the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength. — Temporary faith may get many things from him, but true faith gets all things in him, and is complete in him. — Temporary faith, being without root, never rooted in him, hath nothing in him, but from him; but true faith, being rooted in Chriſt, whatever it gets from him, it reſts not there, but looks to what is in him, and glories in that; In him ſhall all the ſeed of Iſrael be juſtified, and ſhall glory. See Iſa. xlv. 24, 25. 1 Cor. i. 30, 31. What think you the Popiſh way of believing unto ſalvation is? Indeed the refined of them go as far as ſome profeſſed Proteſtants: they own there is no ſalvation but by Chriſt; and though they do not believe, with application, that they have any righteouſneſs in him, yet they build upon a righteouſneſs from Chriſt, ſaying, "It is he that gives a man "power to do, and then ſprinkles the man's "doings

" doings with his blood, upon which he merits " their life and salvation." So many such papists amongst us, they believe that Christ only can save them, and they go to him to be saved from sin, and for grace to do better; and if they find power to do better, then they hope they shall be saved; while yet they may be damned, and go to the devil, though they should escape all the pollutions of the world, and that even through the knowledge of Christ, not from their own strength, but from the strength and virtue of the knowledge of Christ, 2 Pet. ii. 20. But true faith comes first to Christ for righteousness, and gets a righteousness in him for justification and eternal salvation: and, being rooted in Christ, grows up in him, and hath all in him; and hence can rejoice in him, even when it finds nothing but emptiness in itself: for, it is the nature of it, to go out of itself to Christ in the free promise.—Hence also temporary faith receives Christ conditionally, but true faith receives him freely as he is offered. Temporary believers take him for a Saviour; but, how? even in this conditional way, if I be a servant to him, he will be a Saviour to me; and so he serves him, and thereupon expects salvation from him: thus he bears the root, and the root bears not him. But true faith receives Christ freely for righteousness and strength both, saying, Even so I take him, both for righteousness, that he may be a Saviour to me; and for strength, that he may make me a servant to him, to serve as a son, not as a hireling. —Temporary faith and legal faith believes Christ will save me upon condition of my good behaviour for the time to come; in case I serve him, then he will save me: but gospel-faith takes Christ upon gospel-terms, as he is exhibite in the gospel-promise, saying, O I dare not promise any thing to him, but I take him as promising all things to me: and, blessed be sovereign grace, that all is in the promise; for, if any thing depended upon my good behaviour and future service, I fear all would be cast loose; therefore I take a Christ for all, and a promise for all: and, O well is me, that he hath promised all, for I can promise nothing; therefore, I will rely upon the promise of salvation, I will rely upon the promise of sanctification. And, in this way of taking the promise freely, he comes to be furnished for a better behaviour than all the legal and conditional believers in the world; for, as he believes the promise, so he lives upon it.——And this leads me to another mark of these that are the children of promise: not only are they believers of the promise, but,

4*thly*, They are livers upon the promise, they are dependents upon the promise; this is called a living by faith on the Son of God, Gal. ii. 20.; that is, a living upon the Son of God as held forth in a promise. As children live upon their mother, and babes upon the breast; so the children of the promise live upon the promise, and suck the milk that is in the breast thereof. They trust to his word; and, being persuaded, will embrace the promise, and hing upon the breast all their days. Some will say, perhaps, they believe the promise: well, but do they live upon it? Nay, but if they live not here, it shews they never truly believed. They are good believers; but are they good livers too? No indeed. It is a common word among you, Sirs, such a man is a good liver, such a woman is a good liver, if they be sober, and civil, and morally honest. Well, indeed these people are good to live with, and it is sad when there is so little morality among Christians, and that there is more of it among some Pagans: but withal, Sirs, consider who are good livers in God's account and reckoning; it is these that live upon the promise, and live by faith.

QUEST. How shall I know if I be one of these that live by faith upon the promise?

ANSW. 1. If you be living by faith on the promise, then you will find the promise to be the mean of exciting faith, as well as it was the mean of creating faith at first, or begetting it. The believer is in every respect a child of promise; his grace of faith is a child of promise, and his life of faith is a child of promise. The faith that believes the promise, is begotten by the power of the promise; and the faith that lives upon the promise, is also begotten by the power and virtue of the promise, and is cast forth out of the womb thereof. The promise that is the food of faith, on which faith lives, is always the seed of faith from which faith springs; therefore, the gospel is called the word of faith, in which believers are nourished up, 1 Tim. iv. 6. Thy word hath quickened me, saith the psalmist: and the gospel is said to be the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes. The same power that begets faith, is necessary for the increase thereof, and for drawing forth every act thereof: it is always, like Isaac, a child of promise; for it is a faith of God's operation. Grace, and virtue, and fire come out of the promise, and kindle it. I do not assert, that there is constantly a felt virtue coming from the promise, or a sensible power felt at first; for sensible feeling follows believing: but there is a secret, ineffable, insensible power, while the man is, perhaps, but musing and meditating upon the promise; and thereupon the sensible power and fire follows: While I was musing the fire burned. Hence the believer finds faith, both in the beginning, and all the actings thereof, to be both the most difficult and the most easy thing: so difficult, that it is just impossible for him to believe, till power and virtue come out of the promise in some secret and insensible manner, while he is stretching forth the withered hand; and yet so easy a thing, that when he is under the powerful influence of the grace of the promise, making him to roll himself upon Christ, as if he were carried on a wave of the sea, or hurled towards him in a chariot paved with love.

2. If you be living by faith on the promise, then you will find your faith maintained by prayer, or in a way of praying, saying, Lord, I believe, help my unbelief; Lord, increase my faith. This follows upon the former; for these prayers for faith in the increase thereof, say plainly, that no man can believe when he will, and as much as he will: for, if a man may believe when he will, and as much as he will, what needs him go to God, in Christ, by prayer for the increase of faith? Nay, It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy. Faith is the gift of God, and Christ is the author and finisher of faith; therefore prayer must be made to him for it, and for the increase of it. Yea, this prayer, Lord, increase our faith, plainly says, that they who pray so, must have faith; otherwise they but mock God, to seek more of that which they never had. Yet many will say, say, O my faith is weak, Lord, increase it; while yet they never had knowledge or faith either. Faith is a fire, and prayer is like a pair of bellows to increase and blow up the fire: but where there is no fire, the bellows will never blow it up; but where the grace of faith is, it is usually blown by the prayer of faith. Many believe when they will, even as they can eat, and drink, and sleep, though they pray not for strength to do these things; but true faith waxes and wanes, according as the Spirit of prayer is up or down: and they that think they live by faith, and yet their faith not maintained by the means of importunate prayer, it is to be feared they will be ashamed of their faith, ere all be done.

3. If you be living by faith on the promise, then you will find satisfaction to your soul in the milk of the promise, and nowhere else: even as the child that lives upon the milk of the breast, finds satisfaction therein, and cannot be at rest without it; yea, the child is not content merely with the breast, unless it can find milk in the breast: even so the child of promise cannot find soul-satisfaction but in the promise; nor in the bare promise, unless he find the milk in that breast. What is the milk of the promise? Indeed it is Christ, and the child of promise lives upon Christ in the promise. It is not the word alone that satisfies him, but Christ in the word; it is not the ordinance alone, but Christ in the ordinance. The promise is the vessel or cup, Christ is the liquor that is in the cup, the living water that is in the vessel: and when one believes, and lives by faith, he does not take the vessel or cup only in his hand; nay, that would not satisfy his thirst, nor feed him; but drinks Christ out of that cup; he takes the living water out of it: and thus he is nourished, and refreshed, and satisfied. They that find soul-satisfaction elsewhere, are not living on the promise by faith. Some find satisfaction to their hearts in the world, and satisfaction to their conscience in their duties; but they are strangers to true satisfaction in Christ to heart and conscience both: but here it is that the child of promise rests satisfied, when out of the gospel-breast he gets the milk of consolation; Christ, the consolation of Israel, for wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption.

4. They that are living by faith on the promise, are always poor and needy, kept from hand to mouth while here, that they may never cease living on the promise, and Christ in it. Though they get satisfaction here, and nowhere else: yet as the stomachs which we seem to satisfy just now, as I noticed on another occasion, yet within a few hours they are empty and craving; so it is with respect to the believer. And as the vessels which we fill to-day, require a new filling to-morrow; so the believer's spiritual wants still increase, and renew themselves: but though the vessel may be dry, yet the fountain is not; though the vessel may be empty, yet the fountain is full, and still streaming. The goodness of God in Christ is a living fountain, and his promises are a perpetual bond, a perpetual fund for the maintenance of the believer all his life-time, from the first moment that he is born and brought forth out of the womb of the promise, to the last moment of his age; Hearken unto me, O house of Jacob, all the remnant of the house of Israel, which are born by me, from the belly, which are carried from the womb. And even to your old age I am he, and even to hoar-hairs will I carry you: I have made, I will bear, even I will carry and will deliver you, Isa. xlvi. 3, 4. They that are full, and rich, and increased with goods, full of self-wisdom, self-righteousness, they live upon themselves, but not upon the promise: but the child of promise is a poor and needy, empty, hunger-beaten, starving creature, that sees need of depending constantly on a promise, and so receives out of Christ's fulness daily grace for grace. Try then if you be living on the promise, and laying God's promise and your condition together, studying his promise and your case together: for they that study their case, without studying the promise, are ready to despair; but they that study the promise, without studying their case, are ready to presume.

5. They that are the children of promise, are lovers of the promise, lovers of the gospel, and of the word of grace, saying, How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, that bring glad tidings of good things! Rom. x. 15. And again, How sweet are thy words to my taste, sweeter than honey to my mouth! They are the posterity of Ishmael that do not love the promise; all that are, as Isaac, the children of promise, are lovers of the promise. But some may deceive themselves, and think they are lovers, that are yet haters in reality. Therefore,

QUEST. How shall I know if I be a true lover of the promise?

ANSW. (1.) True lovers of the promise of the gospel, are persons that understand the command and threatening of the law, so as to know there is no dealing with God therein, the law being weak through the flesh, unable to save them, and only able to destroy them.

(2.) The true lovers of the promise, are persons that have seen God in the promise, by seeing his mercy, grace, and good-will through Christ held forth in the promise, for their ground of hope; and thereupon have been begotten to a lively hope by the means thereof.

(3.) The true lovers of the promise, are true lovers of all the commands of God, as they are a rule of holiness, wrapt up within the bosom of the promise. The command without a promise is terrible to them, it is a covenant of works; but the command within the promise, or the command in Christ as the Lord our righteousness and strength, this is lovely to them: and thus they regard all his commands. Hence,

(4.) The true lovers of the promise are true lovers of Christ: they that love not our Lord Jesus Christ, are cursed; they that love Christ are blessed.

QUEST. How shall I know if I be a true lover of Christ?

ANSW. [1.] The true lovers of Christ are pleased with a whole Choist; Christ is in every respect precious to them: not this part of Christ, and that part, but a whole Christ; as a King, as well as a Priest; in his lowest circumstances, as well as the highest; the very cross of Christ; yea, an absent Christ, as well as a present. It is the property of a believer, to be either rejoicing in Christ's presence, or lamenting his absence. Christ's absence is not uneasy to them that love him not, but lovers think the time very long when he absents. Psal. xiii. 1, 2. Four times he cries, How long? They cannot rest while he is absent. Indeed, there may be a spiritual lethargy that may seize the lovers of Christ;

Christ; but whenever they are awakened, Oh! they think every minute long till he appear. They love his word and ordinances, and esteem them sometimes more than their ordinary food. Can they that undervalue ordinances, and make little use of the Bible, be lovers of Christ? No, by no means. Enquire what esteem you have of a whole Christ, in all his offices, in all circumstances, in all things that appertain to him.

[2.] The true lovers of Christ will prize his image, where-ever they see it, were it in a beggar, as well as a prince; yea, a beggar on the dunghill, that hath Christ's image, will be more prized by such, than a king upon a throne that wants it. Indeed, if you do not love his image, you do not love himself; for, He that loves not him that begat, how shall he love him that is begotten of him? Do you reckon the saints the excellent ones of the earth, in whom is all your delight in this world, even when they are stript of all earthly things, riches, honours, and even other accomplishments of mind, and considered simply as having the image of God? Why then, by this you may know you are past from death to life, because you love the brethren.

[3.] True lovers of Christ are haters of his enemies within and without, Psal. cxxxix. 21, 22. especially his enemies within doors, I mean sin; they cannot allow of a competitor with Christ.

[4.] True lovers of Christ will desire and endeavour to recommend Christ to others, that others may love him also: it will be the desire of their heart, that others may behold his glory, and that he may be glorified and magnified in the salvation of others. Christ will be, therefore, much in their mouth, as well as in their heart; for, Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. You will desire to transmit the knowledge of Christ to your posterity after you, and that Christ may be your children's portion, though they should beg their bread. Though you had thousands a year, yet if you have a due esteem of Christ, you would wish your children to be beggars all their lifetime, rather than strangers to Christ; and you will endeavour to bequeath grace to them, rather than the richest earthly inheritance.

[5.] In a word, they that are true lovers of Christ, they are lovers of the place where his honour dwells. Where-ever he dwells in earth, they love that place, that person, that society; and where he dwells in heaven, they love heaven, and long to be there. Indeed, they that are not lovers of Christ, they cannot love heaven; they love this earth a thousand times better. It is true, heaven may be considered either privatively, as a place of freedom from wrath; or positively, as it is a place of perfect conformity to God: In the former sense, an unregenerate man may love heaven, because he hates to be damned, though he loves the way that leads to damnation; but, in the latter sense, none but saints can love and desire it: no unregenerate man can truly desire heaven as it is a place of perfect holiness. Oh! Christless sinner! you cannot so much as desire to be in heaven, you could not delight in heaven, no more than a swine in a palace, nor a debauchee ranting among his gossips, could delight in a company that are praying, and praising God in the most spiritual manner. What! you may as well kill a carnal man, as confine him to prayer and preaching; he knows not what it is to take real pleasure in spiritually heavenly work; and how can he love heaven itself? They that are lovers of the promise, cannot but be lovers of Christ, in whom all the promises are Yea and Amen.

6thly, They that are children of promise, are partakers of the promise, and of the virtue thereof, in its powerful effects. Not only are they begotten to a new and lively hope, and brought to live thereby; but their life is maintained by the power and virtue of the promise: not only have they all the promises made over to them in Christ, but they have some of the promises made out to them in the accomplishment thereof. Try then if you are such a partaker of the promise, as hath had the experience of the accomplishment of some substantial promise of the covenant to you, insomuch that you are in case to say, with the psalmist, Psal. xlii. 5, 6. Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance. O my God, my soul is cast down within me: therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites, from the hill Mizar. How dead, and dark, and dull, and discouraged I be at present; yet I remember certain times and places, wherein some promises were so accomplished to me, that I met with God, and he met with me; and my mind was enlightened, my heart was enlarged, my soul was comforted, my diseases were healed, my lusts were knocked in the head, my foes were conquered, my fears and doubts were dispelled, and all my bonds were loosed: I was made to run in the way of God's commandments with delight; the love of God was shed abroad upon my heart; a glance of glory was let in upon my soul, that made me merrier than if I had been a monarch on a throne, and more glad than ever the bird that sang upon the bush; for I got the lively faith of the favour of God in Christ; the joy of the Lord was my strength, and the strength of the Lord was my joy; and this drove the bottom out of all my discouragements. They are partakers of the promise, and have had the accomplishment of some special promise of the covenant.

But more particularly, for trying if you be the children of the promise, by the participation of the promise, that I may not miss some of the most substantial promises of the covenant in making this enquiry; examine if you be a partaker of the promise relating to God, the promise relating to Christ, and the promise relating to the Spirit. And,

1. Try if you be a partaker of the promise relating to GOD; for they that are the children of promise, they are partakers of the promise so far as that they are partakers of God by the promise; Whereby are given to us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these you might be partakers of the divine nature, 2 Pet. i. 4. The children of promise then have the image of the promising God stampt upon them, having a new divine nature: whereas by virtue of their union with the first Adam, according to the old covenant of works, they did partake of the very nature of the devil, and had the picture of hell upon them; now, by virtue of their union with Christ, the second Adam, who became a partaker of our nature, they are, in some sort, partakers of the divine nature. Now, what know you of this participation of the divine nature by the promise? This is indeed a great matter.

matter. I shall explain it to you in a few particulars.

(1.) To partake of the divine nature, is to partake of the divine light; for, God is light, 1 John i. 5. And if you partake hereof, you are brought from darkness to light; and are children of light; light in the Lord, so as in his light you will see light. It is not the light that beasts have, as well as men; they have the light of the sun: nor such light as men have, who have the light of reason and natural understanding: nay, it is a light wherein God makes a man partaker with himself, so as to see things in God's light; in the light wherein God sees them. Do you thus see the evil of sin, the glory of God, the excellency of the saints, the beauty of holiness, the beauty of God's way and of his work, his word, his ordinances? etc.

(2.) To partake of the divine nature, is to partake of the divine life. It is said of natural persons, that they are alienate from the life of God: what is that, the life of God? who can define that? None but God himself. I shall only say, As God lives in himself, so the believer, as far as he partakes of the divine nature, lives in God; Your life is hid with Christ in God, Col. iii. 3. And as God lives of himself, and to himself; so they hold their spiritual life of him, as the efficient cause; and it is to him, as the final cause: of him, as the author; and to him as the end: and they find it wholly of him; and that they are not sufficient of themselves to produce a good thought, a good desire, a good affection or action, a good word or work. This sufficiency is of God.

(3.) To partake of the divine nature, is to partake of divine love; for, God is love; and he that dwells in love, dwells in God, 1 John iv. 16. God in Christ is all love; and how he manifests his love, you see, ver. 10. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins; and to be a sacrifice to incensed justice for our sins. Now, as God in Christ is all love to his children, so the believer in Christ is all love to God, and to the children of God, as far as he is a believer, and hath the image of God's love on him. Believers are kindly affectioned one to another; the word imports such a love as the dame hath to her young, and it is a fruit of that love that Christ hath to his children. There are some birds, when there is a moorburn, they will flutter over their young, when they are in hazard of being burnt, even till they burn themselves. O Sirs, sin raised a great moorburn, a great fire, the fire of hell, the fire of God's wrath; all the children of promise, as well as the rest of the world, were like to be burnt in that moorburn: Christ came down flying on the wings of love in our flesh, and fluttered over his young, till he was burnt to death in the fire; but, being God as well as man, he rose again, and brought all his children out of the fire with him: and now, all that are actually children of promise, have such an impress of this love stampt on them, that they have some conformity to him in his love. Whatever is the object of God's love, is the object of their love; and the special objects of God's love, are the special objects of their love; particularly the children of God: they are willing to spend, and be spent, to do them service.

(4.) To partake of the divine nature, again, is to partake of the divine holiness and righteousness, and to be holy as God is holy: not that the saints on earth are either freed wholly from sin on earth, or from a sense thereof; but they that partake of the divine holiness, are sensible of their own unholiness, and that they have no holiness of their own, but what he imparts to them: they are habitually inclined, and sometimes actually, to every duty of holiness and righteousness, conform to the first and second table of the law; insomuch that it is impossible for a true believer to be an Antinomian; that is, an enemy to the law, as it is a rule of holiness: for the law is written upon his heart, in such a manner, that what the law says, his heart says; what the law commands, his heart commands; what the law forbids, his heart forbids: not in a natural way, as every one hath a natural conscience, accusing and excusing, upon doing good or evil; but in a spiritual evangelical way, and by virtue of a new nature given him of God; for, he is created in Christ Jesus unto good works; not to be saved and justified thereby, but only to witness, by the effects of thankfulness, that he is saved and justified. In a word,

(5.) To partake of the divine nature, is to partake of divine happiness and rest, as well as of the divine holiness and righteousness. We have a word, Heb. iv. 1. Let us fear, lest a promise being left of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short. Believers enter into his rest by faith: and, as perfect holiness hath perfect happiness; and God, being perfectly holy, is perfectly happy; so, according to the measure of holiness in the saints, such will be the measure of happiness: therefore their happiness and rest here is imperfect. But as God is happy in himself, and rests in himself; so they, according to the measure of faith, are happy in him, and rest in him as a holy God. It is true, there is a rest of justification in Christ, as their righteousness; and a rest of sanctification in Christ, as their strength: but both these tend to advance this rest in God as a holy God. Rest to the conscience in Christ, as our righteousness, is the way to bring in rest to the heart in him as our strength; and the right improvement of Christ, for righteousness, is in order to improve him for sanctification; and so in order to win to the enjoyment of God as a holy God, and to rest in him, and thus partake of his happiness.

2. Try if you be a partaker of the promise relating to CHRIST, for the children of promise are also partakers of Christ by the promise; Heb. iii. 14. For we are partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence stedfast unto the end; that is, if we be true believers, and live by faith on the promise, we are made partakers of Christ thereby. Try then if you be a partaker of Christ.

(1.) In his death, or in the fellowship of his suffering, Phil. iii. 10. Do you look upon yourself as crucified with Christ; as having satisfied the law and justice in him; and as having nothing to do either with the law, as a covenant, or justice, as an enemy? I speak of what the believer does as a believer, and when he speaks the language of faith, and not of unbelief; for, when unbelief and the legal heart speak, it is just the reverse of what I am saying. The language of faith is, I am crucified with Christ, who loved me, and gave himself for me; and, God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Christ. And what a glory is it to be conformable to his death, who is the Lord of life? Do you suffer with Christ, and share of the virtue of his death and suffering, by getting sin slain, not only in its condemning power, but also in its commanding power, by the faith of his death and suffering? Do you find the enmity slain, and the flesh crucified, with the lusts and affections? And does the sense of pollution lead you to his blood as your daily laver for cleansing? Again,

(2.) Try if you be a partaker of Christ in his life; I mean, his resurrection, ascension, and sitting at the right-hand of God, executing his mediatory office, and communicating of his fulness. Know you what it is to be begotten again to a lively hope by the resurrection of Christ from the dead, who, as he was delivered for our offences, so he was raised again for our justification? Know you what it is to be convinced of righteousness, because he hath ascended to the Father, thereby declaring that everlasting righteousness, for our justification, is wrought out by him to his Father's satisfaction? Know you what it is to be risen with Christ, and to have your affections set on things above, where Christ sits at the right-hand of God, and so to share of the drawing virtue of his resurrection, ascension, and intercession? Again,

(3.) Try if you be a partaker of Christ in his righteousness, saying, Surely in the Lord have I righteousness. It is not in myself, in my duties, nor in my graces, nor in my prayers, nor in my good meanings and intentions; but in the LORD have I righteousness. This is what the apostle desires to be more and more found in, not having his own righteousness, which is of the law, but the righteousness which is of God by faith. Can you look upon yourself, however vile and polluted in yourself, yet as beautiful and perfectly righteous in Christ; righteous, I say, even in the sight of God, only for the righteousness of Christ imputed to you? This is a mystery that none is acquainted with but a believer: none have such an inward sense of corruption as they have; and yet none have such an inward faith, to see that God takes no advantage against them because of it, as they do. Can you put honour upon Christ, so as, even under a sense of sin, wants, weakness, wickedness, and vileness, to wrap yourself in the righteousness of a God-man; and thus covered, to go boldly to the throne of grace? This is a very great honour done to Christ, to attribute so much to his righteousness, that being clothed therewith, you can boldly break through the fire of God's justice, and all these attributes, when you see them all fully satisfied in Christ: for Christ, with his righteousness, could go through the justice of God, having satisfied it to the full for us; and we, being cloathed with this his righteousness and satisfaction, may go through too. What know you of this mystery to your experience? Again,

(4.) Try if you be a partaker of Christ in his strength. Can you say, In the Lord have I righteousness, and strength also? Christ's strength, as Mediator, is not only for himself, no more than his righteousness; but all that have union with him by faith, do participate with him of his strength, in so much that they can say, I can do all things through Christ strengthening me. Indeed, I can perform no duty, I can bear up under no difficulty, no not the least, any more than the greatest, in my own strength; but seeing his strength is made perfect in my weakness, most gladly, therefore, will I glory in mine infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Again, (5.) Try if you be a partaker of Christ in his boldness. Christ, as our intercessor in heaven, hath access to his Father with boldness; to his FATHER, I say, who hears him always: And believers, in him, have boldness, and access with confidence, through the faith of him, Eph. iii. 12. They come boldly to the throne of grace to plead, and they have the same foundation to plead upon: he pleads upon the sacrifice he hath offered, and the blood he hath shed; and so believers have boldness to enter into the holiest of all by the blood of Jesus. What know you of this bold approach to God, upon the ground of the Mediator's blood and righteousness, and all-powerful, ever-prevalent intercession?

3. Try if you be a partaker of the promise relating to the SPIRIT, for the children of promise are partakers of the Spirit of promise, Eph. i. 13.; and they receive the promise of the Spirit through faith, Gal. iii. 14. Here then is one of the most notable ways for knowing if we be the children of promise, viz. by our partaking of the promise of the Spirit; for, all the actual children of promise, they have the Spirit of promise: and, If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

QUEST. How shall I know if I have the Spirit of promise?

ANSW. The Spirit is compared to a well of water; and how shall you know a spring-well, but by the bubbling up of the water? The water that I shall give him, shall be in him a well of water springing up to eternal life. Here I might speak of the various operations of the Spirit. I need not here speak of that dispensation of the Spirit, as a Spirit of bondage; this is supposed in what I touched at the beginning of this use. I will offer a few properties of the Spirit of promise, where he is.

(1.) Where the Spirit of promise is, he will be a Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Christ, Eph. i. 17. Ask your own soul then, Hath he come and glorified Christ, by receiving the things of Christ, and shewing them unto you? Hath he come, now or formerly, and made Christ more glorious to you than all the mountains of prey, more precious than thousands of worlds, more to be esteemd than all things, being the Prince of the kings of the earth, altogether lovely?

(2.) Where the Spirit of promise is, he will be a Spirit of grace, Zech. xii. 10. You read of the graces and fruits of the Spirit, Gal. v. 22, 23. If you be utterly destitute of these, and have nothing of the Spirit of faith, the Spirit of love, the Spirit of repentance, the Spirit of humility, how can you have the Spirit of promise? But, that you may not mistake, I must tell you, that the Spirit of faith makes a man see his unbelief; the Spirit of love discoves enmity; the Spirit of repentance discovers hardness and impenitency; the Spirit of humility discovers pride, and humbles the man for the pride of his heart.

(3.) Where the Spirit of promise is, he will be the Spirit of glory, 1 Pet. iv. 14. If you be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth on you. And where the Spirit of glory is, he will fill with the thoughts of glory, with the hope of glory, with with the faith of glory, with the desire of glory, with a longing after glory and perfection, expecting the coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, to destroy this world, and bring his people to glory; yea, the Spirit of glory fills a man with glory, makes him all glorious within.

(4.) Where the Spirit of promise is, he will be the Spirit of prayer and supplication, Rom. viii. 26. The Spirit helpeth our infirmities with groanings which cannot be uttered. Know you what it is to go beyond words and expressions in your confessions, in your petitions, in your prayers? Know you what it is to have the Spirit as a Spirit of adoption, crying, ABBA, Father, Rom. viii. 15. Gal. iv. 6.? and, with tears of joy, to cry out, Father, Father?

(5.) Where the Spirit of promise is, he will be a Spirit of consolation; hence so frequently he is called the Comforter, John xiv. and xvi. chap. What know you of the joy of the Holy Ghost? At certain times, it is true, the stony-ground hearers may receive the word with joy, yet they have no root; but the joy of true faith is, joy unspeakable and full of glory, 1 Pet. i. 8. As the groanings of the Spirit are unutterable, so the joys of the Holy Ghost are unutterable; and there is a glory in them, surpassing the glory of the sun, moon, and stars; yea, beyond all created glory; for, the view of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, is the root of it. It is a humbling and strengthening joy; The joy of the Lord is their strength.

(6.) Where the Spirit of promise is, he will be a Spirit of warfare and mortification; Gal. v. 16. The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh, and these two are contrary the one to the other. You will now proclaim war against all Christ's enemies; his friends are your friends, and his enemies your enemies. If the Spirit of Christ be in you, you will, through the Spirit, mortify the deeds of the body. Let not the man think he hath the Spirit of Christ in him, that is not walking in the Spirit; and let none think they are walking in the Spirit, who are not walking over the belly of their own lusts, and killing sin by the way. Indeed, we need not desire you who are without Christ, and in a state of nature, to war against your lusts, and mortify them; for, though it be your duty, yet you may easier see without eyes, speak without a tongue, work without hands, and walk without feet, than you can mortify one sin without the Spirit: therefore, though it be your duty, yet it is not your immediate duty; your duty, in the first place, is to come to Christ for the Spirit of promise. If you desire your servant go pay such a sum to your creditor, but by the way to go to such a friend to get the money; it is his duty to pay that sum of money to the creditor, and you may blame him if he do it not; yet it is not his immediate duty, he should first go to that friend by the way, that he may lift the money wherewith he may pay your debt: even so here, sin is to be mortified, but some thing is to be done in the first place to enable you thereto. Some are taken up in warring against this or that lust, but in vain, while they never strike at the sinful nature that is in them: but you may beat down the bitter fruit of an ill tree till you be weary; but while the root is never touched, it will bring forth more; if the tree be not made good, the fruit will never be good: it is the good Spirit of God that makes a good tree. Do not think, that when you bear down a particular lust for a while about a sacrament, that you are a mortified man: nay, it is but like the making a dam against the water; it may silence the noise of the stream for the small space of time that the dam is a gathering, but it increases upon your hand, and will come down afterwards with the more violence: so here, there will be but little success in subduing particular sins, and mortifying certain individual lusts, while the fountain of all corruption remains unstruck at, and unmortified; for, though particular sins may be silenced for a time, yet, while the seed of all corruption lies in the heart, it will afterwards flow out with a more forcible eruption. True mortification and warring against sin differ as much from that, as the sun painted on a wall differs from the sun in the firmament. The spirit of warfare is so contrary to the flesh, that he is destructive to the quiet and thriving of indwelling sin itself; and he is that fire that burns up the very root of lust. Even though sin prevail sometimes in a child of God, yet the very prevalence of sin, through the Spirit of warfare, is the mean of the destruction of sin; even as the snapper of a horse makes him run the faster, so the very fall of the godly makes him run the faster afterward; and every defeat that he gets makes him fight the better afterward.

(7.) Where the Spirit of promise is, he will be the Spirit of holiness and sanctification; not only of privative holiness, in the mortifying of sin, 2 Cor. vii. 1.; but positive holiness, in the quickening of grace, and giving the man new life, new power; I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, Ezek. xxxvi. 27. Here is not only positive holiness, in the principle of it; but active holiness: both internal, in the exercise of grace; and external, in the performance of duty.

(8.) Where the Spirit of promise is, he will be a Spirit of power; 2 Tim. i. 7. For God hath not given you the Spirit of fear, but of power, love, and of a sound mind. And, indeed, these effects that I have already mentioned, require no less than the power, the almighty power of the eternal Spirit: all attempts to mortify sin, to war and struggle with it, without this power of the Spirit, is like a flie struggling beneath a mountain; but upon the Spirit's coming, the mountains flow down at his presence, and melt under his warm influences. Indeed, if you know any thing at all of religion, you know this, that almighty power must be exerted and let forth for every part of the spiritual exercise. There is no believing without power, no repenting without power, no praying without power, no right hearing without power, no right reading without power, no right communicating without power. If you think it an easy thing for you to read, and pray, and communicate; believe it, man; in God's name, I tell you, you have not learned the art of doing any of these to this day: you have not yet got your finger in the loop of religion; you have not fallen upon the lith to this good hour. As the whole purchase of salvation is by the price of the Mediator's blood, so the whole application of every part of it is by the power of his Spirit. Let Arminians boast of the free-will of man, we will boast of the free-free-grace of God, and of the powerful arm of JEHOVAH, without which no ſoul can have ſo much as a will to come to Chriſt; Thy people ſhall be willing in a day of thy power. All mens religion is but a kind of forced work, either from ſome outward excitement, or from a ſpirit of fear, till the Spirit of power come to make him willing: it is power that begets, and power that carries on, and power that completes ſalvation-work; even God's working in us both to will and to do of his good pleaſure. What know you, man, of this Spirit of power, and of the promiſe applied with power, and of the goſpel coming not in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance; and of the need of the conſtant egreſs of divine power, and of the finger of God to caſt out the devils that are in you; and that the hand of Zerubbabel, that laid the foundation of the ſpiritual temple, finiſh it, and put the cop-ſtone thereupon, with ſhoutings of Grace, grace unto it?

(9.) Where the Spirit of promiſe is, he will be a Spirit of praiſe and gratitude: PRAISE YE THE LORD, is the motto of the goſpel-ſpirit. Gratitude and thankfulneſs is the diſpoſition of theſe who are under the influence thereof; This people have I formed for myſelf, they ſhall ſhew forth my praiſe, Iſa. xliii. 21. Goſpel-ſervice is grateful ſervice; Offer to the Lord thankſgiving; pay thy vows unto the Moſt High, Pſal. l. 14. Herein lies the myſtery of right vowing and true perſonal covenanting: it is not the act of graceleſs unregenerate men, vowing againſt this or that ſin; for, that is like lopping off the branches, while yet the ax is never laid to the root of the tree. To vow and reſolve againſt ſin, without getting firſt an intereſt in Chriſt, and without having his Spirit; it is like a man building a great fabric, without taking any care of the foundation; no wonder then, what he build to-day, fall down to-morrow. Some convinced perſons go on ſtill in this method: even though they plainly ſee that what ground they get againſt ſin one day, they loſe another; yet ſtill, upon a new conviction, they take the ſame road again, and ſo fall into the ſame pit and ſnare a-new. Yea, to put a man upon this exerciſe, is like the driving of an enemy out of the open fields into an impregnable caſtle, where there is no prevailing againſt him, no dealing with him for his conviction or converſion. Why, ſays the man, I hope I am a Chriſtian good enough, for I vow againſt my ſins; and though I break them many times, yet the beſt of ſaints have their daily failings, as well as I: and thus he is impregnable and hardened againſt all the calls to come to Chriſt; for he is, in his own opinion, a Chriſtian already.—Thus his vowing againſt his particular ſins is his ruin, while the foundation was never laid.

Well, ſay you, what would you have unregenerate men to do? Shall they give themſelves looſe reins, and give their luſts their ſwing, and not vow againſt them? Surely, if you call us off from that duty, you are an enemy to holineſs. What, man! would you think him an enemy that would call you off from mending a hole in the roof of your houſe, in order to come down and quench a fire that is conſuming the whole building? Your vowing againſt your particular ſins, man, and promiſing amendment, is but the mending of a hole in the roof of the houſe, and laying a fagot on it; but there is a fire at the foundation, man, that muſt be quenched with the blood of Chriſt; there is a burning furnace of corruption in your nature, that muſt be extinguiſhed with the flood of the Spirit's influences and operations, otherwiſe you are undone for ever. Your vowing againſt this or that particular ſin, without conſidering that you are nothing but ſin, is like a being careful about a ſore finger that is paining you, without being careful about a hectic-fever that is killing you. Your vows and reſolutions may give your natural conſcience a little eaſe, but it will not cure your diſeaſe, but rather make you ſlight and neglect the right cure: like a man in a great fever, complaining of a heat in his ſkin, particularly a heat in his face; he may get a little eaſe by caſting a little cold water on his face, but will that cure the heat of the liver, which is the cauſe and ſpring of the outward heat? No, no: the blood muſt be rectified, and the ill blood let out, either by a natural courſe, or artificial lance, or ſome purgative means: even ſo here, your vows and reſolutions, againſt particular ſins, it is but a throwing of ſome cold water upon the face of a burning luſt; it may give natural conſcience ſome eaſe for a little, but, alas! there is a heat in the liver that muſt be abated: your blood muſt be rectified, by the application of the blood of Chriſt, and the operation of the Spirit of Chriſt, otherwiſe all is vain work.

But the myſtery of right vowing and covenanting is here; it is the buſineſs of one that hath an intereſt in Chriſt, and that, under the conduct of the Spirit of promiſe, as a Spirit of praiſe and gratitude, offering to the Lord thankſgiving, and paying his vow to the Lord; through grace vowing a grateful ſervice, in heart, lip, and life, to the Lord, that hath ſaved him from the guilt of ſin, the wrath of God, and the power of corruption: the man's reſolving hereupon thankfully to give to the Lord the love of his heart, the calves of his lips, and the obedience of his life. There is here,

[1.] Heart-gratitude: the man exalts and extols Chriſt in his heart, and eſteems him to be every way precious, and altogether lovely: he exalts and extols the grace of God in his heart; and hath a high thought of the whole contrivment of ſalvation. Here is the work of the Spirit of praiſe and gratitude.

[2.] Lip-gratitude: the thankfulneſs and gratitude of the heart vents itſelf in words; For, out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh. The man hereupon ſpeaks to his glory, and ſpeaks of his glory: In his temple ſhall every one ſpeak of his glory.

[3.] Life-gratitude: and here comes in the ſhining converſation, according to that rule, Let your light ſo ſhine before men, that others ſeeing your good works, may glorify your Father that is in heaven.—Indeed none but theſe that have God for their Father in Chriſt, and have ſome meaſure of the faith thereof, can engage rightly unto this grateful ſervice.

O Sirs, pray that God may graciouſly covenant with you, otherwiſe you will never gratefully covenant with him: your covenanting will be vain, till he come and diſcover to you the nature, freedom, and fulneſs of the covenant of grace, that ſtands faſt with Chriſt. And let believers themſelves remember always that they never go to confound God's covenant of grace with their covenant of gratitude: for your covenant of gratitude, even when entered into rightly upon the main, yet may be a thousand times broken; but, wo would be to you for ever, if the covenant of grace could be once broken: nay, but that is impoſſible; for it ſtands betwixt two unchangeable parties, God and Chriſt. However, as the Spirit of gratitude is neceſſary before there can be any perſonal covenant of gratitude; ſo I deſpair of ever ſeeing the National Covenant rightly renewed, till the Spirit of praiſe and gratitude be poured out: therefore, if you would wiſh for a great reformation-day, a covenanting day, O cry for the return of the Spirit of promiſe, as a Spirit of praiſe and gratitude! Though the Lord owned our ſolemn covenanting days, however many make a jeſt of them now-a-days, and though ſome did enter into theſe Covenants under the influence of the Spirit of gratitude; yet the general want of this Spirit, even in theſe that thus covenanted with the Lord, may be one of the cauſes why our Covenants were afterwards ſo fearfully broken and burnt.

I knew once a gentleman, who, after his firſt conviction, made a covenant, and wrote it, ſigned it, and laid it up in his cheſt; but afterwards turned more looſe than ever, till, caſting off all bonds, he went home one day, and burnt his covenant with God: whereupon he took looſe reins to his luſts for a time, till the Lord accidentally ordered his hearing another ſermon; the miniſter was directed to ſpeak to the following ſtrain, though he in the mean time was reſolved to be hardened againſt all that the miniſter ſhould ſay: Well, but the Lord put theſe or the like words in the miniſter's mouth, namely, "Perhaps there is ſome one here, that "under convictions formerly hath made a co"venant, and he hath afterwards gone to ſuch "a height of wickedneſs, that he hath burnt "his covenant." The poor gentleman knew that none in all the world but God and his conſcience were privy to that ſtory, and therefore he was obliged to acknowledge it was God himſelf ſpeaking to him; then began a ſound work of conviction, and thereupon a diſcovery of Chriſt to his converſion; then he knew how he was to dedicate his life to the Lord, under the conduct of a Spirit of gratitude.

I apply this to the caſe of Scotland, though it may be applied to all perſonal caſes: Scotland entered into covenant with God; but though the Lord helped ſome of our forefathers to act honeſtly, and from a Spirit of gratitude, yet the moſt part of theſe generations, as well as their poſterity, were ſtrangers to the Spirit of gratitude: and what came of the covenant? Behold, it was not only broken, but burnt; and God is ſaying to Scotland, O Scotland, Scotland, you have broken covenant; you have forgotten the covenant; you have played the harlot with many lovers; yea, you have burnt the covenant of your God! And, till God ſend the Spirit of conviction diſcovering our ſin, and thereafter the Spirit of gratitude making us regularly to engage unto duty, like children of promiſe, that have got the Spirit of promiſe as a Spirit of gratitude, there is little hope of powerful covenanting days. O cry for the return of the Spirit for this end.—Mean time, I ſay, the Spirit of promiſe will be a Spirit of praiſe and gratitude.

(10.) Where the Spirit of promiſe is, he will be a Spirit of liberty, goſpel-liberty, 2 Cor. iii. 17.; and particularly liberty from the law as a covenant of works, which is the diſtinguiſhing mark of the child of promiſe, as Iſaac, or of the free-woman, in oppoſition to Iſhmaelites, the children of the bond-woman: hence the children of promiſe will have a goſpel-ſpirit, in oppoſition to a legal ſpirit. Examine, therefore, what is your frame and diſpoſition of ſpirit: Have you diſcovered the glory of the goſpel? and are you thereby transformed from glory to glory by the Spirit of the Lord? Have you not the image of the goſpel? are you caſt into the mould of the goſpel, and ſo got a goſpel-ſpirit, which is a Spirit of liberty, in oppoſition to a legal ſpirit? What is that? even the ſpirit of bondage, belonging to the children of the bond-woman; the legal ſpirit is a ſpirit of ſlavery, a frightful and a fretful ſpirit, a terrified and melancholy ſpirit; a hand and foot-bound diſpoſition, wherein the man hath no heart for God and Chriſt. But what is a goſpel-ſpirit? it is even a holy goſpel-liberty, and free diſpoſition, wherein the man is ſet at liberty both as to his ſtate and frame; his countenance is lifted up, he comes to have ſpiritual joy. A goſpel-ſpirit is a frank ſpirit, a joyful ſpirit, a free ſpirit; If the Son make you free, then you are free indeed. It is true, the child of promiſe, that is married to Chriſt, and divorced from the law, may ſometimes, through unbelief, go to his old huſband, by reaſon of a legal diſpoſition that remains, and is not wholly mortified in him, and then he finds his fetters faſt, he cannot ſtir in the way of duty. But, believer, you will find that whenever your bonds are looſed, it will be in the way of returning unto your firſt Huſband; I mean, to the Lord Jeſus, held out in the goſpel-promiſe; and that you muſt juſt come back again where you began. The promiſe that is the mean of quickening you at firſt, and of begetting you to a new lively hope, it will ſtill be the door of life, and liberty, and quickening to you; you cannot find it in the law, but in the promiſe. All that you have wrought upon the loom of the law of works, through a legal unbelieving heart, muſt be unwrought, and undone, and opened out again, that you may begin a-new upon the goſpel-loom; for, the Spirit of liberty is not received by the works of the law, but by the hearing of faith, Gal. iii. 2. Try then if you be free-born, at liberty from the law; not from obedience to it, but from bondage to it, either as to obedience or ſatisfaction.

[1.] As to obedience. If your obedience to the law be a bondage to you, you are ſo far acted with a ſpirit unſuitable to a child of promiſe, like a child of the bond-woman; but when your obedience to it is no bondage, no grievance, then you are only under the law to Chriſt, or to God in Chriſt, whoſe commands are not grievous. I muſt tell you, that ſo far as you are a child of promiſe, you do not owe the law ſo much as a grain-weight of grievous, hard, and conditional obedience; for Chriſt bore all that weight. It is only the law as a covenant of works, that brings in weighty, heavy, grievous, and conditional obedience: but Chriſt bore all that burden; therefore you owe no obedience to the law but that of love, and love makes it the law of liberty, Jam. ii. 12.; and a very light-ſom yoke. When the law comes to command the the believer ſome heavy duty, he may tell it, I am not obliged to take a lift of it as a burden; for Chriſt bore all the burdenſom and heavy part of it, and left nothing to me but the light and eaſy part of it; Mat. xi. 30. My yoke is eaſy, and my burden is light. If you be a believer, you will find it to be ſo. Sometime, when under the influence of the ſpirit of liberty, your heart is lifted up in the way of the Lord, and in the duty of praying, hearing, communicating, or wreſtling with God alone; O ſays the heart of the man then, I am ſo far from wearying of this work, or thinking it a burden, that it is a burden to me to think of giving it over. Oh! I cannot think of going away from the throne; I cannot think of going back to the vain, filthy world again. The man that is under the law, on the contrary, Oh! the ſermon is a burden, the ſacrament is a burden, long Sabbath, long ſermon; when will it be over? If any duty of the law be uneaſy to you, it is not Chriſt's yoke you are bearing, but ſome of the old-covenant yoke, through the remainder of that covenant in you: but when you are doing duty, not like a conditional taſk, but in a way of flaming love, making your duty your element, and gratitude the ſpring, then you are acting ſo far like a child of promiſe; your obedience will be child-like, knowing that there is nothing you are obliged to do, but what the promiſe is engaged to do for you, and in you.—Thus, if you be a child of promiſe, you will have the ſpirit of liberty, and be free from the bondage of the law, even in reſpect of obedience: not free from obedience, unleſs it be the old-covenant heavy obedience; but free to obey, ſaying, Truly I am thy ſervant, thou haſt looſed my bonds; particularly, the bond of obligation to all heavy and uneaſy obedience, is torn to pieces, that you may ſerve in a way of love and liberty.

[2.] As to ſatisfaction and ſuffering, you are free from bondage to the law, ſo as you cannot incur the penalty of death and the curſe for not obeying. As you who are believers owe not a cup of cold water, as I ſaid before, to the command of the law as a covenant, ſo you do not owe a drop of warm blood to the threatening of it: not a ſtroak of vindictive juſtice or wrath can fall upon you; for it hath fallen by you, and lighted on your Surety with a vengeance, to God's full ſatisfaction: ſo that there is now no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt. Hence, ſo far as you are under the conduct of a goſpel-ſpirit, or a Spirit of liberty, you cannot, you will not ſerve and obey from a principle of any ſlaviſh fear of hell and wrath. You may, indeed, fear your diſobedience provoke your Father, and that you ſuffer fatherly chaſtiſements; this is conſiſtent with your ſtate that art a believer: but if your faults and infirmities, whether more or leſs groſs, fill you with the fear and dread of hell, then you act more like a child of the bond-woman, than a child of promiſe. Unbelievers ought, indeed, to fear hell, and to fear vindictive wrath, becauſe they are liable to it, being ſtrangers to the covenant of promiſe: but for you, believer, to fear God's everlaſting wrath, as if God would demand ſatisfaction again of you, which he hath taken to the full of Chriſt, is diſhonourable to the Lord Jeſus, as if he were not a complete ſacrifice to ſatisfy divine juſtice; yea, and an affront to God's juſtice, by making him unjuſt to demand more ſatisfaction than due: juſtice having got all its due from Chriſt, to ſeek more would be injuſtice. And beſides, ſuch a ſlaviſh fear would be unlike a child of God, that hath God for his Father; or a child of promiſe, that hath the promiſe for his ſecurity, and the promiſe ſealed by the juſtice-ſatisfying, and hell-quenching, as well as heaven-purchaſing, and God-glorifying blood of Chriſt.

In a word, There are two things that the children of promiſe, who, having the Spirit of promiſe as a Spirit of liberty, are ſet at liberty from, in the courſe of their walk; by which you may try yourſelves. 1. From the legal power of ſin. 2. From the legal penance of works.

1. I ſay, from the legal power of ſin. Sin hath a legal power over all that are the children of the bond-woman: ſin hath a kind of right to reign and domineer over theſe that are under the law; the law of works that they are under, is the law of ſin and death, Rom. viii. 2.; and the motions of ſin are by the law, bringing forth fruit unto death, Rom. vii. 5. And hence they are under the dominon of ſin, becauſe they are not under grace, but under the law, Rom. vi. 14. But believers are free from this legal power of ſin; The law of the Spirit of life in Chriſt Jeſus hath made me free from the law of ſin and death, Rom. viii. 2. Sin ſhall not have dominion over them, becauſe they are not under the law, but under grace, Rom. vi. 14. Though ſin therefore, may have ſometimes a prevailing power, a tyrannizing power, an uſurped power over them; yet it hath no legal rightful power, for they have caſt off the authority of ſin, and have no king but Chriſt. Hence the believer complains of ſin's uſurpation and oppreſſion; and, upon his complaining of it to his righteous God and Father, he finds the actual power of ſin gradually broken: for he goes to God, as Bathſheba went to David when Adonijah uſurped the kingdom; My lord, haſt thou not ſaid that Solomon ſhall reign? and behold, Adonijah reigns, 1 Kings i. 17. So ſays the believer, Lord, haſt thou not ſaid that grace ſhall reign? And haſt thou not promiſed that ſin ſhall not have dominion? and yet, behold, ſin uſurps the throne; O righteous Lord, ſee to it: and in this way he gets ſin brought down, and grace mounted on the throne.—Thus the believer is free from the legal power of ſin. But then again,

2. From the legal penance of works. The believer in Chriſt is the moſt buſy man about works, and yet the moſt free in all the world, in ſo far as he is a believer, and a child of promiſe, or of the free-woman. There is in the works of the believer ſomething common, and ſomething ſingular: ſomething common to all that can be called good works, and that is their conformity to the law as a rule; but there is alſo ſomething ſingular, and that is their diſconformity to the law as a covenant. Hence nothing like penance in them; for, in this reſpect, ſo far as they are believers, they have ceaſed from their own works: you have the expreſſion, Heb. iv. 10. He that is entered into his reſt, hath ceaſed from his own work, even as God did from his. They that have come to Chriſt, and ſo entered into their reſt initially, they have ceaſed from their own work; they are dead to the law, and married to Chriſt, that they may bring forth fruit unto God; not to the law as a covenant, but to their new Huſband. And, as the Spirit of God ſays in another caſe, Bleſſed are the dead that die in the Lord; for they reſt from their labour, and their works follow them: ſo may I ſay, Bleſſed are the dead that are dead to the law, and married to Chriſt, for they reſt from their legal labours, and their works follow them; for they are created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works. But they have ceaſed from their own works: legal works are our own works, done for our own juſtification, and done by our own ſtrength; but goſpel-works are not our own. And true believers have ceaſed from their own works, both in point of juſtification and ſanctification.

(1.) In point of juſtification, they have ceaſed from their own work; that is, they work none at all, that they may get life and juſtification and acceptance thereby; they that work, for that end, they work their own wo and damnation, and take Chriſt's work out of his hand, and fruſtrate the end of Chriſt's death to their own deſtruction; for, If righteouſneſs come by the law, Chriſt is dead in vain, Gal. ii. 21. By the deeds of the law no fleſh can be juſtified. Juſtification is to him that worketh not, but believes on him that juſtifies the ungodly, Rom. iv. 5.

(2.) In point of ſanctification, they have ceaſed from their own work, in ſo far that they dare eſſay nothing in their own ſtrength; but, having cloſed with Chriſt, as their righteouſneſs for juſtification and acceptance, they cloſe with him alſo as their ſtrength for ſanctification and aſſiſtance: and hence they acknowledge they have no ſtrength of their own, yet they are ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might; and that they have no grace of their own, but they are ſtrong in the grace that is in Chriſt Jeſus. They have ceaſed from their own work, and then they work to purpoſe, while, coming off from a covenant of works, they come in to Chriſt, who works in them both to will and to do. Therefore, whatever they have ado, they put it in his hand, without whom they can do nothing, ſaying with David, Pſal. lii. 2. I will cry unto God moſt High, unto God that performs all things for me.

Thus, in the tenor of their walk as children of promiſe, they are free and at liberty both from the legal power of ſin, and the legal penance of works: here is a great part of their preſent liberty, who have the Spirit of promiſe as a Spirit of liberty, which all the children of promiſe according to their meaſure have. By theſe things you may try yourſelves.

Some of theſe marks, perhaps, will be more clear to believers themſelves than others, and ſome of them more cloudy: may be one mark lifts you up, and another mark caſts you down; one mark you take to yourſelf, and another mark you dare not take. Why? this evidence, you think, is what belongs to you, the other is what belongs not to you; and ſo you remain in a dubiety. Indeed, none ought to be raſh in concluding concerning their eternal ſtate; ſome take what belongs not to them, others reject what belongs to them. I know not how it is with the generality of you; I am a ſtranger to the caſe of your ſouls: but what I have ſaid from God's word to you, I leave it to God's Spirit to make the powerful application, for ſearching you out, whether you be a child of promiſe or not.

One reaſon why unbelievers are ready to miſtake, and think they are the children of promiſe, is, becauſe they are filled with ſelf-conceit: like a man looking through a green glaſs, all things appear green to him; ſo the hypocrite looking on himſelf through the fair ſpectacles of ſelf-love and ſelf-conceit, he looks upon every thing in himſelf to be fair; whereas, if the falſe glaſs were removed, and that he noticed himſelf in the true glaſs of God's word, he would ſee himſelf in the gall of bitterneſs.

One reaſon alſo why believers are ready to miſtake, and doubt of their being the children of promiſe, while one mark is clear and another cloudy unto them, is, becauſe they are apt to judge of themſelves by their preſent feeling, the man apprehending theſe things belong not to him, which he does not find in himſelf at preſent: for, as we ſay of the church univerſal and inviſible, the catholic church, it is not what it is for the preſent in exiſtence, through the world, but the univerſal church is that ſociety which hath been, is, and ſhall be; ſo a believer is not to be meaſured by what he is at preſent, but what he hath been, is, and ſhall be. You ſhould try if ever there was a time when you found theſe things in you, though you find them not at preſent; or, if there be ſome of theſe, and the like marks, that you have found, and others that you have never found, you ſhould leave room for what God is yet to do before you go to heaven: for, if there be one ſubſtantial mark of a child of promiſe, that belongs to you, as being already wrought, another not yet wrought, you may be ſure he that hath begun the good work, will complete it; if it be a thing abſolutely neceſſary, it is what he hath promiſed to work: therefore, bleſs him for what marks you have, and wait on, in his own way, for what you want; and, the longer you go on in the Lord's way, the more will you come to diſcern all the marks in the way. If you be going along a way, and taking the marks of the way; perhaps, there is at ſuch a part of the way a mountain, at another part of the way there is a water, at a third part of the way there is a bridge, and at another part there is a houſe, and ſo on; you take theſe for the ſeveral marks of the way. Well, ſuppoſe a man ſets out to the way with theſe marks given him, and he comes accordingly firſt to the mountain, and then to the water-ſide, and ſo far he judges he is in the way: but ſhall he ſtand ſtill, and doubt if he be in the way, becauſe he is not yet come to the bridge, and to the houſe? Nay, he goes forward, and then he comes to theſe alſo: ſo here, in the examining the ſtate of your ſouls, though you ſhould be in ſome ſuſpence in applying to yourſelves ſome of the characters aſſigned of the people of God; yet neither give way to diſponding fears, nor ſlacken diligence in the way of commanded duty: go forward, and you will come to the reſt of the marks in due time. Mean time, if you have no ſubſtantial mark at all as yet, of your being a child of promiſe, you have no right to a communion-table, which is for ſealing of the covenant of promiſe.—May the Lord give you underſtanding in all things. Pray to him to ſearch and try you; for no mark will find you out to purpoſe, unleſs the Lord himſelf apply it powerfully to you. *

Uſe 3. I come to a cautionary uſe and application of this doctrine; and it may be followed forth in the ſhort reſolution of ſome caſes, which which the children of promise may be exercised with, concerning the right use, improvement, and application of the promise.

FIRST CASE. Whether or not SINNERS, as sinners, have any right to the promise? and what sort of right they have thereto? This is a case frequently exercising, even to the children of promise; for, though they be saints, they are always looking upon themselves as sinners, and the chief of sinners, and thereupon are ready to exclude themselves from the benefit of the promise, through their unbelief.

ANSW. The promise is just a door of hope to a sinner; the gospel is the good news of Christ coming to save sinners: now, the gospel, and the promise, is one and the same thing; the promise of pardon, respects guilty sinners; the promise of cleansing and purifying, respects filthy and polluted sinners; the promise of taking away the heart of stone, concerns hard-hearted sinners. Hence the sinner may conceive hope: it is the like of me that the promise looks to; therefore I will look to the promise, and lay stress upon it, and upon a God that promises. Then is faith wrought by the mean of the promise; and the man becomes a child of promise, being begotten thereby to a lively hope. Hence the promises are declared to belong to a visible church, Rom. ix. 4. And Peter, in his sermon to the crucifiers of Christ, says, Acts ii. 39. The promise is to you and to your children, and to as many as the Lord our God shall call. Even so say I, the promise is to you, man, to you, woman, to you, sinner; be who you will, you have such a right of access thereto, that it is lawful and warrantable for you to embrace the promise; yea, you are commanded to believe it unto your salvation.

SECOND CASE. Are not the promises only made to BELIEVERS and SAINTS? Therefore I may have no right to meddle with them?

ANSW. These that are actual believers and saints, they have a right of actual possession of the promise; but their right is not privative, excluding the right of access and warrant to believe and embrace the promise, that unbelievers and ungodly persons have, who hear the gospel, and have the promise set before them as the door of hope, and the ground of faith. Believers have the promise already in its begun accomplishment; yea, in Christ, they have all the promises, and all that is promised; and so the promise cannot be so properly said to be to them, for then it would be to promise them what they have already: but more properly the promise of any thing is made to the man that wants it, and as he is a wanter. They who have all their wants supplied, have no need of a promise, such as the saints in heaven; and believers on earth would have no need of a promise, if they were not partial wanters in themselves, though they have all in Christ. But, as a Saviour and a sinner are relatives; insomuch, that there would be no need of a Saviour, if there were no sinners: so a promise and a wanter are relatives; insomuch, that there would be no need of a promise, if there were no wanters. The great promise, I will be thy God, relates to these that want God, as we do all by nature; the promise of Christ, relates to them that want Christ; the promise of the Spirit, relates to these that want the Spirit; the promise of making a people willing, relates to them that want a will; the promise of faith, relates to them that want faith, and are unbelievers; the promise of repentance, relates to them that want repentance, and are impenitent; the promise of forgiveness, relates to the guilty; the promise of holiness, relates to them that are unholy, and ungodly, or that want holiness. Let sinners then, as sinners, be who they will, put in for a share of this grace.

THIRD CASE. If the promises are made to sinners, as such, then it must be to ELECT sinners, to whom only God intends to give what is promised: and I know not if I be an elect, therefore I cannot believe.

ANSW. That the elect only shall obtain, is true; and that as many as were ordained to eternal life, shall believe, and embrace the promise is also certain: but that is so far from being a ground of discouragement from believing, that it is rather an argument to believe the promise, that thus your election may be sure. Know, Sirs, that your election is not the first object of faith; nay, you are discharged to meddle with it, because it is a secret thing that belongs to God: the ground and object of your faith is the promise, or the gospel-declaration. Know, that the design of the Promiser is one thing, and the design of the promise is another: whatever be the design, end, and intention of the Promiser, with respect to some, an inhibition is served, discharging you to meddle with that: but the end and design of the promise, and gospel-declaration, which respects all sinners, this you are concerned with, and all that hear this gospel, by virtue of the divine command, to believe the gospel with particular application; namely, that Jesus Christ came to save sinners. Glorious is that wisdom of God, that brings about the design of his particular election, by such a general offer and invitation, so that none shall have any to blame for their perdition, but themselves, and their own wilful enmity, in rejecting the Saviour, and salvation offered through him; for, Whosoever will, are warranted to come, and take of the waters of life freely. May we not say with the apostle, O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! Rom. xi. 33. And since Christ hath declared, that as all that the Father hath given him shall come to him; so, him that comes he will in no wise cast out; and that he gathers his elect by this gospel-trumpet: then put your election out of doubt, by coming to Christ, and laying hold on the promise at his call.

FOURTH CASE. But what if I have not the inward call of the Spirit in my heart? May I come to the promise, and rely on it, before it come to me with power? If so, then I fear I will presume, and believe in my own strength.

ANSW. 1. The rule of faith, is God speaking in the word, and not in the heart; the object of your faith, is the gospel-declaration, and not the Spirit's operation.

2. You are carefully to distinguish betwixt your warrant to believe, and power to believe: your right and warrant to believe, is grounded on the gospel-offer and promise, together with God's command to you to believe, which constitutes your duty to believe, and makes unbelief your sin: but power to believe, is indeed from the SPIRIT of God, in his saving operation; therefore you ought to cry for the Spirit of power to accompany the dispensation of the word.

3. Though you do not feel this power exerted, yet yet that not being your warrant, but the word itſelf, you ought, at the call of God, to eſſay believing, and ſtretch forth the withered hand; and, in the act of ſo doing, you may find power at hand for ſtrengthening you: but while you wait for the feeling of his power, you delay the believing of his word, which is dangerous. Feeling is not believing; a feeling of his power, is not a believing of his promiſe: and there is much deceit in ſaying, you will not believe his promiſe, till you feel his power; for though divine power be neceſſary to believing, yet the feeling of his power is not neceſſary. Therefore,

4. Diſtinguiſh carefully betwixt real power, and felt power: If, upon the call of God, you be determined in heart to embrace the promiſe, and accordingly eſſay it, there is real power, though not felt till afterwards; as it was with the woman with the bloody iſſue, of which before.

As to the fear of preſuming in this matter; why, it is no preſumption to do what God bids you, and to take what God gives you; and he gives Chriſt and the promiſe to be taken. It is indeed preſumption, to think of believing the promiſe in your own ſtrength: and therefore it is one act of preſumption, among others, that you are not aware of, for you to delay believing, till you find you have ſtrength in yourſelf to believe; becauſe that you will never find; for, when a man is enabled to believe, his faith never ſays, Now I have ſtrength in myſelf, therefore I will go and believe in this ſtrength received; nay, but it rather ſays, Oh! I have no ſtrength, any more than I have righteouſneſs; therefore I will go out of myſelf, and take God's word of promiſe, and Chriſt therein, for ſtrength and righteouſneſs both: I will take hold of his ſtrength promiſed, and go in the ſtrength of the Lord.

FIFTH CASE, Concerning the promiſe, with which the children of promiſe may be exerciſed, is, Whether the ABSOLUTE promiſe, that is preſented to ſinners to be believed, does preſuppoſe the CONDITION of faith? and if faith itſelf be promiſed, how ſhall the faithfulneſs of God be cleared, in not accompliſhing the promiſe unto all ſinners that hear the goſpel?

ANSW. 1. Faith itſelf is abſolutely promiſed, in that word, When I am lifted up, I will draw all men after me: They ſhall look to me whom they have pierced, and mourn: They ſhall be willing in the day of thy power: yea, and the promiſes, of giving a new heart, and a new ſpirit, are promiſes of faith; and ſeeing faith is abſolutely promiſed, it cannot be the condition of the abſolute promiſe. Nay, the grand condition of all the promiſes, and of that promiſe of faith among the reſt, and upon which it is to be obtained, is Chriſt's obedience and ſatisfaction, 2 Pet. i. 1. There precious faith is ſaid to be obtained through the righteouſneſs of God, even our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

2. Theſe abſolute promiſes, as given forth in the goſpel-diſpenſation, are general and indefinite, unto ALL; not particular and definite, unto ANY: it is a blank bond, or an indefinite obligation to blank perſons; whoſoever will, may come, and ſign, by giving the cordial aſſent of faith thereunto. Thus it is a ſtanding claim to all ſinners of mankind to whom it comes, and warrants their believing. In this reſpect it is given forth generally and indefinitely: but here ſinners in general are only named; no perſon's name in particular is inſerted therein, unleſs they ſign the blank bond, and fill up their name by the cordial aſſent of faith; then the bond gives right to that perſon in particular; and then, and not till then, is the faithfulneſs of God obliged to accompliſh to that perſon all that is contained in the bond of the promiſe.

Why then, ſay you, Still faith is the condition.

I anſwer, No; for faith gives no right to what is in the bond, but only takes the right which the bond freely conveys, and takes the promiſe which God freely gives; He that believes ſhall be ſaved. Why? not becauſe faith gives a right and title to that promiſed ſalvation, but only it takes that ſalvation which God freely gives in the promiſe of the goſpel; and to which he gives a right and title through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt. Therefore, although it be true, that till the man believe he hath no actual right to the thing promiſed; yet it is no proper condition of that promiſed thing, becauſe it does not give any right thereunto by way of moral conditionality, but only takes the right thereunto by way of phyſical inſtrumentality. If you ſhould promiſe a man a great eſtate which you are able to give him, or give him your bond; if he accept, your credit is obliged to make it out: but if he will not take your promiſe or bond, you are under no obligation to make it out, notwithſtanding that your promiſe and bond remains ſtill free and abſolute: even ſo it is here, they that will not take what God is giving them in the promiſe, cannot charge God with unfaithfulneſs, in not making out what he hath ſaid. If they take his word, truly then his faithfulneſs is engaged; but if not, he is engaged, on the contrary, to deſtroy them, becauſe, through unbelief, they make him a liar, 1 John v. 10. However, the promiſe is preſented to them generally for a warrant of faith, only it is not applied to them particularly and powerfully for the creating of faith; this God does, when, and to whom he pleaſes.

SIXTH CASE. If the promiſe be not PARTICULARLY to me, what the better am I of the general indefinite promiſe, which God is not obliged to make out to every one? What advantage have I thereby?

I anſwer, with Paul, Rom. iii. 2. Much every way; becauſe you have a claim and warrant to believe and take poſſeſſion of the promiſe, which, in itſelf, is a great mercy; yea, even though not yet particularly applied to you by the Spirit in a day of power. Yea, a general promiſe to ſinners preſented to you, with a particular command obliging you to take it to yourſelf, is as much as if it were particular, running in your very name. Beſides, you cannot be wronged here; for, if you will have what God is offering, you ſhall have it; Whoſoever will, let him come: but if you will not have what he offers, then your ſinful refuſal ruins you, you wrong yourſelf; Why will you die?

But, ſay you, God can conquer me, and make me willing.

ANSW. 1. Indeed ſo he can, though he be not obliged by any law but his own ſovereign will and grace, which will make him conquer and make willing all whom he hath appointed unto life. But,

2. As he is not obliged to make you willing; ſo, if he ſhall not do it, ſurely you have no cauſe to complain; ſeeing, while you are unwilling, you deſpiſe his goodneſs, and care not for his grace.

3. Seeing

3. Seeing none are willing to take the promiſe in Chriſt till God make them ſo, he thus makes it evident, that all who are damned, are damned by an act of holy juſtice, and their damnation is of themſelves; ſo all that are ſaved, are ſaved by an act of mercy in Chriſt, and their ſalvation is of grace.

4. If you be one that would deſire to be made willing, the caſe alters; there is ſome will there already, and the power of God is at hand to further the work: only put imployment in God's hand of power, ſaying, O draw! draw me, and I will run after thee.

SEVENTH CASE. Whether a promiſe may be applied that is given OBJECTIVELY in the WORD, and not given SUBJECTIVELY and powerfully by the SPIRIT? If the promiſe, for example, be only preſented to the memory, in reading, hearing, praying, meditating, without coming in with any power, may it be applied to any uſefulneſs?

ANSW. 1. If the queſtion be, whether a man ought to apply it in that caſe, and take it home with particular application? No doubt he ought, for the word of God ſhould be believed; if it be a word of ſalvation to a ſinner, it ought to be welcomed and entertained by faith. But,

2. If the queſtion be, whether a man can apply it in ſuch a caſe, without power attending it? To be ſure he cannot: yet he ought to eſſay it, as I ſaid before, though he feel not the power; not knowing but power will accompany the eſſay.

3. The word of promiſe may be preſented to the mind barely in reading or thinking, and it may be only a ſimple act of the memory that is firſt exerciſed about it; yet, through the Lord's bleſſing, our meditation may be improved to a lively acting of faith upon it; While I was muſing, the fire burned, ſays the pſalmiſt.

4. A word ſuitable to our need and caſe, when it is impreſſed upon the memory, ought not to be deſpiſed, becauſe it may be a meſſenger from heaven for our ſpiritual advantage; for the Spirit is called the Remembrancer, for bringing the word to mind, John xiv. 26. This is one of the ways of his teaching; He ſhall teach you all things: How? He ſhall bring all things to your remembrance, whatſoever I have ſaid unto you. Never caſt out with a ſuitable and ſeaſonable word, becauſe it came only to your mind, as it were, in a ſeeming overly manner, but give it entertainment; it will, perhaps, make more room for itſelf, and ſanctify your memory: Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not ſin againſt thee.

EIGHTH CASE. If a word of promiſe come in to the heart with any power and life, how ſhall I know whether it be from GOD, or from SATAN, transforming himſelf into an angel of light?

ANSW. 1. God ſends his word upon the heart ſometimes in ſuch a manner, as carries its own evidence that it is from the Lord, inſomuch that there is no queſtioning of it at the time wherein it comes, no more than one can queſtion whether the ſun ſhines at mid-day, it hath ſuch a ſtamp of divine glory and majeſty upon it; but afterwards, when clouds and deſertion recur, the ſoul may be tempted to doubt whether it was a deluſion or not. Therefore,

2. It is meet, in ſuch a caſe, that the man reflect upon the impreſſion that the word of power made upon him. Aſk a man, when it is dark night, How do you know that ever you ſaw the natural ſun? May be you was but dreaming, and in a deluſion; it was nothing but a ſtrong imagination. Why, ſays the man, I am ſure I ſaw it, becauſe mine eyes were dazled with the light of it; and I was warmed with the heat of it; and I ſaw to work by it; and, in the light of it, I ſaw every thing about me; and I was delighted with it; and the like: ſo may you ſay, when in the dark night of deſertion, tempted to think that the word you got was a deluſion; you may reflect how it was with you when the word came from heaven with power and divine light; and when, together with it, the Sun of righteouſneſs ſhined in your ſoul: were not your eyes enlightened, your heart warmed, your ſoul cheared, and your ſpirit quickened to the Lord's work?

3. Satan may, indeed, ſend in words of ſcripture; he ſpoke Bible dialect to Chriſt when he tempted him, and ſo may he do to you; but it is always out of ſome ill deſign: as he tempted Chriſt to deny his ſonſhip, to deſtroy himſelf, and the like; ſo the words that come from the devil, tend to ſome wicked effects, either to make the ſoul ſecure, or deſperate; either to depreſs it too much towards deſpair, or to elevate it too much to preſumption. It tends to diſturb, and diſtract, and diſcompoſe the ſoul; or elſe to fill it with falſe peace, and to make it reſt in itſelf, and drive it off from its true reſting place. In a word,

4. A word from the devil bears the devil's image, but a word from God bears God's image. The devil's image is pride and unholineſs; and a word from him tends to make a man proud and carnal: whereas a word from the Lord tends to make a man holy and humble. A promiſe from the Lord is always a glaſs wherein ſomewhat of the glory of the Lord appears, whereupon the ſoul is changed from glory to glory by the Spirit of the Lord. Though ſin may afterwards prevail, yet the power of it is more weakened.

Finally, If it come in a time of need, and exactly ſuitable to the ſoul's caſe, and while it is pouring out itſelf before the Lord in prayer, it looks well; For this I beſought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me: and he ſaid unto me, My grace is ſufficient for thee; for my ſtrength is made perfect in thy weakneſs, 2 Cor. xii. 8, 9.

NINTH CASE. How ſhall I know, when I get a promiſe ſent in to my heart, whether or not I miſtake the SENSE of the promiſe, and the END and DESIGN thereof? For example, a child of promiſe gets a promiſe born in upon him; How ſhall he know that he does not miſtake the mind of God in it?

ANSW. 1. When God gives a word, he gives it in a ſuitableneſs to the deſign and ſcope of his HOLY SPIRIT in that text of ſcripture. If the ſenſe you put upon it be not ſuitable to the ſenſe of the Spirit of God therein, then certainly you are under ſome miſtake therein. But,

2. The Spirit of God is an Interpreter, one among a thouſand; and readily, when he gives in a word, he makes the ſenſe appear better than all the miniſters in the world can explain it: and the ſoul will ſee ſome goſpel-myſtery, ſome hidden glory in the word, that no interpreter, but the Spirit of God, can ſhew and manifeſt.

3. You can hardly miſtake the ſenſe of the word, if the Spirit teſtify of Chriſt therein; for Chriſt ſays of the whole ſcriptures, that they teſtify of him, John v. 39.

4. You can hardly miſtake the end and deſign of God in the word that you get, if it lead you in to Chriſt, and draw you to him; for the lan-language of the Spirit, in every word of ſcripture, is, Come to Chriſt: The Spirit and the bride ſay come.— By theſe generals you may gueſs, whether or not you hit upon the ſenſe of the promiſe given you.

TENTH CASE, that a child of promiſe may be exerciſed about, is, When I am concerned before the Lord in prayer for a friend in affliction, or in dying circumſtances, be it a relation, a child, a husband, a wife, or a near intimate acquaintance, and I get a promiſe let in to my heart ſuitable to my concern; How ſhall I know if the promiſe relates to MYSELF, or to the PERSON I am concerned about? and how ſhall I judge whether I MISAPPLY the promiſe relating to them?

ANSW. 1. As to that part of the queſtion, whether it relates to yourſelf, or the perſon you are concerned about: It is, indeed, poſſible to miſtake in this matter; and I do not underſtand any other way of your being ſure that it relates to your friend, except it be by ſome ſpiritual inſtinct and ſecret impreſſion, that cannot well be explained: only, the Lord, who preſents the promiſe to you, will readily preſent the perſon alſo that you are concerned about, and lay the load of his affliction, as it were, upon your ſpirit, which you carry to the Lord, and caſt down at his feet, till he pleaſe to whiſper into your ear, as it were, or rather into your heart, ſome account of his deſign relating to that perſon.

2. As to that part of the queſtion, How to judge, whether you miſtake or miſapply the promiſe that relates to them?

(1.) Perhaps it is a general promiſe applied to a particular caſe, ſuch as that, Fear not, I will help, I will ſave; and you are ready to miſtake a temporal ſalvation for a ſpiritual; or a ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, for a bodily and temporal one. Or,

(2.) Perhaps it is a more particular promiſe, ſuch as that, John iv. 50. Go thy way, thy Son lives; or that, This ſickneſs is not unto death, but to the glory of God, John xi. 4. You are ready to miſtake the deſign of the word, and of the Lord's giving it; and ſo to apply it amiſs. Which may be done eſpecially in two caſes.

[1.] When you limit the Lord to your ſide of the queſtion; then you are in danger of being left to miſtake the promiſe.

[2.] When the natural ſway of your affections and inclinations is made the STANDARD of explaining the word; or when you are determined, as it were, before-hand with reſpect to what you would have, and then interpret the promiſe in favours of your own inclination, more than in a ſuitableneſs to what is moſt agreeable to God's word, or needful for the party you are concerned about. We are ready to miſtake a promiſe, and influences from heaven, as if the deſign of them were juſt to humour our preſent apprehenſion and judgment; whereas after-experience may diſcover that we were miſtaken. Job's friends were under a ſpecial influence from heaven in all that they ſpoke concerning Job; but that influence they were under, came to them when they were under a very groſs miſapprehenſion concerning Job, as if he had been a hypocrite; and accordingly they miſapplied that influence they were under, to their preſent miſapprehenſion; and ſo went on in their miſtake, accuſing Job, till the Lord diſcovered their error. So people may get promiſes, and adapt them to their miſapprehenſion, whether for or againſt theſe they are exerciſed about, making God's word to bear a ſenſe that moſt favours their own preſent ſway, inclination, or apprehenſion; hence many of the Lord's people have found themſelves brought under very melancholy diſappointments, through their inadvertency this way. Which ſhould learn us ſobriety, and wiſdom, and holy circumſpection, in applying promiſes of this ſort, that Satan get no advantage, to the weakning of faith, and razing the foundation thereof with reſpect to other promiſes.

ELEVENTH CASE. How ſhall I judge of a promiſe that I have got, when the QUITE CONTRARY to what I thought was promiſed to me, hath fallen out in providence? How ſhall I maintain honourable thoughts of the divine faithfulneſs in that caſe?

ANSW. 1. Let God be true, and every man a liar. You ought to take with ignorance and error in applying and uſing the promiſe; and, at the ſame time, give God the glory of his faithfulneſs, believing that he will be true to his word, however providence ſeem to contradict the promiſe.

2. Perhaps you did not know at that time what God was ſaying to you. As Chriſt ſaid to Peter, What I do thou knoweſt not now, but thou ſhall know hereafter: ſo he may ſay to ſome, What I ſpeak, thou underſtandeſt not now, but thou ſhalt underſtand hereafter.

3. Perhaps you have not given God his day, by waiting till the time that he deſigned for the accompliſhment; may be it is coming: or, if you have given him his day, you have not given him his due, by being fully perſuaded, that he that hath promiſed was able to perform; and, by believing againſt hope.

4. Perhaps you miſtake the way and manner wherein God deſigned to make good the promiſe to you; His way is in the deep, and his footſteps in the mighty waters. He makes the promiſe of heaven run, as it were, through hell before the accompliſhment thereof, that ſo the trial of faith may be precious. He accompliſhes the promiſe of glory, through miſery; the promiſe of liberty, through bondage and calamity. Judge not of his faithfulneſs by outward appearances, otherwiſe you will never believe his word. If you get a bright promiſe, you may get a dark cloud upon the back of it, to keep you humble, and to try if your faith be the evidence of things not ſeen, or if it can ſee inviſible things through viſible impediments, as Abraham's faith did. There was much inviſible glory and excellency held forth in that promiſe that was made to Mary the mother of Jeſus, Luke i. 30,—33. No doubt, Mary thought ſhe would be a happy woman while ſhe lived; and that her Son, our Lord Jeſus, would be a great man, even in worldly reſpects: for we ſee how the apoſtles themſelves dreamed of a temporal earthly kingdom that Chriſt ſhould have, as the reſt of the Jews did: no doubt, I ſay, ſhe thought of much temporal happineſs, ſplendour, and grandeur to her Son, even here; but, that ſhe might not live in that miſtake, ſee how the Lord directed old Simeon to ſpeak to her, when he had the child JESUS in his arms, Luke ii. 34, 35. Thus you ſee here promiſes, and God's way of accompliſhing them, may be miſtaken. O Sirs, ſee his way to be glorious and honourable.

TWELFTH CASE. Whether may one conclude him- himself to be a child of promise, that never found ANY PROMISE come in with power to his soul? 'Why, 'says one, I am in no danger of mistaking the 'promise that way you was alledging; for, I 'get no promise in that manner born home 'upon me, and this makes me many times 'doubt whether or not I can be a child of pro-'mise: I hear of some getting promises with 'life and power set home upon them, but I 'know nothing of that; and therefore I would 'know if this be consistent with a believing 'state.'

ANSW. The dispensation of grace towards the children of promise, is various: I cannot say they have all the same experience of words of promise darted in, as it were, from heaven upon their hearts; but this I will say of all the children of promise, that there is some word of grace or other, whatever way they get it, on which they were made to hope; for they are begotten again to a lively hope by the word of the gospel; and can, in some measure say, Lord, remember the word on which thou hast caused me to hope. If all the promises of the Bible be alike to you, and you was never begotten to a lively hope, by one of them more than another, how can you be a child of promise, when the promise hath never opened its womb to bring you forth, or to bring forth any faith or hope in your heart?

THIRTEENTH CASE. Whether may a man take a promise that is not GIVEN him, or apply a promise that God does not allow him to apply?

ANSW. 1. All the promises are given in the gospel-offer, to be received; and it is the sin of gospel-hearers, that they do not take and apply what God gives, but rather put away Christ and the promise from themselves, and live in unbelief.

2. People may take and apply a promise amiss, and ruin themselves in their way of taking, when they take the promise to themselves, not by faith, but by fancy, and strong imagination: and, indeed, the faith of many is nothing but a strong fancy and opinion; a damnable faith.

3. People may take and apply the promise amiss, to their own ruin, when they take it, but not out of God's hand, and upon his authority; whereas true faith receives the word, not as the word of man, but as it is in truth the word of God, which effectually worketh in them that believe, 1 Thess. ii. 13.

4. People may take and apply the promise amiss, and may be said to take what is not given, when they take it, but not as given, and for the end and design for which it is given. The promise is given to make you holy, as well as to make you happy; but if you take it to make you secure, and to give you a latitude and liberty in sin, and so to abuse the grace of God unto licentiousness, then you are but despising the goodness of God, and treasuring up to yourself wrath against the day of wrath: but if you take the promise by faith, believing and applying it to yourself; if you take it out of God's hand, and take it as given, and for the holy ends for which it is given, then you need not fear that you take what is not given you; God allows and commands you thus to take.

FOURTEENTH CASE. How may the promises be improven, that, in all probability, will not be FULFILLED in our day?

ANSW. (1.) We are to live and die in the faith of them, Heb. xi. 13.—(2.) We ought to search the periods of time wherein they are to be accomplished, Dan. ix. 2. compared with 1 Pet. i. 10, 11.—(3.) We ought, with patience, to expect the accomplishment, Heb. x. 35, 36.—(4.) We must not judge of the accomplishment by seemingly contradictory providences; for, the Lord is not slack concerning his promise, but he will take his own time and way, which sometimes is very mysterious.

FIFTEENTH CASE. Whether may a child of promise have God speaking to him in a promise savingly, and yet he not KNOW it?

ANSW. I doubt not but there may be young children of promise, like young Samuel, to whom the Lord spake again and again, and he thought it was Eli; so the Lord may be speaking to some, and speaking to their heart, and they may be so little acquainted with the Lord, as to think it is but the minister that is speaking. However, these whom the Lord begins to speak graciously and powerfully unto, he will make them know his voice, and bring them to more acquaintance with him. But, in case any hereupon presume they are children of promise, though they do not know it; there are these things they will know something of, who are the children of promise.—They know that, by nature, they are strangers to the covenant of promise; and that, instead of the promise, they are under the threatening of the law by nature; and, under the apprehension thereof, they have fled to Christ and the promise.—They know, that all the spiritual life they have, is by virtue of the promise, or the grace of God in Christ; the promise hath given life to their faith, life to their hope, life to their desire, life to their repentance and mortification; Having these promises, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, etc. Thy word hath quickened me.—They know that the promise of God is good security for heaven and eternal life; and they take it as such.—They know that the security of the promise depends upon the blood of Christ; they are all Yea and Amen in Christ, and upon the faithfulness of God, the oath of God; therefore their dependence is thereupon. In a word, they are prizers of the promise, and pleaders of the promise, appliers of the promise; and have communion with God, in Christ, by the means of the promise. *

Use 4. I come now to an use of exhortation, which may be directed, 1. To unbelievers, who have no faith, and consequently no special actual interest in the promise. 2. To believers, that are the actual children of the promise. 3. To all in general.

First, To unbelievers, that are aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to the covenant of promise. O seek to be the children of promise, as Isaac; I mean, to have it made evident to you that you are so. Some motives and some directions I would here offer to you.

1st, For motives. I shall only propose that you consider whose children you are, while you are not the children of promise; particularly, whose children you are by nature, and whose children you are by nation, and so by remote or immediate parentage.

[1.] Consider whose children you are by nature. (1.) You are the children of the devil, 1 John iii. 10.; even the race of apostate Adam; Children of the wicked one, Mat. xiii. 38. Ye are of your father

* It is probable this ends Serm. XXXVII. preached on the Sabbath.

father the devil, John viii. 44.—(2.) You are the children of iniquity, Hoſ. x. 9.—(3.) You are the children of diſobedience, Eph. ii. 2. and v. 6.—(4.) You are the children of wrath, Eph. ii. 3.—(5.) The children of the curſe, curſed children, 2 Pet. ii. 14.—(6.) You are the children of the night and of darkneſs, 1 Theſſ. v. 5.—(7.) You are the children of perdition, John xvii. 12.—(8.) You are the children of hell, Mat. xxiii. 15.—(9.) Children of the fleſh, Rom. ix. 8.—(10.) The children of the bond-woman, as in the context.——From theſe epithets, given to theſe in your ſtate in ſcripture, you may gather what a ſad and doleful condition you are into, that are not the children of promiſe.

[2.] Conſider whoſe children you are by nation, and that whether by remote national deſcent, or by immediate parentage.

(1.) By remote national deſcent, as Scotſmen, and Scotſwomen. Though this be what concerns you all in common, I ſuppoſe, who hear me in this place; yet ſome affecting conſiderations may be drawn therefrom, for inducing you to be reſtleſs till you get ſome evidence of your being the children of promiſe. Why, by virtue of your Scotiſh birth, more remotely conſidered,

1. You are the children of Pagans, a heathen brood. It may be truly ſaid of us, Thy birth and thy nativity was of the land of Canaan; thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite, Ezek. xvi. 3. For, before the goſpel came firſt to be publiſhed in Scotland, if we look a thouſand and ſome hundred of years backward, we will find we are nothing but a Pagan brood; the children of as blind and brutiſh idolaters, as ever were in the world. Owen, in his Theologumena (beſides what hiſtorians relate) diſcovers the curſed idolatry of Britain, that our forefathers were drowned into: their gods were many; and, among the reſt, theſe from whom we derive to this day the ordinary names we give to the days of the week, as Sunday, that was dedicate to the Sun; and Monday, to the Moon; Tueſday, to Twiſco; Wedneſday, to Woden; Thurſday, to Thor; Friday, to Friga, or Venus; and Saturday, to Saturn. They offered human ſacrifices to their imaginary deities, in the moſt cruel manner, which I cannot here enlarge upon. However, we are of a Pagan extract, an idolatrous brood: we have no claim to Abraham as our father; we are not, by birth, of Shem's family, the family of the faithful; and never had we been in a better condition, had not the Lord perſuaded Japhet to dwell in the tents of Shem.

2. You are the children of Papiſts, to come a little nearer-hand. We, as Scots, are of the lineage of Antichriſt, a Popiſh brood; for, after groſs Paganiſm was aboliſhed by the goſpel-light, that God ſent to Scotland, a cloud of Popery and Antichriſtian darkneſs, idolatry, and ſuperſtition, overſpread the land for ſeveral hundred years before the Reformation, wherein the Lord brought us out of that myſtical Babylon: however, when we look back to theſe dark times, we may ſee ourſelves to be but a generation of Babyloniſh brats. It is hardly two hundred years ſince our forefathers were all black Egyptians, and many in Scotland are not yet brought out of that popiſh Egypt to this day; many never had their hearts truly brought out of it, and are longing to be back again to it.

3. You are, even as Scots, children of Apoſtates, a perjured brood; the offspring of covenant-breakers; a perfidious race. We, in our forefathers, have been guilty of the moſt groſs and vile abominations of ſwearing and forſwearing, even ſince our Reformation from Popery: oaths upon oaths have been taken; and ſome oaths contradictory to the former. I ſpeak not only of private and perſonal, cuſtomary and bloody oaths, which abound among all ranks; but even of public oaths impoſed by law *. What nation under heaven have changed their religion ſo often, and the government of the church ſo frequently, as Scotland? May not the Lord ſay of us, as he ſaid of Iſrael, My people have committed two great evils, they have forſaken me the fountain of living water, and digged to themſelves broken ciſterns that can hold no water? May he not bid us paſs over to Chittim, and to heatheniſh nations, and ſee if they have changed their gods, their glory for that which doth not profit? Jer. ii. 10, 11, 13. But eſpecially, was there ever a nation entered more ſolemnly into covenant with God? And was there ever any nation, that not only broke, but burnt the covenant of their God, and cried it up for a ſin of rebellion to own and plead for the covenant of their God, as Scotland hath done? Was there ever any nation aſhamed of their glory, as we have been?

4. We, as the people of Scotland, are the children of an unthankful nation, and an ungrateful blood, that have ſinned againſt old and late mercies. 1. Againſt old mercies. God hath an old kindneſs for Scotland; and we are a race of people that have ſinned againſt very antient love: God ſent the goſpel very early to Scotland, even a few years after the aſcenſion of Chriſt; though Chriſtianity was not eſtabliſhed by law, till about the two hundred and third year of our LORD, in the reign of Donald the firſt, yet it was received by many in Scotland, before the ſecond of the ten primitive perſecutions: for, as hiſtorians tell us, and even the Roman hiſtory confirms it, many eminent Chriſtians fled from that perſecution even unto Scotland, becauſe they were aſſured that the goſpel was received there; and that perſecution being about the ſixty-ninth year of Chriſt, the goſpel-light that ſhined in Scotland before that time, behoved to have made a very early entrance here; which, as ſome tell us, was occaſioned by the perſecution that the Jews raiſed againſt the apoſtles and diſciples of Chriſt, who thereupon leaving Jeruſalem, and Judea, went up

* Our Author here, no doubt, hath his eye on the troubleſome perſecuting period in the laſt century, under the reigns of Charles II. and James VII. wherein many wicked, ſelf-contrary, and inſnaring oaths and bonds were impoſed on the ſubjects, particularly on the ſtrenuous adherers to the Reformation principles attained unto in that reforming period between 1638, and 1649.; ſuch as, The oath of Allegiance, or Supremacy; the Inſtrument Aſſertory; the Declaration; the Bond of Peace; the Bond of Regularity; the Teſt, etc. And in regard our Author ſpeaks of oaths contradictory to our Covenants, he probably alludes to the DECLARATION and TEST, which, inter alia, diſowned the binding obligation of our Covenants, National and Solemn League, and were framed and calculated to unhinge our covenanted Reformation, and be as a grave-ſtone thereupon: The words of the Declaration are remarkable; wherein the ſubſcriber [which was every one admitted to places in church and ſtate,] is required to affirm and declare, "That it is unlawful, upon any pre-"text whatſoever, to enter into leagues and covenants;—that the National Covenant, (as explained in the year 1638.) and the Solemn "League and Covenant, were, in themſelves, UNLAWFUL OATHS;—and that there lieth no obligation, on any of the ſubjects, from "the ſaid Oaths, to endeavour any change or alteration, either of church or ſtate, from the preſent eſtabliſhment by the laws of the "kingdom." By which declaration, perjury is made a neceſſary qualification to inveſt a perſon with any office, civil or eccleſiaſtic.

and down the world, ſpeaking to every people in their own language; and that theſe who came to our northern parts, were the diſciples of the apoſtle JOHN. However this may be, yet it is generally owned that we were among the very firſt fruits of the Gentiles brought in to the Lord Jeſus: therefore, I ſay, we are a people that have ſinned againſt very antient love, early kindneſs, and old mercies. 2. Againſt late mercies. Need I here mention the glorious Reformation from Popery, the merciful Revolution, and manifold deliverances from Prelacy, and arbitrary power? Theſe things are of later date, and better known; together with the great goſpel-light, and innumerable mercies of this kind, that we have ſinned againſt, inſomuch as we have ſinned away many national mercies, and are become bond-ſlaves; having ſo far ſold ourſelves, that our poſterity may ſay, we are the children of ſlaves. And have we not ſinned away many ſpiritual mercies, many goſpel-privileges, and ſacred liberties? How is goſpel-light darkened, goſpel-truth adulterate and ſophiſticate with legal mixture?

(2.) Conſider whoſe children you are by immediate parentage. Let none boaſt of their birth and pedigree; even as they are children of the preſent generation, every one hath reaſon to ſay, with David, What am I? and what is my father's houſe? The Lord gives the Jews a black name, Iſa. lvii. 3. The ſons of ſorcerers, the ſeed of the adulterer and whore; becauſe their immediate parents were idolaters, they are called the children of whoredoms: ſo, perhaps, it may be ſaid of many here, that ſome are of a baſtard-brood, the children of whoremongers and adulterers; ſome are of a thieviſh brood, a race of robbers and thieves; ſome are of a graceleſs pedigree, deſcended of wicked parents, that never knew any thing of God: ſome of a malignant race, the children of theſe that were enemies to God, and the work of God, and the power of godlineſs; ſome of a viperiſh brood, of whom it may be ſaid, as John the Baptiſt to the Jews, O generation of vipers, haters of God, and bitter enemies to the croſs of Chriſt, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Oh! how far from, and unlike to the children of promiſe are ſuch? Or, if any here be the children of gracious and religious parents, yet conſidering what even they were by nature, as well as others, have you not reaſon to ſay, as it is, Deut. xxvi. 5. A Syrian ready to periſh was my father. Whether your immediate parents were good or bad, you have matter of humiliation: if they were good, then it may be humbling unto you, that you have not walked in their imitable footſteps, nor followed their faith and holineſs; and you are their children and offſpring, merely as they were ſinners, not as they were ſaints: if they were bad, then without controverſy it is a humbling conſideration, they begat you after their own likeneſs, and you remain children of wrath and diſobedience like them, and ſo you are their rightful and immediate heirs, heirs to all the curſes and threatenings that they were under.

Now, ſhould not this ſtir you up to be reſtleſs till you know that you are among the children of promiſe, to conſider whoſe children you are by nature, by nation, and by immediate parentage? eſpecially when it is alſo conſidered, what a wrathful heritage you have, by being of ſuch a Syrian brood; for, by reaſon of your native pedigree, you are under dreadful plagues, particularly the plague of ſin's pollution, and the plague of God's curſe.

1. Under the plague of ſin's pollution: not only deſtitute of God's image, which man had in his primitive innocent ſtate; but polluted and defiled throughout the whole man, like children caſt forth to the open field, to the loathing of thy perſon; not ſalted at all, nor ſwaddled at all: Not waſhed with water, but lying in their blood, Ezek. xvi. 4, 5.; every finger of your hand, every bit of your fleſh and bones is but a clod of corruption; every member of the body, every faculty of the ſoul, is but a heap of pollution and filthineſs; Altogether become filthy, Pſal. xiv. 3.

2. Under the plague of God's curſe, under the ſentence of the law; the curſe thereof is againſt us as ſoon as we are born; Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them, Gal. iii. 10. And ſo, while you are not children of promiſe, you are nothing but children of the threatening, and heirs of damnation, Aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, ſtrangers to the covenants of promiſe; having no hope, and without God in the world, Eph. ii. 12. Is it not ſad to be ſuch plagued and curſed children!

Again, as you would conſider whoſe children you are, and conſequently what a ſad ſtate you are in, while you are not the children of promiſe; ſo conſider alſo, for your excitation and upſtirring in this matter, whoſe children you would be, if you were the children of promiſe; and how happily they are ſtated that are ſo. Why, theſe that are the children of promiſe, (1.) They are the children of God, Gal. iii. 26.; of the living God, Rom. ix. 26.—(2.) They are the children of the kingdom, in that ſenſe mentioned, Mat. xiii. 38. — (3.) They are the true children of Zion, Pſa. cxlix. 2.—(4.) The children of Jeruſalem, which is above, Gal. iv. 26.—(5.) They are the children of light, Luke xvi. 8.—(6.) The children of wiſdom, Mat. xi. 19.—(7.) They are the children of Abraham, in a true ſpiritual ſenſe, Gal. iii. 7.—(8.) They are the children of liberty and of the free-woman, Gal. iv. 31.—(9.) The children of the reſurrection, Luke xx. 30.—(10.) The children of grace and glory; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Chriſt, Rom. viii. 17.——Theſe are not bare names they have; no, they import the unſpeakable happineſs here, and eſpecially hereafter, that belong to the children of promiſe.

2*dly*, For direction. If you would put in for a ſhare among the children of promiſe, I offer you theſe three or four advices.

1. O ſinner, ſee, and know, and believe your relation, by nature, to the threatening, and ſeek the Spirit of God to convince you thereof. The Spirit of God, as a Spirit of bondage, muſt bind your conſcience and the threatening together, and apply the law-threatening, before ever you will have any due concern about being the children of promiſe. If you know not God as a threatening God, you will have little care about knowing him as a promiſing God. Till the ſoul be brought to ſay, "Ah! nothing "but the threatening of hell and damnation "belongs to me; I am a child of wrath," never will it value the privilege of being a child of promiſe. What meaſure of conviction, or legal humiliation, is neceſſary, I determine not; but if, in ſome meaſure, you do not ſee yourſelves under the ſentence of the law, how can you you ever reliſh the promiſe of the goſpel, and ſee your need thereof? but then, having ſeen your need,

2. See your concern in the promiſe, and your claim thereto, as members of the viſible church. Though, by natural generation, you have no part in it, yet by Heaven's gracious diſpenſation you have a claim to it; The promiſe is to you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even to as many as the Lord our God ſhall call, Acts ii. 39. The promiſe is left to the goſpel-church, Heb. iv. 1. and belongs to them no leſs than it did to the church of the Jews, Rom. ix. 4. The promiſe is a letter from heaven, backed for you, ſinner: take, and open, and read it, with application to yourſelves; for it is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, declaring that Jeſus Chriſt came to ſave ſinners. Though you have no poſſeſſion of the thing promiſed till you believe; yet you have as good a right to take poſſeſſion by believing, as the command of God and the call of the goſpel can give you; and this right was ſealed to you in baptiſm. See your claim.

3. Plead this claim, as you may ſee the Lord calls you to do, Ezek. xxxvi. 37. Where, after the covenant of promiſe is opened and laid before you, the Lord ſays, For this will I be enquired of by the houſe of Iſrael, to do it for them. Plead then, that a ſovereign Lord, who ſhews mercy on whom he will ſhew mercy, would give you the new heart there promiſed, the new ſpirit, the heart of fleſh, and put his Spirit within you, and cauſe you to walk in his ſtatutes, and be your God, and make you his people, according to the promiſe. Plead, that he, who hath given you a promiſe to plead, may give you the grace of the promiſe; which when you get, then ſhall you have evidence of your being children of the promiſe. And in this way,

4. Be reſtleſs till the promiſe be powerfully applied, and till you feel the virtue thereof. Cry for power to accompany the goſpel-diſpenſation, that ſo the promiſe may have ſtrength to bring forth children, and to bring forth you particularly, as a child of promiſe, begotten to a lively hope thereby, of his own ſovereign will, James i. 18.; and of his free mercy, Titus iii. 5. You can, indeed, no more contribute to your own regeneration by the word, or to your becoming a child of promiſe, than a child can contribute to its own production, or a creature to its own creation. The new creature is the product of God's almighty efficacious power allenarly: yet as this power works upon the rational faculties, when God begins the good work; ſo he calls us, as rational creatures, to uſe the means and ordinances of his appointment, and to be found in that way wherein his power and grace uſes to ride proſperouſly. Therefore, ſeeing the ordinances are the golden pipes, Zech. iv. 12. through which the oil of grace runs, attend upon them; and ſeeing the promiſes of God are the veſſels whereby God conveys and infuſes his grace into us, apply yourſelves unto them; for theſe exceeding great and precious promiſes are given us, that by theſe we might be partakers of the divine nature, 2 Pet. i. 4. Now, ſeeing the promiſe is but the veſſel, and Chriſt is the fountain of grace, in whom all the promiſes are Yea and Amen; therefore, in uſing that promiſe, bring the promiſe to Chriſt, as a man would bring a veſſel to the fountain, and ſee to get the veſſel filled with grace and power, and virtue there, that out of his fulneſs you may receive grace for grace, John i. 16. Then ſhall you appear to be the children of God, by faith in Chriſt Jeſus, and as the children of promiſe.

5. In a word, Pray the Lord to enable you to caſt out the bond-woman, to give up with the law, and renounce it, not as a rule of obedience, but as a rule of acceptance, and as a covenant of works, and condition of life; having no expectation of life by the deeds of the law, or by any perſonal righteouſneſs of your own, but reſting allenarly upon the free promiſe of God in Chriſt, for juſtification, ſanctification, and eternal life, according to the goſpel-method; that in this way, under the conduct of the Spirit of promiſe, you may become the children of promiſe, and be the children of God by faith in Chriſt Jeſus, Gal. iii. 27.; and the children of the free-woman, Gal. iv. 31.——Be reſtleſs in the uſe of means, till God put power and virtue in the promiſe, for theſe ends.

Secondly, The ſecond branch of our exhortation propoſed was to believers, that are actually the children of promiſe; and our exhortation to them is, that being ſo, they would live upon the promiſe by faith. And here again I would offer ſome motives; and then ſome directions, in order to the believer's living by faith upon the promiſe.

1*ſt*, For motives. O believer in Chriſt, and child of the promiſe, Take heed leſt there be in you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God; and ſee that your life be a life of faith upon the promiſe. And there are eſpecially two conſiderations I would urge, for exciting you to this life, namely, 1. The excellency of the promiſe. 2. The excellency of the life of faith thereupon.

[1.] Conſider the excellency of the promiſes. The apoſtle ſays, 2 Pet. i. 4. they are exceeding great and precious promiſes. Some things may be great, and yet not precious; but the promiſes are both great and precious; and not only ſo, but exceeding great and exceeding precious. There is a treaſure here, exceeding what tongue can utter, or heart conceive. You may conſider the excellency of the promiſe, in theſe following reſpects, namely,

1. The promiſes are excellent and precious, in reſpect of their author, which is God; All the promiſes of God are in him Yea, and in him Amen, to the glory of God by us, 2 Cor. i. 20. Where God is declared to be the author, for they are the promiſes of God; and God is the end of them, they are to the glory of God. If you look into the promiſe, you will find all the attributes, and all the names of God there; ſuch as, the love of God: O how does his love, mercy, and grace appear, in making the promiſe! It is free love that makes him a Promiſer, and thereupon a debtor to us.—Again, the power of God is manifeſted, in making good the promiſe: God ſaid, that the ſeed of the woman ſhould bruiſe the head of the ſerpent; and God hath been obliged to ſhew his power to make it good in Chriſt Jeſus, to the ſeed of Abraham by miracles, and to the children of Iſrael by wonders: it hath coſt many marvellous operations to make good his word in ſeveral ages to his people.—Again, His faithfulneſs is here diſplayed: in this is the ſecurity of the promiſe; Though we believe not, yet he abideth faithful, he cannot deny himſelf, 2 Tim. ii. 13.—Again, His wiſdom comes in, to give forth theſe promiſed mercies in time of need, and and in a ſuitableneſs to our wants. You have a remarkable word, Pſal. cxxxviii. 2. I will worſhip towards thy holy temple, and praiſe thy name for thy loving-kindneſs, and for thy truth: for thou haſt magnified thy word above all thy name; SUPER OMNE NOMEN, above every name. God is pleaſed to make his word above every name; and all his names carry his word upon their ſhoulders. And, are not theſe then precious and excellent promiſes, that are thus enameled with love, mercy, grace, power, faithfulneſs, wiſdom, and all the other names of God? And ſhall ſuch a treaſure ly by us, without being improven?

2. The promiſes are excellent and precious, in reſpect of their object, or the perſon to whom they are made, namely, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Mediator and Redeemer: not to the elect immediately, but to Chriſt for them; Now to Abraham and his ſeed was the promiſes made: he ſays not, And to ſeeds, as of many; but as of one: And to thy ſeed, which is Chriſt, Gal. iii. 16. Had the promiſe been made to man, then it had been made to ſeeds; that is, to diverſe; as to one of the Jews, and to one of the Gentiles; as of diverſe kinds: but it was to one; that is, both to Jews and Gentiles, which are both but one ſeed in Chriſt Jeſus. All the promiſes are in him, 2 Cor. i. 20.; that is, in Chriſt; and with him, for the ſake of the redeemed. The promiſes are ſo precious, that God would not truſt them in the hands of man; nay, nor in the hands of angels; but only in the hands of the angel of the covenant, Jeſus Chriſt.

3. They are excellent and precious, in reſpect of their price. We uſe to value things according to the price that they coſt us: Now, the price of the promiſe was the blood of the Son of God; hence it is ſaid, 1 Pet. i. 18, 19. We are redeemed not with corruptible things, as ſilver and gold, but with the precious blood of Chriſt, as of a Lamb without blemiſh, and without ſpot. Would we not think that thing dearly bought, that ſhould coſt us the blood of one ſon, or of one daughter, nay, of one only ſon? How precious then is the purchaſe that coſt the blood of God's only Son? Let this ſtir us up highly to prize the promiſe.

4. They are excellent and precious, in regard of the reality of them. The promiſes are not vain toys, or empty notions; nay, all the promiſes are ſo many pardons, ſo many bleſſings, ſo many bounties, ſo many ſubſtances of the greateſt reality that can be imagined. Gold is counted the heavieſt metal; and, the purer the gold is, the weightier it is. And all the promiſes are as gold ſeven times tried, and purified in the fire. You read, Heb. xi. 1. that faith is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not ſeen. How ſo? becauſe faith does ſee the ſubſtance afar off laid up in the promiſe. The believer ſees and weighs them in the balance of faith, and finds them ſubſtantial; and therefore, ver. 13. the worthies died in the faith, not having received the promiſes; but having ſeen them afar off, they were perſuaded of them, and embraced them. The ſtars are of a vaſt wonderful bigneſs; but they ſeem not to be ſo, becauſe they are at ſuch a vaſt wonderful diſtance from us, even many millions of miles; ſo thus the ſaints ſaw the promiſes afar off, as many great luminaries and lights, and embraced or ſaluted them: and, did they embrace ſhadows? No; they were ſolid things. That muſt be a reality with a witneſs, that hath the attributes of God to fill it up: every creature hath ſo much weight as it hath of God in it; every promiſe is filled up with God's love, with his mercy, power, faithfulneſs, and all the names of God; they have a whole God to fill them up. Take heed, therefore, leſt there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God, by neglecting to live upon the promiſe.

5. The promiſes are excellent and precious, in regard of their certainty and immutability. Riches have wings, and flee away; honours have wings, and flee away; frames have wings, and flee away: but God may as ſoon ceaſe to be God, as not to be true to his word, and ſure in his promiſe: learn, therefore, to be ſure of the promiſe, that you may have ſomething that will bide by you, and ſtick cloſe; ſurely they ſhall not fail. Though all men forſake thee, ſaid Peter, yet will not I: but the promiſe ſays more, Surely and certainly, though all men forſake thee, yet will not I; though friends and relations, health and ſtrength, and life forſake thee, yet will not I; though frames, enlargements, and enjoyments fail thee, yet will not I. All fleſh is graſs, and the goodlineſs thereof as the flower of the field; the graſs withereth, and the flower fadeth, but the word of the Lord abideth for ever, Iſa. xl. 6, 7, 8. You will take the word of a great man, becauſe his word is his honour: but God hath done more than paſſed his word; for he hath added his oath, Heb. vi. 17. Therefore God willing more abundantly to ſhew unto the heirs of promiſe the immutability of his counſel, confirmed it by an oath; that by two immutable things, in which it is impoſſible for God to lye, we might have ſtrong conſolation. O what a happy people are you, for whoſe ſake he is willing to ſwear? And, on the contrary, How muſt they be among the worſt of men, that will not truſt God with his word and oath! Is not his honour concerned to make good the ſame? If the promiſes were to be made good by angels, we might queſtion them: but God being the Promiſer, and ſo obliging himſelf to be the Performer, how can you queſtion them? they are ſure; Though my houſe be not ſo with God, yet he hath made with me an everlaſting covenant, well ordered in all things, and ſure; this is all my ſalvation, and all my deſire, 2 Sam. xxiii. 6. Hence I ſhall add,

6. The promiſes are excellent and precious, in regard of their fulneſs. All your ſalvation lies there, according to that word juſt now cited: what can you deſire, that is not in the promiſe? What ſalvation do you need, that is not here? The promiſe contains ſalvation from ſin, from the guilt of ſin, from the filth of ſin, from the power of ſin, from the ſting of ſin, from the ſtain of ſin, from the fruit of ſin, from the fountain of ſin, and from the very being of ſin at length. Here are promiſes of ſalvation from wrath, from the law, from juſtice, from death, from hell, from the world, and from the devil, and unreaſonable men; ſalvation from troubles, and reproaches, and fears, and doubts, and faintings; ſalvation from deſertion and deſpondency, from wants and weakneſs, from wrongs and injuries done to your names or otherwiſe: ſalvation from all woes and wearineſs; ſalvation from backſliding and apoſtacy; ſalvation from plagues and all imperfections: innumerable poſitive ſalvations and mercies; pardoning mercy, ſin-ſubduing mercy, healing mercy, conquering mercy, comforting comforting mercy, upholding mercy, grace-increasing mercy, and perfecting mercy; sanctifying mercy to sanctify all providences, all crosses, all relations; defending mercy, strengthening mercy, helping mercy, following mercy, enlightening, enlivening, enlarging mercy; mercy for supplying your wants, dispelling your fears, covering your infirmities, hearing your prayers, ordering all things for your good; and salvation to everlasting life, glory, and immortality.—I have in these few words named as good as fifty pieces of salvation contained in the promise of the new covenant: but though I should go on to mention a thousand, yet the text will say more; this is all my salvation. There are promises here for all sorts of men; for kings and subjects; for noble and ignoble; for parent and child; for master and servant; for ministers and people; for husband and wife; for married and unmarried; for them that have children, and them that are barren; for these that are whole, and these that are sick; for them that are prisoners, and them that are in debt; for the blind, and the lame, and the diseased; for the soldier and the seaman; for the living and for the dying.—O the infinite variety that lies in the promise! What an infinite treasure is here, that cannot be exhausted! There can be none poor that have a promise; there can be none rich that want a promise; and none so rich as these that have the promises: Godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come, 1 Tim. iv. 8. Some will say of a monied man, O! he is worth God knows what. Indeed it is an idle way of speaking; why, what do they mean? such an one is worth even a belly-full of earth, and a back-load of thick clay: Lord, deliver me, says David, from the men of the world, which have their portion in this life, whose belly thou fillest with thy hid treasure, Psal. xvii. 14. Only believers have a true fulness; and only God knows what they are worth: the promise is full of God; and God only knows what is God's worth: he that fills the pipe with the spring, only knows what a believer is worth. As it was said of Jacob, Who can count the dust of Jacob? so, who can count the treasure of the believer? As the heaven is full of stars, so the Bible is full of promises, and the promise full of blessings, suiting all cases and conditions. Oh then! that there should be such a treasure, and we should not know it, nor be acquaint with it; no not one of twenty. Let this be matter of humiliation, and let the believer be more careful to live upon the promises, seeing they are so excellent and precious.—So much for the excellency of the promise.

[2.] Consider the excellency of the life of faith upon the promise, for moving you to live upon the same by faith: and the excellency thereof may be viewed in these particulars following, besides many others that might be added.

1. The life of faith upon the promise is a most quiet and peaceable life; Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trusteth in thee, Isa. xxviii. 3. Men would live at ease and quiet, but they seek this life among the creatures, where it is not to be found; they that seek it there, will find themselves deceived. Greatness and honour in this world, is mixed with gall and vinegar, instead of sweetness. A life of true peace and contentment is not to be had in the creature: all things in this world cannot put us in such a peaceable condition as we would desire, and that because the creature is a mixed thing, and a mutable thing.

(1.) It is a mixed thing. The best life here below hath some sweet, and some bitter; some good, and some bad; some rest, and some trouble: and it does not fall out so by accident, but by divine ordination. There is not all quietness to be had in meat and drink, nor all rest to be had in the bed; the best of counsels are not all good, nor the best of armies all strength: nay, it is a mixed contentment that is here below.

(2.) It is a mutable thing, as well as mixed. All creatures have their changes; like the moon, sometimes increasing, and sometimes decreasing; and like the sea, now ebbing, and now flowing. Sometimes we are in a high and honourable, anon in a poor and miserable condition; merry to-day, and sad to-morrow: therefore, says Christ, Cease from man, whose breath is in his nostrils. The creature is both mutable and momentany; it vanisheth, and cannot give any content; Your fathers, where are they? Where is your husband, woman? Why, this day in the warm bed, to-morrow in the cold grave. Where is your wife, man? To-day in the bosom of the husband, to-morrow in the bosom of a coffin. The very quintessence of all the creatures cannot yield the least drop of happiness, nor a grain-weight of solid peace: it is only a God in Christ that can give satisfaction to the soul; therefore he says, Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it. If beauty, riches, honour, should promise any such things they would be liars; There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked. They are like the troubled sea, that cannot rest, but still cast forth mire and dirt. Whether the waters of the sea ebb or flow, they are never at rest; whether they run north or south, they are still in motion; so the wicked, which way soever they turn, they are never at rest. But now, soul, come here, and you may have the life you desire to live; true rest and quiet is in the life of faith, and nowhere else. It is by faith on the promise that a happy event is secured: you need not trouble yourself here, but only use the means, and leave the event to the Lord; as Jacob, Gen. xliii. he must starve, or send his beloved son Benjamin away: well, says Jacob, If it must needs be so, take now your brother, and arise, and go again, and take money with you: he uses the mean, and then he puts all into the hand of God; God almighty give you favour before the man, ver. 14. To this purpose, Paul goes bound in the Spirit to Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befal him; save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, that bonds and afflictions abide him: but none of these things trouble me, says he; neither count I my life dear to me, Acts xx. 22, 23, 24. Faith is a casting the burden upon the Lord, on which the soul is easy; Cast thy burden on the Lord, and he will sustain thee, Psal. lv. 22. Whatever care it hath, it devolves it on the Lord, and so keeps no anxious care behind, and hath its warrant from the Lord; Be careful for nothing, but in every thing, by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, make your request known to God, Phil. iv. 6. There is nothing here ado, but to pray and give thanks, and to leave it on God to make answer for all. Men that live by sense cannot do so; but as the creature fails and changes, so does their hope and trust fail and change; but faith answers all doubts and objections, dissolves all fears, and has has happineſs bound up in God's glory; I will both lay me down in peace, and ſleep; for thou, Lord, only makeſt me to dwell in ſafety, Pſal. iv. 8.

2. The life of faith on the promiſe, or upon Chriſt by the promiſe, is the moſt free and independent life that the creature can live here in this world, while others live but a bare ſervile life, even while they think that they are free. I name two pieces of freedom that the believer hath, beſides many that might be mentioned.

(1.) It is a free life in oppoſition to the law, as a covenant, both in the command and curſe of it. — On the one hand he is free from the command of the law, as a covenant of works; he is no more obliged to do, that he may live: he is not under the law, but under grace, Rom. vi. 14. Though he be more than ever under the obligation of the law, as a rule of obedience, for the love of Chriſt conſtrains him thereunto, and to teſtify his gratitude, to glorify his Lord and his God; yet he is under no obligation to it as a rule of acceptance: nay, he does not owe it a farthing, as it is a condition of life: he holds his title to life another way, even by Chriſt's obedience unto death. — Hence alſo, on the other hand, he is free from the curſe of the law; Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us, Gal. iii. 13. Being a child of promiſe, and living upon it, he is no more a child of the threatening nor of the curſe, but delivered from all liableneſs and obligation to vindictive wrath. This is an article of our faith, however debated by ſome*; an article which, I think, is worth the contending for, and that for ſeveral reaſons.

1. Becauſe it is an article of our Bible, declaring that there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt, Rom. viii. 1.; and that the law hath nothing to lay to their charge, becauſe they are free from it, ver. 2. and are not under it.

2. It is an article of our Confeſſion of Faith, founded on the ſcripture, and to which we are ſolemnly bound by National Covenants, "That "the believer is not under the law as a cove- "nant of works, to be thereby either juſtified "or condemned †:" and if the law cannot condemn them, how can they ever be liable to that vindictive wrath, which is nothing elſe but law-condemnation?

3. To aſſert this obligation of the believer, and liableneſs to hell, is inconſiſtent with the perfection of juſtification; for which our Larger Catechiſm ſays, in point of juſtification, "That the believer is freed from the reveng- "ing wrath of God, and that perfectly in this "life ‡."

4. To bring the believer under this obligation, by his new ſins, is derogatory from the perfection of that glorious righteouſneſs; that law-fulfilling, juſtice-ſatisfying, and wrath-appeaſing righteouſneſs of Chriſt, with which the believer is inveſted. This robe of righteouſneſs is put upon him, and it ſhall never be taken off him again: for, the righteouſneſs of God, which is by the faith of Jeſus Chriſt, is unto all, and upon all that believe, Rom. iii. 22. It is upon him for ever, without any intermiſſion or interruption, ſo long as his union with Chriſt remains firm; and, behold, he is bethrothed unto him for ever. It is true, the believer ſins deſerve hell; and, I think, they deſerve it more than the ſins of others, becauſe they ſin againſt more love and light: and the more their ſins are, the more are they liable to fatherly wrath and chaſtiſements, as our Confeſſion declares ‖: but from the deſert of ſin, to infer an obligation to hell, or vindictive wrath, which is all one, were to deſtroy the very nature of pardon, which removes the obligation to wrath, but cannot remove the deſert of ſin. The intrinſical demerit of ſin flows from the very nature of ſin, and cannot be ſeparate therefrom; whereas obligation and liableneſs to hell flows from the threatening of the law, which, being fully execute upon the Surety, juſtice itſelf would be injuſtice, to demand or bind over the believer to another ſatisfaction, or threaten him with wrath, though the threatening ſhould never be execute. "For, "ſay ſome, it is ſure as to the event, that be- "lievers will never go to hell, though yet their "ſins make them liable to it." This is very weak in my opinion: for, it was ſure as to the event that he ſhould never go to hell, before ever he was a believer; the decree of God, and the death of Chriſt in his behalf, ſecured that matter before ever he was born; but now, upon the imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, he is not only ſecured as to the event, but ſecured from the obligation to everlaſting death. As, by Chriſt's active obedience, the believer is intitled to heaven; ſo, by his paſſive obedience, the believer is ſecured from obligation to hell: his freedom from obligation to death and hell ſtand as firm upon Chriſt's dying, as his title to life upon his doing. And as the imputation of Chriſt's active righteouſneſs, not only ſecures the event that the believer ſhall go to heaven, but gives him an actual title thereto; ſo the imputation of Chriſt's ſatisfaction, and paſſive obedience, not only ſecures the event that he ſhall not go to hell, but ſecures his freedom from all obligation thereto. And now, how the believer, that remains ſtill intitled to eternal life, ſhould notwithſtanding be liable to eternal death, is what I do not think any ſhall be able to make me underſtand. If a believer's new ſins make him liable to eternal death, then they would alſo deſtroy his title to eternal life; and ſo both parts of his juſtification would be at once overturned.

Whatever contradiction this doctrine meet with, I little regard it, unleſs theſe and the like arguments can be ſolidly anſwered, which I gladly deſpair ever to hear. Believers are not the children of a law-threatening, let be children of wrath, as they were before union to Chriſt: nay, they are the children of promiſe, not the children of the bond-woman, but of the free, as Iſaac; and the more faith, the more of this freedom is diſcerned. And therefore the life of faith, I ſay, is a free life, in oppoſition to the bondage of the law.

(2.) It is a free life in oppoſition to the bondage of ſin. And this follows of conſequence from the former freedom: becauſe they are free from the law, therefore they are from the dominion and ſlavery of ſin; Sin ſhall not have dominion over you; for you are not under the law, but under grace, Rom. vi. 14. The law of the Spirit of life in Chriſt Jeſus, hath made me free from the law of sin and death, Rom. viii. 2.; that is, the covenant of works, called the law of sin and death, because it binds sin and death upon us, till Christ set us free: so it is explained in that little tract annexed to our Confession and Catechisms, intitled, The Practical Use of Saving Knowledge. It is the believer only that is free from the servitude of sin, while the rest of the world are servants and slaves thereunto, however they imagine themselves to be free. The rich man thinks his riches serve him, when, in very deed he serves them, and is a slave to them; the ambitious man thinks his honour serves him, while yet he is a slave to it; the carnal man thinks his lusts and pleasures serve him, while yet he is nothing but a slave to them; For we ourselves also were sometime foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving diverse lusts and pleasures, Tit. iii. 3. The wicked are the devil's drudges, their chains rattle at their heels: faith only gives liberty, and makes a man live a free and independent life, insomuch that he depends upon none but God only: My soul, wait thou only upon God, says David. The world is mightily mistaken in the choice of their condition; they desire to live an independent life, and to be beholden to none, and servants to none; but they seek this life among the creatures, where it is not to be found: it is only attained by the believer, who lives by faith upon a promising God.

3. The life of faith upon Christ in the promise, is the most fixed and unchangeable life that a soul can live in this world: it is not liable to such mutations and changes as the life of sense is. He that lives in the changeable creature, as oft as the creature changes and dies, so oft does he, and lives a restless life: as Nabal's heart died away; so the life of unbelievers is up to-day, and down to-morrow: but faith lives upon a living God, and it is a living faith; the more of this life, the more of fixedness; My heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord, Psalm cxii. 7. And then is the man more in case to serve the Lord without distraction, and to glorify him; My heart is fixed, I will sing and give praise, Psal. lvii. 7. and cviii. 1.

4. The life of faith, on the promise, is a most spacious life; whereas the opposite is but a narrow and strait life, and hath hardly room to turn: for, we may soon come to an end of all perfection amongst the creatures; as of the beauty of Absolom; the wisdom of Ahitophel; for there is not enough in the creature: The eye cannot be satisfied with seeing, nor the ear with hearing, Eccl. i. 8. We cry still, Give more, though we have never so much. Alexander wanted elbow-room, when he wanted another world to conquer. There is room enough for the body on earth, but not for the soul; because the soul is a vast thing, a noble spirit. But now faith hath heaven and earth to walk in at pleasure: it hath its turns with God; yea, God and all his perfections to walk in: I will walk at liberty, for I seek thy precepts; or, as it is in the Hebrew, I will walk at LARGE, Psal. cxix. 45.

5. The life of faith is a most social life. If a wicked man would live this life, he must indeed forsake his bad company, but he will have better: yea, as we say of the society of some people, they are no company; ill company is worse than no company: but, by faith, we converse with God, and Christ, and the Spirit; with a glorious Trinity, three in one, Eph. ii. 18. and iii. 12. Hence may the believer, that lives by faith, say, as Christ said, John viii. 16. I am not alone; why? The Father was with him: so the believer is not alone, the whole glorious Trinity is with him; and he is never left alone, for God says to him, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee, Heb. xiii. 5. Yea, by faith he enters upon a society with a heavenly company; see Heb. xii. 22, 23. Hence,

6. The life of faith is a most honourable life. To live upon the promise is very honourable, and that both subjectively, with respect to the believer; and objectively, with respect to God.

(1.) View it subjectively, with respect to the believer. What an honourable life is that of faith? It is to live above the world; and this is the honour of all the saints: while these that are soaked in sense, do ly among the clay, and eat the dust like the serpent; the believer lives a glorious life, having little or nothing ado with the creatures; Our life is hid with Christ in God, Col. iii. 3. They have a heaven before their time, while by faith they will what God wills, and are swallowed up in God. O what an honourable life, to live in God, and upon him!

(2.) View it objectively, with respect to God, it is honourable; for it brings honour and glory to him; Abraham staggered not at the promise through unbelief, but was strong in the faith, giving glory to God, Rom. iv. 20.: he gave honour to God by believing. God is more beholden, so to speak, to the poor believer, that lives by faith, than to the greatest potentate in the world, that lives not this life of faith.

QUEST. What GLORY does faith bring to God?

ANSW. Even glory to all his attributes and perfections: his mercy, in making the promise; his faithfulness, in fulfilling the promise; his power in doing, notwithstanding all difficulties in the way; his wisdom, in ordering the fittest time and ways of accomplishment; his all-sufficiency, in filling the promise with all needful succour.

QUEST. What WAY does faith glorify God?

ANSW. Faith glorifys God, both by dependence and by returns.

1. By its dependence upon a promising God, when the believer does stay, and rest, and rely wholly upon the Lord: this the carnal man cannot do. Faith can say, I have a God, whom I dare trust, and that is able to keep that which I have committed to him. They that mistrust God, do dishonour him; but they that trust him, highly honour him. The believer trusts him, and intrusts himself to him; according to Psal. xxxvii. 5. Commit thy way to the Lord, trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass. The more we trust him with all our concerns, with our justification, sanctification, salvation, and all according to the promise, the more we honour him.

2. By its returns it does honour and glorify God; for the language of faith is, Not unto us, not unto us, O Lord, but to thy name we give glory, for thy mercy and for thy truth's sake, Psal. cxv. 1. And the believer's design is to study to return praise to God for all his goodness and mercy, saying, I will extol thee, O Lord, for thou hast lifted me up, Psal. xxx. 1. O! hast thou extolled and lift up me? And shall I not extol thee, and lift up my heart to praise thy name? What an excellent life is that, which thus extols God, and gives him glory in the highest!— I might here tell you what a pleasant life the life of faith is; O but wiſdom's ways are ways of pleaſantneſs! And what a profitable life it is; what rich incomes there are this way, while out of Chriſt's fulneſs the believer receives grace for grace: what a happy and holy life it is, and how a living by faith makes way for dying in the faith. But let theſe motives mentioned ſuffice. What I have ſaid, may make you ſee what an unſpeakable loſs you are at, if you be eſtranged from this life of faith on Chriſt by the promiſes.

2*dly*, I would now offer ſome directions, ſome means or helps, in order to the children of promiſe their living on the promiſe by faith. And,

[1.] If you would, as children of promiſe, live by faith on the promiſe; then be convinced of, and afflicted for your unbelief. And, are there not too many witneſſes to bear teſtimony that your life is rather a life of unbelief than faith? Conſider, for your conviction herein, theſe and the like witneſſes againſt you.

1. The firſt witneſs is the power and prevalence of ſin. Does not this prove that your faith is ſmall, and your unbelief great? For, the more faith, the more victory over ſin.

2. The ſecond witneſs is the ſtrength of worldly-mindedneſs. Where this prevails, it argues little faith: For, this is the victory whereby we overcome the world, even our faith; and, the more faith, the more is the heart determined to count all but loſs and dung for Chriſt.

3. The third witneſs is your fears and diſcouragements in the day of adverſity; For if thou faint in the day of adverſity thy ſtrength is ſmall, Prov. xxiv. 10.

4. The fourth witneſs, to prove your having little of the life of faith, is your eaſy and frequent falling before every temptation and motion towards ſin. No ſooner are you tempted, but conquered: corruption is ſo ſtrong, that you need not be tempted; you are ready to yield without a temptation, or with a very ſmall one.

5. The fifth witneſs, to prove your unbelief, is ſoul-barrenneſs and unfruitfulneſs, and ſoul-leanneſs; I ſaid, My leanneſs, my leanneſs, wo unto me, Iſa. xxiv. 16.

6. The ſixth witneſs is ſloth and careleſneſs, in ſpiritual duties, and in theſe duties that are moſt internal; ſuch as, ſelf-examination, ſelf-reſignation, ſelf-judging, ſelf-loathing; praying in the Spirit; watching over the heart; applying the blood of Chriſt, the death of Chriſt, the love of Chriſt, the word of Chriſt to your own ſoul. Faith acts eſpecially in theſe, and ſuch like duties; and the neglect of theſe argues little faith, and little of the life thereof.

7. The ſeventh witneſs of your unbelief is, the little growth in grace, and going from ſtrength to ſtrength; little preſſing towards the mark. No doubt, true grace may have its ebbing and flowing, its waxing and waning, and may, like the ſun, be under a cloud; but ſtill it runs its race, and now and then breaks out from under a cloud further advanced. However, does not your ſmall advance in the Lord's way, diſcover either the want or the weakneſs of faith? Together with,

8. Your low eſteem of Chriſt, and improvement of him as the Lord your righteouſneſs and ſtrength; ſeldom triumphing and ſaying, as it is, Iſa. xlv. 24. Surely in the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength.

If I ſhould bring forth all the witneſſes that would prove againſt you, that your unbelief is great, and your faith ſmall, they would be too many. If you were living by faith, then,

(1.) What means your ignorance of, and little acquaintance with the promiſes? God hath given you great and rare promiſes, and you are a great ſtranger to them. But, how can there be a fire without fewel? The promiſes are the fewel of the life of faith.

(2.) What means that ſinking of ſpirit that ſometimes takes place? Out of which David raiſed himſelf by faith; Why art thou caſt down, O my ſoul? Why art thou diſquieted within me? Hope in God; for I ſhall yet praiſe him. Does not your ſinking ſpirit argue that you are living as much upon the creature as upon God? As if one ſhould have one foot upon firm ground, and the other upon quick-ſand, certainly he would ſink into the quick-ſand; ſo a man having one foot upon God, and another upon the creature, he is moſt ſubject to fall to the creature.

(3.) What means the little comfort you have in the word, if you be living by faith? This is my comfort in my affliction, ſaid David, thy word hath quickened me. This argued his life of faith; whereas, where there is little comfort from the word, it argues little faith.

(4.) What means your heart-diſtractions about the events and ſucceſs of your affairs? Surely a life of faith would deſtroy that life of carking care: Oh! what if my trade ſhould fail me? what if ſuch a debt be loſt? what if ſuch a debtor ſhould break? what would I do?

(5.) What means your ſelf-confidence? Does not that diſcover much unbelief? The true circumciſion rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh. But, how ſoon are you ſwelled with an opinion of yourſelf, when you do or ſay any thing that you judge the world may think commendable? O! Is not this great Babel that I have built? May not I be famed for wiſdom and parts? Alas! Faith humbles the man that hath it, and ſays with the church, Iſa. xxvi. 12. Lord, thou wilt ordain peace for us; for thou haſt wrought all our works in us, and FOR us, as it is in the margin.

(6.) And eſpecially, what means your eſtrangement from Chriſt? To them that believe, he is precious, 1 Pet. ii. 7. But your little eſteem of him, and great eſtrangement from him, ſhews little of the life of faith. The more faith, the more high thoughts of Chriſt; beholding the glory of God ſhining in his face.

If ever, then, you will live the life of faith, labour to find out the unbelief that lurks in your boſom. Search out your infidelity, and ſay with yourſelf, Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief. Go and lament your unbelief before the Lord, in a corner or a cloſet, and ſay, Oh! what an unbelieving creature am I? How ready am I to ſink, with Peter, by reaſon of the weakneſs of faith? How little do I ſee and admire the beauty of Chriſt? How many witneſſes are there againſt me of my unbelief? Shame yourſelf for it before the Lord, and conſider what a poor, mean, baſe life you have for want of faith, and how ſoon you ly in the bottom of the mire and dirt, when you might live above, even with Jeſus Chriſt. Till you be convicted of unbelief, you will juſt remain among the creatures, and think it is good to be there. Again,

[2.] If you would, as children of promiſe, live by faith on the promiſe, then labour to be well well acquaint with the promiſe. It is one thing to talk of the promiſes, and another thing to be acquaint with them. How will you love the promiſes, or live on them, if you do not know them? Therefore ſtudy a due acquaintance with them: and, to help you in this, there are four things relating to them, that would be a profitable ſtudy, namely, 1. The worth of them. 2. The diſtinction of them. 3. Your intereſt in them. 4. The law of the accompliſhment of them.

1. Study the worth of the promiſe, as exceeding great and precious, in all the ſix reſpects that I have formerly taught. See them to be an invaluable treaſure: none but God knows the riches of them, in their Author, ſubject, price, reality, immutability, variety and fulneſs. And ſee that you ſtudy theſe things well, not contenting yourſelf with the hearing of them, but by ſerious meditation of the precioufneſs of the promiſe. O believer, learn to know what you are born to: for, Didſt thou know the gift of God, and who it is that ſays to you, live by the promiſe, and what a godly inheritance the promiſes are, ſurely you would be more taken up in aſking of the Lord Jeſus, And he would give you living water out of theſe wells of ſalvation, John iv. 10.

2. Study the diſtinction of the promiſes, and the variety of them, that you may be able to find out, on all occaſions, promiſes ſuitable to your neceſſity, and ſeaſonable. A believer cannot be in that condition, wherein he may not have recourſe to a promiſe fitted for him to ſerve him in his need, if he be acquaint with them diſtinctly; but for a child of God to live in the midſt of promiſes, and yet not know where they ly, he is like a wounded, ſick, or diſeaſed man, that is in the midſt of an apothecary's ſhop, and knows not where the boxes or glaſſes with the ſalves, or ointments, or cordials are, that ſhould help him; he is as ready to fall upon the thing that would hurt and harm him, as upon the thing that would help and heal him; he is, as it were, in a wilderneſs. Believers ſhould have the promiſes, in a manner, at their finger-ends; yea, treaſured up in their hearts; Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not ſin againſt thee.

It were good, I think, and profitable for a believer's advancing in a life of faith, to make a catalogue of the promiſes, as they travel through the ſcriptures morning and evening. Gather together the promiſes that relate to the ſoftening of the hard heart; then the promiſes that relate to the ſubduing of corruption; next the promiſe that relates to the healing of backſlidings, and ſo on; taking a liſt of the promiſes, and ſeeing all the promiſes are Yea and Amen in Chriſt; and Chriſt is called the Covenant of the people. Notice how the promiſes are in him, and belong to him and his ſeveral offices: reduce the promiſe of Chriſt, to the offices of Chriſt; for example, his threefold office, of Prophet, Prieſt, and King.

(1.) There are promiſes of wiſdom and knowledge, counſel, conduct, direction, and reſolution of doubts; theſe belong to Chriſt, as a Prophet, and are to be reduced thereunto.

(2.) There are promiſes of pardon, juſtification, peace, joy, acceptance with God; theſe belong to Chriſt, as a Prieſt, and are to be reduced to that office.

(3.) There are promiſes of victory over ſin, ſubduing iniquity, ſupplying of wants, protection and defence; theſe belong to Chriſt as a King, and are to be reduced to that office.

Could you thus, were it with a pen, or by whatever other means you can, reduce the promiſe to the offices of Chriſt, it would be a ready way to have recourſe to them in time of need; and alſo it would help in the right manner of pleading the promiſes. How deſirable and pleaſant would it be, to go to ſuch an office, and plead ſuch a promiſe there, ſaying, Lord, does not this belong to thee as a Prophet to do ſo and ſo, as a Prieſt to fulfil ſuch and ſuch a word, and as a King to accompliſh ſuch and ſuch a promiſe! Could you bring Chriſt and the promiſe together, and then the promiſe and the office together, it would be a mighty advantage, eſpecially to theſe that know not where to have a promiſe, nor how to plead the promiſe. Therefore ſtudy, in this manner, the diſtinction of the promiſes.

3. Study your intereſt in the promiſe. If you ſhould know of never ſuch a fair and rich inheritance, while yet you know of no right and title you have to it, what would it avail you? Endeavour therefore to clear your title. People give no reſt to themſelves, with reſpect to their earthly inheritance, till they have ſettled their title: and ſo ſhould you do in this, and much more; otherwiſe you will diſcover your unbelief, inſtead of faith, if you take more care for your inheritance and title in earthly things, than you do in heavenly. The outward call of the word of grace, and goſpel-diſpenſation, clear your general title and claim to the promiſe, ſo as to encourage and warrant your fleeing to it, believing it, and embracing it by faith. But moreover, believer, you have a ſpecial title to, and intereſt in the promiſe, that believers want: ſeek to have the Spirit of the Lord clearing that up to you, that you may live by faith joyfully; and the joy of the Lord may be your ſtrength. The more you know your intereſt in it, the more freely will you betake yourſelf to it, and make improvement of it, to the glory of God, and your own ſpiritual good.

4. Study the law of the accompliſhment of the promiſes, and that here God keeps a reſerve in his own hand, as to the time, as to the mean, as to the method, and as to the meaſure of accompliſhing the ſame; The viſion is for an appointed time; but at the end it ſhall ſpeak, and not lie; though it tarry, wait for it, becauſe it will ſurely come, it will not tarry, Hab. ii. 3. The Lord is a God of judgment, and bleſſed are all they that wait for him, Iſa. xxx. 18. The Lord will accompliſh his word; but it may be through fire and water that he will bring you to a wealthy land; it may be through many difficulties, and in ſuch a manner, as you did not expect: but fear not, only believe; and, If thou wouldſt believe, thou ſhouldſt ſee the glory of God. However, He that believes, makes not haſte; but waits the Lord's time and way of coming.

[3.] In order to your living by faith on the promiſe, as being a child of promiſe, ſtudy always your caſe and the promiſe together, and endeavour to adapt the promiſe to the caſe, and the caſe to the promiſe: be it an afflicted caſe, or a deſerted caſe, or a backſliding caſe, or whatever ſort of caſe it is, ſtudy the caſe and promiſe together; for, if you ſtudy your caſe without out the promise, you are in danger of despairing; and if you study the promise without studying your case, you are in danger of presuming. Therefore, for your ignorant case, study the promise that relates to Christ as a Prophet, and lay the case and the promise together: for your guilty case, study the promise that relates to Christ, as a Priest; and lay the case and the promise together: for your captivated case, when overpowered by your enemies, study the promise that relates to Christ, as a King; and compare the case and the promise together.—Also, amidst the distresses of saints, study Christ in the promise as the King of saints; amidst distresses of nations, study Christ in the promise as the King of nations; amidst distresses of the church, study Christ in the promise as the Head of the body the church. And whatever your need be, believer, know that in the promise there is your provision; you are a child of the family, and God hath said, He that provides not for his family, is worse than an infidel. And now, O believer, think on this, will not God provide for his family? will you make him worse than an infidel? Oh! beware of that blasphemy! Confide in him for your provision, and be not anxious, though you have very little in hand, you have a great stock upon bond: the greatest part of your estate now, O believer, lies in bills and bonds; and it is kept for you in your Father's hand. If you study your case and the promise together, it is the way to improve the promise in every case; and this is what you are called to.—Improve the promise as an antidote, against all temptations; as a cordial, under all your tribulations; as a spur, to all your duties. If the love of God and Christ in the promise constrain you to duty and service, it is a gospel-walk. O let the love and grace of the promise influence you to love, so as you may be able to say, O it is love brings me to hear; it is love makes me read; and love makes me pray; and love makes me meditate; and love makes me go about my duty, and wait on ordinances!—Again, improve the promise for the encouragement of others that are believers. There is a promise, Where two or three are met together in my name, I will be with them; therefore, let the saints gather together, keep together, converse together, pray together, and encourage one another in the Lord's way, forasmuch as you see the day approaching.—Yea, improve the promise for an encouragement to your graceless friends: tell them, on all fit occasions, O there is a promise that did me good; the Lord thereby opened my heart, and killed my corruption, and quickened my soul. What know you but you may be an instrument of gaining their souls, and engaging them to seek after the Lord?—In a word, improve the promise in every case: in darkness, improve the promise of light; in weakness, the promise of strength; when under the power of corruption, the promise of sanctification; when under a sense of guilt, improve the promise of pardon; when in bondage, the promise of liberty; when in straits, the promise of supply; when in danger, the promise of protection; when in confusion, the promise of direction; when tempted, the promise of support; when dejected, the promise of comfort; and when deserted, the promise of the Lord's return.

[4.] In order to live by faith on the promise, O believer, that art a child of promise; see that you neglect not the use of the means and ordinances of God's appointment. Though the promise is free and absolute, yet the use of the means does not detract from the freedom and sovereignty of the grace of God manifested in the promise. You are to wait on him in his own way, otherwise you tempt God, and throw away the promise and all. See the direction given, Luke xxiv. 49. Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye at Jerusalem, till ye be endowed with power from on high. The promise will be accomplished, but tarry ye at Jerusalem, and wait in the use of means: as the mariner does at the harbour, when his ship is upon ground; he does not fall a dragging and pulling at the ship; no: he knows his own power will not do it, but waits at the shore till the water return, and the wind blow, and then he makes his way: he hath no command of the water or wind; nay, the God of providence orders the return of these as he pleases; but he waits at the water-side till providence order matters unto his mind: so, believer, you can do nothing of yourself; you are, perhaps, standing aground, it is vain for you to think of pulling and dragging at your own heart; it is not in the power of your dead heart to live and believe, nor have you the ordering of the floods of the Spirit and the wind of Heaven's influences: but wait you at the shore, in the use of means, till the Lord himself return, and till you be endowed with power from on high; then shall you make way heaven-ward.

QUEST. What MEANS shall I use, in order to the living on the promise by faith?

ANSW. There are some of these means I have already mentioned; and, besides these, there are both outward and inward means of faith, and the increase thereof. And, besides these outward means of waiting on the word and sacraments, and all the instituted ordinances of God, I shall mention these following means further for the increase of faith in the promise; and they are partly outward, and partly inward means.

1. Pray for what is promised; for it is in the way of prayer that the promise is accomplished. Thus you see the psalmist exercised, Psal. cxix. 49. Remember the word unto thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to hope: and thus were the disciples exercised, saying, Lord, increase our faith.

2. Look to the promise for all the grace you need; and expect not qualifications in you, till you get all out of the promise: Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Can dry ground produce water of itself? Nay, the promise must first water the dry ground; I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground, Isa. xliv. 3. Our hearts are like dry ground, a dry pump. You know, the pump of a ship will draw up no water, if it be altogether dry, till once some water be poured into it, and then it will bring up water: even so it is here; you may pump at your hearts till you break them, before you can draw up one drop of grace; so dry are they, that they can yield none, unless Christ himself be first poured in by his Spirit, according to the promise. Stay not away from taking hold of the promise, because your hands are defiled, and must first be washed: nay, though your hands be never so polluted, stay not on the pretence of wiping them first, but take Christ as thou art, that he may wash and make thee clean himself; when he sees thee polluted in thy blood, he says unto thee, Live.

3. Look

3. Look after Chriſt in the promiſe. The promiſe is the veſſel, Chriſt the treaſure; the promiſe the cup, Chriſt the liquor: be not ſatisfied with the cup, or with the taking it by the handle; but make application, drink out of that cup.

4. See the reaſon of your believing, as well as the greatneſs of the promiſe to be believed, leſt you think it too good news to be true: therefore, ſtill know the reaſon of your faith; that is, the faithfulneſs and power of God: give him the glory of his faithfulneſs, Heb. xi. 11.

5. Conſider the promiſes already made out, (1.) To Chriſt the Head. His head is lifted up, after he hath drunk in the brook; according to the promiſe. This is a pledge that all will be made out to his people. (2.) To the members of his body. The promiſe fulfilled to one, is an argument for faith to another; as the promiſe made to Joſhua, belongs to all believers, Heb. xiii. 5.

6. Conſider your experience compared with the promiſe, and ſay, He hath delivered, and doth deliver; and in him we truſt that he will deliver. The experiences of others may be uſeful alſo for the increaſe of faith in the promiſe, Pſal. xxxiv. 5, 6.

7. Let the children of promiſe be fruitful in bringing forth children; I mean, in bringing forth the fruits of holineſs and righteouſneſs, as children of promiſe, in an evangelical manner. And thus grow in grace upon the tree of the promiſe, which hath brought them forth as branches thereof: this is the way to grow in the knowledge and faith of the goſpel-promiſe, John vii. 17. And the more again of the goſpel you know, the more fruitful will you grow.

Perhaps ſome believer may object. Oh! I think I was better long ago than I am now, notwithſtanding that I dare not deny but the Lord hath given me ſome further knowledge of the goſpel.

I anſwer, That the Chriſtian may grow evangelically, when he does not grow morally. For clearing of this, know that the believer hath two roots, out of which he brings forth fruit. —There is a legal root, or principle, ſo long as there is any remainder of the covenant of works in him, which will be to his dying day; and this preſſes him to duty upon moral and legal grounds, from legal rewards and threatenings, fears and hopes; and this root may bring forth ſome fruits of tenderneſs and obedience: but this bond-woman muſt be caſt out with her children and her fruit, as the apoſtle ſays in the context, Gal. iv. 30.—There is alſo an evangelical root, or principle, which is Chriſt in the believer, or the new covenant, when through faith the man brings forth fruit to the new Huſband, Rom. vii. 4. Now, at the firſt converſion, both theſe principles do remarkably concur, a mixture of law and goſpel both, as it were; and hence a great deal of fruit, a great deal of prayers and tears: but though there be much fruit, yet it is of a mixed nature; partly legal, partly evangelical. Now, when the legal principle, or the dominion of the firſt huſband, the law, dies and languiſhes, and little remains but the goſpel-principle, the fruits may indeed appear leſs bulkſom, but they may be better in their kind. Some indeed may leave their firſt love, and turn more legal and carnal; but I ſpeak of what may and ought to take place, and will do ſo in a growing believer: the ſecond covenant gets place, and draws him to duty; and his work may be leſs, but yet better than formerly. As it is with a young apprentice to a carpenter or wright; he hacks and cuts more, and caſts many more chips; but, when he hath learned the trade better, he caſts not ſo many chips, but he makes better work: ſo, believer, perhaps you prayed more formerly, when the law was concurring; and, perhaps, you was always in bondage, except when you was upon your knees, while the law was preſſing you on; you then ſeemed more tender and ſedulous: but now you pray better, and with more faith and love; you cleave cloſer to Chriſt, depend more on him, and draw more out of this fountain. Let your growth be evangelical; and if it be ſo, it will, by no means, encourage ſloth, but will advance a holy goſpel-liberty, and diligent activity in the ways of God.

8. Keep alive a pregnant ſenſe of your want; for the promiſes are the ſupply of want; and wants are for the honour of the promiſes. Wants and promiſes are correlatives. A goſpel-ſenſe of want, and of nothingneſs and unworthineſs, encourages faith in the promiſe; as it was with the apoſtle, Rom. vii. 24, 25.—There is a legal ſenſe of want, that diſcourages believing, when the ſenſe of corruption weakens faith, and diſcourages faith; when a man would have ſomething in him to boaſt of, or glory in, and whereby he may bribe the free grace of God. Some believers are ſo legal, they would indeed ſwim in the water of the promiſe, but they would have ſome bladders of their own to be under their arm-pits to bear them up, and cannot truſt to the free grace of God in the promiſe to hold up their head. A child of promiſe, that is born of the promiſe, is born up by the promiſe too; but you would have ſomething in yourſelf. Nay, you muſt be content to ſay, It is not in me, it is not in me, but in the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength.—But there is a goſpel-ſenſe of want, that encourages faith, and furthers it. The apoſtle laments that ſin dwells in him, and cries out, O wretched man that I am! who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death! yet it did not damp his faith; he cries out alſo, I thank God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. The pſalmiſt alſo ſays, Iniquities prevail againſt me: but it did not damp his faith; as for our iniquities thou wilt purge them away. Again, ſays the pſalmiſt, I am poor and needy; yea, but he inſtantly adds, the Lord thinks upon me. The right ſenſe of ſin and want does not damp believing, but forces the man to Chriſt and the promiſe; it drives him out of himſelf, and his own righteouſneſs and ſtrength. Happy the man that ſees nothing but Chriſt left him, nothing but a promiſe, and that hath nothing elſe to rely on, Iſa. xl. 29, 30, 31. He gives power to the faint, and to them that have no might he increaſeth ſtrength; them that have nothing elſe to confide in; but ſee what follows, Even the youths ſhall faint and be weary, and the young men ſhall utterly fail. Theſe that have ſtrength of their own, and ſtand by their own ſtrength, they will fail; but they that wait upon the Lord, ſhall renew their ſtrength: they that have no dependence but on the Lord, they ſhall CHANGE their ſtrength; for ſo is the Hebrew word; and it is borrowed from them that have change of garments for every day: ſome have a garment for the houſe, and a garment for the field; a garment for work, and a garment for travel; a garment for the Sabbath-day, and a garment for the week-day; a garment for their ſeveral pieces of buſineſs, walking ing or working: so, they that wait on the Lord, shall renew their strength; they shall CHANGE their strength according as they need it. If they need a little strength, for some lesser work, they shall have it; if they need greater strength, for greater work, they shall have it: they shall renew and change their strength; they shall have flying strength, running strength, walking strength, according as they need: for so it follows, They shall mount up on wings as eagles, they shall run and not weary, and walk and not faint.

Thirdly, The third branch of the exhortation, that I promised, was to all in general, namely, that they would improve the promises, whereof believers are the children, in order to their first or further believing and laying hold upon Christ, as held forth to them in the gospel-promise; and that they would apply the promise, so as to apply Christ therein.

If it be asked, What connexion is there betwixt applying the promise, and applying Christ? or, how is Christ in the promise, and the promise in Christ, so as I may know, that in dealing with the promise, I deal with Christ; and in applying the promise, I apply Christ?

ANSW. Though Christ be in heaven, and we upon the earth; yet the promise is the means of communication betwixt Christ and us, as the apostle explains it, Rom. x. 6, 7, 8. Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven, to bring Christ down? or descend into the depths, to bring up Christ? but the word is nigh, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is the word of faith which we preach. Christ is brought near to us by the promise, as a fountain of water is brought near to a city by pipes and conduits: perhaps the fountain is several miles distant from the city, yet the pipes convey the water of it, so near, that you may put your mouth to the pipe and drink, or your empty pitcher to it and fill it; and thus you apply, improve, and make use of the water of the fountain, though at a great distance, by the means of the pipe that is at hand: so it is here; Christ is the fountain, in whom is all the fulness of the Godhead; the promise is the pipe: though the fountain-head be in heaven, yet the pipe is at your hand, at your mouth; yea, in your mouth, and in your heart, says the apostle. Is not that word of his, namely, the gospel, and the promise of it, called the word of faith? because it is both the object of faith, the word which we are to believe; and the means of faith, by which we believe; for faith comes by the hearing of it. Is not the word of promise in your mouth, when we are speaking it, and you reading it? and in your heart, when either you are, or should be thinking of it? What remains but that we put the mouth of faith to the pipe, and then we take in the water of life? O for the Spirit of faith, in opposition to that legal spirit, which the apostle is here discovering! ver. 3. He is telling that the law requires doing for life, ver. 5.; and that the gospel requires no doing at all, but exhibites Christ doing in our room, which we are to believe he hath done. You need not be anxious, might the apostle say, about ascending to heaven to bring Christ down to do all for us, he hath descended for that end already; nor about descending to the grave to bring Christ up, why, he hath already risen and ascended, as a token that he hath finished the work: so that there is no more doing for life necessary; Christ hath done all: and this word, concerning Christ the great doer in our room, is nigh; the promise is nigh. He left this pipe when he ascended to heaven, and appointed ministers to turn the cock of the pipe, and let out the water, saying, Preach the gospel to every creature; and he promised that his Spirit should run through that pipe till he come back again, saying, Lo, I am with you always, to the end of the world. How? the pipe is as long as to reach from heaven to earth, from Christ's heart to your heart, as well as from his mouth to your mouth, Isa. lix. 21. Now, Christ is in the promise, while this pipe conveys Christ and his Spirit to us; and the promise in Christ, while the pipe is fixt into his heart, all the promises being in him Yea and Amen: YEA, in point of affirmation, he having affirmed them in his veracity; and AMEN, in point of confirmation, he having confirmed them by his death. Even as the pipes, or conduits, may be said to be in the water, and the water is in the pipe; so Christ is in the promise, and the promise is in Christ; and to take the promise in Christ, or Christ in the promise, comes much to the same thing. Only, now Christ in the promise is come down, and he is as nigh to you, as your mouth and your heart is nigh to you. The gospel is the great pipe, and all the promises are like so many branches and lesser pipes for conducting the water to this, or that part of the city, and even to private houses, for the benefit of particular persons, according as the contrivance is ordered: Behold, here is a contrivance of infinite wisdom, from the conduit of the covenant that stands fast in Christ Jesus: there are many pipes full of water, for refreshing; full of wine, for chearing; full of milk for nourishing souls, Isa. lv. 1. And we are come to set the pipe to your mouth; Ho, every one that thirsteth, come to the waters; he that hath no money, come; buy wine and milk without money, and without price.

Now, here is a pipe for every mouth, by which you may draw in Christ to your heart, though he be in heaven, and you on earth.—Is there any blind and bewildered soul here, that needs a drink of instructing grace out of Christ's fulness? Behold, there is a pipe for your mouth; I will lead the blind in a way they know not, and in paths which they have not trode.—Is there any guilty soul here, that needs a drink of pardoning grace? there is a pipe for your mouth, in that promise; I, even I am he that blotteth out thy transgressions, for my name's sake, and will remember thy sins no more.—Is there any filthy and unclean soul here, that needs a drink of sanctifying and purifying grace? why, there is a pipe for your mouth; I will sprinkle clean water on you;—and from all your filthiness and idols will I cleanse you.—Is there any bound, fettered soul here, that cannot believe, cannot repent, cannot pray, and whom Satan hath bound for many years, and needs a drink thus to your soul of bond-loosing, Satan-conquering grace? why, there is a pipe for your mouth; The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, says Christ, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound.—Is there any backsliding souls here, that cannot keep a word that they say to God, whose heart hath beguiled them a hundred times, a thousand times, and needs a drink of healing grace, healing water, to cure the disease of backsliding, so far, as that you shall never fall back into perdition? here is a pipe for your mouth; Return, backsliding children, I will heal your backslidings, I will love you freely.—Is there any dead soul here, that needs a drink drink of quickening grace? there is a pipe for your mouth; I am the resurrection and the life: the hour cometh, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of man, and they that hear shall live.—Is there any deserted soul here, that needs a drink of never-leaving nor forsaking grace; there is a pipe for your mouth; I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.—Is there any dispirited, weak, fainting soul here, that needs a drink of strengthening grace? there is a pipe for your mouth; My grace shall be sufficient for thee; my strength shall be made perfect in thy weakness: He gives power to the faint, and increaseth strength to them that have no might.—Is there any dejected soul here, that needs a drink of comforting grace? there is a pipe for your mouth; I will send the Comforter, and he shall testify of me, who am the Consolation of Israel.—Is there any overmastered soul here, that hath been long led captive by the power of some strong corruption, and needs a drink of sin-conquering grace? here is a pipe for your mouth; He will subdue our iniquity, and cast all our sins into the depths of the sea.—Is there any tempted soul here, that needs a drink of devil-vanquishing grace? here is a pipe for your mouth; The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent; The God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly.—Is there any backward soul here, that needs a drink of drawing grace? here is a pipe for your mouth; When I am lifted up, I will draw all men after me.—Is there any death-frighted soul here, that is afraid for the king of terrors, and needs a drink of death-conquering grace? here is a pipe for your mouth; Death shall be swallowed up in victory; O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction.—Is there any secure, stupid soul here, whose conscience is seared as with a hot iron, and that needs a drink of awakening and convincing grace? here is a pipe to your mouth; I will send the Spirit, and he shall convince the world of sin.—Is there any awakened conscience here, who, under a sense of sin, are under fears of damnation, and need a drink of hell-conquering grace? here is a pipe for your mouth; The blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin: Deliver his soul from going down to the pit, I have found a ransom.—Yea, is there any heaven-daring, atheistical, prayerless, graceless, ungodly wretch here, that hath been living without God, and without thoughts of eternity to this day; and that, whether they see their need or not, yet need to be plucked as brands out of the burning, and need a drink of saving and converting grace? behold there is a pipe for your mouth; There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob.

Old sinner, young sinner, man, wife, and child, that is capable to understand what I am saying; whatever grace you stand in need of, the pipe of the promise for conveying that grace from Christ to you, is at your very mouth; yea, saith the apostle, the promise is near, the word is near, in thy mouth, and in thy heart. Is not the Lord beating at every door of your hearts by these words of grace? And, oh! wo and misery! will you let all this grace fall by you? Will you spit it out of your mouth, and let the devil run away with it out of your heart, saying, O such a word is not to you, it is not to the like of you? Why, the devil is a liar; and, because he is so, he is perhaps tempting you, through unbelief, to make God a liar. God says, To you is the word of salvation sent; the promise is to you and to your children, and to all that are afar off; it is to you to be received and believed by you: and, will you say it is not to you? What! will you put away the grace of God from you? Wherefore came I to this place, but to tell you that this grace is tendered to you, to every one of you? And I tell you it, in his name, who hath given me a charge to go and preach the gospel to every creature; Christ is seeking entrance into your hearts by the means of this word; and so near is he come to you by this long pipe of the promise, that you cannot miss Christ and salvation with him this day, without shutting him out at the door of your heart and mouth both. Oh! will you open your mouth wide, and he will fill it; and cry to him, saying, Lord, come and open my heart; open the everlasting doors, and come in, O King of glory! Welcome him, and welcome his word of grace, and take him at his word, saying, Lord, be it to me according to thy word, according to thy promise of pardoning and purifying grace, saving and sanctifying grace.

O sinner, sinner! the promise of pardon concerns you, guilty you; the promise of purifying concerns you, filthy you: you shall not have it to say that you wanted grace, and knew not where to get it; for the God of all grace is come near to you, with a profer and promise of all grace in Christ. If death, judgment, and eternity were as near to your view, as this promise of grace is come this day, you would give all the world for a promise: and will you now thrust it out of your heart, and eject it out of your mouth? What can you expect in this case, but that God will spue you out of his mouth, and thrust you out of his presence, and cast you in among devils and damned spirits to all eternity! What! will you prefer a black devil, a base world, a brutish lust, before Christ, and all his promises of grace and glory! O God forbid. Fy for shame! will you reject the word of grace, the promise of mercy that God is putting into your mouth by this glorious gospel? O better chuse to die upon the spot, than lose such a sweet morsel, a taste of grace, and a foretaste of glory. However it be, though you would reject this grace, as I fear the most part will do, yet I must tell you, that the kingdom of God is come unto you, and you shall not have it to say, that you came to Glendovan such a day, and got nothing; for I take you all witnesses, and heaven and earth to witness, that you have got an offer of grace, of Christ, and a promise that is worth ten thousand worlds.

May a promising God set it home upon you, that, being begotten to a lively hope, by the virtue of the promise, it may be said of you, that, Now, brethren, as Isaac was, you are the children of promise.

SERMON

SERMON XXXIX,-XLII.

The SAVING SIGHT; or, a View of GOD in CHRIST. *

JOHN xiv. 6. —He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father.—

MY dear friends, the great, glorious, and inviſible God hath been, this day, condeſcending to make himſelf viſible to us, notwithſtanding of the great diſtance betwixt him and us. There is a three-fold diſtance that mars our ſight; there is a natural diſtance, that hinders the ſight of the natural underſtanding; there is a local diſtance, that mars bodily ſight; and there is a moral diſtance, that impedes ſpiritual ſight: all theſe, in certain reſpects, take place here.—In reſpect of the infinite being of God, there is an infinite natural diſtance betwixt him and us, who are but finite creatures, inſomuch that we cannot ſee him.—In reſpect of the manhood of Chriſt, now aſcended into heaven, there is a vaſt local diſtance betwixt him and us, that put him out of our view, who are on the earth.—In reſpect of the infinite holineſs of God, there is an infinite moral diſtance betwixt him and us, that we cannot perceive him through the dark clouds of ſin and corruption that over-caſt our ſouls. But ſuch is the condeſcending mercy of our God, that he is pleaſed to come near to us in ſuch ways as tend to remove theſe impediments out of the way of our ſeeing of him; and therefore, that the infinite natural diſtance betwixt him and us may not impede our ſeeing of him, he is pleaſed to come near to us in a natural way; I mean, by aſſuming our nature, that we may ſee him there; and that the vaſt local diſtance betwixt God, Chriſt, and us, may not interrupt our ſeeing of him, he is pleaſed to come near in a ſacramental way, that we may ſee him myſtically and ſacramentally there; and that the moral diſtance betwixt him and us may not impede our ſeeing of him, he comes near in a ſpiritual way, by his Spirit and grace, enlightening the eyes of ſinners, and ſcattering the clouds of ſin and corruption.

My friends, it is our infinite mercy, that we have other ways of ſeeing God than the blinded nations that want the goſpel. The way in which they may ſee God, ſo as to leave them inexcuſable, is common to them and us both. It is now ſome more than five thouſand years ſince the great and inviſible God erected the pillars of heaven, and earth, that the inviſible things of him, from the creation of the world, might be clearly ſeen and underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead, Rom. i. 20.; but becauſe no ſinner can, in this glaſs, get a ſaving ſight of God, he hath been pleaſed to ſet other glaſſes before our eyes. It is now more than ſeventeen hundred years ſince the ſame inviſible God, in the perſon of the eternal Word, came down in the likeneſs of fleſh and blood, that his glory might be made viſible to us through the glaſs and vail of our nature; The Word was made fleſh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, John i. 14. But after his work on earth was finiſhed, by his doing, dying, and riſing again, he aſcended into heaven, far out of our view; therefore, the ſame inviſible and eternal God, in ſuch a wonderful and ſtupendous manner, does farther obſcure his glory, to make it evident to our dull apprehenſion, and viſible even to our earthly ſenſes, that he hath, this day, come down in the likeneſs of bread and wine, that he might accommodate himſelf both to our nature and neceſſities; and that being thus, though ſpiritually, yet ſacramentally and viſibly preſent, we might ſee and apprehend his inviſible glory, love, grace, and mercy, under theſe viſible elements, inſomuch, that henceforth we need not be at a loſs to reſolve that ſeeming contradiction and wonderful myſtery, namely, that the infinite mercy of God in Chriſt is ſo deep, that no thought can fathom it, and yet ſo obvious, that every eye may ſee it, nor at a loſs to read Moſes's riddle, Heb. xi. 27. for now it is eaſy, eſpecially to the believer, whoſe faith is the evidence of things not ſeen, to explain how one may ſee him that is inviſible.

This goſpel ſacrament, we have been celebrating, is a glaſs, wherein we ſee Chriſt; Chriſt is a glaſs, wherein we ſee God: if our eyes, therefore, have been opened, by the Spirit of God, we have ſeen a great ſight this day. May I aſk you, then, where you have been, and what you have ſeen about this ſolemnity? Have you been at Jeruſalem, and ſeen the King's face? If you have ſeen the ſacramental elements, I aſk, what have you ſeen there? If you ſaw no more but bread and wine, ſurely you have been blind; for, Chriſt was there evidently ſet forth, crucified before you. But, if you have ſeen Chriſt there, then I aſk again, What have you ſeen? It may be you do not know what you have ſeen; for, as you, that have got no ſight of Chriſt, are at a greater loſs than you are capable to know and underſtand; becauſe, having miſſed a ſight of Chriſt, you have miſſed a ſight of God, and ſeen nothing worth the ſeeing: ſo you that have got a ſaving ſight of Chriſt, you have got a greater ſight than readily you are aware of. Perhaps you have ſeen Chriſt, and yet, with Philip here in the text, do not know that you have ſeen the Father. Perhaps God hath been in this place, and you knew it not: but if you have got a ſight of Chriſt, and yet do not know how much, and how far you have ſeen, or whether it be the true Chriſt you have ſeen, then be informed of this matter out of his own bleſſ-

* This piece appears to be the ſubſtance of four ſermons. The firſt was preached on the Sabbath evening, immediately after the celebration of the Lord's Supper, at Dunfermline, May 21ſt, 1727.; and the reſt, at the ſame place, after the ſolemnity. It hath undergone three impreſſions.

ed lips, He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father. O! what an happy ſolemnity might we ſay this hath been, if it could be ſaid of a multitude here, as it was ſaid of the nobles of Iſrael, Exod. xxiv. 11. They ſaw God, and did eat and drink; or, that their eyes have ſeen the King, the Lord of hoſts! I doubt not but there are many here that came to Dunfermline, with a deſign that they might ſee the King in his beauty, at this ſacramental occaſion, and to ſee the glory of God. Well, the brighteſt glaſs that ever God's glory was ſeen in, hath been, and is yet ſet before you. The great ſacramental ſight is, in a ſpiritual manner, as well as with bodily eyes, to ſee the ſacramental elements, ſo as in the elements to ſee Chriſt, and in Chriſt to ſee the Father: and though the ſacramental table be drawn, yet, while Chriſt is preſented to you in this goſpel, the glaſs is not yet withdrawn. You have a new occaſion to ſee him again; and not only to ſee him, but alſo to ſee whether you have ſeen him formerly, yea, or not; and to ſee what you have ſeen in him; for, he that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father.

Having, before this ſolemnity, ſpoken to the preceding part of the verſe, and ſo to the connexion of this text with the context, I have the leſs ado this way; only, Chriſt having, ver. 6, 7. diſcovered himſelf as the only way to the Father, and as the Father's great repreſentative, inſomuch, that as there is no coming to the Father, but by him, nor ſeeing of the Father, but in him; ſo there is none that come to him, can miſs the Father, or fail of winning to the Father by him; and none that look to him, can loſe a ſight of the Father in him: notwithſtanding this ſweet doctrine, Philip having ſaid, Shew us the Father, ver. 8. the Lord Jeſus here ſpeaks to him both by way of reproof and inſtruction; he meekly reproves him, ſaying, Have I been ſo long with thee, and yet haſt thou not known me, Philip? that you ſhould talk ſo ignorantly, after I have taught you ſo plainly, that, in knowing me, you know the Father: but our Lord, who is ſuch a meek reprover, is alſo an indefatigable inſtructer; and therefore again he kindly inſtructs him in the words of the text, ſaying, He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father. As it is an ignorant, ſo it is a needleſs petition for you, Philip, to aſk of me, ſaying, Shew us the Father, ſince I have told you, that there is no way of knowing the Father ſavingly, but by knowing me; and if you knew me more, you would know the Father more: let me, therefore, again tell you, Philip, and, in you, all my diſciples to the end of the world, He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father.

In which words you have the believer's fiducial viſion, which is much the ſame ſpecifically with the beatifical viſion that he will have in heaven for ever, notwithſtanding of whatever gradual difference there will be betwixt them. Particularly,

1. You have the act of this viſion, it is called a SEEING; and being expreſſed by ſight, it imports a clear and diſtinct knowledge.

2. You have the immediate object of this viſion, namely, CHRIST, who is here ſpeaking, He that hath ſeen me; not only ME, as God co-eſſential with the Father; ME, as the Son of God, the ſecond perſon of the glorious Trinity; but alſo ME, as God-man, Mediator betwixt God and man; ME, as the brightneſs of the Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon.

3. You have the ultimate object of this viſion, namely, the FATHER; he hath ſeen the Father; that is, either the Father eſſentially conſidered, as God; one God with the Son and the Holy Ghoſt; or perſonally conſidered, as the firſt perſon of the glorious Trinity, and as the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And here is the fartheſt ſight of faith's proſpect in time the far end of faith's view, even to ſee the Father in Chriſt.

4. You have here the connexion betwixt the act of ſeeing the immediate object, with the act of ſeeing the ultimate object, flowing from the eſſential oneneſs betwixt the Father and the Son, notwithſtanding of their perſonal diſtinction: He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father. Of this myſterious oneneſs, as the foundation of this connexion betwixt ſeeing him, and ſeeing the Father, the Lord Jeſus inſiſts, ver. 10. ſaying, I am in the Father, and the Father in me. And again, ver. 11. I am in the Father, and the Father in me. Hence the doctrine I incline to treat of, for explaining this purpoſe more fully, is this:

DOCT. That ſuch is the oneneſs betwixt Chriſt and the Father, that he that hath ſeen Chriſt, hath ſeen the Father.

Though believers, who have ſeen, and ſee but through a glaſs darkly, may not diſtinctly know that they have ſeen the Father, when they have ſeen Chriſt, as the context clears; yet ſuch is the myſterious unity and oneneſs betwixt glorious Chriſt, and his glorious Father, that a ſaving ſight of Chriſt does neceſſarily carry in it a ſaving ſight of the Father, as Chriſt declares, He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father.

And now, my friends, ſo great is the ſubject I am propoſing to ſpeak of, that frequently I have had thoughts of giving it over, as too ſublime and glorious for me to handle. It is ſuch, that if we could ſpeak aright about it, not only elect ſinners, but elect angels, who pry into the goſpel myſtery, might be edified by it. If we ſhould eſſay to ſpeak of the heaven of heavens, and all the glory of it, it would not be ſuch a great ſubject as to ſpeak of ſeeing Chriſt, and of ſeeing the Father in him. They are blind that do not ſee the need we have of the aſſiſtance of the eternal Spirit, who proceeds from the Father and the Son, when we are thus eſſaying to ſpeak of ſeeing the Father in the Son. Therefore, O endeavour, with your hearts, to lift up a prayer, for the conduct and help of the Spirit of God and of glory, that in ſpeaking and hearing of ſuch a ſubject, we may ſee the glory of Chriſt, and the glory of the Father in him.

The method I propoſe to follow in clearing and illuſtrating this doctrine, as the Lord ſhall be pleaſed to aſſiſt, is this,

I. To ſpeak of that ONENESS that is betwixt the Father and the Son.
II. To offer ſome thoughts, or remarks, concerning a ſaving ſight of Chriſt.
III. To ſhew in what reſpects it is, that they who ſee CHRIST, ſee the FATHER.
IV. How, and in what manner the Father is ſeen in Chriſt.
V. Offer ſome grounds of the doctrine, ſhewing whence it is, that they that ſee Chriſt, do ſee the Father.
VI. Draw

VI. Draw some inferences from the whole, for application thereof.

I. The first thing proposed is, to speak of the ONENESS that is betwixt the Father and the Son. This oneness is declared by our Lord Jesus; and, indeed, it is a mystery of pure revelation, and what we could not otherwise know; and it is what we cannot fully comprehend: yet it is the object of our faith, ver. 10, 11. Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? It is what our Lord Jesus tells his disciples they shall more fully know afterwards, ver. 20. At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father; and you in me, and I in you. Our Lord Jesus expressly asserts this oneness, John x. 30. I and my Father are one. He makes it the ground of all Christian unity, John xvii. 21. That they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; that they also may be ONE in us. Hence also our Lord Jesus, much in the same manner as in the words of the text, John xii. 44, 45. He that believeth on me, believeth on him that sent me. He that seeth me, seeth him that sent me. Such then is the oneness betwixt the Father and the Son, that he who hath seen Christ, hath seen the Father. But to explain this oneness a little more particularly, we must consider,

1*st*, Negatively, that we are not to understand this oneness in respect of personality; the Father and the Son are not one person, but two persons: the Father is one person, and the Son is another person of the adorable Trinity. They are distinct in respect of personal properties, namely, it is proper to the Father to beget the Son; and to the Son to be begotten of the Father; even as it is to the Holy Ghost to proceed from the Father and the Son, from all eternity. I hope I need not stand to enlage upon this to you, that make use of our Catechisms, with the scripture proofs; only carry still along with you this personal distinction, the Father is not the Son, nor the Son the Father; the Father was not incarnate, nor did humble himself and die for sinners as Christ did; the Father sent the Son.—Neither are you to understand this oneness betwixt Christ and the Father in respect of Christ's humanity; the two natures of Christ must not be confounded: the humanity of Christ is not one with God; the humanity is unite to Christ the Son, not to the Father: it is Christ who is Mediator, God-man, in one person. Hence, when Christ says, John xiv. 28. My Father is greater than I, it must be understood of Christ's humanity, and of Christ in the form of a servant; who yet, in regard of his divine nature, is in the form of God, and thinks it no robbery to be equal with God, Phil. ii. 6, 7. Therefore,

2*dly*, And positively, we are to view this oneness betwixt the Father and the Son in these following respects.

1. There is an oneness in point of nature and essence betwixt them; Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are but one God; Hear, O Israel, the Lord, our God is ONE JEHOVAH, Duet. vi. 4. There are three that bear witness in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Spirit, and these three are ONE, 1 John v. 7. Hence it is said, In our Lord dwells all the fulness of the God-head bodily, Col. ii. 9. The Father and the Son, then, are one in essence and being with the Holy Ghost: "These three are "one God, the same in substance, equal in "power and glory."

2. There is an oneness betwixt the Father and the Son in point of essential properties and attributes; Christ is, together with the Father and Holy Ghost, one Spirit, "infinite, eter-"nal, unchangeable, in his being, wisdom, "power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth." —Is the Father omnipotent? so is the Son; He is the mighty God, Isa. ix 6.—Is the Father omnipresent? so is the Son; Lo, I am with you always to the end of the world, Matth. xxviii. 20.; and, Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.—Is the Father omniscient? so is the Son; Thou that knowest all things, knows that I love thee, John xxi. 17. Christ said to Nathaniel, When thou wast under the fig-tree, I saw thee. Here was a token that none in the world knew but Nathaniel himself, upon which he was convinced of the Deity of Christ, which made him say, Truly thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel.—Is the Father eternal? so is Christ; Before Abraham was I am.—Is the Father immortal? so is Christ; The King eternal and immortal.—Is the Father immutable? so is Christ; The same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, and without all variableness or shadow of turning.

3. There is an oneness betwixt them in point of work; the works that are proper only to God are ascribed to Christ. I cannot stand upon all the scriptures that are cited by orthodox divines on these subjects. In short, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work, says Christ.—The work of creation is ascribed to him; All things were made by him, John i. 3. Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the work of thine hands, Heb. i. 10.—The work of preservation also, and the sustentation of the world; Upholding all things by the word of his power, Heb. i. 3.—The work of redemption; Acts xx. 28. Feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.—The donation of the Spirit, is his work; When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me, John xv. 26. And, I will send him unto you.—The raising of the dead out of their graves, is his work, and that both in a spiritual and corporal sense; The hour comes, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live, John v. 25.—The government of the world now, and the judging of the world at the last day, is his work; The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son, John v. 22.; and he will judge the world in righteousness.—The institution of ordinances and offices in the church, is his work; Mat. xxviii. 19. Go ye and teach all nations. See Eph. iv. 11.

4. There is an oneness betwixt the Father and the Son in point of worship and honour; and therefore all men are called to honour the Son even as they honour the Father; John v. 23. He that honours not the Son, honours not the Father which sent him. All manner of worship due to the Father is due to the Son; therefore says Christ, John xiv. 1. Ye believe in God, believe also in me. And Psal. ii. 12. Kiss the Son lest he be angry. See Rev. v. 12, 13. and vii. 10, 11.

5. There is an oneness betwixt them in point of will. Though, as man, he hath a will distinct from his will as God, and so distinct from the Father's will, yet subject to the divine will in every thing; Not my will, but thine be done. But as God, his will is one and the same with the Father's will, and therefore what the Father wills Christ wills; John iv. 34. My meat is to do the will of him that sent me: and again, I de- light to do thy will, O my God; lo, I come to do thy will.

6. There is an oneneſs of happineſs and felicity betwixt them. Rom. ix. 5. ſpeaking of the Jews, Of whom according to the fleſh Chriſt came, who is over all, God bleſſed for ever. Chriſt was from all eternity, and is the ever bleſſed God. There was a time, indeed, when the Son was humbled and made a curſe for us; but his eſſential glory and happineſs was never diminiſhed, however it was eclipſed: as God, he was as happy on the croſs, and in the grave, as ever he was.

7. There is an oneneſs betwixt them in point of intereſt; John xvii. 10. All thine are mine, and mine are thine, and I am glorified in them. This ſays, that they are both one in eſſence, and one in intereſt; there is no ſeparate or divided intereſt betwixt them. O happy ſouls that are intereſted in Chriſt! for the Father's intereſt and his are one and the ſame.

8. There is an oneneſs of affection betwixt them: the objects of the Father's love, are the objects of Chriſt's love; and the objects of Chriſt's love, are the objects of the Father's love; 2 Theſſ. ii. 16. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and God even our Father, which hath loved us. John xvi. 21. He that loves me ſhall be loved of my Father; and I will love him. Hence Chriſt ſays to his beloved friends, John xvi. 27. The Father himſelf loves you. Was it only Chriſt's love that brought him to die and ſuffer for ſinners? nay, it was the Father's love alſo that ſent him on that errand. See 1 John iv. 9, 10.

9. There is an oneneſs of dignity and authority betwixt them. Chriſt is the Angel of the covenant, of whom the Father ſays, Exod. xxiii. 21. Beware of him, and obey his voice,—for my name is in him; i. e. my authority is in him. His eſſential dignity and authority is the ſame with the Father's; he thinks it no robbery to be equal with God: he does not rob the Father of his authority when he makes himſelf equal with him; for, as God, the dignity and authority of both is one and the ſame; and as Mediator, he hath a donative right to all the power and ſovereignty; All power in heaven and in earth is given unto me, Matth. xxviii. 18.

10. There is an oneneſs betwixt them in point of ſupreme Deity, ſelf-exiſtence, ſelf-ſufficiency, and independency: Hence the ſupreme throne is called the throne of God, and of the Lamb, Rev. xxii. 1. Hence ſays the Father to him, Pſal. xlv. 6. compared with Heb. i. 8. Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever. And hence ſays he of himſelf, Iſa. xlv. 21, 22. There is no God elſe beſides me, a juſt God and a Saviour; and there is none beſide me. Look to me, and be ſaved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none elſe. Hence his name is JEHOVAH-TSIDKENU, Jer. xxiii. 6. The Lord our righteouſneſs. Hence alſo called JEHOVAH, Mal. iii. 1. and elſewhere. Hence Paul ſays, He is God over all, in the fore-cited Rom. ix. 5. And the apoſtle John, 1 John v. 20. This is the true God, and eternal Life. Hence alſo, theſe that get a ſaving manifeſtation of him, cry out with Thomas, My Lord and my God, John xx. 28. as ſeeing that in him dwells all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily: though, indeed, in point of perſonality, the Father is the firſt perſon; yet in point of eſſence, or eſſentially conſidered, Chriſt is the ſame, ſupreme, ſelf-exiſtent, ſelf-ſufficient, independent, inviſible, and eternal God, with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt. But I muſt not enlarge upon this point, that I may overtake the reſt. Only thus much ſhall ſuffice for a touch at that oneneſs that is betwixt the Father and the Son, that lays the foundation for the other part of the doctrine of Chriſt here, He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father.

II. The ſecond thing propoſed was, to offer ſome thoughts concerning the ſeeing of Chriſt, eſpecially a ſaving ſight of him in whom the Father is ſeen. What I would ſay on this head, may be laid open in the following remarks, for giving you a view of this matter, namely, ſeeing of Chriſt.

1. Remark, "That there are ſeveral ways where-"in natural men may ſee Chriſt to little advan-"tage." There is a bodily ſight of Chriſt, that many got when he was upon the earth; they ſaw him who was God, though yet they did not ſee God in Chriſt, nor believe in him; Ye have ſeen me, and believe not, John vi. 56.—There is a mental ſight of Chriſt, and a rational view of God, that natural men may have when they apprehend the inviſible things of God in the works of creation, Rom. i. 20. They may ſee it was an infinite power that made theſe viſible heavens, ſun, moon, and ſtars: and hence it is ſaid of the heathen, They knew God, yet glorified him not as God, ver. 21.—There is a ſpiritual kind of ſight of Chriſt that natural men may have by the common illumination of the Spirit. Thus Balaam had his eyes ſtrangely opened, and ſaw the viſions of the Almighty. Thus the apoſtates, Heb. vi. 4, 5, 6. were enlightened, and ſome are ſaid, through the knowledge of Chriſt, to eſcape the pollutions of the world; yet afterwards are ſo entangled therein, that their latter end is worſe than the beginning, 2 Pet. ii. 20.—Beſides, there is a wrathful ſight of Chriſt, that all the wicked world will have at the day of judgment; for, Behold, he comes with clouds, and every eye ſhall ſee him, and they alſo that pierced, and all nations ſhall wail becauſe of him. None of theſe are the ſight of Chriſt here to be underſtood: it is a ſaving ſight of Chriſt we ſpeak of.

2. Remark. "That there is a goſpel-ſight of "Chriſt, that is either more common to the vi-"ſible church, or more ſpecial to the inviſible." The more common is that which the whole viſible church have beyond the outfield of the heathen world, Titus ii. 11. The grace of God that bringeth ſalvation hath appeared to all men; i. e. to all the viſible church that have the goſpel preached to them; they have ſo far the objective revelation and diſcovery of Chriſt, and the glory of God's grace in him ſet before them. Like Chorazin and Bethſaida, they are lifted up to heaven, and highly exalted with goſpel-privileges, goſpel-ordinances, goſpel-offers, goſpel-ſacraments, the miſimprovement whereof brings them down to hell.—The more ſpecial ſight of Chriſt, that is peculiar to the church inviſible, is that which reſults from the ſubjective, internal, ſaving, and powerful revelation of Chriſt into the heart; he revealed his Son in me, ſays Paul, Gal. i. 16. Hence,

3. A third remark I offer is, "That the light "wherein Chriſt is ſavingly ſeen, is his own "divine light, Pſal. xxxvi. 9. In thy light ſhall "we ſee light." As we cannot ſee the natural ſun, but in his own light; ſo we cannot ſee the Sun of righteouſneſs, till he himſelf ariſe with healing under his wings: and this divine light wherein we ſavingly ſee Chriſt is common to

Father,

Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. It is in the Father's light, we ſee the Son; in the Son's light, we ſee the Father; and in the Spirit's light, we ſee both the Father and the Son. Hence the Father is ſaid to diſcover Chriſt. No man can come to me, except the Father draw him. It is written in the prophets, they ſhall be all taught of God: every man therefore that hath heard and learned of the Father cometh unto me, John vi. 44, 45.—The Father diſcovers the excellency of Chriſt to the ſoul; and the ſoul ſees him ſuch an excellent perſon, that it would give a world for him, not knowing all this time, that it is the Father of Chriſt that is diſcovering him: It pleaſed God to reveal his Son in me, ſays Paul; and again, God, who commanded light to ſhine out of darkneſs, hath ſhined into our heart, to give us the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, 2 Cor. iv. 6.—Again, the Son is ſaid to diſcover the Father. As the Father comes and courts a bride for his Son, ſo when the match is drawn up, then the Bridegroom ſhews to the bride her friends, and particularly the Father, of which more afterwards: No man hath ſeen God at any time, the only begotten Son, that is in the boſom of the Father, he hath declared him, John i. 18.—And then further, it is the Spirit that diſcovers both the Father and the Son, as he is both the Spirit of the Father and of the Son, he ſhews the Father in the Son, and hence is called the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of Chriſt, Eph. i. 17. He ſhall glorify me, ſays Chriſt, for he ſhall receive of mine, and ſhew it unto you, John xvi. 14.

4. Remark, "That the eye whereby Chriſt is "ſeen, is the eye of faith." As before ſaving illumination we are dark, and without light; ſo, before ſaving faith, we are blind and without ſight: therefore, as Chriſt, when he diſcovers himſelf, does, with the one hand, reveal his glory; ſo, with the other, he gives the eye to ſee his glory. All men are born blind, and remain ſo till Chriſt open their eyes, and give faith; for, he is the author and finiſher thereof. This faith is the only eye whereby Chriſt is now ſeen; he cannot be ſavingly ſeen otherwiſe: faith is therefore called the evidence of things not ſeen, Heb. xi. 1.; and thereby we look not at the things that are ſeen, but at the things that are not ſeen, 2 Cor. iv. 18. Thereby we ſee and behold, as in a glaſs, the glory of the Lord, 2 Cor. iii. 18. It is true, the glory of Chriſt did once paſs before man's bodily eyes, but yet none ſaw it but believers by faith; The Word was made fleſh, and we beheld his glory, John i. 14. It is true alſo, that the glory of Chriſt will appear glorioufly at the great day of his appearance; but then there will be no faith either on Chriſt's right or left hand, ſuch as now we ſee him by. The redeemed will have no faith, nor any uſe for ſuch faith as now; for then, ſight and love will put an end to faith. The damned, on the other hand, though they ſhall be no more unbelievers; for ſight and fear will put an end to their unbelief; yet their faith will be no ſaving faith then, but only ſuch as the devils now have, that believe and tremble: but from Chriſt's aſcending to heaven, till his coming again to judgment, faith is the only eye that can ſavingly ſee Chriſt. Hence,

5. Remark I offer, is, "That there are ſeveral "periods wherein Chriſt hath been, and is to be "ſeen by faith, particularly theſe four."—Firſt period was before his coming in the fleſh; thus Abraham ſaw him afar off; thus Iſaiah ſaw his glory; yea, and all the old-teſtament ſaints, by faith, ſaw him in the promiſe and prophecy at a diſtance, Heb. xi. 13.—Second period was after his coming, and before his death and ſuffering on the croſs; thus old Simeon ſaw him by faith, Luke ii. 30. Mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation. It was a great bleſſing to ſee Chriſt in the fleſh; but many did ſo, that yet did not ſee him believingly, as his true diſciples did, John i. 14.—Third period was after his death, before his aſcenſion; thus all the diſciples of Chriſt ſaw him, and were glad when they ſaw the Lord. Indeed, while he was yet lying in the grave, their faith was like to give up the ghoſt; alſo, we truſted, that it had been he that ſhould have redeemed Iſrael, but now he is crucified, dead, and buried: they were at a loſs to know, whether they ſhould repent of their faith or of their unbelief. Indeed the eye of faith was much tried, when Chriſt, the object of it, was brought ſo low: their faith had difficulties to grapple with, which ours want now, when we ſee him crowned with glory and honour.—Therefore, the fourth period is after his aſcenſion to heaven, till his ſecond coming; and in this period we, and all other believers, to the end of the world, remain while here; and the farther he is removed from the view of the eye of the body, the more properly is he the object of the eye of faith, which can behold him through the clouds, though he be in heaven, and we on the earth.

6. Remark I offer, is, "That there are certain "ſeaſons wherein Chriſt, in a ſpecial manner, is "ſeen;" particularly the day of converſion is a day wherein Chriſt is firſt ſeen: when Paul was converted, God revealed his Son in him. If you be a believer, and would know when you was firſt converted, it was even when you had the firſt view of Chriſt and his glory. It is by the power of this diſcovery of Chriſt that faith is wrought, while the goſpel comes not in word only to the ſoul, but in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance.—But again, ſometimes the diſcovery he makes of himſelf afterwards may be more ſenſible and remarkable, when, perhaps, on the back of a long deſertion, he returns, and ſays, I remember the kindneſs of thy youth, and the love of thine eſpouſals. I am the God of Bethel, where thou anointedſt the pillar, and vowedſt the vow unto me. Sometimes to ſhew his holineſs and goodneſs, as being the rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him, he is pleaſed to ſhew himſelf after a courſe of ſpiritual diligence. Thus Moſes prays and cries, ſaying, I beſeech thee, ſhew me thy glory; and accordingly, the Lord makes all his goodneſs paſs before him, Exod. xxxiii. 18, 19. Indeed, if there were more of Moſes's ſpirit, it would be better with us. We receive not, becauſe we aſk not.—Sometimes again, to ſhew his ſovereignty, and the freedom of his grace, he gives a ſight of himſelf to a backſliding child, and courts him back with kindneſs, ſaying, Thou haſt not called on me, O Jacob; thou haſt been weary of me, O Iſrael; thou haſt made me to ſerve with thy ſins, and wearied me with thine iniquities; yet I, even I am he that blotteth out thy tranſgreſſions for mine own ſake, and will not remember thy ſins, Iſa. xliii. 24, 25. It is, indeed, an amazing condeſcenſion, that the Lord ſhould pleaſe to give a glance of himſelf, even upon the back of hainous provocations; yet thus he is pleaſed many times to give them occaſion to ſay, It is the voice of my Beloved; behold, he cometh ſkipping on the mountains, and leaping upon the hills; making all the hills and mountains of sin, guilt, and separation, to melt down before him. And, indeed, nothing melts their hard heart so much as to see him thus coming.—Sometimes their suffering season is his time of shewing himself, and of their seeing him: If you be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are you; for the Spirit of God and of glory resteth on you, 1 Pet. iv. 14.—Sometimes a dying season is another time of their seeing him; thus Stephen, when they were stoning him to death, he looked up, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing at the right-hand of God.—There are, I say, certain seasons of their seeing Christ. But I proceed.

7. Remark I offer, is, "That there are various "respects and various degrees wherein persons "may be said to see Christ savingly;" particularly when he manifests himself to them, as he does not manifest himself to the world. See John xiv. 21, 22, 23. His people may be said to see him, when he makes them sensible of his gracious presence with them, and sensible of his special love towards them, and puts them in a condition to say, He loved me, and gave himself for me: and when, by this deep impression of his gracious presence, and sweet persuasion of his special love, through the powerful breathing of his Spirit upon them, he draws forth their graces to a lively exercise; lifts up the light of his countenance upon them; and makes them sit down under his shadow with great delight; when he clears up their interest in his love, saying, I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with everlasting loving-kindness have I drawn thee. In a word, one may be said to have seen Christ, when he comes with a word of grace, and work of power, and opens the locked heart, and melts the hard heart, and fixes the wandering heart, and humbles the proud heart, and heals the plagued heart, and draws the backward heart, and frees the fettered heart, spiritualizes the carnal heart, raises the drooping heart, helps and curbs the unbelieving heart, and comforts the dejected heart; and when he is pleased to give his convincing, quickening, strengthening, sanctifying, and directing presence: but these things I cannot enlarge upon, only there are various degrees of seeing Christ, in whatever respect his people may be said to see him. Some have more, and some less of this sight. Some are brought to the banquetting-house, to get a full meal; others receive but a crumb that falls from the table; and particular believers have not always, and at all times, the like measure and degree of the outletting of his favour. Sometimes the soul may be brought to the suburbs of glory, and get such a discovery of Christ, that he would be content the valley of vision were his burial-place, saying, with Simeon, Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation. At other times the view and discovery is of a lower degree, when faith is not riding so triumphantly, but fighting its way through many doubts and fears, trials and temptations, and sensible presence much withdrawn.

8. Remark is, "That there are several proper- "ties of a saving sight of Christ that tend to "give light concerning it." For instance, this sight of Christ is but imperfect here, and partial, in regard of what it will be hereafter, 1 Cor. xiii. 9. Now we know in part; and ver. 12. Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face. Indeed their sight is like a not-seeing, in comparison to what one day it will be.—Again, this seeing of Christ, though imperfect, yet it is unspeakable. Indeed, the joy that results from a sight of Christ is unspeakable; In whom, though now we see him not, yet believing, we rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory. Who then can utter or express the glory of Christ, the sight whereof raises that unspeakable joy?—This sight of Christ is supernatural; How is the glory of the Lord seen but by the Spirit of the Lord? 2 Cor. iii. 18. It is God that must bestow this blessing; flesh and blood cannot reveal Christ to a man: The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness to him; neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned; but God hath revealed them to us by his Spirit, 1 Cor. ii. 10, 14.—This sight of Christ is an amiable sight; for, He is altogether lovely. This makes his tabernacles amiable, because they see the glory of God there; and every thing in God that they see is amiable; yea, you are not to think that the children of God see only one side of God, as it were, and not another. Though the Lord shews but part of himself at once, now a lesser and then a greater part of himself, yet it is not to be thought as if they saw but one side of God and not another, or if he shewed his amiable side and concealed his terrible side; no, that which is most terrible in God to wicked men, that is also most amiable and lovely in the eyes of the saints; for a God in Christ is all amiable. His power, greatness, and justice, which the wicked abhor, appear to them in excellent glory.—Again, the sight of Christ here is frequently interrupted, it is only in heaven that the saints have the uninterrupted vision and fruition of God, without any cloud to darken their day; but here, no sooner does the heart begin to open to Christ some time, than, alas! he is gone; I opened to my Beloved, but my Beloved had withdrawn himself and was gone.—Again, this sight of Christ, however short and inconstant, yet is always sweet and satisfying; sweet and ravishing; His mouth is most sweet, says the church. O how sweet and satisfying are the smiles of his mouth! it is enough to make a heaven in the soul. How sweet are the words of his mouth! sweeter than the honey and the honey-comb. When he manifests himself in a word of grace, the sweetness is such, that all sweetness is but bitterness in comparison thereof. How sweet and satisfying is it when the day-spring from on high visits the soul, especially after a long dark night of temptation, desertion, and despondency, wherein the soul thought that God had forgotten to be gracious, and would never return. When the Sun of righteousness breaks out below the black clouds, even of sin and provocation, when the soul now sees the power and glory of God in the sanctuary, how is it satisfied as with marrow and fatness, and the mouth praises him with joyful lips!—Again, this sight of Christ is convincing, powerfully convincing; it carries so much evidence in it, as makes the soul cry out with Thomas, My Lord, and my God; He that believeth hath the witness in himself. Surely we do not see Christ sleeping; nay, it is with open eyes and an open face; All we with open face beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, 2 Cor. iii. 18. According to the measure and degree of the manifestation, it will have some evidence, even as a man seeing the sun, carries its own evidence along with with it; though the ſight be dark in compariſon of what it will be, yet it is convincing in itſelf.—And as it is convincing, ſo it is affecting. O! a ſight of Chriſt is moſt affecting, when it is a ſaving ſight; it affects with reverence, therefore it is ſaid of the diſciples, when they ſaw him they worſhipped him. It affects with joy; Then were the diſciples glad when they ſaw the Lord. It affects with holy fear; When I ſaw him, I fell at his feet as dead. It affects with wonder, and makes the ſoul cry out, RABBONI, who is a God like unto thee? It affects with ſelf-abhorrence; Now mine eyes ſee thee, wherefore I abhor myſelf. It affects with ſelf-abaſement; O what am I, and what is my father's houſe, that thou haſt brought me hitherto? It affects with penitency and godly ſorrow; They ſhall look on him whom they have pierced, and mourn. It affects with new vigour and courage; They looked to him, and were enlightened, and their faces were not aſhamed.

9. Remark is, "That there are many means "whereby, and glaſſes wherein we may ſee "Chriſt."—Sometimes he is ſeen in the glaſs of his outward works, the viſible creation ſhews forth his divine glory; the very heavens declare it, ſays the pſalmiſt; and the ſpiritual eye will ſee Chriſt in the creatures, though his glory is above the earth and heaven, Pſal. cxlviii. 13.; yet his glory is in the earth and heaven, and in all his works, ſmall and great, inſomuch, that though they cannot ſavingly diſcover him, yet theſe that have got a ſaving diſcovery of him, may ſee more and more of his glory whereſoever they caſt their eyes, were it but on a creeping inſect, or a graſs pile.—Again, ſometimes he is ſeen in the glaſs of his inward works, more eſpecially when he works effectually upon the heart, implanting the graces of his Spirit there, or afterwards making grace to grow, both in the root, by the increaſe of a holy and ſpiritual diſpoſition; and in the fruit, by a ſuitable goſpel walk and converſation. When he works any wonderful change upon the ſoul, whether it be yourſelves or others, and that you ſee he hath taken a gracious dealing with ſuch or ſuch an one, why, then you ſee there the finger of God; and that the Lord is near, his wonderous works declare.—Sometimes he is ſeen in the glaſs of his providences: common providences are common glaſſes, where he may be ſeen, whether they are judgment or mercy. As the Lord is known by the judgment that he executes, and by the mercy that he renews every moment, ſo his people will ſee him in a rod; they will ſee him in a deliverance; yea, the ſpiritual man will ſee more of the Lord in an ordinary meal, than the hypocrite ever ſaw at a communion-table. But there are alſo ſignal providences, wherein they get more ſignal views of him. When Abraham's knife was at his ſon's throat, he met with a notable providence; behold, a ram caught in a thicket by the horns, ready for him to ſacrifice in room of Iſaac. O! how much of God's glory did Abraham ſee in that providence! therefore he calls the name of the place JEHOVAH-JIREH, In the mount of the Lord it ſhall be ſeen. The Lord will provide remarkable proviſion, remarkable protection; and this or that remarkable providence hath been ſometimes the vehicle of a remarkable manifeſtation of the Lord's glory.—Again, he is to be ſeen ſometimes in the glaſs of the word; 2 Cor. 18. Rom. x. 6. John v. 39. Search the ſcriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they that teſtify of me. Here then we may ſee him in the types, in the prophecies, in the promiſes, in the doctrines of the word, as the Antitype of all the types, the ſubſtance of all the ſhadows, the truth of all the prophecies, the fulneſs of all the promiſes, the centre of all the truths and lines of the word. In the precept we ſee his holineſs; in the promiſe, we ſee his goodneſs; his juſtice, in the threatenings; his wiſdom, in the revelations of the word. Here a believer will ſometimes ſee Chriſt in a title or deſignation given him in the word. O the glory that is to be ſeen in that name JESUS, in that name IMMANUEL, in that name KING of SAINTS, KING of KINGS!—Sometimes in a reſemblance or ſimile; while he is reſembled to a roſe, for beauty; to a rock, for ſtrength; to a treaſure, for bounty; to a riſing ſun, for glory. In this glaſs the ſoul will ſee him infinitely beyond all reſemblances. However, when any light from heaven is ſhining, you have no more ado, as it were, but to open your Bible, and there ſee Chriſt.—Again, he is to be ſeen in the glaſs of his ordinances, whether public, or private, or ſecret; hence his people many times ſee him in a duty, they ſee him in meditation, they ſee him in prayer; ſometimes they ſee him in a ſermon; while the miniſter is opening the word, the Lord is opening their underſtanding to diſcern Chriſt there; while they are hearing a ſermon; yea, ſometimes while they are reading a goſpel ſermon they will have Chriſt in their hand, as it were, Chriſt in their mouth, Chriſt in their eye; yea, Chriſt in their heart.—Finally, in the ſacrament Chriſt is to be ſeen; for, in baptiſm he is repreſented by the water, and the ſpiritual eye may ſee him there; and in the auguſt ordinance of the ſupper he is repreſented by the bread and wine; there he may be ſeen and known in the breaking of bread. All the believing views of Chriſt, and ſights of him here-away are mediate, through the intervention of means and ordinances; not immediate, as they ſhall be above: Now we ſee through a glaſs darkly; but the time comes when the glaſſes ſhall be broken, and believers ſhall ſee him face to face, and ſee him as he is. Rev. xxi. 22. I ſaw no temple there; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it.

The 10th and laſt remark is, "That Chriſt "himſelf, who is the object of this ſight, is a "moſt glorious, full, and extenſive object." There is more to be ſeen in Chriſt than all the angels in heaven can tell. This is a larger field than we ſhall ever be able to travel over through all eternity. O what glory is to be ſeen in his natures and perſon, as God-man in one perſon! To ſee him in his miſſion and commiſſion, as the Sent and Sealed of the Father; to ſee him in his offices, relations, and excellencies; in his doing, ſuffering, dying, riſing, aſcending, ſitting at the right-hand of God, interceding, and coming again to judgment; to ſee him in his furniture for his work as Mediator betwixt God and man, as ſtanding ſo well affected to both parties and their intereſts, namely, his Father's honour and his people's happineſs both, and in whom both parties may confide: accordingly the Father truſts him with all the concerns of his glory; and well may his people truſt him with all the concerns of their ſalvation; yea, ſo furniſhed, that he is able to bring both parties together, and to decide the difference betwixt them, them, ſuch is his intereſt with God, and power with man. To ſee him in his fitneſs for us, as being a Prophet, to teach; a Prieſt, to ſave; a King, to ſubdue; a Phyſician, to heal; a Friend, to help in all caſes: as having merit, to juſtify; Spirit, to ſanctify; blood, to waſh; grace, to pardon; fulneſs, to ſupply; ſweetneſs, to endear; and beauty, to allure. O how ſweet is it to ſee him fitted of infinite wiſdom to your need! And, do you not need him when you are in the dark, to enlighten you; when dead, to quicken you; when dull, to revive you; when in doubts, to reſolve you; when in fears, to encourage you; when you ſtagger, to eſtabliſh you; when you fall, to raiſe you; when you are tempted, to ſuccour you; when weak, to ſtrengthen you; when wandering, to reſtore you; in duties, to aſſiſt you; in difficulties, to guide you; in dangers, to guard you; when under bondage, to looſe you; when under burdens, to relieve you! None but Chriſt can do all this, and a thouſand times more; and if you were always looking to Chriſt, when you ſtand in need of him, your eyes would ſeldom be off him, for you are ſtill needing him in theſe reſpects. But it is the ſpecial deſign of the ſacrament to ſhew him forth in his death and ſuffering; there we ſee him as a crucified Chriſt, and we are to view his death and ſuffering, (1.) In the cauſe thereof: the procuring cauſe was ſin; He was wounded for our tranſgreſſions: the inſtrumental cauſe was the devil and his inſtruments: the moving and impulſive cauſe was love; He loved me, and gave himſelf for me; the efficient or effective cauſe was God; It pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him: the final cauſe, or the fruit and effect, was God's glory, and our eternal redemption. (2.) In the ſeverity thereof, while he drank the cup of the Father's wrath to the bottom. (3.) In the ſufficiency thereof, for paying all the debt that was owing to the law and juſtice of God. (4.) In the acceptableneſs thereof, for it was a ſacrifice of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour unto God. —— In a word, the principal glory to be ſeen in Chriſt is, that he that ſees him, ſees the Father. And this leads me to,

III. The third head propoſed, namely, to ſhew in what reſpects they that ſee Chriſt ſee the Father; He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father. I have ſhewed the oneneſs that is betwixt the Father and him in nature, properties, will, affection, authority, ſupremacy, and other ways: and therefore he that ſees Chriſt muſt ſee the Father in all theſe reſpects wherein he is one with him. There is no need of Philip's prayer here, Lord, ſhew us the Father: for, having ſeen Chriſt we have ſeen the Father. It is Chriſt and he alone that declares, repreſents, and makes known to us the eſſential glory of the inviſible God; and without him our underſtanding could make no approach to his divine excellency. It is in the face of Chriſt that we ſee the glory of God, 2 Cor. iv. 6. And now, if any would know whether they have got a ſaving ſight of Chriſt, here is the great diagnoſtic and infallible evidence thereof, namely, if you have ſeen the Father in him; and, indeed, as there is no ſeeing of the Father, but in the Son; ſo there is no ſaving ſight of the Son, without ſeeing the Father in him: here is the excellency of the glory of Chriſt that faith ſees; here is the very foundation of our holy religion, and the ground of all our hope of life and immortality, God in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelf; here is the great myſtery of godlineſs, God manifeſted in the fleſh: here is the ſum of the goſpel, viz. the glory of God repreſented to us in the perſon and office of Chriſt as God-man, Mediator betwixt God and us. To ſee this glory is ſaving faith; not to ſee it, is damnable unbelief.

But, to come more directly to the queſtion, to ſhew in what reſpect they that ſee Chriſt, do ſee the Father, it is needful we conſider, 1ſt, More generally in what capacity CHRIST is to be conſidered, when we ſee the Father in him; and in what capacity the FATHER is to be conſidered when we ſee him in Chriſt.

As to the former, viz. in what capacity CHRIST is to be conſidered, when we ſee the Father in him: why, in ſhort, he is to be conſidered,

1. As God the SON, the ſecond perſon of the ever-bleſſed and ever adorable Trinity.

2. As MAN, or God incarnate; God-man in one perſon, clothed with the offices of Mediator, Redeemer, Saviour, and Surety for a number of loſt ſinners.

As to the latter, viz. in what capacity the FATHER is to be conſidered when we ſee him in Chriſt.

1. When Chriſt is conſidered as GOD, then the Father is to be conſidered perſonally, for the firſt perſon of the glorious Trinity.

2. When Chriſt is conſidered as MAN, then the Father is to be conſidered eſſentially; including Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, one in eſſence.

In both theſe reſpects Chriſt and the Father are ſpoken of in the text, as the context ſhews: for, in the following context, Chriſt is ſaid to be in the Father, and the Father in him, in the unity of the ſame divine eſſence, ver. 10.; in which reſpect, Chriſt being conſidered as GOD, the Father is taken perſonally; ſo, in the preceding context, Chriſt is ſaid to be the way to the Father; Ye believe in God, believe alſo in me; I am the way, no man cometh to the Father but by me, ver. 1, 6. In which reſpect, Chriſt being conſidered as MAN, or God-man, the Father is to be taken eſſentially: for, as God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, eſſentially conſidered, did conſtitute Chriſt perſonally conſidered, and ſo clothed with our fleſh to be the way to God, and the repreſentative of the divine glory, namely, his own glory, as God, equally with the Father's, which are eſſentially the ſame; ſo Chriſt, the ſecond perſon, conſidered as man, is the way to God eſſentially conſidered: nor does it involve any contradiction, that thus he ſhould be the way to himſelf, as well as to the Father; ſeeing it is as man, that he is the way to himſelf as God; and in him as man, we ſee his eſſential glory as well as the Father's: for, as perſonally conſidered, he is the eternal Son of the eternal Father; ſo eſſentially, he is the everlaſting Father, one in number with the firſt perſon; Iſa. ix. 6. The mighty God, the everlaſting Father; compared with Deut. vi. 4. The Lord our God is one Lord.

However, though the text allows us not to exclude the conſideration of Chriſt perſonally, as GOD the SON; yet it is eſpecially as MAN that he is to be viewed by us, or in his incarnation, for therein he becomes the repreſentative of God to the church, 2 Cor. iv. 6. And without him, under this conſideration, we cannot either ſee him or his Father; for Chriſt's divine perſon, abſolutely conſidered, is equally inviſible ſible and inacceſſible to us as the Father is: in him, therefore, as man, we ſee the Father; i.e. we ſee God in him, he being the image of the inviſible God, and the great repreſentative of God unto us. But, 2dly, And more particularly, I proceed to ſhew in what reſpects they who ſee Chriſt do ſee the Father, in the utmoſt latitude that the text allows, it will import the following particulars.

1. That they who ſee Chriſt will ſee the Father's nature and eſſence in him; for, when the glory of the Godhead is diſcovered, then he is ſeen in whom dwells the fulneſs of the undivided eſſence of the Godhead bodily, Col. ii. 9.

2. They who ſee Chriſt will ſee the Father's perſonality in him; for, when he is truly ſeen, he is ſeen to be the brightneſs of the Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, Heb. i. 3. Therefore, though the Father and the Son are not one perſon; yet, when the Son is ſeen, we ſee the Father's perſon in him as the image thereof.

3. They who ſee Chriſt, ſee the Father's relations in him; I mean, his relation both to Chriſt, and to us in Chriſt. When Chriſt is ſeen, then the Father's relations to Chriſt are ſeen; that is, not only his relation to Chriſt by nature, as Chriſt is the only eternally begotten of the Father; but alſo by office, as Chriſt is the ſent and ſealed of the Father to the mediatorial work. Yea, when Chriſt is ſeen, then the Father's relations to us, in Chriſt, are ſeen; particularly as he is our God and Father in Chriſt: I aſcend to my Father, and your Father; to my God, and your God, John xx. 17. They who ſee Chriſt, or God in Chriſt, they cannot ſee him any other way than a reconciled God and Father in him. To ſee God out of Chriſt, is to ſee him as a conſuming fire, a Judge, and an Avenger; but to ſee him in Chriſt, is to ſee him as a Friend and Father.

4. They who ſee Chriſt, ſee the Father's face in him; The God who commanded light to ſhine out of darkneſs, hath ſhined into our hearts, to give us the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, 2 Cor. iv. 6. Chriſt is the fair face of God; and as we ſee nothing of the body of a man, that is all clothed, but his face; ſo God is clothed with ſuch robes of terrible majeſty, that we can ſee nothing of him but his face: and happy are they who ſee his face by ſeeing him in Chriſt; for, as the beſt ſight of a man is to ſee his face, ſo the beſt ſight of God is in Chriſt; his brighteſt beauty, and greateſt glory is to be ſeen there. Hence the ſaints in ſcripture, when they ſought to ſee God, they ſtill ſought for a ſight of his face; as Pſal. lxxx. 3, 7, 19. Cauſe thy face to ſhine, and we ſhall be ſafe. The ſeed of Jacob are called the ſeekers of his face: and, where is the face and favour of God but in Chriſt?

5. They who ſee Chriſt, they ſee the Father's heart in him. To ſee a man's heart is to know his mind, and ſee his ſecret thoughts that none but God and he know; and to ſee this were little worth the ſeeing, ſince all hearts, by nature, are wicked; and the heart of the wicked is little worth: but to ſee God's heart is a vaſt matter; and yet when the believer ſees Chriſt's, he ſees God's heart, and ſome ſecrets there that none know but God and the believer himſelf that is looking to Chriſt; Pſal. xxv. 14. The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him, and he will ſhew them his covenant; or, as it may be read, and is accordingly tranſlated in the margin, HIS COVENANT, TO MAKE THEM KNOW IT. You may conceive it thus; Chriſt is given for the Covenant of the people; this covenant is given to make them know the ſecret of the Lord, the Father's heart, mind, and will; and his glorious counſels are ſee when Chriſt is ſeen. He lies in the boſom of the Father, John i. 18.; therefore, they who ſee Chriſt, cannot but ſee into his boſom: and, O they ſee far that ſee there! Some look to God, but never look to his heart and boſom: ſome look to his hands, in the works of creation: ſome look to his feet, in the ways of his providence: ſome look to his head, as it were, in his unſearchable decrees: but they loſe the right ſight of him who do not look to his heart and boſom. This is another ſort of a place than that which the angels ſpake of concerning the dead and buried body of the Lord Jeſus, Come ſee the place where the Lord lay, Mat. xxviii. 6. I may, in alluſion to it, ſay a greater word, Come ſee the place where the Lord lay from all eternity; where he lies to this day; and will do for ever; that is, the Father's boſom. What! can that be ſeen? Yes; when you ſee Chriſt, you cannot miſs a ſight of the place where he lies.

6. They who ſee Chriſt, they ſee the Father's properties and perfections in him: and here to ſpeak of all theſe, would be to ſpeak for ever. I ſhall only name ſome of theſe glorious perfections, excellencies, and the properties of the divine majeſty that are ſeen in Chriſt, in ſuch manner as they cannot be ſeen any where elſe. I paſs over the infinity, immenſity, and other ſuch excellencies of God, which yet are to be ſeen in Chriſt, that I may confine myſelf to ſome of theſe attributes of God, that are ordinarily more obvious to the believing eye of the ſoul that gets a ſaving ſight of Chriſt.

(1.) He that hath ſeen Chriſt, hath ſeen the infinite wiſdom of the Father in him, and in the work of redemption by him. We do not extenuate the diſplays that are made of the divine wiſdom in the works of creation and providence; when, taking a comparative view thereof, we ſet them vaſtly inferior to the diſcoveries that are made of the manifold wiſdom of God, in and through Jeſus Chriſt, Eph. iii. 9, 10. whoſe name is, Chriſt, the Wiſdom of God, 1 Cor. i. 24.; and in whom are hid all the treaſures of divine wiſdom, Col. ii. 3. If the queſtion then be, as it is expreſt, Job xxviii. 12. Where ſhall wiſdom be found? and what is the place of underſtanding? The deep ſays, It is not in me: the ſea ſays, It is not in me. But, behold, here it is, even in him who ſays, He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father. As this wiſdom is, in itſelf, an eternal, eſſential property of the divine nature, we can have no comprehenſion of it, it ſtands at ſuch an infinite diſtance from us, but in and by Chriſt, and in him alone is manifeſted this manifold wiſdom of God. O the many foldings of wiſdom that are here! Chriſt is a vaſt volume, a great book, wherein we may ſee and read the wiſdom of God in a myſtery. This book is open to us in the goſpel, and if the Spirit of faith be allowed, we have no more ado, but to turn over the leaves, and in every page we will ſee written in capital letters, WISDOM, WISDOM, WISDOM; INFINITE WISDOM.—Wiſdom in contriving ſuch a ſalvation of ſinners, as ſhould redound to the greateſt glory of God.—Wiſdom in chooſing ſuch a perſon to be the Saviour and Redeemer, even the fitteſt perſon of all the three glorious perſons of the adorable Trinity, the the middle perſon to be Midſman and Mediator betwixt God and man.—Wiſdom in furniſhing him with all the help and aſſiſtance in this work, that the other two glorious perſons could give him, while he is ſealed by the Father, and anointed by the Spirit: Him hath God the Father ſealed; and the Spirit of the Lord God is upon him above meaſure.—Wiſdom in uniting the moſt diſtant extremes, in joining God and man in one perſon, the infinite and eternal God with a piece of clay. O wiſdom, wiſdom ſhines here! Wiſdom in puniſhing the ſin, and yet pardoning the ſinner; taking vengeance on the crime, and yet ſhewing mercy on the criminal. This wiſdom of God ſhines in the face of Chriſt, the Surety of the better teſtament.—Wiſdom in bringing the greateſt good out of the greateſt evil, and all by the moſt unlikely means; making ſin itſelf, which tends to the greateſt diſhonour of God, to contribute to his greateſt glory; while ſalvation from it, by Jeſus, brings in glory to God in the higheſt; and while in him alſo is brought life out of death, and the higheſt ſalvation out of the deepeſt humiliation.—Wiſdom in counter-acting the policy of the old ſerpent in ſuch a wonderful manner, making the ſeed of the woman to bruiſe the head of the ſerpent; and the babe of Bethlehem to conquer all the armed legions of hell.——But to turn over all the leaves of this book will be the work of eternity; however, all this wiſdom, and infinitely more, is to be ſeen in Chriſt.

(2.) He that hath ſeen Chriſt, hath ſeen the Father in his infinite power; for, as he is the wiſdom of God; ſo he is the power of God, 1 Cor. i. 24. It is no diſparagement to the diſplay of the power of God, in making of heaven and earth, and all things out of nothing, though we declare to you, that the power of God does not ſhine there ſo much as it does in Chriſt. Divine power is glorious in creation-work, but much more in ſalvation-work. It is more for God to redeem one ſinner, than to make a thouſand worlds. Our help is laid upon one that is mighty; and, how does the almighty power of God here ſhine in laying ſuch a weight upon the Redeemer's back, as would have broken the back of all the angels in heaven; yea, under which the creation grones, and yet ſupporting him under ſo great a burden? What burden? Why, The Lord laid on him the iniquities of us all; and, together with the burden of ſin, the burden of all the wrath that was due to it, that he might deliver us from the wrath to come.—Power in upholding him in this great ſervice; Behold my Servant, whom I uphold, Iſa. xlii. 1.—Power in enabling him to overcome all the powers of earth and hell, and making him to triumph over them on the croſs, and to ſpoil principalities and powers openly.—Power in giving him victory over ſin and death, that we might ſhare of his triumphs, and have victory in him: O death, where is thy ſting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Cor. xv. 55.—Power in ſaving ſinners by the efficacy of his grace, the virtue of his Spirit, as well as by the merit of his blood, and in bringing them from the power of Satan unto God, which is more than to bring them from nothing to a being. In him we ſee that power of God, whereby he is able to ſave to the uttermoſt.

(3.) He that hath ſeen Chriſt hath ſeen the Father in his infinite holineſs. He is indeed the holy One of God; and holineſs to the Lord, is a title that peculiarly belongs to him, who was holy, harmleſs, undefiled, and ſeparate from ſinners. It is no diſparagement to the holineſs of all the angels and inhabitants of heaven, to ſay comparatively with him, that the heavens are not clean in his ſight, and that he chargeth his angels with folly. God hath, in Chriſt, diſcovered moſt clearly, That he is of purer eyes than that he can behold iniquity. Yea, in giving his Son to the death for our ſins, he hath declared, that he hates ſin, as much as he loves his eternal Son: He gave himſelf for our ſins, according to the will of God, Gal. i. 4. Thus God gave him, and he gave himſelf to take away ſin, which is ſo contrary to his holineſs. The Father put him upon this work, and held him to it, till he finiſhed tranſgreſſion, and made an end of ſin, by the ſacrifice of himſelf; therefore when we ſee Chriſt, we ſee infinite holineſs vindicated, and may cry out, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hoſts; the whole earth is full of his glory.

(4.) He that hath ſeen Chriſt hath ſeen the Father in his infinite juſtice and righteouſneſs. Chriſt is ſet forth for this very end, to repreſent and declare this glorious attribute of the divine nature; Whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs for the remiſſion of ſins. Rom. iii. 25. Not only to ſatisfy his juſtice, in puniſhing of ſin; but alſo to declare his juſtice, in pardoning of ſin; and both, in and through Chriſt the propitiation. It is no diminution of the glory of God's juſtice, that ſhines in the eternal damnation of the wicked world of men and devils, to aſſert, That the glory of his juſtice, in executing judgment upon ſin, appears more brightly in the face of Jeſus, as he was a ſacrifice to ſatisfy juſtice to the full, by one offering, which all the millions of the damned that are ſacrificed to incenſed juſtice, will never be able to do through all eternity. God had a mind to ſave a number of ſinners, Elect according to the foreknowledge of God; but the law, that required the death of the ſinner, and that the ſoul that ſins ſhould die, ſtood in the way; therefore God, rather than go contrary to his own law, will take payment, according to the law, of his own Son. Chriſt therefore pays all the debt that the law could crave; and thus God is glorified in his moſt exact righteouſneſs and infinite juſtice.

(5.) He that hath ſeen Chriſt hath ſeen the Father in his infinite love, mercy, and grace: God is love, ſays the apoſtle, 1 John iv. 8 But, where is this property of the divine nature manifeſted, ſeeing his wrath is revealed from heaven againſt all ungodlineſs of men, and we are compaſſed about with the evidences of his anger and diſpleaſure at this day? Where then ſhall we ſee that God is love? Why, the ſame apoſtle tells us, ver. 9. In this was manifeſted the love of God towards us, becauſe God ſent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him: herein is love, not that we loved him, but that he loved us, and ſent his Son to be the propitiation for our ſins. Out of Chriſt, we ſee him a conſuming fire; but in Chriſt, we ſee that God is love! O the love of God that ſhines in his miſſion, perſon, and offices! Love in giving him to be a Saviour and Surety! Love, in giving him for us and to us! Love, in accepting the payment of our debt from him, and ſubſtituting him in our room! Love, in accepting us in him, and love in giving out to us the great bleſſings promiſed and purchaſed by him! O Love! love, without a parallel! Mercy, without a match! Wonderful mercy vented through a ſacrifice; ſovereign grace and goodneſs, in ſetting up ſuch a ſun as Chriſt in the firmament of the church militant and triumphant! The natural ſun runs his race, and rides his circuit from one end of the heaven to the other, and the benefit we enjoy thereby is a fruit of the goodneſs of God, as the God of providence; but, O the glorious race that the Sun of righteouſneſs runs from everlaſting to everlaſting! His circle is from one end of eternity to the other, if eternity, that is endleſs, may be thus conſidered; for, he was ſet up from everlaſting in the council of peace, and to everlaſting will he ſhine, and ſhew forth the goodneſs and mercy of God, as the God of grace.

(6.) He that hath ſeen Chriſt, hath ſeen the Father in his infinite faithfulneſs, veracity, and truth; for, as he is the way to the Father, ſo he is the truth, John xiv. 6.; in whom the fidelity of the God of truth does ſhine. Here was the glory that the diſciples ſaw, John i. 14. Full of grace and truth. To ſee the truth of God in Chriſt is a noble ſight, on which our everlaſting ſafety and ſecurity does depend; and, behold, in Chriſt it is to be ſeen moſt conſpicuouſly. The truth of God in all the threatenings of the law ſhines in Chriſt, while theſe threatenings receive their accompliſhment in him, As the end of the law for righteouſneſs to every one that believeth, Rom. x. 4. The truth of God in all the promiſes of the goſpel ſhines in Chriſt; for in him they are all yea and amen, 2 Cor. i. 20. In Chriſt this miracle ſparkles, that God, in ſaving the ſinner, is true to his threatening, and true to his promiſe both; true to his threatening, that ſays, The ſoul that ſins ſhall die; and yet true to his promiſe alſo, that ſays, I will love thee freely. How gloriouſly do theſe oppoſites centre in Chriſt! And ſo the glory of truth, of the Father's truth, appears. He is true to his threatening in Chriſt, who hath endured the ſhock of it; and true to his promiſe in Chriſt alſo, who hath fulfilled the condition of it; and both by his obedience unto death, even the death of the croſs.

Thus the Father is ſeen in Chriſt, in reſpect of all theſe, and the like divine properties and perfections, which in Chriſt appear to be both his Father's attributes and his own. They are ſeen to be Chriſt's divine perfections, and the perfections of the Father in him; He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father. I would here ſay further,

7. They that ſee Chriſt, ſee the Father's name in him; My name is in him, ſays God, Exod. xxiii. 21. God's greateſt name is his name; for example, What is his name? Exod. iii. 13. God ſays unto Moſes, I AM THAT I AM, ver. 14. This explains his name JEHOVAH, and ſignifies that he is ſelf-exiſtent, having his being and eſſence of himſelf, that he is eternal and unchangeable, always the ſame; that we cannot by ſearching find him out, but that he for ever is what he ever was; and that he is the fountain of all beings. Now, it was Chriſt, the Angel of the covenant, that ſaid this to Moſes, when he appeared to him in a flame of fire out of the buſh, Exod. iii. 2. He diſcovered himſelf by this name, when he was to deliver Iſrael out of Egypt, which deliverance was but a figure of good things to come; and therefore you may ſee him again taking this name three times to himſelf in one chapter in the New Teſtament, John viii. 58. Before Abraham was, I AM, and ver. 24. If ye believe not that I AM he, ye ſhall die in your ſins. The word in the original is, ὅτι ἐγώ εἰμι, that I AM. And ſo it is ver. 28. When ye have lifted up the Son of man, then ſhall ye know ὅτι ἐγώ εἰμι, that I AM. Now, Chriſt hath been lifted up on the pole of the croſs, on the pole of the ſacrament, on the pole of the goſpel, and exalted on the Father's right-hand. Do we know by this time that the name of the man that was crucified at Jeruſalem, is, I AM THAT I AM? Do we ſee his Father's name in him? He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father.

8. They that ſee Chriſt ſee the Father's glory in him; not only his name, but the glory of his name; not only his attributes, but the glory of his attributes: his name and attributes are indeed his glory; and when we ſee theſe we ſee the Father's glory. But what I further mean, is, that, in Chriſt, we ſee the glory of the Father's glory; and the glory and ſplendor of all theſe things that I have mentioned. This light is the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, who is the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon: therefore in him we ſee not only the wiſdom of God, but the glory of his wiſdom; not only his power, but the glory of his power; not only his holineſs, but the glory of his holineſs; not only his juſtice and righteouſneſs, but the glory of his juſtice and righteouſneſs; not only his love, mercy, and grace, but the glory of his love, mercy, and grace; not only his faithfulneſs, veracity, and truth, but the glory of his faithfulneſs, veracity, and truth. When God diſcovers himſelf in Chriſt, then he is ſeen upon his higheſt throne, in his greateſt glory. O Sirs, let me tell you, that when only heaven is his throne, and the earth his footſtool, he appears infinitely glorious; but when Chriſt is his throne, and the heavens are his footſtool, then, O then, infinite glory appears infinitely more glorious. Though infinite glory is not capable of addition or augmentation, yet in point of manifeſtation, I ſay, infinite glory appears infinitely more glorious, when diſplayed on ſuch a lofty throne. O but a God in Chriſt, which is the throne of grace, is alſo a throne of glory; and Glory to God in the higheſt it is the throne of God and of the Lamb. If we ſee it, we cannot chooſe but ſing with the redeemed, Salvation to our God that ſits upon the throne, and to the Lamb for ever and ever. What ſhall I ſay? he that ſees Chriſt, not only ſees the Father's glory, but all the Father's glory; for he is not only the ſeat of his glory, but the ſeat and centre of all his glory; In him dwells not only the fulneſs of God, but all the fulneſs of the Godhead, Coloſſ. ii. 9. Though finite eyes can never ſee all that infinite fulneſs; yet all that ſee Chriſt do ſee that all that infinite fulneſs, that can never be fully ſeen, is in him. Though a man cannot comprehend the whole globe of the earth in his arms, or ſee it all at once, yet he may ſee it all in a lively repreſentation thereof in a map; even ſo, though we cannot ſee all this fulneſs comprehenſively, ſo as to comprehend it, yet we ſee it all repreſentatively in Chriſt, who is the lively and living repreſentative of all the divine glory, and the repoſitory of all the divine fulneſs; all the dimenſions of the divine glory are to be seen in him, even the height and depth, length and breadth thereof. In his humiliation we see the depth of the Father's love reaching down to hell to lift us up; in his exaltation we see the height of the Father's grace, raising us up to sit with him in heavenly places; in the extent of his death we see the breadth of the Father's love, extending, by divine destination, to all the promised seed, and, by the method of application, to whosoever will. In the duration of his life, as a Priest for ever, we see the length of the Father's love, which is like himself, From everlasting to everlasting; and so in seeing Christ, in all his estates, we see the Father in all the dimensions of his glory. So in all Christ's offices we see all the Father's treasures; why, all the treasures of the Father's wisdom centre in his prophetical office, and that for our illumination; all the treasures of the Father's righteousness centre in his priestly office, and that for our justification; and all the treasures of the Father's power centre in his kingly office, and that for our sanctification; yea, all the treasures of the Father's grace centre in him, as being All in all for our complete redemption. Thus he is made of God unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, 1 Cor. i. 30. When we see Christ, then we see the Father in all his glory, in all his fulness, in all his treasures, and that for our eternal salvation, our everlasting consolation, and good hope through grace.

Thus I have given you a short and poor hint at the resolution of that question, He that hath seen Christ, hath seen the Father; insomuch, that I say again, there is no need of Philip's prayer here, Shew us the Father; for he that hath seen Christ, hath seen the Father: and, O happy they, whose eyes have seen this glory of God in Christ, while their ears are hearing of it! But I come now to

IV. The fourth head proposed, was to shew, how and in what manner the Father is seen in Christ. Besides the light that the former head may give to this question, I shall add these following particulars.

1. In Christ we see the Father clearly and evidently, so much is implied in the term SEEING; He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father. To know God in Christ, is to see God, because in Christ he is clearly and distinctly known; though faith and sight differ in certain respects, yet faith is a kind of sight; for, it is the evidence of things not seen, Heb. xi. 1. In Christ we see clearly and evidently him who is invisible, ver. 27. Christ is the clearest and brightest glass that infinite wisdom could contrive to represent the glory of the Father: and as the disciples, when Christ was revealing the Father to them, John xvi. 27, 28, 29. cried out, Lo, now speakest thou plainly, and not in proverbs, or parables; so the soul that sees the Father in Christ, sees him clearly and plainly, not in clouds and thick darkness. The Old-Testament church had, in types and sacrifices, a dark representation of Christ, but now we have in Christ, the antetype, a clear representation of the Father; we now see him with open face.

2. In Christ we see the Father savingly. This is plain from the context, shewing that Christ, who is the glass, the true and living glass, in whom we see the Father, is also the true and living way by whom we come to the Father, and so enjoy him as our God and Father in Christ, ver. 6. My friends, to see the glory of Christ, and the glory of the Father in him, is such a saving sight, that salvation is inseparable from it; nay, salvation is in it; yea more, it is the very thing that formally constitutes everlasting life and salvation: This is life eternal to know thee, etc. John xvii. 3. The true and faithful witness, who cannot lye, is saying this to his Father, and you may be sure he will not lye to him or you either. Further, says he, This is life eternal, to know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent; that is, to see Christ, and to see the Father in him is eternal life: to see God out of Christ is no saving, but a confounding sight to a sinner, but to see him in Christ, is to see him savingly; Look to me, and be saved, all the ends of the earth, for I am God, and besides me there is none else.

3. In Christ we see the Father comfortably and satisfyingly: it is the best antidote in all the world, against all heart-trouble, therefore, says Christ here, ver. 1. of this chapter, Let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. To believe in God, as a Judge and Lawgiver, is necessary for the secure, to awaken their conscience, but this faith will never pacify the conscience, till you believe also in me, says Christ. I have given satisfaction to the Judge, and his law both, therefore believe also in me, that you may get satisfaction to your heart and conscience both; Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in me. God out of Christ is the most terrible; but in Christ, the most comfortable sight that ever was seen; and no wonder that the heart be pleased when it sees in Christ that God is well-pleased; This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased. To see God in Christ, is to see the Father smiling in the Son's face; and surely they are unbelievers that have not seen God to be well-pleased in him. I do not love to discourage any poor drooping believer; and I shall not deny, but that there are some believers that have very little comfort, but I can hardly think, that they are believers that never had any comfort less or more. What! if ever you saw God in Christ, will you tell me, dare you say for your life that it was no comfortable sight? If so, then I truly think you never yet saw him. I ask not what comfort you feel at present. It may be you are still drooping by reason of unbelief; but if ever you saw him, and his Father in him, I am sure it was a joyful sight at the time, and afforded some satisfaction: so much is imported in Christ's assertion in the text, compared with Philip's petition in the preceding verse, Shew us the Father, and it sufficeth; importing, that the sight and knowledge of God is full of satisfaction and refreshment, tending to give full contentment. Well, says Christ, He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father, and there is the most satisfying sight of the Father that you can have. It is true, the way of seeing God by faith, as revealed in his Son, is a way not satisfactory to a carnal heart, and believers themselves have a jealousy of it, so far as they are carnal, and unbelieving, which was the ground of Christ's reproof to Philip here, upon which he also instructs him, that here is the only satisfying sight to faith; He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father.

4. In Christ we see the Father applicatively, and as near at hand. It was unbelief in Philip, that said, Shew us the Father, as if the Father ther had been ſtill at ſuch a diſtance as to be inacceſſible and inviſible; nay, but ſays Chriſt, whatever God be in himſelf abſolutely, and though he remain ſtill in his nature inviſible and incomprehenſible, yet in me, and in me alone, he comes ſo near as that you may ſee him, and embrace him by faith; He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father. To ſee God abſolutely with mortal bodily eyes is impoſſible, he ſtands at an infinite diſtance from us. When we ſee him in the creation, or in any external repreſentation of his glory, we ſee him at an infinite natural diſtance from us as creatures; when we ſee him in the law, or covenant of works, we ſee him at an infinite moral diſtance from us as ſinners; yea, there we ſee him compaſt about with flames of wrath, ready to devour us: but when, through the goſpel glaſs, we ſee him in Chriſt, then we ſee him near at hand; yea, nearly related to us as our God, Friend, and Father in Chriſt. And hence the ſight of faith brings in Thomas's exclamation, John xx. 28. My Lord, and my God.

5. In Chriſt we ſee the Father diſcriminatively; that is, ſo as to diſcern the perſonal diſtinction betwixt the Father and the Son, notwithſtanding of their eſſential oneneſs. The very run of the text and context, both before and after it, declares the diſtinction. O Sirs! the three diſtinct perſons of the glorious Trinity, in their diſtinct perſonal properties, as it is an unfathomable myſtery in itſelf, ſo it would have been for ever hidden and unſeen to us, if Chriſt, the Sun of righteouſneſs, had not riſen; and, in his light, diſcovered the ſame, ſo as we have, in Chriſt, a diſcriminative view of the Father; for we cannot ſee the Son of God in the light of the eternal Spirit, but we muſt, at the ſame time, ſee, that he is the eternal Son of an eternal Father. The diſtinct œconomy and adminiſtration of the three perſons, in the work of our redemption, gives us a clearer view of their perſonal diſtinction than can be had in any other glaſs; nay, I know no other glaſs that can make it known. The glaſs of the creatures ſays, It is not in me to ſhew that: the glaſs of the law ſays, It is not in me; but the glaſs of the goſpel ſaith, Ευρηκα; I have found it. And when the Spirit promiſed in the goſpel comes to glorify Chriſt, then, in the glory of the Son, we ſee the glory of the Father: He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father. Hence,

6. In Chriſt we ſee the Father truly: He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father. It expreſſes the truth of the matter out of the mouth of him that is truth itſelf. He that hath a true ſight of Chriſt, hath a true ſight of the Father, and a ſight of the true God. We know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an underſtanding, that we may know him that is true; and we are in him that is true. This is the true God and eternal life, 1 John v. 20. Ye that never yet ſaw Chriſt, you are yet atheiſts, without God; you never ſaw the true God to this day, but only a falſe god; a god of your own deviſing; an image of your own brain. But as for you, believer, when you got a true ſight of Chriſt, then you got a true ſight of the true God. We ſee the true Father in the true Son, by the light of the Spirit of truth teſtifying of Chriſt.

7. In Chriſt we ſee the Father, not only truly, but glorioufly. This is plain alſo in the text, for notwithſtanding the Lord Jeſus had ſaid, ver. 7. If ye had known me, ye ſhould have known my Father alſo; yea, and henceforth ye know him, and have ſeen him; yet Philip ſays, Lord, ſhew us the Father, as if there had been ſome other and better way of knowing the Father than by knowing and ſeeing Chriſt; whereupon Chriſt reproves him, and lets him know, that this was the beſt, the only, and the moſt glorious way: Have I been ſo long time with you, and yet haſt thou not known me, Philip? He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father; and how ſayeſt thou, Shew us the Father? If you would have another way of your own, might Chriſt ſay, whereby to ſee the Father, you ſhall find, that the way you would be at, is either impoſſible, or vaſtly inferior to what you enjoy; for, whereas you ſay, Shew us the Father; if you deſire an immediate ſight of him out of me, that is impoſſible, and would conſume mortal men, ſo as you know not what you would be at: or, if you deſire only ſuch a ſight of God as Moſes and others got of old, then know, that what they got, comes far ſhort of what you have already when you ſee me; He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father's glory; and not only ſo, but the glory of the Father in the moſt glorious manner that can be ſeen by mortal eyes.

8. In Chriſt we ſee the Father orderly and regularly. This is imported alſo in the text and context; that as there is no coming to the Father, but by Chriſt; nor ſeeing of the Father, but in Chriſt: ſo the goſpel-order of coming to God, is by Chriſt; and of ſeeing God, is in Chriſt. And here, indeed, is the true order and evangelical method of acceſs to God, when, by the Spirit, we are led to Chriſt, and by Chriſt to the Father; Through him we have acceſs, by one Spirit, unto the Father, Eph. ii. 18. Here is the true order of communion with God, the way in which God deſcends unto us, is the way in which we aſcend unto God. The Father ſent the Son into our nature; and the Son ſends the Spirit into our hearts, that, by the Spirit, we might aſcend to the Son; and by the Son to the Father. Here is the true order of all right worſhipping of God; it is a worſhipping of God in Chriſt, by the Holy Ghoſt. It is the ſame with the order of ſeeing God in the text, where the light of the Spirit being ſuppoſed, wherein alone we can ſee Chriſt, it follows, He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father. So much for the manner.

V. The fifth head propoſed, was, to offer ſome grounds or reaſons of the doctrine, ſhewing whence it is, that they that ſee Chriſt, ſee the Father. The reaſons of a doctrine being the great pillars which ſupport it, and the hinges on which it turns; therefore I muſt mention ſome of theſe for the confirmation of faith in this matter.

1. He that hath ſeen Chriſt, hath ſeen the Father, becauſe of the oneneſs that is betwixt them; as I ſhewed upon the firſt head. The true ground of our knowing the Father in the Son, is his unity in eſſence with the Father; ſo that though their perſonal properties be diſtinct, yet the eſſence is the ſame in both, and the one is in the other; for thus the Lord Jeſus clears it in the following words, How ſayeſt thou, Shew us the Father? Believeſt thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me?

2. He that hath ſeen Chriſt, hath ſeen the Father, becauſe of the agreement that is betwixt them. As they are one, ſo they agree in one; as it is ſaid said of the three that bear witness on earth, the Spirit, the water, and the blood, 1 John v. 8.; so, much more may it be said of the three that bear witness in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Spirit, that are one, that they agree in one; and indeed their agreement in the work of our redemption is such, that though the several persons of the glorious Trinity have their distinct work, and œconomy therein, yet it is with such a complicated harmony, that the administration of one cannot be seen without seeing that of the other. He that sees, by the Spirit's shining on the word, what the Son hath done, as Mediator, in the Father's name, and as the Father's Ambassador, cannot but see, in the same light, the Father as employing him in that embassy.

3. He that hath seen Christ, hath seen the Father, because of the relation that is betwixt them. In his natural relation, as he is the Son of God, we see the first person of the glorious Trinity to be his Father by eternal generation. In his œconomical relation, as he is the Sent of God, we see God to be his Father by special election, unction, vocation, ordination, and exhibition unto the mediatorial work. Both these, I think, are joined together in that word, John i. 14. The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us; and we beheld his glory, as the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.

4. He that hath seen Christ, hath seen the Father, because of the likeness that is betwixt them. Not only as God was he in the form of God, and thought it no robbery to be equal with God, Phil. ii. 6.; but also as man, though he came in the likeness of sinful flesh, yet he had also the likeness of his holy Father about him, being holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners, Heb. vii. 26. The pity, mercy, and compassion of his Father; the love, grace, and goodness of his Father, did, when on earth, and does now, in heaven, so appear in him, that whoever have a perfect understanding of Christ, will have a perfect understanding of the Father.

5. He that hath seen Christ, hath seen the Father, because of the liking that is betwixt them. Not only a likeness but a liking. Such a liking hath Christ to the Father, that he declares it is his heart's delight to do his Father's will, Psal. xl. 8. And if Christ's love be stamped, as it were, on the Father's heart, and the Father's love stamped on Christ's heart, he that hath seen Christ, must see the Father's love and delight. One of the capital letters of the Father's name often mentioned in scripture, is his Love to Christ as the Saviour of his people. His love to him, not only as his own Son, but as our Surety. Hence Christ, as Mediator, so frequently says to his Father, John xvii. Thou hast loved me; thou hast loved me; and again, thou hast loved me. But why three times in the close of that chapter? Why so oft does he repeat this in his intercessory prayer? Why, because as the Father loved him in his undertaking, from all eternity, before the foundation of the world; and loved him in his state of humiliation here, and loves him now in his state of exaltation, and will do so for ever; so the Father's love to them for whom Christ prays and intercedes, is founded, in all the displays of it, upon his love to him; and he hears him always on their behalf, because he loves him; and loves them only in him. In him, they were loved from eternity; in him, they are loved in time; and in him, they will be loved to eternity. His loving-kindness will he not take away from them, because his loving-kindness he will not, and cannot take away from him, Psal. lxxxix. 33. It is a matter, therefore, of the greatest moment unto us to know this great letter of the Father's name, which he repeats three times over, Thou hast loved me. Now, if Christ bear this golden letter on the breast-plate of his mediation, and shews himself thus clothed with the robes of his Father's loving-kindness, then they that see him, must see the Father's favour to him, and to them in him, according to the measure of faith; and this is the very thing that he does, John xvii. 26. I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it; that the love wherewith thou hast loved me, may be in them, and I in them. O matchless mystery! They that have Christ in them, they have the Father's love that he bears to Christ in them. But again,

6. He that hath seen Christ, hath seen the Father, because he is the image and representative of the Father. I distinguish this from the likeness that is between the Father and him; for one may have a likeness to another, and yet not be such an one's actual representative, as Christ is of the Father, 2 Cor. iv. 4. Christ is the image of the invisible God, Col. i. 15.; the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person, Heb. i. 3. In his divine person, absolutely considered, he is the essential image of God, even the Father; but thus he is as invisible as the Father; therefore, in his incarnation, he becomes the representative image of God unto the church, that we may have the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus, 2 Cor. iv. 6. It is true, the saints are said to be the image of God, when they are renewed in a conformity to the nature and will of God; but great is the difference betwixt the image of God in man, and the image of God in Christ. The image of God in the believer, is like Cæsar's image in his coin; but the image of God in Christ, is like Cæsar's image in his son; his only son and representative. Christ is the image of the invisible God, but man is the image of the visible God; that is, of Christ, Rom. viii. 29.; in whom God is made visible to us. Christ indeed, as God, is not only the image of God, but the invisible image of the invisible God; but as man he is the visible image of the invisible God. It is true, he is out of sight now, and we cannot see him with our bodily eyes; but as he was visible on earth, and is visible in heaven in our nature; so the only saving sight of him that a sinner can have, is by faith. Suppose it were possible for a sinner on earth, to see Christ in heaven, merely with his bodily eyes, it would not be a saving sight; but now, when, by faith, we see Christ as the representative image of the Father, then we cannot but see the Father in him. He bears the image of all the Father's glorious excellencies; and, therefore, to see his glory, is to see his Father's glory also, and that for the following reason. Further,

7. He that hath seen Christ, hath seen the Father, because he is sent and sealed of the Father for this very end, that he might represent, manifest, and declare the Father; hence, No man hath seen God at any time, the only begotten Son, that is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him, John i. 18. All things are delivered to me of my Father, says Christ, Mat. xi. 27.; and no man knoweth the Son but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father ther save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him. He was sealed and anointed for this very end: The Spirit of the Lord God was upon him, that he might bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. And hence, God, who, at sundry times, and in divers manners, spake, in times past, to the fathers by the prophets, hath, in these last days, spoken to us by his Son, who is the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, Heb. i. 1, 2. Whatever Christ did, either by his preaching, working of miracles, or laying down his life, it was by the appointment of his Father, and to lead us to the Father. He is the way, the new and living consecrated way to the Father. He, therefore, that sees him as the way, does see the Father as the end to which the way leads by divine appointment.

8. He that hath seen Christ, hath seen the Father, because the Spirit, that discovers and testifies of Christ, is equally the Spirit of the Father and of the Son. The Spirit of the Son is the Spirit of the Father; and the Spirit of the Father is the Spirit of the Son; When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceeds from the Father, he shall testify of me, John xv. 26. He cannot, therefore, testify of the Son, without testifying of the Father. The Spirit of the Father testifying of the Son, cannot be without reference to the Father; nay, when he discovers Christ, and the things of Christ, he discovers, at the same time, in the same light, the Father, and the things of the Father; He shall glorify me, says Christ, for he shall receive of mine, and shew it unto you, John xvi. 14, 15. Now, if it be asked, what things of mine he will shew? The answer is, they are the things of the Father; for, all things that the Father hath, are mine. The things of Christ are the Father's, and the things of the Father are Christ's. The glory of Christ is the Father's glory; and the glory of the Father is Christ's glory. The fulness of Christ is the Father's fulness; and the fulness of the Father is Christ's fulness. Therefore, he that is the Spirit, both of the Father and of the Son, when he glorifies Christ, and shews the things of Christ, he glorifies the Father, and shews the things of the Father; consequently, He that hath seen Christ, hath seen the Father.

VI. The sixth head proposed, was, to draw some inferences from the whole for the application. This doctrine is so vastly great and prolific, that it is not possible for me to overtake all the purposes that ly in the bosom of it, and are deducible from it. The special inferences I design, are for information, trial, reproof, comfort, and exhortation.

First, For information. O how many truths ly in the bosom of this doctrine! That such is the oneness betwixt Christ and the Father, that he that hath seen Christ, hath seen the Father. There are two great truths here that lead us into many other truths. 1. That there is an oneness betwixt Christ and the Father. 2. That he that hath seen Christ, sees the Father.

1st, Is it so, that there is such an oneness betwixt Christ and the Father as I have shewn? Hence we may learn the following lessons.

1. Hence learn, that the object of faith is very great and glorious, far beyond what natural reason, or human understanding can fathom; therefore, our Lord Jesus here, as he makes his essential oneness with the Father the foundation of his assertion, that they that see him, see the Father: so he lays down this great mystery, as absolutely necessary to be believed, and apprehended by faith, though it cannot be comprehended by reason. Christ's question to Philip hereupon, is a fundamental question of the gospel catechism: Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? Without the faith of this, there is no right worshipping of God; no right apprehension of one God in three persons. This is no indifferent thing to be believed or not. Our eternal life depends upon it. God hath born witness to it from heaven, as I have already shewed.

2. From this oneness we may learn, that the doctrine of Arianism is damnable blasphemy, that denies the supreme Deity of our Lord Jesus, and his essential oneness with the Father. Many affronts have been offered to the crown, and dignity, and royal prerogatives of our Lord in these lands, since we first broke, and then burnt the Covenant of our God, and were ashamed of our glory. But the spreading of Arianism now, in Britain and Ireland, is like a pulling up Reformation by the roots, and a saying, We will not only pull off the jewels of the Mediator's crown, but we will take the crown itself, and cast it into the mire. If this error be subtilly maintained among us, pray that God may discover and destroy it, otherwise it will destroy the very foundation of our holy religion. That pernicious error strikes directly against the doctrine of our Lord Jesus here; for, if there be not an essential oneness betwixt him and his Father, then it is not true, that he that hath seen Christ, hath seen the Father. If he be inferior to the Father in point of essence, self-existence, independency, or any other essential perfection, then we cannot see all the Father's glory in him *: But let Christ, who is truth itself, be true, and every man a liar. What I have said refutes this abomination.

3. From this oneness betwixt the Father and the Son, you may learn the danger of denying Christ. To deny the Son is to deny the Father, 1 John ii. 23. And he is Antichrist that denies the Father and the Son, ver. 22. And who is a liar, but he that denies that Jesus is the Christ? To deny the unity of the same undivided essence betwixt the Father and him, is to deny him to be the true Messias; IMMANUEL, God with us, Isa. vii. 14. O the danger of deviating from the doctrine of Christ! Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God: he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son, 2 John ver. 9. Hence he that deviates from it hath neither. Why? because of their undivided essence, notwithstanding of their personal distinction. It is not possible to deny the one and not the other.

4. Learn hence, how fearfully Christ was humbled: what! one with the Father, the Father's fellow, and equal, and yet a babe, a servant, a sufferer, a worm! Psal. xxii. Should an emperor

* When this sermon was delivered, the Arian tenets were not only getting up their head, and overspreading the nation, but there was a process commenced and depending before the supreme ecclesiastical court, against one of our professors of theology, as hinted above, p. 322. for teaching and propagating these tenets. The kindly reception the Arian sentiments were meeting with, the many friends this propagator of them was, at this time, like to have, and in the issue really had, and the small number that appeared courageously against them, no doubt, influenced our Author, both to observe more frequently, in his discourses, the spreading of them, and to express himself more zealously upon the head, justly dreading the dismal consequences thereof.

become a fly; yea, ſhould all the glorious angels in heaven become one crawling inſect upon earth, it were not to be mentioned with this humiliation of Chriſt. Oh! how ſadly was the world miſtaken concerning Chriſt, when they took him up to be a mere man, the carpenter's ſon, and did not ſee him to be the eternal Son of God, and eſſentially one with the Father.

5. See here how gloriouſly adorned Chriſt is with all divine perfections, and ſo how infinitely valuable and efficacious all his mediatory actings are. If he had not been God, equal with the Father, his active and paſſive obedience could not have profited us; for, they had not been dignified with infinite merit, value, and virtue. But now, being one with the Father, his divine nature is the altar that ſanctifies the whole gift; therefore, his blood, is the blood of God; his righteouſneſs, the righteouſneſs of God: we may ſafely depend hereupon for peace with God, and acceptance to eternal life.

6. Here we may learn the infinite ability of Chriſt, to apply, by his power, what he purchaſed by his blood. His oneneſs with the Father declares, that as he was able to make all things out of nothing, and does ſtill uphold all things by the word of his power; ſo he is able to ſave to the uttermoſt: his arm, is the arm of God; his power, is the power of God. It is ſaid, The ſon of man, even on earth, had power to forgive ſins, Mat. ix. 6. The Phariſees had made the objection, Who can forgive ſins but God? Chriſt takes their own argument to prove that he was God, becauſe he could forgive ſins: and, indeed, to take way the guilt of ſin requires omnipotency; the guilt of ſin hath the whole ſtrength of God's law to back it; and God's law hath the whole ſtrength of his infinite juſtice to maintain it; therefore, there muſt be an infinite power to take away the guilt of ſin, even that power that can break the force of God's law, and ſatisfy the demands of infinite juſtice. The ſame power and ability alſo is requiſite to take away the power of ſin; for, guilt and power are the two great attributes of ſin: infinite power only can deſtroy them. It is to ſome a known maxim, Ejuſdem eſſe poteſtatis inſtruere & deſtruere. "No leſs power is required "to deſtroy the world than there was to create "it." In the firſt creation, there was ſomething made out of nothing; yet that nothing did not reſiſt: and if God ſhould annihilate the frame of heaven and earth, and reduce it to nothing again, it would ſuddenly ſink; there would be no reſiſtance. But to bring together things that are contrary; to do away ſin, and bring in grace, that are ſo oppoſite one to another, and meet one another with the utmoſt reſiſtance, requires an infinite power to effect it. Sin is not only an enemy, but enmity againſt God; and as the mind muſters up millions of objections againſt Chriſt, when he comes to deal with a ſinner; ſo the heart and affections oppoſe him, as it were, in battle array: In the laſt days perilous times ſhall come; for men ſhall be lovers of themſelves, 2 Tim. iii. 1—4. There goes the captain Self-love, after which follows the body of the army of luſts, Covetous, boaſters, proud, blaſphemous, diſobedient, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, falſe accuſers, incontinent, fierce, deſpiſers of thoſe that are good; traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleaſure more than lovers of God, &c. The weapon of the warfare, that can defeat this oppoſition, needs to be mighty through God. Thy people ſhall be willing, but when? in the day of thy power: this is ſaid to, and of our Lord Jeſus, Pſal. cx. 3. Being one with the Father, ſee his infinite ability.

7. From this oneneſs betwixt the Father and the Son, we may learn, that Chriſt was not alone in the work of redemption; John xvi. 32. I am not alone, becauſe the Father is with me. How could he fail, or be diſcouraged, in his work? The power and preſence of the eternal God-head, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, was with him. O ſee and admire the joint concurrence of the Father with the Son, together with the Holy Ghoſt, in carrying on this great work of redemption! It was the pleaſure of the Father, the pleaſure of the Son, the pleaſure of the Holy Ghoſt, that this work ſhould be carried on and proſper.

8. Hence learn, how glorious and ineffable is the love of the Father in giving Chriſt, the ſame in ſubſtance with himſelf, to aſſume our nature, and die for our ſins: He took not on him the nature of angels, but the ſeed of Abraham: and the Father put the robe of our nature upon him; A body haſt thou given me. Behold, how he loves the nature of theſe whom he hath given to Chriſt, that though he hath them not all with him in heaven, yet he loves to have their picture, his Son in their nature, to ſee them in him, and love them in him. In the faith of this, O what ground of encouragement is there, and what foundation of confidence in coming to the Father in him! that our advocate is ſo near to the Father, ſo nearly related to him, and yet ſo nearly related to us, one with the Father in nature; and yet one with us in nature alſo: Great is the myſtery of godlineſs, God manifeſted in the fleſh; and great is the myſtery of divine love, in making him, that is one with himſelf, to be the way to himſelf. Surely, if you come to the Father by this way, you may be ſure you come with the Father's allowance; you may come boldly. Is there acceſs to Chriſt, and yet the Father inacceſſible that way? Nay, that is impoſſible, if you believe this oneneſs that Chriſt is in the Father, and the Father in him.

9. Hence learn the neceſſity of divine revelation, objective and ſubjective: the neceſſity of ſcriptural revelation; without which we had wandered in the dark without knowing Chriſt in his oneneſs with the Father. O bleſs God for the Bible, and for eyes to look upon it; and ſtudy to improve that privilege. See alſo the abſolute neceſſity of ſpiritual illumination and divine teaching, in order to our apprehending this divine myſtery of Chriſt's oneneſs with the Father. When Peter confeſſed this, by ſaying, Thou art Chriſt the Son of the living God, Chriſt anſwers, Bleſſed art thou, Simon Barjona; for fleſh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven, Math. xvi. 16, 17. Let us be humbled under a ſenſe of our ignorance of God and Chriſt, and cry for the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of him, and in this way.

10. Let us learn, from this oneneſs betwixt Chriſt and the Father, the glorious excellency of Chriſt being one with the Father. Is he not a glorious object of adoration? The Lord our God is one Lord. And, O believer, He is thy Lord, worſhip thou him; crying out with Thomas, My Lord, and my God. Being one with the Father, is he not a fit portion for your immortal ſouls? His riches are indeed unſearchable; for they are all the fulneſs of the Godhead. It was ſaid, Who can count the duſt of Jacob? but much more, who can tell the thouſand part of the believer's treaſure, that hath a right to ſay, The Lord is the portion of my ſoul! O immenſe and everlaſting portion!—Being one with the Father, is he not the fountain of living waters; the fountain of all grace, as well as the channel through which it runs? As God, he is the fountain; as man, he is the mean of conveyance; that out of his fulneſs we may receive grace for grace.—Being one with the Father, is he not the fountain of authority equal with the Father? yea, his law is his Father's law. They that ſin againſt him, ſin againſt the Father: the original authority of the law is not annulled by being put into Chriſt's hand. Are believers under leſs obligation to obedience to the law, as a rule, than before? No, by no means: ſee what gives authority and efficacy to the words of Chriſt, and what obliges us to obey him, otherwiſe we diſobey the Father alſo; The word which you hear is not mine, but the Father's that ſent me, John xiv. 24. And this he grounds upon the oneneſs betwixt the Father and him, in the preceding part of the chapter. Conſider therefore, man, woman, who it is that ſpeaks to you in the goſpel. Why is the neglect of his word ſo dangerous? It is the Father's word. Why is his voice ſo efficacious, and able to make the dead to hear and live? and why ſhould his word have weight with us, and be credited by us? O! it is the Father's word.—Being one with the Father, is he not a terrible enemy? How ſadly are unbelievers, and enemies to Chriſt, circumſtantiate, and how dreadful will their day be, when he ſhall ſay, Bring forth theſe mine enemies, that would not that I ſhould reign over them, and cut them in pieces before me! O kiſs the Son leſt he be angry; for, his anger is God's anger; his wrath is the Father's wrath. It is true, he does not appear now in this goſpel diſpenſation, clothed with robes of wrath, but rather in his robes of grace and mercy; He is not come to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be ſaved: but if this Saviour and ſalvation be neglected, he will put on his robes of fury, And come in flaming fire to take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the goſpel; and then his wrath will be ſeen to be the Father's wrath.—Being one with the Father, is he not a glorious, bleſſed, and amiable friend, whoſe friendſhip is worth courting an intereſt in? How happily are they privileged that are intereſted in him, and united to him? What! to be his followers and favourites is a great matter; but, believers, you are more, being the body of Chriſt, and members in particular. O the dignity of union with Chriſt! what a great thing is this to be one with him who is one with the Father! John xiv. 20. O believer, you little know and conſider the honour of this relation: But, ſays Chriſt, at that day ye ſhall know that I am in the Father, and you in me, and I in you. O what is that to be wrapt up with Chriſt in the boſom of a Trinity, Being one with the Father! Is he not a ſtrong tower, and mighty ſhield! Is it poſſible that his church on earth can be totally ruined, let men and devils rage as they will? No, no: The King of Zion is one with the Father. Is it poſſible that the true believer can totally and finally periſh and fall away? No, it cannot be; his perſeverance is founded upon Chriſt's oneneſs with the Father: There is no plucking them out of my hand, nor my Father's; I and my Father are one, John x. 28, 29, 30.—In a word, being one with the Father, we need not think it ſtrange that ſuch glorious things are ſpoken of him: let this confirm our faith of all his mediatorial actings. Is it any wonder that he could ſpoil principalities and powers, and triumph over them in his croſs, and bruiſe the head of the ſerpent? Could not the power and wiſdom of heaven defeat and outwit the power and policy of hell? Is it any wonder that he could conquer death, and riſe from the dead, being the living and eternal God? Is it any wonder that he, who is one with the Father, could appeaſe the Father's wrath, and bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs, and that the Father is well-pleaſed for his righteouſneſs ſake?—Finally, being one with the Father, what a fit repreſentative is he of the Father's perſon and glory? and what a native poſition does the Lord Jeſus build upon this foundation of his oneneſs with the Father? namely, He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father.

2*dly,* Is it ſo, that he that hath ſeen Chriſt, hath ſeen the Father? then, in the light of this truth we may ſee light clearly, and learn many other great leſſons. As,

1. Do they that ſee Chriſt ſee the Father? Hence I infer, the groſs darkneſs of our natural ſtate, and the groſs ignorance of God in all natural men, ſo long as they are not enlightened in the knowledge of Chriſt. The mind of man is but a maſs of ignorance: The underſtanding is darkened, Eph. iv. 17, 18.; Yea, darkneſs itſelf, 1 John ii. 9, 11.; Under the power of darkneſs, Col. i. 13. Partial ignorance of Chriſt in believers, is the reaſon why they know God but in part; therefore Chriſt ſays to his diſciples here, If ye had known me, ye would have known my Father alſo, ver. 7. Total ignorance of Chriſt in others, is the reaſon why they are wholly ignorant of God: therefore Chriſt ſpeaks in the ſame terms to the proud Phariſees, John viii. 19. Ye neither know me, nor my Father; if you had known me, you would have known my Father alſo. They that ſee not the glory of Chriſt, as the Father is repreſented in him, they neither know God nor Chriſt; they have neither the Father nor the Son: they know not God, becauſe they know not the holy perfections of God's nature in the principal way deſigned of infinite wiſdom for their manifeſtation: they know not Chriſt, becauſe they ſee not the glory of God in him: whatever other notions men may have of God, they are utterly ignorant of the heavenly myſtery; and know not the wiſdom of God in a myſtery. Again,

2. Hence we may infer, both the greatneſs of the glory of God, that is repreſented to us by ſuch an one as Chriſt, and the greatneſs of the grace of God, in providing ſuch a repreſentative, in whom we might ſee his glorious perfections, as his eternal Son in our nature. To ſee the natural ſun ſhining in its ſtrength, would ſpoil the ſight of the ſtrongeſt eye; but to look on it through a vail is not offenſive. If God ſhould manifeſt himſelf in his naked glory, we would be dazzled and confounded; but to look to God, in our nature, bringing down his glory to our eye, it invites us to behold it. God manifeſted in the fleſh: O Sirs, wonder and be amazed, that God will, in a manner, be no more God, but take another nature, rather than that the brightneſs of his own glory ſhould undoe us! O how willing is he to reveal and make himſelf ſelf known to poor ſinners that had loſt ſight of him, in that he exhibites Chriſt, the brightneſs of his glory, to us, that in him we may ſee all his glory?

3. Do they who ſee Chriſt, ſee the Father? Hence learn the preciouſneſs of Chriſt. As in his oneneſs with the Father, we may ſee his infinite glorious excellency in himſelf; ſo in his repreſenting the Father to us, we may ſee the infinite preciouſneſs of Chriſt, and the excellency of the knowledge of him; and the neceſſity of this knowledge unto us; as he is the notable mirror, and looking-glaſs, wherein God is to be ſeen; ſuch a living mirror as can diſcover itſelf, and bring men to look unto it. O wonderful mirror! God in our nature repreſenting God in his nature and perfections, and ſaying, Look to me, and be ſaved; for I am God, and there is none elſe! O the preciouſneſs of Chriſt, in whom all the beams of divine glory are contracted, that we may ſee and look upon them through the vail of his fleſh, becauſe we could not endure one glance of the immediate rays of divine glory! O precious Chriſt, as he is thus the only way to the Father! God could get glory to his juſtice in our deſtruction; but, behold, his wonderful love, in laying his Son as a bridge betwixt him and us, that we might return to God upon him: And, O the wonderful love of Chriſt, that he was content to ſtoop ſo low! May not all the creation of God wonder at this? Angels are wondering; and what are we doing that are more concerned than they? O precious Chriſt, as he is the only meeting-place where God meets with us, and we with him! In him we ſee God, and God ſees us; we cannot ſee God ſavingly but in him; and God cannot look on us favourably but in him; for, he is the temple where God dwells, and manifeſts his glory. Where can we meet with God, but in a place where alone we can ſee God? O precious Chriſt, in reſpect of the glory and honour that the Father hath given him as Mediator! As he is the Son of God, the Father, who hath life in himſelf, hath given to him to have life in himſelf, John v. 26. As he is the Sent of God, all power in heaven and earth is given unto him; and particularly he is crowned with this glory and honour, of being the viſible image of the inviſible God, and of all the divine glory. O the precioufneſs of Chriſt, when ſuch beauty is in him! It is a promiſe of the New-Teſtament days, Thine eyes ſhall ſee the King in his beauty. What is this beauty of king JESUS, but that God is in him, and all his glory to be ſeen in him? God is ſaid, under the law, to have dwelt in thick darkneſs; but now, when the Son of God hath appeared in the fleſh, in the diſcharge of his office, the ſun of righteouſneſs hath ariſen in his ſtrength and beauty. God himſelf, as to his being and manner of his exiſtence in three diſtinct perſons, with all the glorious properties of his nature, is illuſtriouſly manifeſted to believers. Thus Chriſt is the great light of the world; They that follow him ſhall not walk in darkneſs, but have the light of life, John viii. 12. O precious Chriſt! in that hereupon he is the deſire of all nations, the deſire of all ſaints, the deſire of all ages! The ſaints of old, that did not enjoy the benefit of the New-Teſtament revelation, expreſs this deſire. See how David prayed for a diſcovery of this glory of God in Chriſt, though he could behold it only in types; O God, thou art my God, early will I ſeek thee; to ſee thy power and thy glory, as I have ſeen thee in the ſanctuary, Pſal. lxiii. 1, 2. There was in the ſanctuary an obſcure repreſentation of the glory of God in Chriſt; how much more ſhould we deſire and eſteem that view, which we may now have with open face, though yet as in a glaſs! 2 Cor. iii. 18. Whence is it that a hiding Chriſt is ſuch matter of lamentation to believers? Why, the reaſon is, becauſe when he hides himſelf, God is out of ſight; when he ſmiles, the Father ſmiles; when he appears, the Father appears; and, O! how can he be but precious to the believer, when ſuch a precious ſight is to be ſeen in him!

4. Do they who ſee Chriſt, ſee the Father? Hence learn the excellency of the goſpel, for there we ſee Chriſt. How highly dignified are we that enjoy goſpel ordinances, and ſacraments? In the goſpel, Chriſt is preſented to the ear; and when we hear him, then we hear the Father. In the ſacraments, he is preſented to our eye; and when we ſee him there, we ſee the Father. How ſad is the caſe of thoſe that want the goſpel! They want the glaſs where Chriſt is ſeen, and ſo are without God; and much more ſad is their caſe, that enjoy goſpel ordinances and ſacraments, and yet neglect the great ſalvation, by neglecting to look to Chriſt there exhibited, and are never concerned to get a ſaving ſight of Chriſt there! O how near does God come to them, yet they loſe a ſight of him! How great are the advantages of a clear goſpel diſpenſation? The more bright the glaſs is, the more may Chriſt be ſeen therein; and the more that Chriſt is ſeen, the more is the Father ſeen in him.—The goſpel is a revelation of Chriſt; and herein alſo the difference betwixt the law and the goſpel appears. The law, as a covenant, yields a terrible ſight of God out of Chriſt; but the goſpel affords a pleaſant ſight of God in Chriſt: He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father.— Which alſo expoſes the malignity of a legal ſpirit, and a legal ſtrain of doctrine, by the means of which Chriſt is hid and kept out of ſight, and conſequently the Father alſo; or, if he be ſeen, it is not in Chriſt, but, as it were, in the law; and the law not being the miniſtration of the Spirit of light, life, and liberty, this is the reaſon why legal doctrine is ſo troubleſome to a goſpel believer; Gal. i. 7. There are ſome that trouble you, and would pervert the goſpel of Chriſt, namely, by their legal doctrine, which the apoſtle there ſpeaks of. Again,

5. Do they who ſee Chriſt, ſee the Father? Then hence learn, wherein the very nature and eſſence of faith lies, even in the beholding of the glory of God's wiſdom, power, holineſs, juſtice, and mercy, in the perſon and offices of Chriſt, as our Saviour and Surety. In the ignorance of this lies the formal nature of unbelief, 1 Cor. i. 23,—25. Not to ſee the wiſdom of God, and the power of God, and conſequently all the other properties of his nature in Chriſt, is to be an unbeliever. But to ſee the wiſdom, power, and other glorious attributes of the divine nature in Chriſt, with application, as our Saviour, and Surety, and ſo to ſee God glorifying his perfections thus, is to be a believer. Unbelievers are blinded, ſo as the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt, who is the image of God, ſhines not into them: but believers are ſeers, as the prophets of old were called; and they ſee viſions, as the prophet Joel expreſſes it, Joel ii. 28. What viſions? O! a beatific viſion indeed, to ſee Chriſt, and and to see the Father in him! What a large field hath faith to travel through; broader than heaven and earth, even all the fulness of God! And what a sure footing hath faith also? for when it fixes upon Christ, it fixes upon God in him. Faith looks on Christ as a friend and helper, and so it cannot but see the Father as a friend in him. What solid ground for the assurance of faith is here, while faith cannot look to Christ, but it must see the love and good-will of God in him!

6. Do they who see Christ see the Father? Hence learn, whence it is that the great design of Satan, from the beginning, hath been to blind the eyes of men, and fill their minds with prejudice, that they may not behold this glory of God in Christ, 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. And, indeed, this blindness and darkness is gradually cured in believers, by no less means than the almighty power of God; God, who commanded light to shine out of darkness, hath shined into our hearts, to give the light of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, ver. 6. And this in a conformity to that promise, Isa. lx. 1, 2. Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee: for, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people. But the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. But, why does the devil raise such opposition to the gospel? and why is he raising a smoke out of the bottomless pit at this day *, to darken that fundamental gospel truth, the essential oneness betwixt the Father and the Son, but that people may not see the Father in the Son? Think not strange, that the devil and his instruments are at such pains to cloud and darken the truths of the gospel, wherein Christ is exhibited to us.

7. Do they who see Christ see the Father? Hence learn, what a happy place heaven is, and what is the difference betwixt a fiducial vision here, and a beatifical vision hereafter. Heaven will be the place of the full vision of Christ, and of the Father in him; but the difference is stated, 1 Cor. xiii. 12. Now we see through a glass darkly; or, as it may be rendered, BY A GLASS, IN A RIDDLE, a parable, or dark saying; where our present sight of Christ is spoken of with a double figurative limitation, namely, through a glass, in a riddle: THROUGH A GLASS; that is, either a looking-glass, which yields but a representation of him; the shadow of Christ is drawn in the gospel, and we have but a representation of him there: or an optic glass, or a prospective, that helps the sight in beholding things at a distance; as men discover the stars through certain glasses, while the eye itself is not able to discern them: such a glass is the gospel, without which we can make no discovery of Christ at all. Again, the gospel-displays of him are but, as it were, IN A RIDDLE; a parable, or so many dark things, which our weak faith understands but imperfectly. Hence, Song ii. 9. Christ is said to stand behind our wall, to look forth at the windows, and shew himself through the latteſs. There is a wall of mortality betwixt him and us, that must be demolished before we can see him as he is; we see him now, as it were, through a glass window, through a latteſs; yet when he stands looking forth at the windows of ordinances, shewing and flourishing himself, as the word is, through the latteſs of the promise, how unspeakably glorious does he appear? And if so, O what will it be to see him face to face, when walls, and windows, and latteſſes, and all will be broken down, so as there shall be no more need of, nor use for these glasses and ordinances! Angels and saints above are so ravished with his glory, and satisfied with his likeness, that they cannot look upon another object. It is said, Isa. xxiv. 23. The moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his antients gloriously. O but precious Christ must have a fair face, when the sun blushes and is ashamed to shine before him! Though a child of God were in a hell of misery and trouble all his lifetime in this world, yet the first blink of this fair IMMANUEL in heaven would make amends for all. We may preach this wonderful Lord while we live, but we will never outpreach him; we may praise him to eternity, but shall never outpraise him: Blessed are they that dwell in his house, they will be still praising him; yea, they will be like him, for they will see him as he is.

8. Do they that see Christ, see the Father? Hence learn the grand difference betwixt the wicked and the godly; they differ like darkness and light, blindness and sight: sometimes they wonder at one another as if they were monsters. The godly man wonders at the wicked, to see their carnal life and wicked temper. Oh! how can they laugh and be merry, when they are ready to drop into hell! The wicked also wonder at the saints, and that they run not with them into the same excess of riot: why, the one lives upon base, visible, earthly things, the other upon invisible glory, as seeing him who is invisible. Give a carnal man the world at his will, he cares not though God's face be hid; he is in his element, as the fish in the water: his language is, Who will shew us any good; a good bargain, and a flourishing trade? But the saint is of another temper; the language of his heart is, Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us, Psal. iv. 6. Give him all the world, he cares not a straw for it if God hide his face. This makes the difference also betwixt a saint and himself; to-day he is full of joy, though he hath but a bare house, and bare cloaths, and a bare prospect of earthly enjoyments; yea, and be sadly harassed with trouble and reproaches; yet he sings, and rejoices, and triumphs. At another time he is full of heaviness, even though it should be better with him in his outward worldly circumstances, he goes sighing and sorrowing: why? the reason is, one day the Lord shines, and then he is full of joy; another day the Lord hides his face, and then he is troubled: his heaven lies in seeing Christ's glory, in which he sees the Father's glory also.

9. Do they that see Christ, see the Father? Hence learn, what an honour it is to be conformed to the Son of God, as it is said, Rom. viii. 29. Whom he did foreknow, them he did predestinate to be conform to the image of his Son. Is it the honour of Christ, as Mediator, to be the representative image of God, in whom the glory of God is to be seen? What an honour then is it for the saints to be conformed to the image of Christ? As Christ is in the form of God, so they are in the form of Christ, having Christ formed in them, Gal. iv. 19. And, being renewed after his image, as the more we see Christ the more we see God; so the more of Christ we see about a man, the more of God we see in him: This is the honour of all the saints, according to the measure of their sanctity.

10. Do

* See the reason of this assertion briefly accounted for, p. 322, 454.

10. Do they that see Christ, see the Father? Hence learn, what a dangerous thing it is to slight Christ, and contemn him, who is the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person. If any despise the picture, it is an argument of their despising the person represented by it: They that despise Christ, despise the Father. And many despise Christ that do not consider that they are doing so; particularly when they despise his sent ambassadors: He that despises you, says Christ, despises me; he that despises me, despises him that sent me. See John xv. 23, 24. Why, who would be so mad, say you, as to slight Christ? Even all you that slight his counsels, calls, and warnings given you by his word; that slight his people; and slight his ordinances; that slight his worship, such as prayer and praises, whether secret or social, private or public, wherein Christ is honoured and enjoyed. In slighting these you slight Christ himself; and in so doing you despise the Father: for, you despise his representative image; and I will assure you, God will retaliate this treatment, and pay you home in your own coin: O Lord, when thou awakest, thou shalt despise their image, Psal. lxxiii. 20.

11. Do they that see Christ, see the Father? Hence learn, the awefulness of the day of judgment that is approaching. Though Christ is constitute to be the judge, Acts xvii. 31.; yet the Father will judge the world in him, and by him; for God is judge himself, Psal. l. 6. Then will Christ be seen upon the throne of judgment; Behold, he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, Rev. i. 7.; and when they see him, they will see the Father in him; they will see God in him. It is true, he will not then be God's representative in the capacity of a Saviour to sinners, as now he is, but as a righteous judge of sinners and saints. A sight of God in Christ will not then be a pleasant sight to the wicked; for, he will appear to them, not as a Redeemer, but a revenger: for, he will appear in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel: but to believers, who look for him, and to whom he hath appeared graciously, so as they have now seen him, and the Father in him, and who will then be all perfect saints, he will appear gloriously the second time without sin, to their complete salvation, Heb. ix. 28. How dreadfully awful will that day be to the wicked that shall see him, and see God in him no other way but as a consuming fire! How joyfully awful also will it be to the saints, who shall see him then, and see the Father in him, as their everlasting joy, and exceeding great reward?

12. Do they that see Christ, see the Father? Hence also learn, the great reason and foundation of many other truths; such as,

(1.) Why is it that a sight of Christ hath such virtue, and creates such blessed effects, as we see in scripture spoken of it? Even because they who see him, see the Father. — Why is the sight of Christ so astonishing? because then the wisdom of God in a mystery appears. — Why is the sight of Christ so humbling? why, because then God is seen in his majesty and mercy both. — Why, is it such a strengthening thing? even because then the power of God is discovered. — Why is a sight of Christ so satisfying? because then the grace of God appears. — The sight is quieting to the conscience, for then the righteousness of God, in the remission of sin, is declared and manifested, Rom. iii. 25. — The sight is sweetly filling and satiating, for then the all-sufficiency of God is discovered. — Why is a sight of Christ so heart-chearing, that the believer can never get his heart up, when prest with guilt, till he get a sight of Christ, and then he gets ease to his mind, and not till then? why, because when he sees Christ, he sees the Father; and he finds God is in him reconciled and well-pleased. — In a word, why is a sight of Christ so sanctifying and transforming, that as they that see him perfectly in heaven are like him? because they see him as he is, 1 John iii. 2. So they that even see him through a glass darkly, are more and more like him, and changed into the same image, from glory to glory, 2 Cor. iii. 18. — Well then, they see the glory of a holy God in him, and the sight affects the heart, both with a sense of their disconformity to him, and with a strong desire of conformity to him; yea, the Spirit darting in the rays of the Sun of righteousness dispels the darkness of sin, and inforces the contrary light of holiness upon the whole man gradually and powerfully, according to the measure of the manifestation and commmunication.

(2.) Why is it that such honour, worship, and adoration is due to Christ? even because he is the Father's representative image as man, even as he is his essential image as God. It is gross idolatry to worship God out of this image, or by any other image, either mental or real. Ah! shall the devil make men worship the image of the beast? Rev. xiii. 1.—8.; and shall not we for ever honour this ever-living, everlasting image of our God? Why is it that what honour is done to Christ, is done to the Father, and what dishonour is done to him, is done to the Father? John v. 23. Because the Father hath ordered, that all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father; and declares, he that honours not the Son, honours not the Father. Why? even as they that see not Christ, see not the Father; and they that know not Christ, know not the Father; so they that do not honour Christ, do not honour the Father. They that disobey Christ, disobey the Father; they that displease Christ, displease the Father; they that believe in Christ, believe in the Father; therefore, says Christ, here in the context, Ye believe in God, believe also in me: which intimates this, among other things, that though one may believe in God, in some respect, without believing in Christ, yet we cannot believe in Christ, without believing in God; for, by him we believe in God, 1 Pet. i. 21. Again,

(3.) Why is it that the Father honours them that serve and follow Christ? John xii. 26. If any man serve me, him will my Father honour. Why, they that serve Christ, serve the Father. Why does the Father love them that love Christ? John xiv. 23. Why, the lovers of Christ are the lovers of God; and they are but haters of the Father that are not lovers of the Son.

(4.) Why, is the anointing said to teach all things? 1 John ii. 27. Why, when the Spirit makes known Christ, he makes known the Father; and surely they know all things necessary to be known; they know all who know him, who is all in all. Thus the meanest believer knows more than the wisest philosopher that ever was in the world, if he was ignorant of Christ.

(5.) Why is it that the Father is employed in glorifying Christ in heaven, and the Spirit sent to glorify Christ on earth? See how the Father glorifies fies him in heaven, Phil. ii. 9, 10. He became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross: wherefore God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name that is above every name. What is the reason? see it ver. 11. It is to the glory of God the Father: for when the Son of man is glorified, God is glorified in him, John xiii. 31.—See also how the Spirit is sent to glorify him on earth, John xvi. 14. Why so? even because when he is glorified, the Father is glorified in him, ver. 15. All things that the Father hath are mine. O Sirs, if the Spirit hath been sent to glorify Christ among us to day, then the Father hath been glorified in the Son.

(6.) Why is it that the saints and children of God desire sometimes to be dissolved, and to be with Christ? why, even that they may see him there, and the Father in him gloriously: for, if they that see him here, see the Father in him, how much more will all his own, and his Father's glory, then be manifested to their everlasting contentment, and full ineffable consolation through the ages of eternity! The sight of Christ that the believer gets is of such an attractive nature, that the heart affected with the glory of Christ, is just like the needle touched with a loadstone; it is in constant motion till it fix on its proper point: so is the believer's heart in a continual motion towards Christ, though yet, perhaps, like the needle, in a weak tremulous manner, the soul sighs, and sobs, and pants, and grones, in reading, in hearing, in prayer, in meditation, yet still pressing forward till it come to its centre in heaven.

13. Hence learn, what reason MINISTERS have to preach Christ; what reason PEOPLE have to learn Christ; what reason SINNERS have to receive Christ; and what reason SAINTS have to love Christ. Why, they that preach Christ, preach the Father; they that learn Christ, learn the Father; they that come to Christ, come to the Father in him and by him; and they that love Christ, love the Father. They who do not preach Christ, let them busk up, deck, and adorn their sermons with all the flowers of rhetoric and oratory in the world, and with all the expressions of seeming respect to God imaginable, yet they cast a cloud upon the glory of the Father, when they do not preach Christ. As he that honours not the Son, honours not the Father that sent him, John v. 23.: so he that does not preach Christ, does not preach the Father. Little wonder then, that honest ministers are always beating upon this string: O! let none blame them for preaching Christ; for, he is both the ALPHA and OMEGA, the first and last letter and lesson of our religion; The author and finisher of faith. We cannot preach the Father's mind and will, concerning any part of our salvation, without preaching Christ. Who can learn the Father's enlightening, justifying, sanctifying and saving grace, without learning Christ, as made of God to us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption? Who can learn repentance towards God, which is a turning from sin to God, without learning, in order of nature before it, Faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ, Acts xx. 21.? seeing there is no turning to God, but in Christ; no coming to the Father but by him. Repentance, then, toward God is the end; and faith, toward our Lord Jesus Christ, is the mean towards that end: and so, with respect to faith itself, there is no believing in God aright without believing also in Christ, By whom we believe in God: not can there be any love to God, but in Christ; we are not lovers of the Father, if we be not lovers of Christ; and good reason have the saints to love Christ, because they see his glory, and the Father's glory in him. He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father.

Use 2. The second use might be by way of trial or examination. Have you got a saving sight of Christ at this, or any such occasion? Why then, the great mark of it is, if you have seen Christ, you have seen the Father: if you have seen Christ's glory, you have seen the Father's glory in him; for, He is the brightness of the Father's glory: if you have seen Christ's person, you have seen the express image of his person: if you have seen Christ, you have seen the Father in all these and the like respects that I mentioned in the doctrinal part. Hath the God, who commanded light to shine out of darkness, shined into your heart, to give you the light of the knowledge of his glory in the face of Christ? Then you have seen Christ indeed, if you have thus got the light of the knowledge of the Father's glory in his face. It is possible, indeed, that you may have seen Christ, and yet not know that you have seen the Father, even though it be impossible to see Christ and not see the Father; for, Philip here, had seen Christ, and seen the Father in him also, as Christ declares, ver. 7. Henceforth you know him, and have seen him. Notwithstanding this declaration of Christ, Philip's saying, Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth, intimates the weakness of his faith, the darkness of his view, and that he knew not that he had seen the Father; upon which Christ, having reproved him for his ignorance, saying, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he again resumes the doctrine he had delivered, ver. 7. where he had said, If ye had known me, ye would have known my Father also: and he resumes it here yet more clearly and expressly, saying, He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father; how then sayest thou, Shew us the Father? If any believers here, who think they have seen Christ, be yet at a loss to know if they have seen the Father, let them hearken to what Christ is here saying to them, as he did to Philip, Have I been so long time with thee, and yet hast thou not known me? He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father. But are you still in the dark, Philip? Do you not yet know, believer, that you have seen the Father in Christ, and would you have this question further opened?

QUEST. How shall I know, if I have seen CHRIST in such a saving manner as to see the FATHER in him?

For helping the weak believer in this matter; if he whose prerogative it is to shew us the Father, would send his Spirit to shine on a mark or two for clearing this, that in seeing Christ, you have seen the Father, there are two ways by which you may try it, namely, 1. By reflecting on the object. 2. By the offspring of this saving sight.

1st, Take a review of the object of this sight, namely, CHRIST, in whom the Father is seen. And if ever you have seen Christ, you may know you have seen the Father: for, there are certain relations wherein he stands to the Father, not only as he is his eternal Son, but also as he is our Saviour. He stands related to the Father, I say, in these respects so closly, that it is impossible to see him without seeing the Father. As he that sees a Son, cannot not but know, not only that there is a father, ſince the ſon is a relative that muſt have a father; but alſo, if the ſon be ſo like him, the very picture of the father, then he that ſees the ſon cannot but be ſaid to ſee the father; much more ſo it is here; Chriſt, the Son, being not only the Father's picture, but, in reſpect of his Deity, being clothed with the very ſame eſſential perfections, the ſame individual attributes and excellencies. Such is his perſonal equality in power and glory, and eſſential oneneſs and ſameneſs in ſubſtance with the Father, that there is no ſeeing of him without ſeeing the Father. But more paticularly, with a view to the relations wherein he ſtands to the Father, even as he is our Saviour.

1. If you have ſeen Chriſt, you have ſeen him to be the Father's Choice; Behold mine Elect, ſays the Father of him, Iſa. xlii. 1. Why, then you have ſeen the Father chooſing him from all eternity, to be a Saviour and Surety for loſt ſinners.

2. Have you ſeen him as the Father's Servant, in this work of our redemption? Behold my Servant, whom I uphold. If ſo, then you have ſeen the Father in his matchleſs love, putting his ſervice in his hand, and laying help upon One that is mighty to ſave.

3. Have you ſeen him as the Father's Darling and Delight? Mine Elect, in whom my ſoul delighteth, ſays the Father; then you have ſeen the Father taking pleaſure in him, as his faithful and righteous Servant in managing this work. And I will aſſure you, ſuch views of the Father, in Chriſt, are no ſmall thing. Again,

4. Have you ſeen him as the Father's Ambaſſador, and as the Sent and Sealed of the Father; and that him hath God the Father ſealed? Why then, to be ſure, you have ſeen (as imported in this) the Father ſending, ſealing, and clothing him with a commiſſion to this effect, Of ſaving ſinners, of whom you are the chief. There is a notable ſight of the Father. Again,

5. Have you ſeen him as the Father's Gift; the unſpeakable Gift of God, given for a Covenant of the people? This imports a ſight of the Father, as giving him freely for that end, to be our complete ſalvation; and ſo you have ſeen the Father in him. Again,

6. Have you ſeen him as the Father's Treaſurer, In whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge; all the treaſures of divine fulneſs in him? Then you have ſeen the Father's fulneſs in him. And what better ſight of the Father can you have, than to ſee him in all his fulneſs; to ſee him in Chriſt, in whom dwells all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily. Again,

7. Have you ſeen him as the Father's Secretary, ſent to reveal the heart, and mind, and will of the Father to you? Then you have ſeen the Father's councils in him, yea, the Father's thoughts; even though, as heaven is higher than the earth, ſo his thoughts are higher than our thoughts, yet when you ſaw Chriſt, you ſaw his thoughts towards you to be thoughts of good, and not of evil, to give you an expected end. While unbelief prevailed, and a legal ſpirit, you judged he had ill thoughts and deſigns againſt you, and a mind to deſtroy you; but when, by faith, you ſaw Chriſt, then you ſaw he had better thoughts, and a mind to ſave you. And did you not win far forward, and admitted very near, to ſee the Father, when, in Chriſt, you ſaw his very mind, and thoughts, and counſel concerning you? How can you ſay then, if you ſaw Chriſt, that you did not ſee the Father? Again,

8. Have you ſeen him as the Father's Image and Repreſentative? Then ſurely you have ſeen the Father repreſented by him, Who is the image of the inviſible God; the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; his eſſential image, as God; and repreſentative image, as man. And hence,

9. Have you ſeen him as the Father's Equal? the man that is my Fellow, ſays the Lord of hoſts, who thinks it no robbery to be equal with God? Then you have ſeen the Father's power and glory in him; for, therein they are perſonally equal, and eſſentially one.

10. In a word, have you ſeen him, and the Father's furniture about him, qualifying him as Mediator for the great work of our redemption, both by price and power? Then you have ſeen the Father's Spirit in him, and reſting upon him, as a Spirit of wiſdom and underſtanding, a Spirit of counſel and might, a Spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord, Iſa. xi. 2. For he hath put his Spirit upon him, that he might bring forth judgment to the Gentiles, Iſa. lxii 1. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, ſays Chriſt, for he hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the meek, to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and to open the priſon doors to them that are bound. Got you never an apprehenſion of Chriſt, as being anointed with the oil of gladneſs above his fellows, and as having a ſupereminent unction of the Spirit above meaſure? If you have thus ſeen the Spirit of the Father in him, it is one of the greateſt ſights that can be ſeen; for, to ſee the Father's Spirit in the Son, is to ſee a whole Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, with one glance of the eye of faith.—Well then, can you ſay, believer, but that when you ſaw Chriſt in theſe reſpects I have mentioned, you alſo have ſeen the Father?—Try it then by the object of this ſight.

2*dly*, Take a view of the fruit and offspring of this ſaving ſight. As they that ſee Chriſt ſee the Father, and cannot but ſee the Father's wiſdom in providing him, the Father's love in beſtowing him, the Father's grace in accepting him as the Surety, and the Father's ſatisfaction with him and in him, for his doing and dying in our room and ſtead, according to the Father's will, and council of peace that was betwixt them both; ſo this ſight cannot but affect the hearts of all that have the happineſs to enjoy it. If a prince come to a poor man's houſe, how ſhall we know whether he be ſtill there? Though we ſee him not, we may know by his train, and theſe that attend him; if we ſee his train, we know he is there: even ſo, the believer may know whether Chriſt be revealed in him, and in his heart, though he be at preſent out of ſight, if his train be attending: Iſaiah ſaw the Lord upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple, Iſa. vi. 1. Now, it is poſſible the train may be ſeen, when the Lord himſelf is not ſo diſcernable. There is a train of bleſſings that attends a ſaving revelation of Chriſt, or a ſaving ſight of him, that you would try yourſelves by. I ſhall name a few of them; for, if you have ſeen Chriſt, and the Father in him, then the ſight was generative, So as to regenerate you, and beget all graces and virtues in you, John i. 13, 14, 16. There believers are ſaid to be born, not of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God: not of their free will, but of God's free grace. Well, but by what means are they thus regenerate? It follows, The Word was made flesh, and we beheld his glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. The great mean of their being begotten anew is, their beholding the glory of the only begotten of the Father; and, as it is by this sight they are begotten, so by this all graces are begotten, as you see, by comparing verses 14. and 16. together, We beheld his glory,—full of grace and truth: and out of his fulness have we all received, and grace for grace. A saving sight of Christ then, and of the Father in him, hath a powerful generative quality. Would you know, believer, when you was born again, or the first moment of your regeneration? It was that moment wherein you first got a view of the glory of the only begotten of the Father; and if you would try it by the fruits of it, the offspring is so numerous, that we cannot undertake to speak of all. I shall mention some of the many things that this sight begets.

1. This sight begets faith, it ushers in believing; He that sees the Son, and believes in him, hath everlasting life, John vi. 40. It is by beholding him, we believe in him; Looking unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith, Heb. xii. 2. There is a looking to him by spiritual understanding, in order to our looking to him by faith; a looking to Jesus, the object of faith; and, in this way, we are made to find him the Author of faith. There is a looking to him for faith, and a looking to him by faith. Can you say, Alas! I could not believe, though give me a world, till he manifested his glory to me; and when I saw his glory, then I could not but believe that the first act of faith was begotten by the first view of Christ; and that all the after-acts of faith depended upon the further discoveries of Christ; He manifested forth his glory, and his disciples believed on him, John ii. 11.

2. This sight begets hope, 1 Pet. ii. 3. It is there declared, that by the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, manifesting himself particularly in Christ's resurrection from the dead, believers are said to be begotten again to a lively hope. O believer, when once you beheld this glory of God in Christ, was not then your languishing despair turned to a lively hope? Was not your fears of hell and wrath, which you was convinced was your natural inheritance, as a child of wrath, and an heir of hell, was not this fear of hell and wrath, I say, in the day when you saw Christ, turned to a hope of an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away?

3. This sight begets repentance and sorrow for sin; Zech. xii. 10. They shall look on him whom they have pierced, and mourn. Was it possible, for you, O believer, to look upon this glorious Sun of righteousness without a watering eye, or a mourning penitential heart? Did not the heart, that was harder than a flint, become softer than wax, melting before the warm fire of the love of God, manifested in Christ?

4. This sight begets love; Whom having not seen, [viz. by sense, but by faith,] we love, 1 Pet. i. 8. Love to his person, as being, the brightness of the Father's glory; love to his people, as the excellent ones of the earth; love to his statutes, saying, O that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes; love to his ordinances, and to the place where his honour dwells. Is it possible you could see him, and yet not love him in all respects?

5. This sight begets liberty; for, Where the Spirit of the Lord is, [as a Spirit of revelation, discovering the glory of Christ,] there is liberty, 2 Cor. iii. 17. O Sirs, did not the sight of the glory of God, in Christ, enlarge your heart, and loose your bonds, and set you at liberty from your fetters and fears; at liberty from the law and legal bondage? Got you not liberty to unbosom yourself unto the Lord; liberty to plead, and liberty to pray, and liberty to praise, and all the doors of your prison cast open?

6. This sight begets joy and satisfaction; In whom, though now we see him not, yet believing, we rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory, 1 Pet. i. 8. Abraham saw my day, and rejoiced, says Christ; and then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord. This is sweetly prophesied of, Isaiah xxxv. 1, 2. The wilderness and solitary places shall be glad, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose; it shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing; why all this? It follows, They shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God. O believer, did not your heart leap within you, when you saw the glory of the Lord? It is true, people may have a kind of joy, in that which will not give solid satisfaction; but here is full satisfaction, as well as fulness of joy. A man may say, when he is highest in the comforts of this world, Ah! there is no solid permanent satisfaction here; there is a want; there is a want; death and judgment trip up the heels of all that comfort: but it is not so here; the man that hath seen the glory of the Lord, may say, Now, I can trample upon all worldly joy; now, I can triumph in the view of death, judgment, and eternity: Thanks be to God, which always causes us to triumph in Christ. Now is my soul satisfied as with marrow and fatness.

7. This sight begets longing; yea, longing for more and more of the knowledge of Christ, and of the glory of God in him; One thing have I desired of the Lord, and that I will seek after, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, Psal. xxvii. 4. So Paul, Phil. 8,—14. It begets a longing to be above, where the vision will be full and uninterrupted; and a desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ. O to be for ever with the Lord! It begets a longing to be free of sin and unbelief, and every thing that hinders the immediate vision and enjoyment of the Lord.

8. This sight begets holiness and conformity to the object discovered; Beholding his glory, we are changed into the same image, from glory to glory; and so he becomes thereby all glorious within. Notwithstanding of the remainder of corruption, and the prevelance of it; yet there is something within that will have the last word, so as the devil cannot get his work finished in that heart. The devil is said to work effectually in the wicked; that is, says one, He finishes his work: but in the saints he cannot get that done; for, grace comes after, and overthrows that work some way or other. Thus the devil sifted Peter, and foiled him; but afterwards Peter wept out the devil's work upon Christ's looking upon him, and his looking to Christ. Indeed, a new sight of Christ, gives always a new victory over sin, and makes the soul advance in holiness, purity, and conformity to the Lord Jesus; Beholding his glory, full of grace and truth, we receive out of his fulness, grace for grace, as the wax receives letter for letter from the seal. This sight of God in Christ, is not a dry, barren speculation, that leaves you as proud and carnal, malicious, wicked, and worldly as ever, no; you may suspect it is not a saving a saving sight, if it did not, in some measure, leave an impression of the holiness of God upon you.

9. This sight begets humility, self-loathing, and abasement; other knowledge puffs up, but this presses down the soul to nothing before the Lord, saying, Now mine eyes see thee; wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes, Job xlii. 5. The same light that discovers the greatness of God, discovers the meanness of the creature; the holiness of God seen, discovers the vileness of the creature; the fulness of God being seen, then appears the emptiness of the creature, and the baseness thereof: hence the holiest of men, upon the discovery of the Lord, must cry out, Behold, I am vile, Isa. vi. 5. Then is the soul ashamed and confounded, when the Lord is discovered as pacified towards it, Ezek. xvi. 63. O! did not the sight of the glory of God in Christ, believer, make the haughtiness of man to fall, and the loftiness of man to be laid low! The fairer that Christ is seen, the viler does the believer see himself; and then self-wisdom, self-righteousness, self-love, are dashed down to the ground, and covered with shame and blushing.

10. This sight begets holy boldness and confidence. Notwithstanding the humbling nature of this view; yet it is emboldening also, leading the soul to say, Truth, Lord, I am a dog; but yet, be what I will, I must have a crumb. Now, that thou hast let me know where my supply lies, I will trust and confide in thee alone for it: They that know thy name, will put their trust in thee; for thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that seek thee, Psal. ix. 10.

In a word, if you have seen Christ, and the Father in him, did not the sight beget peace of conscience before God? Being justified by faith, we have peace with God; and this flowing from the sight and knowledge of God; for, by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many, says God. According to the measure of faith, was there never a joy and peace in believing that you found?—Did not the sight beget patience under crosses that you was compassed with? It is said of Moses, He endured, as seeing him that is invisible.—Were not all worldly troubles, trials, and reproaches made easy to you, when the Spirit of God, and of glory was resting on you?—Did not the sight beget zeal for the glory of God, and for the good of the souls of others, and make your heart cry out, O that all the world would come and see this glory, and admire the King in his beauty?—Did not the sight beget strength and fortitude, so as the joy of the Lord was your strength; and you could say, I can do all things through Christ strengthening me; for now he hath strengthened me with strength in my soul; and made me to say, In the Lord have I righteousness and strength?—Did not the sight beget a chearful gospel-walk, according to that word, Psal. lxxxix. 15, 16. Blessed are the people that know the joyful sound; they shall walk, O Lord, in the light of thy countenance. Thou art the glory of their strength; and in thy righteousness shall they be exalted?—Did not the sight beget praise and adoration, saying, O! what shall I render to the Lord for all his benefits?—Did it not beget wonder and admiration, saying, What am I, and what is my Father's house, that thou hast brought me hitherto; Is this the manner of man, O Lord; and what can David say more unto thee?—Did not the sight beget contempt of the world, and a selling of your ALL for this Pearl of great price? saying, I count all but loss and dung, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ. Could you not trample on the world as dung, when the glory of the Lord appeared to you? Was not Christ more precious to you than a thousand worlds of gold? Hath the sight you got of God, in Christ, such a fair offspring as this? Then it looks like a saving sight.

I shall add, finally, Did not this sight of the glory of God in Christ, O believer, beget in you an indelible impression of that glory that time cannot utterly wear out? It is prophesied, Isa. lx. 19. The Lord shall be thy everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. This light of the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, in the face of Jesus Christ, is, in some respect, everlasting; while the candle of the wicked is put out, and the candle of the hypocrite put out. Hence, Heb. vi. 4.—though once enlightened, they may fall away; the apprehension and impression of all that common light may utterly fail: but it is not so here with the believer; the Lord is his everlasting light, even though his Lord may, for a moment, hide his face from him.

Perhaps some believers may now be saying, Whatever be the fair offspring of this saving sight of God in Christ, that you have been mentioning, though I sometimes think, I have got that sight you speak of, and at certain times have found some of these fruits and offspring thereof, yet have I not now reason to suspect, it is but a common light, like that of the hypocrite, and that I never got that saving sight when I find, to my experience, that all the fruit and offspring thereof is now dead and gone, dead and buried, dead and out of sight? For I think sometimes not so much as the least impression thereof remains.

O believer, if you have seen Christ, and the Father in him, examine it over again, and you will find it otherwise than you suppose, and that there is a living impression remains, whether it be lively or not: therefore, I charge you before God, believer, to be ingenuous in this matter; was there not something in Christ you saw, that took such impression on you, that you have never to this day forgotten? It may be you have forgotten many friends and acquaintances, that are dead and away; you have forgotten many sermons that you heard in your lifetime; you have forgotten many words that past betwixt you and your neighbours some years ago; you have forgotten some visits that certain friends made to you; but there was a visit that Christ made to you at such a time, there was some sight that you got of him, and some word that you got from him, and that is a thing you can never forget to this day. I speak either of the first sight that ever you got of him, or of some following remarkable visits that he made to you, in displaying his glory: for a believer may get a thousand views of Christ in his lifetime, but there are some views that he gets, that if he were to live a thousand years, he could never forget them. Have you not a fresh remembrance, believer, to this day, of such a spot of ground where you saw his glory? Was not such a place like a Bethel, a house of God? and such another a place like a Peniel, where you saw God in a manner face to face? Whatever cloudy days have intervened since that time, yet you can never forget it; for, so far as you can judge in the sight of the heart-searching God, it carried all the marks of a saving manifestation along with it. Why then, will you say, that all all the fruits and impreſſion of it are dead and gone? For there is a living rememberance of it in your heart to this day, and a living wiſh and deſire at the root of your heart, ſaying, O to ſee that glory of God again! What is the reaſon, that this can never wear out of your head and heart? Even becauſe it is an eternal and incorruptible thing; The Lord is thy everlaſting light: and you will carry this impreſſion into eternity with you; and heaven will perfect the viſion: We ſhall be like him, for we ſhall ſee him as he is.

Uſe 3. The third uſe might be for conviction to the wicked and ungodly; that is, to all unbelievers that never yet have ſeen Chriſt, and conſequently, never ſaw God the Father in him; and, like Gallio, care for none of theſe things, and that are not concerned with ſuch ſpeculations. Why, man, have you no concern in this matter? Is it not of everlaſting moment, whether you got a ſaving ſight of Chriſt, yea, or not? Know you not, that if our goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt, in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, leſt the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt, who is the image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them? 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. And that it is life eternal, to know God in Chriſt, and conſequently eternal death to want this ſight? Will you tell me, if a phyſician ſhould come into a chamber where there are two ſick perſons, and ſhould ſay, the one will die of that diſeaſe, and the other will recover; would they not think it their concern to enquire after this matter? Much more is this a concern above all ſuch concern. When I tell you that hear me, that one part of you are believers, that have ſeen the glory of God in Chriſt, and you ſhall live, and live for ever; the other part, and, alas! the greateſt part are unbelievers, that have never ſeen the glory of God in the face of Chriſt; and if you live and die in that caſe, you die for ever, and will ly eternally under his revenging wrath: and is all this a matter of moon-ſhine to you? If you ſee him not now, you ſhall never ſee him in mercy hereafter. This ſight of Chriſt, and of his Father in him, is no bare empty ſpeculation; nay, it is the very root and foundation of all practical godlineſs: there is no conformity to his image, without beholding of his glory. Many ſpeak of following the example of Chriſt, even as ſome write volumes of it, as if it were to be attained by a bare imitation of his actions; but this is impoſſible, without a view and intuition of his glory, which alone is accompanied with a transforming power, to change us into the ſame image, from glory to glory. What makes one half of the generation ſo groſly wicked, and another ſo madly ſuperſtitious, but the want of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Chriſt? Why is the throng of the nobility and gentry of our day, beſides the commonalty, running ſo faſt to the devil? And why are ceremonies, and ſuperſtitious human inventions in the worſhip of God, become ſo faſhionable †? Why, people do not ſee the glory of God in Chriſt, in the glaſs of his own pure ordinances and inſtitutions; therefore they make uſe of painted glaſſes: they do not ſee the internal glory, therefore they turn to external pomp and forms: but, as the more paint is put upon the glaſs-window the leſs light is conveyed through it; ſo, the more people pleaſe themſelves with a painted ceremonial worſhip, the leſs, in the righteous judgment of God, do they ſee of the glory of God; yea, the more do they run out of God's way, and love darkneſs rather than light. May the Lord pity a poor ignorant generation, that profeſs the knowledge of Chriſt, and yet know nothing of the glory of God in the face of Chriſt. But I ſhall not enlarge here.

Uſe 4. The fourth uſe might be for conſolation to believers that have ſeen Chriſt; for, he that hath ſeen Chriſt, hath ſeen the Father. O believer, you have ſeen much that have ſeen Chriſt, you have ſeen his glory and his Father's glory too. —Here is comfort againſt the apprehenſion you have of your own ignorance of God: Oh! ſays the man that ſees God in Chriſt, I am more brutiſh than any man; I have not the underſtanding of a man: ſo fooliſh am I and ignorant, I am as a beaſt before God. Indeed they that ſee him beſt, are under moſt humbling impreſſions that they cannot ſee, and of the impoſſibility of ſeeing him, during the ſtate of ſin and mortality; this keeps the believer's heart in awe, and cauſes him to walk before God with holy fear and reverence, knowing how dangerous it is to think amiſs of God, and yet how difficult it is to think aright of him. However, believer, you that have got a ſaving ſight of Chriſt, you have ſeen farther than you are apt to think you have ſeen, though it is but a ſmall portion of God that at beſt we know; it may be, with Philip, when you ſaw Chriſt, you did not know that you ſaw the Father. There is more glory in the object of faith, than you are ready to take up; but the Lord Jeſus is ready to teach you, and make you know better what you know. There is more knowledge and perſuaſion of the love and grace of God in Chriſt, in the act of faith, than the believer may be aware of upon reflection, till the Lord Jeſus diſcover to him anew what his faith is, and let him know what he ſaw and diſcerned when he ſaw Chriſt; he lets you know, He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father.—Again, O believers, here is comfort againſt all troubles and trials you can meet with in this valley of tears: let me ſay to you as Chriſt ſaid, Mat. xiii. 16. Bleſſed are your eyes, for they ſee. You cannot be unhappy and miſerable to whom the Lord hath manifeſted his glory, though you be a poor man, a plundered man, a perſecuted man, a ſick man or woman, or whatever elſe can be called miſery about you; if you believe Chriſt, who is the truth, you are a bleſſed man, a bleſſed woman. Though you were ſick, and ſhould never ſee health; though you were weak, and ſhould never ſee ſtrength; though you were poor, and ſhould never ſee wealth; though you were baniſhed, and ſhould never ſee your own country or friends; yea, though you were ſtark blind, and ſhould never ſee the ſun in the firmament; yet if you have ſeen Chriſt, and ſeen the Father in him, bleſſed are your eyes, for they ſee. All the bleſſedneſs in the world, and that ever mankind enjoyed from the creation, put all together, is not worthy to be compared with one glance that a believer hath of the glory of God in Chriſt. And it may be, there are ſome believers here of ſuch ſtanding, that they have got a thousand of these glances, since the Lord began to discover himself, and reveal his glory to them. For shame then, believer, be not discouraged with every trifle in the world; your lines are fallen in pleasant places, and you have a goodly heritage. Never look dejected any more; envy not the wicked any more, but rather pity them, and weep for them, whatever be their outward pomp and prosperity, you have infinitely greater treasure. We have this treasure in earthen vessels, saith the apostle; well, what treasure? even the manifestation of God's glory in Christ, that is there spoken of: therefore you may say, believer, though I have not worldly profit, nor pelf, nor money, nor honour, let the world have all, yet I have a good bargain. O believer, pity the world that know no better happiness than good meat and brave clothes; that know no better enjoyment than cabaling, eating, drinking, dancing, roaring, dicing, carding, hunting, gaming. Alas! if they were not mad they could not be merry in that case, being without God in the world.—Here is comfort against desertion; have you seen him once, you will see him again; though he hide himself for a moment, yet he is the God of Bethel, where you anointed the pillar, and vowed the vow unto him.—Here is comfort against death; though you should die poor and mean; yea, though you should die distracted, yet having seen his glory, you shall see him in glory, and praise him for ever: your eyes have seen his salvation; and therefore, though you know not in what circumstances you shall die, or how soon you shall depart, yet you may well be content to die what death the Lord will, and how soon soever he pleases, saying, Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation. And whenever death closes your bodily eyes, you shall see him face to face.—— Take home all the strong consolations that God allows you who have seen Christ.

Use 5. The last use should be in a word of exhortation. And our exhortation shall consist of two branches, 1. To those who have never yet seen Christ, nor the Father in him. 2. To believers, who have already seen Christ.

1*st*, Our exhortation shall first be directed to unbelievers. Do they that see Christ see the Father? O then, you that never saw before, Come and see; come and see this great sight!

[1.] For motives consider, 1. The excellency of this sight. 2. The necessity of this sight.

1. Consider the excellency of this sight. To see all the great works of God is a great thing, but to see God himself, who is invisible, in his own image and representative, is an excellent sight. O the excellency of the knowledge of Christ, in whom we have the knowledge of the Father! The holy properties of the divine nature are not only represented to our faith in Christ, as to their own essential glory, but as they are exerted for our salvation: for in him we see infinite wisdom, power, justice, holiness, and mercy exerting themselves, in the contrivance, constitution, and efficacious accomplishment of the great work of our redemption and salvation. This gives, as to our view, an unspeakable lustre to the native amiableness of these divine attributes. As they are eternally resident in the divine nature, and absolutely the same with it, we cannot so comprehend them as to have any endearing, satiating view of their glory; but as they are exerted to our salvation, these beams of glory shine with unspeakable ravishment; O the depths of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! Rom. xi. 33. Here is a great privilege, and a great mystery both; a privilege to be valued, as it is a dawning of heaven; and a mystery to be viewed with spiritual wisdom; wisdom from above is absolutely necessary; for, flesh and blood cannot reveal it. How blind were the greatest philosophers in comparison with the meanest disciple of Jesus, that sees this great sight! But then,

2. Consider the necessity of this sight. There is no seeing of Christ above, if we get not a begun sight and view of him here; yea, you cannot so much as desire the glory of God in heaven, whatever you pretend, if you never saw the glory of Christ here. If a man pretend he is delighted with, and desires greatly what he never saw, nor was ever represented to him, he does but dote upon his own imagination. The pretended desires of many to behold the glory of Christ in heaven, who have no view of it by faith while on earth, are nothing but self-deceiving imaginations. Therefore, let none deceive themselves; they that see not Christ here, shall never see him, nor the glory of God in him, hereafter. Now, they that do not see the glory of Christ, have no grace; for all grace is begotten only by this sight, as I have shewed already. He that sees the Son, and believes in him, hath everlasting life; but they that see not the Son, are unbelievers and heirs of everlasting death.

[2.] For direction, if you ask, Where shall we see him? and, how shall we see him?

1. If you ask, WHERE shall we see him? God the Father hath given Christ to be the glass wherein you may see him: Christ hath given the gospel to be the glass wherein you may see him: say not then, Who will ascend to heaven and bring Christ down; or descend to the deep, to bring him up that we may see him? You may see him in this word of faith that we preach. O see him in that word, ver. 6. I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh to the Father but by me. If you take a view of him in that word, you will see the Father in him. If you see him as the way, you may see the Father in him leading you to himself; if you see him as the truth, you may see the Father in him teaching you his mind and will; if you see him as the life, you may see the Father in him quickening you that are dead in sins and trespasses. If you see him in that word, No man cometh to the Father, but by me, you may see the Father in him, determining the necessity of coming to Christ by faith, in order to your attaining the enjoyment of God. —O see him in his sweet command, lined with gospel-grace; Look to me, and be saved all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else, Isa. xlv. 22. There he is to be seen, and his Father in him; his call is the Father's call; you see it is the call and command of him that is essentially one with the Father; I am God, and there is none else.—O come and see him in his sweet promises, all lined with love; such as that, Psal. lxxii. 17. Men shall be blest in him, and all nations shall call him blessed. And again, Surely shall one say, In the Lord have I righteousness and strength. Men shall be blest in him; and surely, one shall say, in the Lord I have all. O! what encouraging promiſes are here, even to them that think they cannot ſee him; they cannot look to him! for the very ſtrength to look to him, and the eye to ſee him, is put in the promiſe; they ſhall be bleſt in him; they ſhall ſay, In the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength. They ſhall look on him whom they have pierced, and mourn. As the command makes it your duty, ſo the promiſe gives you encouragement to look to him in both; and to ſee him in a promiſe, by faith, is as ſafe a way of ſeeing him, as if you ſaw him in heaven; and better than if you ſaw him with your bodily eyes in the pulpit, and heard him preaching to you: for many ſaw him thus, that never got a ſaving ſight of him by faith.—O come and ſee him in his purchaſe that he hath made by his obedience unto death; a purchaſe of grace and glory for you, ſinner. But, ſay you, was it not for the elect only? It may be he did not make the purchaſe for me; that was not his deſign. My friends, we preach the doctrine of election in its own place, and declare, that the elect only ſhall obtain; and that as many as were ordained to eternal life ſhall believe; but it were impertinent to bring it in upon the general call of the goſpel; it belongs ſo little to that purpoſe, that we could not mention it therein any other way, than to ward it off from that point, when the devil and the wicked unbelieving heart bring it in as an objection againſt, and an obſtruction to your ſeeing Chriſt with application to yourſelves. I only aſk, therefore, whether is his ſecret counſel, or his open command your rule? Whether is his hidden purpoſe, or revealed promiſe to be your encouragement? What have you ado with his ſecret? you are not excluded in his word; and, why then will you exclude yourſelves? As I call you, therefore, to ſee him in his purchaſe that he hath made of grace and glory to you, ſinner, declared in his promiſe, that he is come to ſave ſinners; ſo I would warn you to beware of a trick of the devil and unbelief here, in turning that to a diſcouragement of faith, which is really an encouragement thereof. Hath Chriſt ſaid, All that the Father hath given me, ſhall come; why then, come and ſee him, and then you will ſee the Father giving you to him from eternity. Would you deſire to get in to the very heart of God, and read his electing love? You may do it by opening this book of the goſpel-promiſe, and reading it with application to yourſelf; and there you may ſee it.—O come and ſee him in his robes of grace and ſalvation; ſee him in his garments rolled in blood: behold how he comes from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah. See him on a throne of grace inviting you to come to him, and kindly declaring, that it is his greateſt quarrel with you, that you will not come to him that you might have life, and ſalvation from all your ſins, and all the wrath that is entailed upon them. Are you afraid to look to him, thinking he hath a quarrel with you for your ſins? Nay, but know it, no ſin that ever you was guilty of is to be mentioned as the ground of his quarrel, but only for this one, that you will not come and look to him for ſalvation and deliverance from all ſin whatſoever. O ſee him then, and welcome him in his kindly offer, and ſay no more, where ſhall we ſee him? for he is here preſent dealing with you in this goſpel.

2. If you aſk, How ſhall we ſee him, and the Father in him? I gave many motives and directions alſo, with reference to the knowledge of Chriſt, on the doctrine raiſed from the former part of the text; therefore, I need enlarge the leſs here. I ſhall offer you theſe two or three advices, with reference to your ſeeing of Chriſt, in order to your ſeeing of the Father in him; or with reference to your getting a ſaving ſight of God in Chriſt.

(1.) Be convinced, that unleſs he manifeſt himſelf, you can by no means in the world ſee him. Even as all the candles and torches in the world cannot diſcover the ſun to you, when under a cloud, till it come forth itſelf: ſo all the means in the world cannot diſcover God in Chriſt to you till he manifeſt himſelf; I will manifeſt myſelf, John xiv. 21. It is his prerogative to do it when he pleaſes; therefore, give him the glory of his ſovereignty, ſaying, Lord, I cannot ſee thee; and all the world cannot let me ſee thee; but, O manifeſt thyſelf to me. Be convinced that you cannot poſſibly ſee him, till he open your eyes and ſhew himſelf.

(2.) Be convinced of the neceſſity of a powerful regeneration, ere you can ſee God; Except a man be born again, he cannot ſee the kingdom of God, John iii. 3.; and a God in Chriſt is the chief thing, if not the only thing in that kingdom. The eyes of fleſh and blood cannot ſee this great ſight: theſe eyes of fleſh may ſee the natural ſun; but you muſt have other eyes to behold the Sun of righteouſneſs, otherwiſe though his glory be ſhining about you, your blindneſs and darkneſs comprehends him not. Therefore,

(3.) Be convinced of your own groſs darkneſs and ignorance of God. A conceit of your own knowledge, and high eſteem of yourſelf, and your own wiſdom, will both be an evidence that you know nothing as you ought to know; and alſo be a hinderance of your knowing and ſeeing the Lord: therefore you muſt become a fool that you may be wiſe. For judgment am I come into this world, ſays Chriſt, that they which ſee not might ſee, and that they which ſee might be made blind, John ix. 39.

(4.) Be convinced, that it is your ſin and miſery both, that you do not, and cannot ſee this glory of God in Chriſt.—It is your ſin, your leading ſin, and mother of all your other ſins: for herein lies the formal nature of unbelief, that you do not, you cannot, you will not look to Chriſt and be ſaved.—And it is your miſery; for, while unbelief reigns, you are under the power of the devil, hiding this light from you; And if our goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt, in whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, leſt the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt, who is the image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them, 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. This darkneſs and blindneſs is the ſtrength of the devil's kingdom. Whenever light ſhines into the heart, his power is broken: but darkneſs and ignorance is the chain wherein he leads you to the place of utter darkneſs, to which you will be ſentenced with him, if that chain be not looſed in time. What will be the ſentence of the great Judge? will he give one to the devil, and another to wicked men? No: he will make one to ſerve them both; Go, you curſed, into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil: you joined with the devil in loving darkneſs, and therefore depart with him. Oh! be convinced, poor ſoul, that the devil is cutting your throat in the dark; dark; and that it is both your sin and misery that you do not see.

(5.) Be convinced, that there is a promise of divine illumination left to you to rely on; They shall be all taught of God. Every man, therefore, that hath heard and learned of the Father, cometh unto me: no man can come except the Father, which hath sent me, draw him, John vi. 44. Cry, therefore, for the promised teaching, the promised drawing; and seeing his powerful drawing is just his effectual teaching, O cry for the powerful promised illumination of his holy Spirit in the knowledge of Christ, in whom alone you can know the Father: be restless in the use of all appointed means, till the Spirit be sent for this end. It is his sweet counsel to you, that you buy of him eye-salve that you may see. Beg his enlightening Spirit: the Spirit is both the promise of the Father and of the Son; I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry at Jerusalm till you be endued with power from on high, Luke xxiv. 49. Stay about his hand, in the use of ordinances of his institution, till the promised Spirit be poured out; and when he comes, says Christ, he shall testify of me, he shall glorify me, John xv. 26. xvi. 14. Plead the promise that is left to you of this powerful illumination.

(6.) Be convinced, that however unable and unfit you are for yielding to his call, yet it is both your indispensible duty to see and behold this glorious object Christ, in whom you will see the Father; and your present duty to essay it with a view to his enabling grace. O Sirs, is not the Father calling you to look to his Son? saying, Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth, Isa. lxii. 1. And is not the Son calling you to look to him and be saved? saying, Behold me, behold me, Isa. lxv. 1. And does not the Spirit and the bride say, Come? Rev. xxii. 17. Is a whole glorious Trinity crying to you, Come and see; come and see the Son, and see the Father in him? Why then, unless you dare say, it is your duty to trample under foot the authority of God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, to look to Jesus is your indispensible duty. And since he is dealing with you this moment, it is your present duty: Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation: now he is saying, Behold me, behold me. Now you may see him in mercy; and if the opportunity be slighted, you may never get another occasion to see him, till you see him in wrath, coming in the clouds of heaven; and coming in flaming fire to take vengeance on them that know not God, because of their not obeying the gospel-call of seeing God now in the face of Christ. O sinner, then he will be seen upon a throne of judgment; a dreadful sight to his enemies! But now he is to be seen upon a throne of mercy and grace, calling sinners and enemies to be reconciled to him, and to see the Father reconciled in him, that so you may find your justifier; for now, Christ is set forth of God to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness, for the remission of sin, that he might be just, and the justifier of them that believe in Jesus, Rom. iii. 25, 26. O Sirs, see and behold him then, as the propitiation and atonement; and there take rest to your guilty soul; and see the Father in him well-pleased and satisfied. O see and behold him as the true Jacob's ladder, reaching between heaven and earth, that you may ascend by, and see the Father at the top of the ladder, with open arms ready to embrace all comers, and you among the rest. O see and behold him as the helper, since you cannot ascend the ladder, or get up of yourself; and see the Father constituting him to be the helper, saying, I have laid help upon one that is mighty. Behold this mighty helper standing in the Father's name, at the Foot of the ladder, saying, Man, woman, would you gladly be up? would you have my help? There is my helping hand, take hold of it; Take hold of my strength, Isa. xxii. 5.

But, say you, he must take hold of me, and draw me up, otherwise I cannot take hold of him. Well said, man; therefore, see him as the author and finisher, as well as the object of faith; and see him as the all of your salvation, and the Father making him so; for, he is made of God unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and complete redemption. If you think you can do any thing without him, you are not worthy of him; and you go cross to this revelation made of him. But if you can do nothing, and have nothing at all, and would have one to do all for you, and to be all to you; then see him, and take him as God all-sufficient, to do all your works in you and for you; and to be your all for grace and glory: and thus to see him, is to see the Father and all his fulness in him; and thus to take him into your heart, is to take him indeed, and his Father's blessing with him.

O Sirs, shall we hope he hath come and discovered himself to any soul here in this offer? O! blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord, and lets himself be seen; for, he that hath seen Christ, hath seen the Father.

2*dly*, I should now close with a word of exhortation to believers that have seen Christ. Have they that have seen him, seen the Father, in regard of the oneness between the Father and him? Have you see this great sight? Then I exhort you to prove it, and improve it.

[1.] Prove it: How do you prove, believer, that you have seen Christ, and the Father in him? May I ask you, as the Pharisees once asked the man whose eyes Christ opened, John ix. 15. How did you receive your sight? Why, says the man, he put clay upon mine eyes, and I washed, and do see. Can you say in allusion to this, whatever was the clay vessel, the poor, contemptible, and unlikely mean the Lord made use of, yet he put to his invisible hand, and led me to the pool of Siloam; I mean, to the blood of Shiloh, the Sent of God; and no sooner did I, through grace, essay to wash there, but I saw; I saw the Son of God as the Saviour and Surety; I saw the face and favour of God in him; I saw the grace and love of God in him: can you say, One thing I know, whereas once I was blind, now I see? I see a glory in him that darkens the glory of sun, moon, and stars; I see a beauty in him, that eclipses the beauty of all the world, and makes it seem but trash to me; I see an excellency in him, that makes me count all but loss and dung, for the excellency of the knowledge of him. Though I see that I am blind, and cannot see, yet I see what some time a day I saw not. Can you not say, that the sight you got of Christ, at least in the day of believing, did dispel your darkness, and dissipate the gross mists of ignorance, and make them fly away as dark clouds before the rising sun? Did not the sight break the power of your enmity, and make you, like Paul on his way to Damascus, when he saw Christ, drop the rebellious arms, and fall down before the Lord, saying, What wilt thou have me to do? Did not the sight dash unbelief out of countenance on that day, and with holy shame for your harsh thoughts of Christ, and make you with Thomas, after his unbelieving jealousy, to cry out, My Lord, and my God? Did not the sight loose your heart from all your lusts and idols, and make you to say with Ephraim, What have I to do any more with idols? O believer, was it not a wonderful sight, and a marvellous light? was it not a heart-piercing, a soul-humbling, a faith-strengthening, and joy-exciting sight; the most desirable sight out of heaven?

Again, if you ask, how shall I prove, that I have seen the Father in seeing Christ? Besides what was formerly said, you may enquire,

1. Have you seen the Father's blessing in him? We read of the Father's blessing him, Psal. lxv. 2. He hath blessed him in all his offices as Mediator: and, as God's blessing makes rich; so, by virtue of the Father's blessing, he is, as Mediator, enriched with all communicative fulness, and store for our supply; and never would we have been blessed, if God had not blessed Christ, and in him blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places, Eph. i. 3. The question then is, have you beheld Christ as the blessing of the Father? Then, of consequence, you have seen the Father blessing him. It is a great sight of the Father, to see the Father's blessing on Christ, and in Christ upon you. Many speak of God's blessing, that never saw how his blessing comes, and on whom it principally descends: for, Christ is made of God a public blessing.

OBJECT. How is Christ made a blessing, when it is said, God made him to be sin for us, 2 Cor. v. 21. And made him a curse for us, Gal. iii. 13.?

Why, man, for this very end was he made sin and a curse, that he might be made a blessing. He was made sin by imputation; sin was imputed to him, that it might not be imputed to us; and the curse fell upon him, that it might not light upon us: and God, in the very act of making him to be sin for us, and a curse for us, in doing so, he made him a blessing to us; and blessed him to be a sacrifice for sin, and to bear away the curse, and bring back the blessing.—Now, this mark excludes all who never saw themselves to be, by nature, under the curse of God, and never saw the gospel-way, wherein the blessing of God comes to any sinner, viz. through Christ; for, all that are blessed of God, are blessed of him, in Christ; Men shall be blessed in him: and to be blessed in him, supposes that he is first blest, and then men in him. However, they who have seen Christ as the Father's blessing, have so far seen the Father. To see God out of Christ, and in the law, is to see him cursing us: and this is the sight all Christless sinners will get of God, sooner or later; either mercifully here to their awakening, that they may flee from that curse; or wrathfully hereafter, when they shall ly under it for ever. But to see God in the gospel-glass, and in Christ, is to see him blessing us with all spiritual blessings, in heavenly places, in Christ; and this is the believer's sight of God in Christ, or of the Father in the Son: He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father.

2. Have you seen the Father's promise in him? 2 Cor. i. 20. All the promises of God are in him, yea; none of the Father's promises are made out of him: and if we have seen Christ as the centre of the Father's promises, in whom they are all affirmed and confirmed by him, being in him, YEA, in point of affirmation; and AMEN, in point of confirmation; then you have seen the Father as a promising God in him; and that you have no right to any promise, but by virtue of union to him; and as the promise is first made to him, and in him to you; and as it comes running through the channel of his blood and righteousness.—Now, this mark excludes and shuts out all who have not seen themselves to be heirs of all the threatenings of the law, by nature, and God to be a threatening God, ready to execute the law-threatening against them, because of their sin; and all that have not been brought to acquaintance with the promises of the gospel, and seen them to be the promises of God in Christ; for they only that have seen this, have seen God in Christ; He that hath seen me hath seen the Father.

3. Have you seen the Father's work in his hand? the Father's business committed to his management, according as he says, Luke ii. 49.; particularly the work and business of our redemption and salvation. This imports, and carries with it a sight of the Father, as employing Christ in that great work. They that have seen Christ, as the Father's Agent in this affair, have seen the Father in him, which is indeed a great sight; to see the Father intrusting him with such a work, and Christ discharging his trust in the Father's name.—This mark excludes, and cuts off, all those that never saw the work of salvation to be any other, but what themselves are capable of, either by their own natural power, or some little divine assistance. Many declare themselves ignorant of God, and under the law of works, by their gross notions of salvation; thinking that God still stands upon the old-covenant ground with them, calling them to work for life; and so they reckon, if they do their best, God will pity them; or, though they come short, yet with some of God's help and assistance, their own doing will be sufficient; not knowing that salvation-work is God's work, and that God's work is put in Christ's hand, and that there is no work, pertaining to the law as a covenant, that belongs to us now at all, nor can possibly be performed by us; Christ's everlasting righteousness answers that completely. And for any other work that he works in his people, it is not for salvation, or to be saved, but a part of salvation, when he works in them both to will and to do of his own good pleasure: those whom God saves, he saves them to work, but not for them. Works of holiness are a part of the salvation to which we are saved; but we are not saved either for our works, or by them, or according to them. Not for them; Ezek. xxxvi. 32. Not FOR your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you: be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel. Nor by them; Tit. iii. 5. Not BY works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost. Nor according to them; 2 Tim. i. 9. He hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not ACCORDING TO our work; but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given to us in Christ Jesus before the world began. The scripture then declares, we are not saved either by, or for, or according to our works; for though men are to be judged according to their works, yet not saved according according to their works. The rule of judgment, and the rule of ſalvation are vaſtly different.—The rule of judgment will be the law: and therefore men will be judged according to their work, and according as they have a law-biding righteouſneſs, yea, or not. The wicked will not have it; and ſo will be adjudged to eternal death: believers will have it in Chriſt, even a righteouſneſs of merit and ſpirit, both for juſtification and ſanctification; and ſo will be adjudged to eternal life. Men will be thus judged according to their works.—But the rule of ſalvation is not the law, but the goſpel, and the free grace of God in Chriſt; and therefore, though men will be judged according to their work, yet let none expect to be ſaved according to them, or by them, or for them. The works that will be available to ſalvation are not our works, or any thing either wrought in us, or done by us; but the work of Chriſt, his perfect obedience: As by one man's diſobedience many were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one many ſhall be made righteous, Rom. v. 19. Now, have you ſeen Chriſt's obedience to be the Father's work in his hand, and his righteouſneſs to be the righteouſneſs of God? Then you have ſeen God in him; God fulfilling his own law in him; God ſatisfying his own juſtice in him; and God bringing in everlaſting righteouſneſs in him.

4. If you would try if you have ſeen the Father in Chriſt, try if you have ſeen the Father's wages beſtowed on him. Chriſt, as Mediator, did not work without wages and a reward; nay, having drunk of the brook in the way, he was to lift up his head. Ought not Chriſt to do and ſuffer theſe things, and then to enter into his glory? Luke xxiv. 26. See the wages and reward given him, Phil. ii 9. Wherefore God alſo hath highly exalted him, and given him a name above every name. Heaven then is to Chriſt, and to all that get in to him, the reward of Chriſt's obedience unto death, even the death of the croſs; ſo it is alſo declared, Heb. xii. 2. Now, they that have ſeen the Father's wages beſtowed upon Chriſt, as Mediator, then they have ſeen the Father in him; or they have ſeen the Father rewarding him for his ſervice, and exalting him to his right-hand on the account of his work. Heaven is called the recompence of reward to Chriſt, it is a reward of debt; for, it is juſtly due to his obedience. But, to believers in Chriſt, it is a reward of grace: becauſe to them it is the gift of God, through Chriſt.—Now, this mark excludes, and ſhuts out all thoſe that expect heaven and eternal life, as the reward of any good deed done, or to be done by them. This declares they never ſaw the glory of the Father in the Son, nor the Father conferring heaven and glory on Chriſt, as the reward of his everlaſting righteouſneſs. Mercenary workers, that expect proper wages for their work from God, are yet under the law, and ſo under the curſe of God. In this manner many work all their days, and may work very earneſtly at a multitude of duties, and work their own ruin and damnation, and yet think they are ſafe, and never dream that they are under the curſe of God, notwithſtanding all they do. See Luke xiii. 24, Strive to enter in at the ſtrait gate; for many ſhall ſeek to enter in, and ſhall not be able. Why that? Is it not ſaid, Seek, and ye ſhall find? Yea, but they ſhall ſeek to enter, and ſhall not be able, becauſe they ſeek in a legal way; not by faith, but, as it were, by the works of the law. And this is indeed one of the great things that makes the way ſtrait.

5. Try if you have ſeen Chriſt, ſo as to ſee the Father in him. Have you ſeen the Father glorified in him, as Chriſt ſays, John xiii. 31.? Have you ſeen his wiſdom glorified in contriving, his power in accompliſhing; and more of his wiſdom and power here than in the whole creation? Have you ſeen the holineſs of God, the juſtice of God, and the mercy and truth of God glorifying themſelves in him, and exerting themſelves in Chriſt unto ſalvation? Do you ſee the wiſdom of God more glorified and glorious in Chriſt, than in contriving the ſun, moon, and ſtars? His power more glorified in Chriſt, than in making a world? His holineſs more in Chriſt's obedience, than it is by all the holineſs of men and angels to eternity? His juſtice more glorified in Chriſt's ſatisfaction, than in the puniſhment of all the damned in hell for ever? His mercy more glorified, and gloriouſly diſplayed in Chriſt, and venting itſelf through his blood and merit, than if he had ſhewed mercy without exacting the debt of Surety, while he freely provides the Surety, and thereby provides both for his own honour, and our happineſs at once? And, do you ſee his truth and faithfulneſs more glorified in Chriſt than any other way? For, if Chriſt had not been ſet forth, God behoved to have glorified his truth, in executing the threatening of the law upon all the ſinners of Adam's family. But now he glorifies his truth, both as a threatening and promiſing God, towards all whom he ſaves in Chriſt, who both bears the ſhock of the threatening of the law, and fulfils the condition of the promiſes of the goſpel; and both by his obedience unto death. Have you ſeen this glory of God in Chriſt?—Surely this mark cuts off thouſands of blind ſouls, that cannot behold this glory of the Lord, whoſe minds the god of this world hath blinded.

6. Have you ſeen the Father reconciled in him? Here is an evidence of ſeeing the Father, if you have ſeen God reconciled in Chriſt. Here is a threefold reconciliation to be ſeen in Chriſt, 1. God reconciling himſelf with himſelf. 2. Reconciling himſelf to the world. 3. Reconciling the world to himſelf.

(1.) In Chriſt you will ſee God reconciling himſelf with himſelf. What do you mean by that, ſay you? I do not mean, as if God were ever at variance with himſelf; but upon man's fall, and the propoſal of man's recovery and ſalvation again, there was, in the apprehenſion of all creatures, men and angels, a ſeeming inconſiſtency betwixt ſome things in God, that ſpoke for man's ſalvation, and other things in God that ſpoke for man's damnation; but yet in Chriſt they are reconciled; particularly, there are ſome irreconcilable like names, attributes, words, and works of God, that are in Chriſt reconciled.

1. There are ſome irreconcilable like names of God, that in Chriſt you will ſee reconciled; for example, theſe names, Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7. The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering, and abundant in goodneſs and truth; keeping mercy for thouſands, forgiving iniquity, and tranſgreſſion, and ſin; and yet that will by no means clear the guilty. How will that name of merciful and gracious to ſinners, agree with that name, he will by no means clear the guilty, ſince all ſinners are guilty? Why,

Why, have you seen Christ to be the propitiation? then you can see these names reconciled: he will not shew mercy to the dishonour of his justice; but justice hath got a satisfaction in Christ, therefore mercy will vent, not to the prejudice, but to the honour of justice.

2. There are some irreconcilable like attributes of God, that in Christ you will see reconciled; Mercy and truth are met together, righteousness and peace have kissed each other, Psal. lxxxv. 10. Men and angels could not contrive how mercy and truth should meet together; how righteousness and peace should kiss each other in the salvation of a sinner; yet in Christ they harmoniously conspire for our redemption, as I have formerly cleared upon the text,* therefore I insist not.

3. There are some irreconcilable like words of God, that in Christ are reconciled, such as Exod. xxiii. 7. where God says, I will not justify the wicked, and yet, Rom. iv. 5. he is said to justify the ungodly. In Christ you will see these words of God reconciled, as you may observe, Isa. xlv. 25. In him shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory; justified in their sins they cannot be, nor justified in themselves, but in Christ they shall be justified.

4. There are some irreconcilable like works of God, that in Christ are reconciled; for example, his work of rooting the law out of the heart, and writing the law in the hearts of his people. Do you understand this, man? that the law as a covenant must be razed out of the heart. Christ is made of God to us righteousness; and God, in this work, razes the foundation of the old covenant, and roots out all hope of life by the righteousness of the law in our own persons. Christ is also made of God to us sanctification; and, in this work, he writes the law in the heart, as it is a rule of holiness, and the transcript of the divine image, and so makes the person conformable to the law upon gospel grounds, and in a gospel manner. And this is the root of a gospel-becoming conversation. ——Now, have you ever seen any thing of this glory of the Father in the Son, or of God in Christ reconciling himself with himself, in all these things wherein he seemed to be at odds with himself? If you have never seen God reconciled in Christ, even in this sense, you are but a stranger in Israel.

(2.) In Christ you will see God reconciling himself to the world. O! have you ever seen any thing of this glory, even the great and glorious God, in the person of his Son assuming our nature; and in that nature have you ever beheld God satisfying his own justice, fulfilling his own law, appeasing his own wrath, quenching the flames of it with his own blood? Awake, O sword, against the man that is my fellow, says the Lord of hosts. And thus glorifying his own name, and laying a foundation for revenues of praise to be brought in to his crown by men and angels for ever. To see this glory by faith of divine operation, is to see the Father in the Son: where this is not seen, neither Christ nor the Father is seen.

(3.) In Christ you will see God reconciling the world to himself; 2 Cor. v. 19. God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself, and not imputing their trespasses to them. This is the word of reconciliation; and it is further explained, ver. 21. For he hath made him to be sin for us, that we might be the righteousness of God in him. How does God reconcile any sinner in the world to himself? even by not imputing their trespasses to them, but imputing their sins to Christ, and imputing Christ's righteousness to them, and discovering this by the gospel, that he does thus reconcile the heart of the sinner to God, and kill the natural enmity. The faith of this mercy is the root of peace and reconciliation; Being justified by faith, we have peace with God: when God in Christ is seen, he is seen to be reconciled in him. And when I see God is reconciled to me, I cannot but be reconciled to God: his mighty love destroys the mighty enmity that was in the heart; this sight of God in Christ cannot be without some persuasion and confidence, and particular application: for hence comes that peace and satisfaction, upon a sight of Christ, and of God as reconciled in him. If faith had no particular assurance or persuasion of divine favour to the soul in it, the man could have no peace nor pleasure: but so much hope, peace, and joy in believing that a man hath, so much assurance is at the root of it; I mean, the assurance of faith founded upon the word of God. It is said of the forgiven woman, She loved much, because much was forgiven her. They that have the faith of the forgiveness of their sins, and that much is forgiven them, will love much: they that have little faith of forgiveness, or think little is forgiven them, will love but little, and are hardly reconciled to God. They that have no faith of forgiveness, and believe not that any sin is forgiven them, they will love none at all, they are not reconciled at all to God. Indeed it is impossible for a man that hath no faith of God's forgiveness, to love God: for he believes that God is his enemy, imputing sin and guilt to him unto condemnation; that man cannot but hate God. Indeed, many pretend to be lovers of God, that yet have no true love to him: but yet that pretended love of theirs is founded upon a false faith and ignorant fancy, that God loves them, and will not send them to hell for their sins. But when that refuge of lies is destroyed, and that they see God in arms against them, as they will see it in hell, then will they hate him like the devil; and their enmity will be perfect and at its height: but, true faith works true love to God. ——Thus you may prove whether you have seen this great sight or not. And as you would prove it, so,

[2.] Improve it. O have you seen him, and the Father in him? O improve this privilege.

1. Improve it as an evidence of your interest in him: for, you may be sure, that this God is your God for ever and ever, and will be your guide even unto death. There is no better evidence of it under the sun than this, that you have seen his glory in the face of Christ. It is a solid mark of grace, and a sweet spark of glory.

2. Improve it as an antidote against all temptations. When the devil, and the world, and the vanities of time, would draw away your hearts and eyes after them, you may say, "O mine "eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts; I have "seen Christ, and the Father in him; and "therefore, with disdain, I turn away mine "eyes from beholding vanity." Think shame, O believer, after this to feed your eyes with these base objects, that a blind and sensual world is taken up with.

3. Improve it as a cordial against tribulations and difficulties, whether temporal or spiritual. When deep calls unto deep, and all his waves and billows pass paſs over you; you may remember him from the land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites, and from the hill Mizar; you may remember him from the place where he ſhewed you his glory, and that he is the God of Bethel; and will be for ever the ſame to you at your worſt times, that ever you ſaw him to be to you at your beſt times.

(4.) Improve it as a confirmation of your experience, and of his having loved you with an everlaſting love, and drawn you with loving-kindneſs. I ſeek no better experience than a ſight of the glory of God in Chriſt; and every new ſight is a new confirmation thereof: and when you ſaw him with an eye of faith, it is an argument he ſaw you with an eye of love and mercy. It may be, it was in a corner that you got a remarkable ſight of him, or under the ſhadow of an ordinance; but where-ever it was, now he is ſaying to you as to Nathanael, When thou waſt under the fig-tree I ſaw thee; when in ſuch a place I gave thee a kindly blink of my beauty, and laid my hand upon thy heart, and made it glow with holy fire from my altar. Something paſt betwixt you and me that none in the world knows of: I ſaw thee. Again,

5. Improve it as a ſpur to all the duties of religion. O! have you ſeen his glory, and do you not love that glorious object you ſaw? Shall not then the love of Chriſt conſtrain you to duty? This is goſpel-ſervice, goſpel-holineſs, when love makes you to read, and love makes you to pray, and love makes you meditate, and love makes you wait on ordinances, and love influences your whole practice. Hath he manifeſted his glory to you? then he hath begun to glorify you; and, O does it not well become you to glorify him? O let your light ſo ſhine before men, that others, ſeeing your good works, may glorify your Father that is in heaven. Again,

6. Improve it as an encouragement to your fellow brethren; you ought to meet together and encourage one another, ſaying, Come hither all ye that fear God, and I will tell you what he hath done for my ſoul. And as an excitement to your graceleſs friends and neighbours, you may excite them, by telling them how the Lord convinced you, enlightened you, and ſhewed you his glory, to the quickening of your ſoul, and killing of your corruption; you may excite them not only by your talk, but by your walk: your converſation ſhould be ſuch as they may take notice of you, that you have been with Jeſus, and that you have ſeen him, and the glory of God in him, ſo as to change you into the ſame image. As you have ſeen God in Chriſt, ſo what an honour will it be to you, if any ſhall ſee God in you; if they ſee the grace of God, the love of God, the fear of God, and the image of God in you? It may be, they will long to ſee God as you have done; and may go and ſeek him with you as the daughters of Jeruſalem, Song vi. 1. upon the back of the ſpouſe's commending her Lord to them. Again,

7. Improve it as an argument to prove the ſupreme Deity of Chriſt, and his oneneſs with the Father; that whenever you ſaw him, you ſaw the Father in him; you ſaw God in him; and all the glory of God in him: thus you have an antidote againſt damnable Arianiſm in your own boſom. Let your faith, therefore, be confirmed in his being God over all, bleſſed for ever; and let your zeal for his glory be thereupon ſtrengthened and inflamed; your zeal for his precious goſpel-truths; your zeal for his royal prerogatives. In a word,

8. And laſtly, Improve it as a ground of hope, that you ſhall ſee him for ever face to face, becauſe now you have ſeen him, though it was through a glaſs darkly. Though grim death were ſtaring you in the face, you may ſay, The ſight of you, O death, ſhall not trouble me, for I have got a ſight of Chriſt; I have ſeen his glory, and the Father's glory in him; and this being eternal life to know God in him, death needs not be matter of grief and trouble, but matter of joy and triumph to me, ſince eternal life is begun. What is heaven, but the everlaſting viſion of the glory of God in the face of Chriſt, to be for ever with the Lord, and to be like him, by ſeeing him as he is; and ſeeing all the glorious attributes of God, in their brighteſt ſplendor, ſhining in his perſon! Then ſhall you have the happineſs of the perfect knowledge of that myſterious oneneſs betwixt Chriſt and the Father, which is the reaſon, why they that ſee him, ſee the Father; yea, ſuch a cloſe view, as to found a perfect oneneſs alſo betwixt Chriſt and you. O wonderful word, John xiv. 21. At that day you ſhall know, that I am in the Father, and you in me, and I in you! O! who can expreſs the thouſand part of that happineſs which is imported in that word? For it ſays, Chriſt will be in your arms, and you in Chriſt's arms, and Chriſt in the Father's arms; you will be in Chriſt's boſom, and Chriſt in the Father's boſom, where he lay from eternity; there will he and you ly together to eternity. O the near and immediate ſight and fruition of Chriſt, and the Father in him, that then you will have! O rejoice in the hope of the glory of God: it is heaven to ſee him, and to ſee the Father in him, this is the beſt ſight in all heaven, and your Lord declares, believer, that this heaven, this beatifical viſion is begun in you. He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father.

SERMON XLIII, XLIV*.

The GRADUAL CONQUEST; or, Heaven won by little and little.

DEUT. vii. 22. And the Lord thy God will put out theſe nations before thee, by little and little.

YOU that have been right communicants at this occaſion, you have been upon the field of battle, fighting in the name and ſtrength of the Lord againſt your ſpiritual enemies; what victory you have got, I cannot tell: but ſome may, perhaps, be ſaying, Oh! I find my enemies to be yet ſtrong and mighty; iniquities prevail againſt me; and, I fear, I never get to the full poſſeſſion of the heavenly Canaan, there are ſo many and ſtrong nations of enemies in the way, which I cannot get conquered. To ſuch as may be thus exerciſed, the words of my text may be welcome news, The Lord thy God will put out theſe nations before thee, by little and little. We have here God's promiſe to Iſrael of old, concerning their being brought to the poſſeſſion of the earthly Canaan, which you know was a type of the heavenly Canaan; and, leſt they ſhould be diſcouraged by the difficulty of the conqueſt, ſo many enemies being in the way, he animates them againſt the greateſt diſcouragement. 1. If they objected the number of their enemies, and their ſtrength; he anſwers that objection, ver. 17, 18. He had deſtroyed greater enemies than theſe for them; and he that had done the greater, would eaſily do the leſs; he that began the work, would finiſh it. 2. If they objected the weakneſs of their own ſtrength and forces; he anſwers that objection, ver. 20, 21. Their greateſt encouragement was, that they had God among them, a mighty God, and terrible; and if God be with us, if God be for us, we need not fear the power of any creature againſt us. 3. If they objected the ſlow progreſs of their arms, and feared that the Canaanites would never be ſubdued, if they were not expelled at the firſt; to this it is anſwered in the words of our text, The Lord thy God will put out theſe nations, by little and little. Where you may notice two things, 1*ſt*, Iſrael's enemies deſcribed; they are called nations, becauſe of their multitude and power.

* This ſubject was diſcuſſed in two ſermons, preached at the ſacramental ſolemnity at Carnock, July 3d, 1727.

2*dly*, Iſrael's conqueſt; The Lord thy God will put them out before thee, by little and little. Where you may notice both the glorious Conqueror, and the manner of the conqueſt.

1. The Conqueror is God, deſcribed by his ſovereignty over them, the Lord; and by his propriety in them, thy God. He it is that fights their battles.

2. The manner of the conqueſt: he will do it, 1. Effectually; He will put them out. 2. Remarkably; He will put them out before thee. 3. Gradually, which is the ſpecial thing here noticed in the manner of the conqueſt, namely, by little and little. The ſame you read, Exod. xxiii. 29, 30. The wiſdom of God is to be remarked in the gradual conqueſt of his peoples enemies; and it is in real kindneſs to the church, that her enemies are ſubdued by little and little.

Now, Iſrael, being typical of the church; and the land of Canaan typical of heaven; and Iſrael's conqueſt over the nations, their enemies, typical of the ſpiritual conqueſt of the Lord's people over their ſpiritual enemies; and the manner of God's dealing with them for the moſt part, typical of the way of God's dealing with his people in all ages: therefore I would deliver to you the goſpel of this text, and open it in this one doctrinal obſervation;

> DOCT. That as the true Iſrael of God have nations of enemies in their way to the poſſeſſion of the heavenly Canaan; ſo the Lord their God will conquer theſe nations, by little and little.

I ſhall endeavour to open and confirm this doctrine in the following method.

I. Enquire who are the true Iſrael of God.
II. Speak a little of the heavenly Canaan, which they will be brought to the poſſeſſion of.
III. Enquire what nations of enemies they have in their way.
IV. Speak a little of the Conqueror, the Lord their God.
V. The manner of the conqueſt, his putting them out before them by little and little.
VI. The reaſons of this gradual conqueſt.
VII. Make application of the whole, in ſeveral uſes.

And in all theſe, I ſhall endeavour as much brevity as poſſible. Mean time, look to the Lord, that he would give ſome word with power, and with a bleſſing.

I. The firſt thing, Who are the true Iſrael of God, to whom this promiſe is made in the myſtical and ſpiritual ſenſe of it? They are not all Iſrael that are of Iſrael.

1. The true Iſrael of God, whom he will bring to the heavenly Canaan, are a people whom he hath ſet apart for himſelf, and ſeparated from the reſt of the world, as Iſrael was. The true Iſrael are ſet apart, not only by election, from eternity; but by effectual calling, in time. As, in the firſt creation, God ſeparated the light from the darkneſs, and made the one day, and the other night; ſo, in effectual calling, he ſeparates the elect from others, as light from darkneſs: he leaves the reſt of the world buried in their own obſcurity, and makes the others children of light. By effectual calling, they get convincing grace, others are left ſtupid and ſeared; they get enlightening grace, and others are left in the dark; they get renewing grace, and others are left in their enmity; they get perſuading and enabling grace to believe, others are left in their unbelief, and remain children of diſobedience and unperſuadableneſs: This people have I formed for myſelf, they ſhall ſhew forth my praiſe. Hence,

2. The true Iſrael of God are a people whom he hath brought out of Egypt, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, as Iſrael was in a temporal; and that with a high hand, and outſtretched arm. He hath brought them out of the Egypt of a natural ſtate, and out of the houſe of bondage; from their natural bondage to ſin and Satan, their bondage to the law, as a covenant of works, putting them to the hard taſk and intolerable labour of doing for life; a taſk much worſe than the Egyptian bondage, of making brick without ſtraw: he hath brought them, I ſay, out of the houſe of bondage with a high hand: no power in the world being able to looſe their bonds, if the power of a God had not been put forth for that end. They are a people redeemed, not only by the price of the Mediator's blood, but alſo by the power of his Spirit: by his power he hath begun to plague their enemies, and to drown them in the Red-ſea of his blood; for, they overcome by the blood of the Lamb.

3. The true Iſrael of God are a people acquaint with travelling in the wilderneſs, from Sinai to Zion, as Iſrael was; I mean, from the law to the goſpel; from the covenant of works to the covenant of grace. As Iſrael at Sinai was amazed at the ſight of God appearing in his terrible majeſty, and afterwards were brought into covenant with him; ſo the true Iſrael of God are a people that have been humbled with the views of God's holineſs and infinite juſtice in the command and threatening of the law; and been made to flee for refuge to the hope ſet before them, in the goſpel-covenant: they have come from Sinai to Zion; to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling.

4. The true Israel of God are a people acquaint with the conduct of the pillar of cloud and of fire, as Israel was; I mean, they have gotten the Spirit of Christ to be their guide in the way to Canaan: If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his; and if any man have the Spirit of Christ, he is guided thereby, and led into all truth, and out of all the paths of damnable error. There is a leading of the Spirit by a secret invisible hand, and by the means of the word, that all the Israel of God are partakers of; even a voice behind them, saying, This is the way, and that is not the way; and all his sheep know his voice.

5. The true Israel of God are a people fed with manna from heaven, in a spiritual sense, as Israel was in another sense: they are a people that eat the hidden manna; that have bread to eat, the world knows not of; even the bread of life that came down from heaven: they live by faith on the Son of God; Christ is the ALPHA and OMEGA of their life; the food and medicine of their life; the restorer and preserver of their life: they cannot live without him. The worldling lives upon his riches, the carnal man lives upon his lusts, hypocrites live upon their profession, legalists live upon their duties; but the true Israel of God live, in the way of duty upon Christ himself, as their wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. If I have any wisdom, Christ is my wisdom; if any righteousness, Christ is my righteousness; if any holiness, Christ is my sanctification: Christ is my ALL; my life, my strength, my treasure, my hope, my deliverer, my friend, my Saviour, my complete salvation.

6. The true Israel of God are a people acquaint with wrestling with God for the blessing, as Jacob was, who thereupon obtained the name of ISRAEL; and all believers are thereupon called the seed of Jacob, that shall not seek his face in vain. They are a people, whose life of faith is acted much upon their knees; or in a way of praying in the name of Christ, and in the Spirit of Christ; Praying in the Holy Ghost: This is the generation of them that seek thee; that seek thy face, O Jacob's God. They are always wanters, and that makes them constantly seekers and beggars.

II. The second thing was, to speak a little of the heavenly Canaan, that they will be brought to the possession of. I would hold it forth in these four particulars, namely, in its types, epithets, parts, and properties.

1st, In its types. The types of the heavenly Canaan were many. I shall name a few of them.

1. The earthly Canaan was a type of the heavenly and celestial Canaan. How magnificently does the Lord speak of Canaan? It is called a goodly land; a holy land; a land flowing with milk and honey: yet this land was but a type and shadow of the heavenly.

2. Paradise was a type of this heavenly Canaan. Though all the pleasant orchards, and comely things in the world were unite in one, they could not come that length as to compete with the earthly paradise for pleasure and comeliness, when God placed our first parents there in their innocent state: yet, what was it but a faint resemblance of the heavenly paradise? nothing but a shadow of it.

3. The Sabbath was a type of this heavenly, happy, and eternal Sabbath of rest. Indeed it is unsettled rest the Lord's people have here; when they rest in the Lord at any time, their rest is soon disturbed: even though they can say at times, Return to thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee; how soon does the devil, the ill heart, and the world disquiet them again? But there remains a rest, [a SABBATISM,] for the people of God, when they shall rest from their labour; rest from sin and sorrow.

4. The tabernacle was a type of the heavenly Canaan: the Lord's presence filled the tabernacle. O how does his glorious presence fill heaven, and fill all the hearts of the heavenly inhabitants! glorious things are spoken of the earthly Zion: how much more glorious things may be spoken of the new Jerusalem above! But then,

2dly, We may consider the heavenly Canaan in its epithets; as,

1. It is called a house, John xiv. 2. A mansion-house, a prepared place. In my Father's house are many mansions; I go to prepare a place for you. O what a noble house is it, where glory dwells! What an excellent house will it be, when the Father of the family will be in the midst of the house, and all his children about him; all his elect gathered together from all the corners of the earth; where the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Christ himself, the elder Brother, and all the younger brethren will dwell together!

2. It is called the joy of the Lord: Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord. Joy here enters into the believer; but there the believer enters into joy: he enters, as it were, into an ocean of joy; and it is the joy of his Lord Jesus. How great is the joy that our Lord entered into, as the reward of his obedience unto death? of which it is said, Heb. xii. 2. that, For the joy that was set before him, he endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right-hand of the throne of God. That same joy the saints are to enter into; In thy presence, there is fulness of joy, and at thy right-hand, there are pleasures for evermore.

3. It is called life, eternal life; Rom. vi. 23. The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Life is sweet; and the more excellent the life is, the more sweet. A living fly is more happy, by reason of life, than the glorious sun in the firmament. The rational life is yet more sweet; the life of grace is yet sweeter than any of these: but the life of glory is sweetest of all; and this life is eternal; it is life for evermore.

4. It is called a kingdom, a heavenly kingdom; 2 Tim. iv. 18. The Lord shall preserve me to his heavenly kingdom. Yea, such a kingdom, that all the subjects here are kings. One said of Rome once, that it was Respublica regum; "A "commonwealth of kings:" it is true of heaven, it is a commonwealth of kings; they are all kings and priests unto their God. And there all the kings have their crowns; a crown of glory, righteousness, and joy. They will have their thrones; To him that overcomes, will I give to sit with me on my throne, &c. They will have their royal robes; their robes of glory, and palms of victory. But again, 3dly, We may consider this heavenly Canaan in its parts. There are especially these four parts of heaven and glory mentioned in scripture, namely, vision, likeness, love, satisfaction.

The first part of it is the vision of God; 1 Cor. xiii. 12. Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face. Father, I will, that these whom thou hast given me, may be with me where I am, to behold my glory. New cabinets of rich treasure will be opened up to them every moment to eternity.

2. The second part of it is likeness, which follows upon the former; We shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is, 1 John iii. 2. This is the native fruit of beholding Christ, to be thereby brought to conformity to him, 2 Cor. iii. 18.

3. The third part of it is love: this follows upon the former. Likeness breeds love, even upon earth: then will the saints be made perfect in love, 1 John iv. 18. O what flames of love will burn in heaven! Every saint will be a flame.

4. The fourth part of it is satisfaction, which proceeds from the rest; Psal. xvii. 15. I will behold thy face in righteousness; when I awake, I shall be satisfied with thy likeness.—All this is begun on earth in the heirs of glory. The brighter view a believer gets of Christ, the more likeness; the more likeness, the more love; and the more love, the more satisfaction. But, O when there shall be perfect seeing, there will be perfect likeness; when perfect likeness, perfect love; and when perfect love, perfect satisfaction and joy: then the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come unto Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away, Isa. xxxv. 10.

4thly, We might consider this heavenly Canaan in its properties. It is another sort of inheritance than the earthly Canaan.

1. It is a glorious inheritance: it is glory itself; yea, an exceeding great and eternal weight of glory, 2 Cor. iv. 17. God, who is every-where present, is there gloriously. To make a weak allusion: The sun in the firmament, is in this or that place, by his rays and beams; but in the firmament, in a glorious manner: so God is here on earth, in his grace, and the rays of his countenance; but in heaven, in a glorious way. O Sirs, there the saints are, indeed, all glorious within, and without both; their bodies glorious, like unto Christ's glorious body, when once they are raised; their souls glorious, because perfect in holiness.

2. It is an heavenly inheritance; therefore called a heavenly kingdom, as I said, in opposition to earthly kingdoms. There the great King is heavenly, the subjects are heavenly, the work is heavenly, the reward heavenly, the company heavenly, the converse heavenly, all heavenly.

3. It is a purchased and promised inheritance; called a purchased possession, Eph. i. 14. The crown is purchased, the throne purchased, the robes purchased, and all purchased by the blood of the Lamb; which makes them sing that melodious song, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain. And as it is purchased, so it is promised in Christ before the world began, 2 Tim. i. 9. and Tit. i. 2. The earthly Canaan was a promised land; they had it by promise made to Abraham first, and in him to them: so is heaven promised to Christ, and in him to all the spiritual Israel.

4. It is an eternal inheritance; 1 Pet. i. 4. An inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away. The earthly Canaan was but temporary, subject to be laid desolate for the sins of the inhabitants thereof; and accordingly it was laid waste, and remains so to this day: but the heavenly Canaan is an inheritance that is not liable to corruption nor defilement, and therefore it fades not away. It cannot, like the former, be infested with enemies or ill neighbours, nor with any plague or malady: The inhabitants of that land shall not say, I am sick. It is a place of perfect health without any sickness; and a happy immortality, without any death, or fear of death: a blest eternity; for, when thousands, thousands, thousands of years are gone, their happiness is but beginning. Earthly kingdoms fade, and this world's monarchs die; but, in that everlasting kingdom, death is swallowed up in victory. If it were to have an end after millions of years, it were enough to make them live in perplexity and trouble; but it is eternal and everlasting.—— There is a short description, from the word, of that heavenly Canaan.

III. The third thing is, to show what nations of enemies and oppositions are in the way to this heavenly Zion. See how many and mighty nations stood in the way of Israel's possessing the earthly Canaan, ver. first of this chapter where our text lies: Seven nations greater and mightier than they. And after they came to that land of promise, some of these nations were suffered to dwell among them, particularly the Jebusites, that were like prickles in their eyes, and thorns in their sides. And, in process of time, God stirred up other nations against them, for just and holy causes; as the Philistines, the Moabites, the Ammonites, that coasted near their dwelling; besides the Assyrians and Babylonians from remoter countries, that led them captive. And, besides outward enemies and foreign invasions, they were not a little vexed and disquieted with civil and intestine dissentions: there was Saul's house against David's, and David's against Saul; Israel against Judah, and Judah against Israel; Manasses against Ephraim, and Ephraim against Manasses: nations thus both without and within, and enemies on every side. Now, in like manner, there are great and mighty nations that oppose the true Israel of God in their way to the heavenly Canaan above, and that hinder their peaceable possession of any part of heaven that, through grace, they possess on earth. In allusion, therefore, to the seven nations here, that God cast out before Israel of old; I shall show seven of these nations of spiritual enemies and oppositions that are in the way to the heavenly Canaan, and that disturb the Israel of God in any begun possession that they may have here, through grace.

I only premise, that as, in an outward sense, all nations of the earth proceed from one root and original, namely, the first man Adam; so, in a spiritual sense, most part of all the nations that oppose our happiness do spring from one root; and the grand root is original sin and natural corruption: here is the great commander, that leads forth multitudes of nations of actual oppositions against God, and the Israel of God that are bound for the heavenly Canaan. A body of sin and death is the fertile womb that brings forth swarms in one day; yea, there, as it were, whole nations are born at once. But more particularly, there are these seven nations that oppose and vex the Israel of God in their way to Canaan.

1. A nation of vain thoughts. We are by nature vain in our imaginations, Rom. i. 21.: and these vain vain thoughts lodge within the walls of Jeruſalem; O Jeruſalem, waſh thine heart from wickedneſs; how long ſhall vain thoughts lodge within thee? Jer. iv. 14. Theſe nations lodge within, take bed and board with you, and eat up the very ſap of your ſouls; therefore, when David ſays, Pſal. cxix. 113. I hate vain thoughts, he expreſſes them with a word that ſignifies the ſprig and branch that grows in a tree, which draws the ſap out of it, and makes it fruitleſs. Do you not find a nation of this ſort ſwarming about your heart every day, and every hour of the day? Yea, I am miſtaken if theſe Philiſtines have not been upon you, and if theſe nations have not been beſetting you, and beſieging your ſouls in time of hearing, praying, communicating at this occaſion; and, I imagine, they who are exerciſed and bound for heaven, will find a need of almighty power to put out this nation before them, though there were no more. And, indeed, theſe vain thoughts are like the flying poſts to the reſt of the nations that may be named. But then,

2. There is a nation of worldly cares, which Chriſt compares to briars and thorns, that choke the ſeed of the word, Mark iv. 9. and Luke viii. 14. This nation goes under the name of Frugality; but, if you look narrowly to its armour, you will find the motto thereof to be careful about many things, but neglecting the one thing neceſſary: and yet this is ſuch a powerful nation, that many people are ſubdued by it, ſo as they can do nothing but mind earthly things, and ſo loſe heaven, and come ſhort of ſalvation; yea, ſuch is the power of this nation even over the Iſrael of God, that he is obliged, in a manner, to ſmite them, and extirpate the world out of their heart with a rod of correction; For the iniquity of his covetouſneſs was I wroth, and ſmote him, Iſa. lvii. 17.: yea, the rod of God will not do it, till the grace of God efficaciouſly be exerted; I hid me, and was wroth; and yet he went on frowardly in the way of his heart: but ſovereign powerful grace ſteps in; I have ſeen his ways, and will heal him.

3. There is a nation of doubts and fears, and ſinful diſcouragements, and unbelieving objections, Pſal. xlii. 6, 7. The ſoul is overſet and overwhelmed oft-times with them. They may well be compared unto a nation; they are ſo many, that no ſooner does a miniſter begin to anſwer objections, but the unbelieving heart will raiſe a thouſand more; and ſo mighty, that there is no ſubduing of them, till Chriſt himſelf rebuke them, as he did the raging waves of the ſea, with a word of power, and ſo create a calm in the ſoul. This is a nation that rages, like the heathen ſpoken of, Pſal. ii. and imagines many vain things againſt the Lord, and his Anointed; but the Lord ſtills the rage with the rod of his ſtrength, that he ſends out of Zion, when he makes a people willing in the day of his power. He anſwers the doubts and objections of unbelief, and ſtills the fears and diſcouragements of his people, either by a word of power let into the heart, ſuch as that, Fear not, it is I; be not afraid; O thou of little faith, wherefore didſt thou doubt? Or by a breathing of his Spirit, accompanying a word that is ſpoken to the ear.

4. There is a nation of ungodly men from without, that alſo vex and oppoſe the Iſrael of God in their way to the heavenly Canaan; Judge me, O God, and plead my cauſe againſt an ungodly nation, Pſal. xlv. 1. This is a nation that many times ſuppreſs and bear down the work of God in the ſoul. The company and influence of the ungodly, that mock at religion, and laugh at ſacred things, is a great let and impediment to the ſalvation of a ſoul. And as it was with Iſrael of old, ſo it is with the church in all ages; ſhe is never without enemies that annoy her: there are four ſorts of ungodly men, that the church of God generally complain of; the tyrant, the atheiſt, the heretic, and the hypocrite: ſome of theſe would ſubvert, and others pervert her. The tyrant, by heart-hatred and open perſecution; the atheiſt, by profanity of life; the heretic, by corruption of doctrine; and the hypocrite, by pretences of holineſs. Theſe nations of ungodly men do oppoſe the Iſrael of God, partly by force, and partly by fraud: and, indeed, the ſecret enemies are uſually the moſt dangerous of the two; they that uſe fraud, more dangerous than theſe that uſe force, for theſe, being ſeen and known, are more eaſily avoided; but the other not ſo eaſily ſhunned, becauſe not ſuſpected.

5. There is a nation of mighty kings, and powerful giants, as the ſons of Anak are called, Num. xiii. 33. How many great kings did the Lord give unto the hand of Iſrael? ſuch as, Og, king of Baſhan; Sihon, king of the Amorites, Pſal. cxxxvi. 18, 19, 20. Pſal. cxxxv. 10, 11. But there are greater kings and potentates than theſe, that ſtand in the way of the poſſeſſion of the heavenly Canaan. There are more eſpecially, four kings, mighty kings, to be ſubdued: for,

(1.) As ſin is a mighty king, that reigns in us, and over us naturally; therefor ſays the apoſtle, Rom. vi. 12. Let not ſin reign in your mortal body: ſo,

(2.) Satan is a mighty king in his own territories; therefore called the prince of this world; the prince of the power of the air, that rules in the hearts of the children of diſobedience, Eph. ii. 2.

(3.) Self is a mighty king; it competes with king Jeſus, and keeps his throne, ſo long as the loftineſs of man is not brought down, and the haughtineſs of man made low, Iſa. ii. 11. that the Lord alone may be exalted in the heart: and, even after Chriſt is exalted to the throne of the heart, Self is ſtill fighting and working for the throne. It is a king that all the world adores.

(4.) Death is a mighty king; therefore called the king of terrors, Job xviii. 14. He is a king, that is the terror of kings, as well as inferior ſubjects. This is called the laſt enemy of God's Iſrael; The laſt enemy to be deſtroyed is death: and happy they that get the ſting of death removed, which is ſin. See 1 Cor. xv. 54,—57. Death ſhall be ſwallowed up in victory. Chriſt is the victorious conqueror of this and all other enemies: however, theſe are mighty kings in the way; and ſome of them have mighty giants in their armies, particularly theſe three, viz. king Sin, king Satan, and king Self; theſe three have powerful armies to fight their helliſh battles. And there are, livery: there you may see cursed atheism and unbelief, armed with lies, and blasphemies, and bitter invectives against heaven: there you will see cruel enmity, armed with a bloody sword of forcible opposition unto God and Christ: there you will see subtile hypocrisy, armed with fraud and flattery: there you will see brazen-faced hardness of heart, armed with a brow of brass: there you may see dullish security, armed with a fearless spirit, and a stupid conscience; bold presumption, armed with a daring countenance; towering pride, armed with a robe of gaudy attire, and an eye of scorn, contempt, and disdain; as also self-righteous confidence, armed with gross ignorance both of the spirituality of the law, and mystery of the gospel. There is a powerful nation of heart-plagues and deceitful lusts, that reign over the ungodly world, and many times rage in the hearts of unbelievers, to the leading of them captive.

6. A nation of deceitful luſts in the heart; ſo called, Eph. iv. 22. Theſe are like ſo many deputies and officers, captains and lieutenants, fighting under the banner of king Sin, king Self, and king Satan, againſt king JESUS, the God of glory. O what ſwarms of luſts make up this army of hell! If you will travel through the camp of your heart, you will ſee an armed regiment of gigantic luſts: there you may ſee grim-faced revenge, armed with the devil's black livery:

7. There is a nation of actual out-breakings in the life, and sins in the conversation: these are, like the common soldiers of the army of hell, making daily excursions into the camp of Israel; yea, every hour of the day they are breaking out on this hand, and on that hand, and round about us on all hands, in innumerable omissions and commissions. Here breaks out intemperance and insobriety, in eating, drinking, and using of the comforts of life; there breaks out idle words, vain talking, unprofitable conversation: here appears negligence in duty, and carelessness and indifferency in hearing, reading, praying, communicating; and there appears mis-spending of time, Sabbath and week days both, wasting our precious opportunities, and mis-improving our talents, without endeavouring to do good or get good, to glorify God, or edify these that are conversant with us. The former nation I mentioned was the lusts of the flesh, and this nation is the works of the flesh: the lusts of the flesh are deceitfully hidden within the walls; the works of the flesh are open and manifest, making continual outward excursions. You may have a list of them, Gal. v. 17, 20, 21. Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, envyings, murders drunkenness, revellings. Another list of the names of the soldiers of this army you may read, 2 Tim. iii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Men shall be lovers of themselves: there goes the king and commander in chief SELF-LOVE; and then follows a list of the common soldiers, Covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures, &c.

Now, these are the seven nations continually in arms, and at work for hell, and against heaven; the nation of vain thoughts continually flying post through the rest of the nations for intelligence; the nation of worldly cares continually making provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof; the nation of doubts, and unbelieving fears, and jealousies, is still keeping watch, and standing centry at the door of the heart, to keep out all heavenly messages, and exclude all proposals of peace with heaven; the nation of ungodly men, continually guarding the out-works of hell, and plying their large artillery and battering rams, to beat down what God, and Christ, and the gospel would build up; the nation of mighty kings, that I mentioned, are still issuing forth new commands and orders for war against heaven; the nation of deceitful lusts, like officers of the army, are still mustering the host, leading them forth to the field of battle, and setting them in battle-array; and the nation of actual sins and out-breakings, are still brandishing their swords and spears, and other impliments of war, making daily and hourly excursions out of the camp of hell, and incursions upon their opposites and antagonist; running upon the camp of Israel, to destroy them, and hinder their march to the heavenly Canaan.

Now, to these seven nations all the world of mankind are, by nature, kept in subjection; and, which is worse, they are willing slaves and captives to them: and even the Israel of God, that have left their camp, and fled under the colours and standard of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Captain of salvation, are many times led captive to them: they are still giving battle to Israel.—Now, O thou that art bound for the celestial Canaan, what thinkest thou of these nations? Are they not seven nations greater and mightier than thou? Surely, if thou hast found, to thy sad experience, the power, and the policy, and the pernicious influence of these mighty nations upon thee, it will be welcome news to hear that the Lord thy God will put out these nations from before thee, by little and little.

IV. The fourth thing that I proposed, was, to speak a little of the Conqueror of these nations; that is, The King of Glory; the Lord, strong and mighty; the Lord, mighty in battle. Indeed, they that have such mighty nations to fight and debate with, have need of a mighty conqueror to subdue them: and he is here said to be the Lord thy God; where he is described, 1. By his name, JEHOVAH. 2. By his relation to them in Christ, THY GOD.

1st, Israel's Captain, that fights their battles, is described by his great name JEHOVAH, the LORD, in capital letters; which is ordinarily used in all our English translations, to intimate, that in the original it is JEHOVAH: and it is a name that points out the perfection of his nature. It is remarked, that all along the first chapter of Genesis, while God was yet upon his creating work, he is called ELOCHIM, a God of power; but in the second chapter of Genesis, ver. 4. God having compleated his work, he is then called JEHOVAH-ELOCHIM, a God of power, and perfection. And as he here takes that name, when he perfects what he had begun; so we find him making himself known by this name, when he appears to perform what he had promised to Israel, Exod. vi. 3. I appeared to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, by the name of GOD ALMIGHTY; but by my name JEHOVAH was I not made known to them. God would now be known by his name JEHOVAH, as being, 1. A God performing what he had promised, and so giving a being to his promises. 2. A God perfecting what he had begun, and finishing his own work. And now, the subduing of the Canaanites before Israel, was a work that God had promised, and a work that now he had begun; therefore, he makes himself known in this work by his name JEHOVAH, a performing and perfecting God. This is the powerful Conqueror, that all the true Israel of God have to look to, and depend upon, for destroying the nations of spiritual enemies for them. This name belongs to our Lord Jesus Christ, equally with the Father and the eternal Spirit. It is he that led led Israel out of Egypt by the hand of Moses, wrought wonders for them, and brought them to Canaan, and delivered their enemies into their hand; by all which was typified the greater salvation and deliverance that he was to work, in accomplishing the business of our redemption in our nature. And by taking to himself the name JESUS, he hath not lost the name JEHOVAH; nay, he could not be a JESUS, if he were not JEHOVAH: he could not destroy these nations I have named, the sum of which is sin; for to destroy sin, is more than to make a world: sin cannot be destroyed, without satisfying that infinite justice that sin offended, and glorifying that infinite holiness that sin affronted, and fulfilling the law that sin had violated, and appeasing the wrath and vengeance that sin had kindled. Further, sin could not be destroyed, without destroying the devil that begat it, and the wicked heart that brought it forth; all which requires a new creation, more great and glorious than the first, and belongs to none but JEHOVAH. This name points out the divine glory of our Redeemer and Conqueror, which I offer in these two further remarks upon it.

1. This great name JEHOVAH, (as these that investigate the Hebrew root, observe) signifies being, essence, simple-existence, or self-subsistence; and imports his most simple, absolute, eternal, and independent being, and existence; having his being in, of, and from himself; and from whose infinite being, all creatures have their finite being.

2. This name JEHOVAH comprehends in itself the three Hebrew tenses; the preterit, signifying the time past; the present, signifying what is now; and the future, signifying the time to come: and imports that designation given to Christ, Rev. i. 4, 8. Which is, and which was, and which is to come. Thus he is the I AM THAT I AM, as he is called, Exod. iii. 14. The ALPHA and OMEGA, the First and the Last: the first, without beginning; and the last, without end. O but they that have such a glorious General to follow, need not fear to take the field against the nations! He is JEHOVAH.

2*dly*, Israel's Captain-general is here described by his relation to them, THY God; the Lord THY God. This relation is stated upon the ground of a new-covenant dispensation, even a covenant of promise in Christ Jesus. Of this covenant there was an Old-Testament dispensation, under which this people of Israel were; and a New-Testament dispensation, under which we are: the former was a darker, and this is a clearer and brighter dispensation of the same new covenant. The old covenant of works being broken and violated by the sin of man, God could not, in honour, come under this relation again to sinners, but upon the ground of a new covenant, established in Christ.—This covenant of promise was first discovered to Adam in paradise, afterwards to Abraham, and others. The promise of that new covenant was sealed by the blood of Christ typically, under the Old-Testament, by the sacrifices then offered; and actually at Jerusalem, when he gave his life a ransom for many. Upon the footing of this covenant, I say, it is, that he asserts this relation, The Lord THY God. But more particularly, for explaining this relative designation, THY GOD; we may take a fourfold view thereof.

1. As it is expressive of the antient federal relation betwixt God and Israel of old, the church of the Jews under that dispensation. He became their God, and they were chosen of him to be his peculiar people, beyond all other people in the world; as you see, Deut. vii. 6. For thou art a holy people to the Lord thy God; the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people to himself, above all people on the face of the earth. He made known his mind with respect to the way of salvation to them, and they to others; He shewed his word unto Jacob, and his statutes and judgments to Israel; he hath not dealt so with any nation, Psal. cxlvii. 19, 20. And having taken them visibly into a covenant-relation, he establishes his covenant with them and their seed; The Lord hath delight in thy Fathers to love them, and he chose their seed after them, Deut. x. 15. And thus he said to Abraham, Gen. xvii. 7. I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee, to be a God to thee and thy seed. Hence says God to them, You only have I known of all the families of the earth. All this is said of them, even with respect to their church-state, abstract from the singular saving privileges of true believers among them, who, through grace, were enabled to improve these great advantages they enjoyed above other people. By virtue of this relation that he stood in to them, he engaged, as the Lord their God, to put out the nations of the Canaanites before them by little and little.

2. You may view it as expressive of the present federal relation that God stands in to the visible church under the New Testament, even to us the Gentiles, as succeeding to the Jews in their church-privileges, together with superadded advantages, in so far as the New-Testament dispensation does excell that of the Old. As it was said to the Jewish church, The promise is to you and to your children, Acts ii. 39.; and that to them belong the adoption, and the glory, the covenant, and the promise, Rom. ix. 4.: so, in like manner, do they belong to the Christian church, we being grafted in among them, to partake of the root and fatness of their olive-tree, Rom. ix. 17. Hence flows a common interest that all the members of the visible church have in God, as their God; and Christ, as their Head: not only as a head of eminency, but as an head of influence and government. All the common influences shed among the members of the visible church come from this source; and from thence result also many excellent privileges, all which are sealed in baptism, which succeeds to the seal of circumcision among the Jews. Baptism seals to us, and to all the visible church, a common general right to God's covenant, so as we may warrantably plead the promises, and that promise in particular, I will be your God, and you shall be my people; which is the fundamental promise. Great are the privileges that belong to the visible church, that do not belong to these that are without: God commits to them his ministry, his oracles, and ordinances; by the means of which, he brings forth children, and gathers his elect; so as out of the church "visible "there is no ordinary possibility of salvation," Acts ii. 47. As all the baptized members of the visible church have a sealed interest in the covenant of promise, such as lays them under a special obligation to believe in Christ; so they have a claim, beyond the rest of the world, to God as their God in Christ, and as their Saviour: yea, all the church visible are said to be in Christ, John xv. 2.; even these branches that bear bear not fruit, and that ſhall be taken away, and caſt into the fire. Baptiſm ſeals our ingraftment into Chriſt; that is, an ingraftment common to all that are members of the viſible church, beſides the ſaving ſpiritual ingraftment of true believers. Now, that common relation that you all have to God, as church-members, though it be common to believers and unbelievers; yet it is, in itſelf, a ſpecial privilege, whereby you are exalted above the reſt of the world that are without the church; and gives every one of you a right to plead this promiſe to be accompliſhed to you in a ſpiritual ſenſe, The Lord thy God will put out theſe nations before you, by little and little, even ſuch nations of ſpiritual enemies as were typified by the Canaanites that Iſrael had to deal with. But then,

3. You may view this relative deſignation, Thy God, as expreſſive of the ſpecial relation he ſtands in to the church inviſible, militant here upon earth; I mean, to true believers, the living members of Chriſt, and true Iſrael of God, whom he makes ſo, by becoming their God, in a way of ſovereign free grace, in and through Jeſus Chriſt, in whom they have a peculiar intereſt in God as their God, and a ſpecial title to all the promiſes of the new covenant as their charter; all the promiſes being Yea and Amen in Chriſt Jeſus. Now, it is in this ſenſe eſpecially that I conſider this deſignation, The Lord thy God; becauſe it is the ſpiritual intent of the text that I treat, namely, as it does typify and repreſent the ſpiritual deliverance of the true Iſrael of God from their ſpiritual enemies, in order to the poſſeſſion of the heavenly Canaan; yet not excluding the great appearances the Lord makes for his church viſible on earth, collectively conſidered. And here it is proper you obſerve, that though this title, The Lord thy God, be oftentimes in ſcripture ſpoken of with reſpect to a viſible church, a mixt people of good and bad; as when he ſays to Iſrael, I am the Lord thy God, that brought thee out of the land of Egypt, and houſe of bondage; and whereas in many inſtances it is ſpoken collectively of the whole body of the church: yet this rule is to be noticed, that where the Lord is mentioned in relation thus to a mixt people, all the privileges that flow from ſuch a relation of God to that people, are but common privileges; I mean, common to all that viſible church. Thus the privilege of bringing out of the land of Egypt, was a common privilege, common to all that people, good and bad among them; and ſo was this privilege of cutting off the nations of the Canaanites before them in a literal ſenſe, and poſſeſſing them of the earthly Canaan: and, therefore, though God be called the God of a church or people collectively, which infers many excellent privileges, though common to them all, as was ſhewed above; yet, he is not their God, in the ſame reſpect, as he is the God of the believer, or of the true Iſrael. As they are not all Iſrael that are of Iſrael, (for the whole viſible church, God's profeſſing people, are of Iſrael; but only true believers are Iſraelites indeed, and Jews inwardly, the true ſpiritual circumciſion;) ſo theſe true Iſraelites have a courſe by common, having a ſpecial and peculiar propriety in God as their God; which infers ſpecial and peculiar privileges. And hence,

4. You may view this deſignation, Thy God, as expreſſive of all the bleſſings that are imported in this ſpecial relation that he ſtands in to this true Iſrael. And, indeed, the privileges imported this in the word, Thy God, are innumerable and unſpeakable. His being their God, imports, that they have an intereſt in all that he is, and all that he hath, and all that he can do, and is wont to do for theſe whoſe God he is. Here is a field that would take a long eternity to travel through: Happy is the people whoſe God is the Lord. All happineſs in time, and for ever, is imported in it: his being their God, imports all the relation that he can be in to them, for making them holy and happy for ever in himſelf; that he is, and will be, their Sun, to enlighten them; their Portion, to enrich them; their Father, to pity them; their Righteouſneſs, to clothe them; their Guide, to conduct them; their Glory, to crown them; and their ALL in all. But the text confines me to theſe relations imported in this title, Thy God, which hath a reſpect to his deſtroying their enemies before them by little and little. I only mention two of theſe: 1. His being their God, imports, that he is their Friend, though their enemies be many. 2. His being their God, imports, that he is their Shield, though their enemies be mighty.

[1.] Amidſt the multitude of enemies, their God is their Friend. And, indeed, no matter who be our enemies, if God be our friend: If God be for us, ſays the apoſtle, who can be againſt us? Rom. viii. 31. And he is a friend to all theſe to whom he is a God in a peculiar manner. And his being their friend, imports, the removal of feud and enmity; his anger being turned away, and reconciliation made up thro' Chriſt, whatever was the former difference. It imports, the acceptation of their perſons into favour, and the obligation he lies under, as a friend, by virtue of the new covenant of grace and promiſe, to help them in every time of need; and to do all their works in them, and for them; and to fight all the battles. Therefore,

[2.] Though their enemies be mighty, his being their God, imports, that he is their Shield: The Lord God is a ſun and ſhield to them, Pſal. lxxxiv. 11. The ſhields of the earth are his; and his being their ſhield, is to be underſtood both in a defenſive and offenſive way.

(1.) He is the Lord their God and ſhield to defend them; My defence is of God, which ſaves the upright in heart, Pſal. vii. 10. Hence called a ſtrong tower, and rock of defence, a hiding place, a covert, a ſhadow, to ſhelter them from the aſſaults and attacks of the nations of enemies that are within them, and round about them; A man ſhall be a hiding place from the wind, a covert from the tempeſt; as rivers of waters in a dry place, and as the ſhadow of a great rock in a weary land, Iſa. xxxii. 2.

(2.) He is the Lord their God and ſhield, for offending all their enemies: hence he is ſaid to have a ſword of power girded on his thigh, for executing judgment on their enemies; Deut. xxxii. 41, 42. If I whet my glittering ſword, and mine hand take hold of judgment; I will render vengeance to mine enemies, and a reward to them that hate me. I will make mine arrows drunk with blood. Read alſo ver. 43. and compare it with Iſa. lxiii. 1,—4. The day of vengeance is in mine heart, for the year of my redemption is come. O! it is a happy vengeance to the Iſrael of God, when he, as their mighty Conqueror, ſubdues the nations under them, and takes vengeance on all their their powerful lusts and spiritual enemies. A day of vengeance to the enemy, is a day of redemption to his friends. But this leads me to

V. The fifth thing proposed, namely, to speak of the manner of the conquest. We have heard of the Conqueror, here designed, The Lord thy God; and now the manner of the conquest is, He will put out these nations before thee, by little and little. And here three things may be noticed with reference to the manner of the conquest, 1. It is obtained powerfully and effectually; He will put out these nations. 2. Visibly and remarkably; He will put them out before thee. 3. Gradually and piece-meal; by little and little. To each of these I would speak a word.

First, The manner of the conquest is, that it is obtained powerfully and effectually: The Lord thy God WILL PUT OUT these nations; or, as it is rendered in the margin, he will PLUCK OFF these nations. And so it is further explained, ver. 23. of this chapter; he will deliver them unto thee, and shall destroy them with a mighty destruction, till they be destroyed utterly. And he will deliver their kings into thine hand, ver. 24. And, Exod. xxiii. 30. By little and little will I drive them out. Now, thus, in the spiritual conquest, the nations must be put out: and the Lord's putting them out, does import,

1. That these nations of lusts, and spiritual enemies have strength and power upon their side; so that is no easy work to get them driven out; yea, utterly impossible, unless the Lord our God undertake it. If you ask, where the strength of these nations lies, and particularly the strength of sin? I answer, In these four things.

(1.) The strength of the nation of sin and of lusts lies in their root; viz. the body of sin and death: as the strength of a tree lies in the root; so that the ax must be laid to the root, if you would destroy it; and as the strength of the water is in the fountain, so that if you would destroy it, the fountain must be stopt up: so the strength of sin is in the root and fountain of sin that is within. And hence,

(2.) The strength of these nations of lusts lies in the relation they have to ourselves: and hence, for a man to destroy his lusts, is to deny himself. These nations of lusts and sins are such a part of himself, that they seem to be the best part, and the most useful part of himself; his right-hand, his right-eye, his members; Mortify therefore your members that are upon the earth, Col. iii. 5.

(3.) The strength of these nations lies in the commander and captain-general that leads them forth; that is, the DEVIL; the great quarter-master that fills the heart, as it is said of Ananias, Acts v. 3. Why hath Satan filled thine heart, to lye to the Holy Ghost, and keep back part of the price. It is the devil that fills the heart of people to lye, and fills their heart to swear, and fills their heart to drink and debauch, and fills their heart to keep back what service is due to God. This commander is a strong man, and cannot be conquered but by a stronger. Yea,

(4.) The strength of these nations of sin lies in the law of works; 1 Cor. xv. 56. The strength of sin is the law. Sin hath dominion over all that are under the law, and not under grace, Rom. vi. 14. and that on many accounts, that I cannot now insist upon; but particularly, among the rest, because, by reason of the original breach thereof, they are under the curse of it, of which curse the strength of sin is a great part; so that no less power than that which can pull up the root, a body of sin and death, and pull down self and all the members of it, and that can destroy the devil, the captain of hell, and, at the same time, give full satisfaction to the law of the God of heaven; no less power can destroy these nations, for here their strength lies.*—The Lord's putting them out, supposes and imports this strength and power that they have upon their side.

2. It imports, that these nations of lusts and spiritual enemies have the possession; which, indeed, is also a great part of their strength. There would be no need of driving them out, if they were not in: nay, they are in possession; they are in actual possession of the understanding of all men by nature, who are therefore alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that is in them. They have actual possession of the will; hence men are not only unwilling to let these nations go out, and as unwilling as Pharaoh was to let Israel go, though plagued from heaven for his wilfulness: but also the will is filled with enmity against God, and rises up in arms and opposition against him, and in favours of these lusts. Yea, they have possession of all the powers and faculties of the soul; they are deeply rooted in the heart and nature, as the Jebusites were in the land of Canaan; and there they strongly fortify and deeply intrench themselves, so that it is no easy work to drive them out: yea, as they have no will to go out, so out they will never go, till they be driven by a superior power, as Christ drove the buyers and sellers out of the temple, who turned the temple of God to a den of thieves. Therefore,

3. It imports, an exerting of the divine power in opposition to these nations, in order to their being put out and destroyed; and that is even the almighty power of God in Christ, by the Holy Ghost; If you through the Spirit mortify the deeds of the body, you shall live, Rom. viii. 13. It is not by the power of nature, or free-will; Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, says the Lord of hosts, Zech. iv. 6. When the conquest is actually commenced in a soul, the Spirit of God comes and gives battle to the nations of the Canaanites; the lusts and old inhabitants of the heart, and takes possession. How he does so, may afterwards more appear: only, I say here, the Lord's putting out the nations, imports, that his almighty power is actually put forth for this end.

4. It imports, that this power is and shall be effectual; for it is said, He WILL put them out: he will drive them out of their old quarters, and destroy them; he will drive them out of the heart, out of the house, out of the will, out of the affections, out of all the forts where they strengthened themselves, and at last out of the world, when he completes his work of sanctification; for, He that hath begun the good work, will perfect it, Phil. i. 6. And sure there is no true-hearted Israelite here, but will say, AMEN; Lord, hasten the time when these nations of lusts shall be driven out of my heart, and driven out of the world; Lord, let them be driven to hell with the devil, their captain, and let me be quit of them for ever. Well, the day of their complete extirpation is a coming; The Lord thy God will drive out these nations. But then,

Secondly, The manner of the conquest here exprest, is visible and remarkable; he will drive them them out before thee. I think this word may import the visible and remarkable manner of the conquest: and more particularly,

1. That the Israel of God get a sight of their enemies. These nations are in their view, while the Lord their God is driving them out, and while they, through grace, are led to the field of battle against them: he will drive them out before them. They that never got a view of their sins and lusts, nor of the strength of their arms; that never saw their own corrupt nature, nor experienced the power of corruption in their hearts; they are yet living at their ease, in the midst of these nations, and under the power thereof: they are alive without the law, Rom. vii. 9. The commandment hath not come, nor sin revived, to discover its strength to them: they are yet soldiers under the devil's banner: they have not taken on with Christ: the battle with the nations is not yet begun; for they never yet saw them, nor viewed and reconnoitered their strength.

2. His driving out the nations before them, imports, that, through grace, the Israel of God are made active herein. It is before thee they shall be driven out. Being acted by his grace, they act; being armed by his Spirit, they fight; and, through the Spirit, mortify the deeds of the body. It is true, sometimes the Israel of God have nothing ado at all, but just to stand still, as it were, to see how the waters will divide to let them through, and how they will return to drown and overwhelm their enemies: but, for ordinary, their work is to go forward, in the name and strength of the Lord their God, and give battle to their enemies, that they may be destroyed before them; and, under the banner of Christ Jesus, the glorious Captain of salvation, to fight the good fight of faith. Yea,

3. His driving out the nations before them, imports, that, even when they are called to act and fight, they shall have no ground of boasting, but rather of blushing, when they consider what part it is they act in this matter: for the Lord himself must be the agent; The Lord thy God will put out the nations before thee. Israel's Captain goes before them, and leads the van; the Lion of the tribe of Judah must go before them, and tear their enemies to pieces: it is he that subdues the nations under them. He hath gone before them already, and had a bloody battle with all the nations of hell upon mount Calvery; there he fought, and overcame principalities and powers; there he condemned sin in the flesh, and destroyed the strength of it, by nailing the law to his cross, Col. ii. 14. And however the nations may rally their forces again, and seem formidable and dreadful, yet their strength being broken at this bloody engagement, the believer hath no more ado, in effect, but to hold up the red flag of the blood of Christ by faith, and then he overcomes by the blood of the Lamb, Rev. xii. 1. The great battle is already fought, and the great art of the believer, in all the lesser battles and skirmishes, lies in setting his Captain before him, saying, I will go in the strength of the Lord; for in the Lord only have I righteousness and strength; viewing him as before them in the field, according to his promise, The Lord thy God will put out these nations before thee.

4. It may import, that as the Lord their God will make their enemies to flee before their face, so they shall be witnesses to the wonders of his power in overthrowing the nations in their way. The true Israel of God dare hardly call themselves warriours against their enemies, but rather witnesses to the battle of the Lord, when he fights for them, and makes them overcome, and then gives them the name of conquerors; yea, more than conquerors, through him that loved them. He overcomes for them, and then crowns them as the overcomers, saying, To him that overcomes, will I give to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. They are witnesses to his grand atchievements and valiant exploits against their enemies; for, his ordinary time of fighting remarkably for them, is, when their strength is gone, and when he sees their power is gone, and there is none shut up or left, by reason of the power of their enemies, Deut. xxxii. 36.; then he steps in, and takes vengeance on their enemies. And, indeed, the day of power is a day remarkable for victories over sin, Satan, the world, and the lusts thereof. Do you mind the day, believer, when you thought there was a legion of devils, a nation of lusts, an army of corruptions, a regiment of hell within you; but, behold, you got a view of the Captain of salvation ready to put out these nations before you; and you got grace to take hold of him, to believe in him, and so to turn to flight the armies of the aliens? Are there not some remarkable times, when you got your feet set upon the neck of your lusts? By thee I have run through a troop, says David, Psal. xviii. 29.; and by my God I overleap a wall. It is true, the conquest is not always remarkable; for sometimes the nations compass them about like bees, and sting them, and torment them, and prevail against them; Iniquities prevail against me, says David: yet they never prevail so far, but that grace still renews the fight, and at last obtains the victory; though yet, through many ups and downs, and fallings and risings, vicissitudes and changes. Therefore,

Thirdly, The manner of the conquest here expreſt is gradual, by little and little. This is the main point here intended, with reference to the manner of the Lord's destroying the nations: Therefore I would here, 1. Show what may be imported in this his putting out the nations by little and little. 2. By what several steps, stroaks, or degrees, he puts out the nations in a spiritual sense.

1*st*, As to the import of this phrase, by little and little. It says,

1. That the Israel of God are not to expect that their spiritual enemies will be all vanquished at the first onset. Though the victory be begun, whenever the soul gets in to Christ, and under his colours, who is the Captain of salvation; yet the commencement of the spiritual war is not the completement thereof; nay, there may be many a battle before the war be at a close, and the victory complete: for, though the enemy hath got a dead stroak, and though the nations of lusts, like the beast mentioned, Dan. vii. 12. have their dominion taken away; yet their lives are prolonged for a season; which occasions the war to be prolonged. Also,

2. By little and little, it imports, that the visible advantages over the nations of spiritual enemies may be very small; Israel may be at a time but holpen with a little help, Dan. xi. 34.; and get a little reviving in their bondage, Ezra ix. 8.; a little victory at a time; a small advantage against the enemy: but though it be small, yet the

the day of small things is not to be despised, Zech. iv. 10.; for, as we say, Many smalls make a great. Therefore,

3. The Lord's putting them out by little and little, imports, that though the several foils be small, yet they are successful; for, by little and little, the nations are thus put out and discomfited: every new battle tends to the ruin of the enemy more and more. Let not the believer say that nothing is done, because so little is done, and the enemy is yet alive. O be thankful, if, by little and little, the Lord be putting them out, and gradually diminishing their forces.

4. By little and little, it imports, the continuation and progress of the war, until there be a total extirpation of the nations. There may be an intermission of stroaks, now a stroak and then a stroak given to the enemy; but no intermission of the war during the militant state; no cessation of arms; no proclamation of peace with the enemy; no league with any lust among the true Israel of God. Lusts may, indeed, rise and rage, and rally their forces again, even after they are routed, and a multitude of these nations may gather together; and the believer may be in great fears of the issue, lest he be swallowed up and destroyed before them; till, by faith, he get a new recruit of auxiliaries and reinforcement of strength from heaven, and then he will say, with the psalmist, Psal. cxviii. 10, 11. The nations compast me about, but in the name of the Lord will I destroy them; for then the right-hand of the Lord does valiantly. Yet still it is by little and little; here a little, and there a little; here a little stroak given to Satan's kingdom, and there a little stroak; here a little dash given to the old man and his lusts, and there a little dash; a little at this duty, and a little at another; a little at this sermon, and a little at another sermon; a little at this sacrament, and the other sacrament, till the finishing stroak be given. But this leads to the other question here, 2dly, By what steps and degrees is the conquest over the nations advanced to a total extirpation of them? Here I might enquire, 1. By what degrees the conquest is advanced by Israel's Captain in his own person? 2. By what degrees it is advanced by him in their persons?

(1.) By what degrees the conquest is advanced and completed by the Captain of Israel, the Lord Jesus Christ, in his own person? I will tell you four remarkable periods of his conquest, wherein you may see four remarkable degrees thereof.

1. The first period was the commencement of the war in paradise, immediately after the fall of Adam: there he proclaimed war between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent; and, after the proclamation, during that Old-Testament period, he kept all his soldiers in expectation of his appearing, according to that promise and proclamation, as their Head and General; so that, in the faith of this coming Messias, they overcame.

2. The second period was in the remarkable combat that was betwixt the two heads of the two contending parties on mount Calvary, Christ on the one hand, and the serpent on the other; when, though the serpent bruised his heel unto blood, yet he brake the serpent's head with his bloody heel, while by death he destroyed him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and vanquished the nations of hell, by destroying their commander's power.

3. The third period was in the after-game that followed upon this memorable combat; when, in his resurrection and ascension unto heaven, he dismantled all the garrisons of Satan, divided the spoil with the strong, and led captivity captive: which laid the foundation for a successful war to his Israel, carried on between Michael and his angels, and the dragon and his angels; where the dragon having got a deadly stroak, cannot prevail, Rev. xii. 7, 8.; though he continue thus to rally his forces against heaven, and all that bend heavenward to the end of the world. And then comes,

4. The fourth period, in that consummate stroak which the Captain of salvation will give to the devil and his armies at the great day, when he will come in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory: then death, and he that had the power of it, shall be utterly destroyed; for, the last enemy to be destroyed is death, 1 Cor. xv. 56. From the first to the last enemy, not one shall be spared from destruction: then sin, and death that was brought in by sin, shall be under an eternal banishment, never more to appear among the Israel of God. —— Thus you see by what steps and degrees the conquest is effectuated by the Lord Jesus in his own person.

(2.) By what degrees, say you, is it actually obtained by him in his members and soldiers, when he drives out the nations before them? Why, 1. By little and little, he brings them to the field of battle against the nations, in a day of power, when the spiritual war is begun. 2. By little and little, he carries on the conquest, till the day of death, when the warfare is concluded.

[1.] I say, by little and little, he brings them forth to the field against the nations of lusts that stand in their way to the heavenly Canaan, and that in a day of power, in a day of conversion, when the spiritual war is commenced in the man's person.

QUEST. How does the Lord their God bring them forth against the enemy?

I do not limit the Lord to this or that way; he is Sovereign: but I speak of the ordinary steps and degrees, by which he brings any poor sinner that was under the power of sin and Satan, mixed with, and under the power of the nations of hell; by which, I say, he brings them to the field. There are several fields that the Captain of salvation leads them through, before they be on the field of battle, where the nations are put out before them.

1. He leads them to the field of consideration, and makes them there bethink themselves what a sad state and condition they are in, while waging war against heaven, under the devil's banner. What am I doing? and, where am I going? and, what will be the end of these things, and of living in the service of these nations of lusts? And, oh! where will be my landing-place to eternity, if this be my course? Many never go so far towards the heavenly Canaan, as to step in to this field of consideration: The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people do not consider, Isa. i. 3. But, ah! many never so much as turn their faces towards the field of battle against their lusts, so long as they do not enter on this field of consideration: therefore, when the Lord begins a good work on his people, he brings them first to consider their ways; I thought upon my ways, and turned my feet to thy testimonies. May be he brings them to it by some ſome rouzing providence, whereby he ſtops their career in wickedneſs, and hedges up their way with thorns, as he ſtopped Manaſſes, and held him in the thorns of Babylon, till he began to conſider and know that the Lord was God, and that he was fighting againſt God.

2. Another little advance, where by little and little he leads them forth to battle, is his bringing them next to the field of concern: this natively follows upon due conſideration. The man is brought to ſee the hazard and danger he is compaſſed with, and to be afraid of the iſſue. Some may make a ſtep into the field of conſideration a little, but they preſently ſtep back again, without going forward to the field of concern: but, when the Lord hath a mind to bring one forward to the camp for war, he brings them in to the field of great concern, where they are filled with a greater concern about ſalvation than ever they had about any thing in the world, ſaying, with the jaylor, Oh! what ſhall I do to be ſaved? And with Peter's hearers, Men and brethren, what ſhall we do? Is there any ſalvation for me, that have been fighting againſt God all my days?

3. Another little advance, is, his bringing them from the field of concern to the field of reſtleſneſs, even to a reſtleſs endeavour to come out of Satan's camp, and out of that ſad condition they ſee themſelves into: for this concern about ſalvation, and fear of everlaſting damnation, makes them to fall about the means of relief; and ſo they read, and pray, and hear, and meditate, and mourn, and weep, and reform; and you would think they are by this time beginning to fight againſt the nations of their luſts: but, however theſe means be good in themſelves, and a reſtleſneſs in the uſe of them may be wrought under the awakening influence of the Spirit of God; yet there is ſome other field the man muſt be taken through, before he be capable to lift arms againſt his luſts in an evangelical and acceptable manner: for, as yet, his legal heart leads him to nothing but a legal warfare, under which his ſpiritual luſts remain ſtill in their ſtrength and dominion. The man is yet under the law, and ſo under the dominion of ſin, Rom. vi. 14. And hence, while he is yet in this field, he is ready to be filled with vain imaginations, and legal dreams, like the young man in the goſpel, that it is by doing ſome good thing or other he is to have eternal life. In this caſe, he may be doing a great deal of duties, and doing what he can with the greateſt natural ſerioufneſs, and yet to no purpoſe; becauſe he is doing upon the principle of the old covenant of works, Do and live. Therefore,

4. Another little advance, is the Lord's bringing them from that field of reſtleſneſs to the field of deſpair; ſo as to deſpair of help in themſelves and in their endeavours; to deſpair of ever getting victory by their legal diligence; to deſpair of life by the law, and their own obedience thereto. When the ſoul is upon this field, it meets with the law, and ſees the extent and ſpirituality of it, as exacting no leſs than perfection; internal perfection, in heart and nature; external perfection, in lip and life; eternal perfection, in point of continuance and duration: for, Curſed is every one that continues not in all things written in the book of the law to do them. And ſo all this perfection it requires upon pain of eternal death and damnation. Now, the commandment comes, Rom. vii. 9.; and though the man was alive without the law once, and reckoned he was right enough, and fairly bound for the heavenly Canaan, as well as his neighbours; yet the commandment thus coming, ſin revives, and he dies; his hope and expectation by the law, or by his legal endeavours, give up the ghoſt. Now, till a man be brought to this field of deſpair, he is not brought half-way to the field of battle againſt the nations of enemies in his way to Canaan; but when the Lord brings a man to this deſpair in himſelf, and to deſpair of relief from creatures and means, then there begins to be ſome hope in Iſrael concerning him. Therefore,

5. Another little advance, while the Lord is bringing the man by little and little to the goſpel-camp, is this: he brings him from the field of deſpair to the field of hope; I mean, to a diſtant ſight of the cape of good-hope, in the hearing of the glad news of the goſpel, concerning the Captain of ſalvation, in whom alone poor enſlaved ſinners may be made more than conquerors over ſin, Satan, and the world; over death and hell, and all ſpiritual enemies. The ſoul hears of this mighty Captain, that he is able to ſave to the uttermoſt; and ſo conceives hope, that perhaps he will ſhew mercy, and deliver a poor captive. I ſpeak not here of the new and lively hope, that is the fruit and effect of faith; for, on this field of hope that I ſpeak of, the man is yet between hope and deſpair, as it were: this hope cannot be a helmet to him, while he yet wants the ſhield of faith; yet it is ſuch a hope, wrought by the objective revelation of the goſpel, as keeps him from ſinking into utter diſcouragement; and excites, enables, and encourages him to go forward, becauſe he ſees a door of hope open, in the call of the goſpel, wherein he hears Chriſt calling him to come to him freely, and receive his grace. O there is the door of a new covenant open, ſays the man within himſelf; I ſee it is open for the like of me, and I am particularly called to come in at this open door: and now, when the man is brought to this, he is truly not far from the kingdom of heaven; not far from the field of battle: he needs but to be holpen with a little help further, and then this courſe is complete. Therefore,

6. Another little advance is, after the ſoul is brought over all theſe fields, by the good hand of God upon him, he is brought to the field of ſaving faith, getting ſuch a diſcovery of Jeſus Chriſt, the Captain of ſalvation, by the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of him, as powerfully determines him to take on with him, as a volunteer, being made willing in the day of power; and being charmed with the glory of his perſon, the freedom of his grace, the holineſs of the ſtandard, and ruddy enſign dyed with his own blood. Here the man ſees him girding his ſword upon his thigh, even his glory and majeſty. By this ſword of glorious grace, the ſinner is made a willing ſubject, a willing ſoldier, to follow the glorious Captain, and employ him to fight all his battles, and drive out all the nations of his luſts before him. And now the man is a believer, and is come, indeed, to the field of battle, being joined to the Lord Jeſus, and diſjoined from his old general: now he is, by virtue of union to Chriſt, intitled to a complete victory over all the nations of enemies in his way, and intitled to all theſe new recruits

recruits and reinforcements from heaven, that are neceſſary for the gradual ſubduing of the nations before him, till he win to the poſſeſſion of the heavenly Canaan.——Thus you ſee how, by little and little, the Lord brings them forth to the field of battle; and by what various degrees they are brought from ſlaves to the devil and their luſts, to be ſoldiers of Chriſt. But now, as by little and little he brings them to the field of battle againſt the nations in a day of power; ſo,

[2.] By little and little he carries on the conqueſt, till the day of death, when the warfare is accompliſhed. The text leads me to ſpeak of the Captain's part; The Lord, thy God, will put out theſe nations before thee, by little and little. And indeed his part is the leading part in the All of this conqueſt; for, without him we can do nothing. To engage with the enemy alone, and encounter the nations in our own ſtrength, were madneſs; every luſt will laugh at the ſhaking of our ſpear. It is Chriſt alone, and his Spirit, that can deſtroy the nations before him. But now, the gradual conqueſt, till the day of death, by little and little, ſpeaks out theſe two things: 1. That the Iſrael of God hath many ſad experiences all their days, that their enemies, the nations, are not utterly deſtroyed; but are living and lively, ſtrong and prevalent many times. 2. That they have alſo many ſweet experiences, all their days, of ſome little aid and auxiliaries from heaven, whereby the enemy is driven out, and deſtroyed, by little and little, from time to time.

1. I ſay, this gradual conqueſt, taking place till death, and the warfare, ſpeaks out many ſad experiences, that the nations of their luſts, and corruptions, and ſpiritual enemies are not utterly deſtroyed; and that, notwitſtanding of their being got fairly under the colours of their glorious Captain, yet they will find, all their days, that their enemies are living, lively, ſtrong, and prevalent: for, their deſtruction being but by little and little, the conqueſt may be many times undiſcernable, while the power of the enemy appears great and formidable, notwithſtanding any little advantage gained at a time, and while they find many dreadful ſallies and ſucceſsful excurſions that the enemy makes upon them. Now, may I not aſk the Iſrael of God here, if they have not too many ſad experiences of the yet remaining life and ſtrength of the enemy?—Does not your ſad experience ſay, that there is a law in your members, warring againſt the law of your mind, and bringing you into captivity to the law of ſin, that is in your members, Rom. vii. 23.; and that you wreſtle not againſt fleſh and blood only, but againſt principalities and powers? Eph. vi. 12.—Does not ſad experience witneſs, how violent your corruptions are, and how impetuouſly they break through every hedge, notwithſtanding of your being ſure to be ſcratched with thorns; and how eagerly they follow the bait, even when the hook is moſt diſcernable?—Does not ſad experience witneſs, that it is within you that troubles and aſſaults you moſt; and that your greateſt adverſaries are the men of your own houſe; and that in the worſt of times, there is always more cauſe to complain of an evil heart, than of an evil world; and that it is this carnal heart eſpecially, that clogs and incumbers your flight and motion towards God, and makes, many times, your choiceſt duties to be like a grievous taſk?—Does not ſad experience witneſs, even ſince you was brought to the field of battle againſt your ſpiritual enemies, that there is more wickedneſs in your heart, ſiding with the enemy, than you could have believed, though it had been told you? When once a day you got your feet upon the necks of your enemies, you could never have thought they would ever ſo fearfully prevail again; or, if you had thought it, would it not have been a terror to you?—Does not ſad experience witneſs ſuch a power of corruption, that no ſooner did you ever begin to parly with a temptation at a diſtance, and adventure to ſport therewith, but it quickly hath turned to earneſt, and carried all before it? So much feuel and gun-powder for the enemy do you carry about with you, that you take fire upon the ſmalleſt touch, and are ready to be blown up with the flame?—Does not ſad experience witneſs, how ſoon the ſtrongeſt reſolution, even under the ſweeteſt gales, will evaniſh; that you are not oft in the evening what you was in the morning, nor for many hours do you keep the ground you had attained; and how quickly you deſtroy that which grace hath built, inſomuch, that if grace were not ſtronger to ſave and preſerve, than you are to mar and deſtroy, you would be undone for ever? Is it not paſt reckoning, how oft your heart hath thus deceived you? And is it not plain that the word of God knows your heart better than you do, declaring it to be deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked?—Does not ſad experience ſhow you, that the devil, who heads and leads the nations of luſts and corruptions, hath the advantage of the ground? and knows how to correſpond with your corruption, and ſuits his temptation to your natural temper, to your calling and company, and predominant inclination, and even to your retirement and ſolitude; and that he can even then moſt dangerouſly tempt, when the temptation is leaſt ſeen and diſcovered; and that by his temptation he drives not only at the bringing ſin to the thoughts, but to the act, for putting ſome blot upon your walk and converſation?—Does not ſad experience ſhew you, that it is hard, difficult, and dangerous, to dance about the fire, and not be burnt; and that the temptation, which, at a diſtance, ſeemed ſmall, upon a nearer approach you have found had more bands on your heart than you could have dreamed it would have had; and how impoſſible it is, many times, to ſtop the current to which, through unwatchfulneſs you have given a vent?—Does not ſad experience witneſs, how the power and prevalency of corruption hath conſumed the vitals of your ſpiritual life, and tumbled you down headlong into confuſion; eſpecially when you have given conſcience a wramp, by doing violence to light, in ſiding with the enemies, and adventuring on the occaſions of a temptation? When you have gone, with Peter, to the high-prieſt's hall, without a warrant or a call, hath it not coſt you dear, inſomuch, that you have found bold ſinning hath made faint believing, and turned all your comfort to the door, leaving nothing behind but bitterneſs and death?—Do you not find your ſins have a weakening, captivating, vexing, and tormenting power?——But many ſad experiences of this ſort, and thouſands of them in their life-time, may even the true Iſrael of God have, whereby they find, to their ſad coſt, that the nations of corruptions are alive and powerful; powerful; as this gradual conquest, by little and little, declares.

2. It shows also, that they have many sweet experiences, on the other hand, of some little succours and auxiliaries, some small aids and supplies from heaven, whereby the enemy is driven out, and destroyed, from time to time, and this all the days of their life also, till the warfare be accomplished at death. I am speaking of these that have been brought to the field of battle, as I shewed before; and how the Lord, by little and little, makes the nations of lusts sometimes to flee before them. But by how many littles, in the believer's life-time, this warfare is carried on, who can tell? And how many little recoveries, little revivings, little supplies, little supports, little strengthening meals, little sin-killing antidotes, little soul-restoring cordials; how many of these little sweet things, or sweet little things, the Lord their God allows them, from time to time, that by little and little they may gain the day, is not possible to tell, they are so many. The poor fighting believer may get a thousand of them in a year; and ten thousands of them in his life-time; and, perhaps, more than half a score of them at one communion.—Sometimes he gets a little new discovery of the glorious Captain, after he hath been long out of sight, and hiding himself: and a new sight of the glory of the Lord fills the Israelite's heart with new life and courage, and hope of prevailing; for then he sees Christ to be a full magazine of all military provision, and an open magazine to give out armour for the war, and so he becomes strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Indeed, so many little glances of the glory of Christ that the believer gets, so many little victories does he get over the enemy.—Again, sometimes he gets a little out-pouring of the Spirit of prayer, and of the Spirit of adoption, crying, ABBA, Father: O Father, may he say, pity a poor child, harrassed with the devil, and captivate by the power of indwelling lusts and corruptions. O! but this gives the believer a little ease and relief, when he can get his heart poured out into the bosom of his best and most glorious friend, complaining of the tyranny of the temper, and the prevaling of the nations. Here is a little victory, when he gets a little grace to put the enemies of his soul into the hands of his Captain, saying, Vengeance, Lord; vengeance be executed upon these enemies, that dishonour thy name, and disturb the peace of my soul.—Again, sometimes he gets a little discovery of the enemy's power and policy, and strongest holds; so as, knowing the depths of Satan, and not being ignorant of his devices, the believer is thereby put in case to be upon his guard: and especially he is made to see and observe the old man of sin, that deadly cut-throat, that lies within his bosom: and while he is bemoaning himself, with Ephraim: and crying out with Paul, Oh wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from this body of death? The enemy is losing ground.—Again, sometimes he gets a little communication of life, after a deadness of spirit that seized him; and a little recovery, after a fit of the falling-sickness and backsliding: and the new communication of life and health to the soul, makes him start up to his feet again, renew the assault, and pursue the enemy with more vigour and resolution than ever; like a man that grows stronger than before. Indeed, that spiritual sickness of the believer is not unto death, but unto the glory of God, which his being recovered from, makes him fight more courageously, and watch more carefully against the enemy than ever he did.—Again, sometimes he gets a little grip of a promise, such as that, I will subdue thine iniquity; sin shall not have dominion over thee; fear not, for I am with thee; the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly: and having these promises, he is encouraged to the holy war, namely, to cleanse himself from all filthiness of the flesh and of the spirit, and to perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord. Why, the promise takes hold of his heart, and his heart takes hold of the promise, and therein he sees that the strength of Israel is engaged to carry him through the host of his enemies. And thus, every little grip of a promise by faith, is a little victory; there needs no more to give a chase to the enemy, than a little upstirring of faith, on a promising God in Christ, and dependence on him under the conduct of his Spirit.—Again, sometimes he gets a little grace to wait upon the Lord, while the promise is not yet accomplished, until he bring forth judgment unto victory; and the Lord is a God of judgment, blessed are all they that wait for him: he that believes, shall not make haste; knowing the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong: and hence the believer will find that his strength is to sit still, and quietly to wait for the salvation of the Lord.—Again, sometimes he gets a little godly sorrow, that works repentance unto life: gospel-repentance, issuing from a sight of crucified Christ, brings along with it a train of artillery for subduing the enemy; What carefulness does it work, says the apostle; yea, what clearing of ourselves; yea, what indignation; yea, what fear; yea, what vehement desire; yea, what zeal; yea, what revenge? 2 Cor. vii. 11. When the heart is melting before the Lord in godly sorrow, O what revenge is it meditating against the nations of lusts and corruptions! O how glad would the believer be then to wash his hands in the blood of all his spiritual enemies! For, at the same time, he gets a little resentment of his own ingratitude, saying, O do I thus requite the Lord, O foolish and unwise? A little holy shame and blushing before the Lord, at the thoughts of his own brutishness, saying, Behold I am vile; and a little soul-debasement, casting indignity upon himself, and giving glory to the Lord, saying, Truth, Lord, I am a dog, I am a beast, I am a devil; but yet I come to thee, to cast out the devil, and get glory to thy name.—Further, sometimes he gets a little intimation of peace and pardon, a little sprinkling of the blood of Christ upon the conscience, to purge it from dead works; and a little application of that blood by the hand of the Spirit, shewing him that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin. And this bloody banner of the Lamb, being displayed, makes the nations to flee before him; They overcome by the blood of the Lamb.—Sometimes they get a little opening of the heart, like Lydia, at the hearing of the word; insomuch, that their hearts, that were dead within them like a stone, or ever they are aware take life and need-fire, with a word of grace, a word of power; and the more the heart opens to let in the King of glory, the more is the enemy shut out.—Sometimes they get a little freedom and boldness at the throne of grace, when they come thither to obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need: and when there they get a little strength to wrestle with the Lord for a

bleſſing, ſaying, Lord, I will not let thee go, till thou bleſt me; they get even power with God himſelf, as it is ſaid of Jacob, Hoſ. xii. 4, He had power over the angel, and prevailed. And when a man is an overcomer in this ſenſe, to have power with God; much more will he have power over the nations of enemies. To him that overcometh, will I give power over the nations, Rev. ii. 26.—Sometimes they get a little anointing of the oil of gladneſs wherewith Chriſt is anointed above his fellows; and then the joy of the Lord is their ſtrength; and a little ſhower of the ſanctifying and comforting influences of the Spirit of Chriſt, for watering their graces, and drowning their corruptions.—Sometimes they get a little look and glance of the kind and compaſſionate eye of Chriſt, even after a denial, as he gave to Peter; and when they find him thus graciouſly looking to them, and kindly rebuking them, they go out and weep bitterly: and while they are ſhedding the tears of faith, they are ſhedding the blood of their enemies.—Sometimes they get a little back-look upon an old experience of the Lord's putting the enemy to flight before them, ſaying, I will remember thee from the land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites, and from the hill Mizar: or a little back-look upon an old promiſe that the Lord gave them with power: and when they are helped to plead it, ſaying, Lord, remember the word on which thou haſt cauſed me to hope; the enemy gets a new daſh.—Sometimes they get a little opening of the door of hope in the valley of Achor, the lively hope of the heavenly Canaan through the reſurrection of Chriſt: and this hope is the ſinews of the holy war; for as hope makes not aſhamed, ſo he that hath this hope purifies himſelf; and, according to the meaſure of this hope, is the meaſure of victory.—Sometimes they get a little pull of the cord of love, ſo as to get the love of God ſhed abroad upon their heart, and then the love of Chriſt conſtrains them; the love of the Captain draws them to the field, where love is the ſignal for war; Chriſt's love, I mean: His banner over me was love, ſays the church. His love both leads the van, and fences the rear; and when the flame of his love to them kindles a flame of love in their hearts to him, then a flaming ſword is drawn in the face of the enemy, the banner of love beats down the nations.—Again, they ſometimes get a little ſpiritual ſenſe to carry on the ſpiritual war; for inſtance, ſometimes a little hearing of the voice of Chriſt, ſo as to know the powerful ſound of it among a thouſand voices; and then their heart leaps within them, ſaying, It is the voice of my Beloved; behold, he cometh ſkipping on the mountains, and leaping upon the hills.—Sometimes they get a little ſight of God in Chriſt, and then they can endure hardſhip, as good ſoldiers of Chriſt: thus they endure, as ſeeing him that is inviſible, counting the reproach of Chriſt greater riches than all the treaſures of Egypt.—Sometimes they get a little touch of the hem of Chriſt's garment by faith; a little touch of his name, his offices, his blood, his righteouſneſs, or whatever hem it be; virtue comes from him to ſtop the bloody iſſue, and ſtop the enemies motion.—Sometimes they get a little taſte that the Lord is gracious; and it is like the taſte of Jonathan's honey-comb: the more they taſte of the honey of free-grace, the greater is the ſlaughter they make among the Philiſtines.—Sometimes they get a little ſmell of the roſe of Sharon, and the Lily of the valley, and it reſtores their fainting ſoul: all Chriſt's garments are ſaid to ſmell of aloes, myrrh, and caſſia: and the believer may be ſaid to get a ſmell of the raiment, a ſmell of the roſe, when Chriſt is precious to him above all things. And when all theſe ſpiritual ſenſes are exerciſed, then they may be ſaid to be exerciſing their arms, making havock among their enemies, and ſucceſsfully gaining ground upon them.—In a word, he gives them ſometimes a little breathing in the air of ſpiritual meditation; My meditation of him ſhall be ſweet: and when Chriſt is ſweet, ſin is bitter, and the battle againſt it a bitter battle. He gives them here a little, and there a little; and, by little and little, puts out the nations before them.

I have mentioned many particulars; but yet there is no ſpeaking of all the littles that believers will experience, during the time of their warfare; only, thus you ſee how, by little and little, their Captain brings them to the field of battle; and how, by little and little, he carries on the conqueſt in their hand: it is the Lord their God alone that does it; it is he that conquered their enemies; it is he that helps them to chaſe the conquered, for it is he that bought their armour; he bought their ſhield, and ſword, and breaſt-plate, and helmet; and it is he, that as he bought them with his blood, ſo he puts on their weapons, and girds them with ſtrength for war. It is he that rubs off the ruſt off their arms, when at any time they are out of uſe, by blowing up their graces, and giving them ſtrength to exerciſe grace: and it is he that carries on the victory to perfection, by giving power to the faint; and to him that hath no might, he encreaſeth ſtrength, from time to time, till in death he end the warfare, by driving out all the nations, ſo as never to be ſeen again. The Lord, thy God, will put out theſe nations, before thee, by little and little.

VI. The ſixth thing propoſed, was, to give the reaſons of the doctrine. It might here be aſked,

1*ſt*, Why the Lord their God, and he alone, does put out the nations before them? The reaſon is, becauſe he alone can do it, for he is the Lord; they would never be put out, if he did it not: and he alone will do it, becauſe he is their God; and thus ſtands engaged by promiſe and covenant ſo to do: The Lord thy God will put out theſe nations before thee. But,

2*dly*, Why will he do it ſo gradually, by little and little? Why does he let enemies without and within live to annoy his people, ſeeing it is eaſy for him to deſtroy them all inſtantly? Why will he deſtroy them gradually, by little and little? There is much of infinite wiſdom to be obſerved in this diſpoſure; and therefore I would offer ſome particulars for repreſenting the beauty of this method.

1. It is by little and little he puts them out, without deſtroying them at once, that by them he may prove his people, Judges ii. 22. Some Canaanites were ſtill left remaining, to prove whether they will keep the way of the Lord: theſe Canaanites were enemies to their peace, enemies to their profeſſion, that ſought their bodies overthrow, and their ſouls ruin; and they are left to prove whether they will cleave ſtill to God's command, or whether they will follow the abominations of the wicked. Obſerve it then, Sirs, we muſt look to find enemies; outward enemies to the peace of the church, and to the truth of the gospel; inward enemies to the graces and comforts of the soul: and this combat, thus continued in Israel, serves to prove whether our graces be counterfeit or not; for they only are true Israelites, that are still taking up arms against the devil, the world, and the flesh, and all the nations of the Canaanites. By this then it is evidenced who are true Israelites, and who not.

2. It is by little and little that he will put out the nations before Israel, that thus they may be still learning to exercise their arms; I mean, that their graces may be exercised, and particularly their militant graces. There are some graces would be for little or no use, if no Canaanites and corruptions were left: the special use of faith, hope, and patience, is for helping the believer to surmount the difficulties that are now in his way. Many other graces there are, that there would be no use for, if all our enemies and corruptions were destroyed at once: triumphant graces, such as love and joy in their perfection, would make a perfect heaven. But there are militant graces, that must be exercised also, while we are on earth, and which there are no use for in heaven: for example, if all wants were supplied fully, there would be no need of poverty of spirit; if all sins were wholly destroyed, there would be no need of godly sorrow; if death were already swallowed up in victory, there would be no need of the desire of death, nor longing for heaven; if vision were already come, there would be no need of faith, as it is a militant grace, fighting its way many times through doubts and fears, and want of sight and sense; if fruition were come, there would be no need of hope; if all trouble were at an end, there would be no need of patience. But this shield of faith, and helmet of hope, and other parts of the Christian armour, must be exercised: therefore the nations are not wholly destroyed, but by little and little. Again,

3. It is by little and little they are put out, for the advantage of the militant saints in many respects: as it is fit they should fight, before they triumph; and that they war as soldiers on earth, before they reign as kings in heaven; since no man is crowned, except he strive lawfully, 2 Tim. ii. 5. So it tends to enhance heaven, and make them prize and value it more, when it is attained through many difficulties, troubles, and oppositions: and by this means they come to have sweet conformity to their blessed Captain of salvation, who was made perfect through suffering; and it is their honour to tread his steps, who endured the contradiction of sinners against himself, and fought his way. — This contributes also to the believer's comfort at the issue of every conflict, as a safe haven is very comfortable to a mariner that hath been tost at sea. — This method serves not only for the believer's comfort, but for his instruction and correction: for his instruction, because thus he learns more and more to be humble and dependent; all boasting is excluded by this means, while he finds his enemies still living, and lively, and strong; for he looks with a humble eye upon himself, knowing his own utter insufficiency for grappling with these enemies, and difficulties, and oppositions in his way; and with a dependent eye upon Christ, that his grace may be sufficient for him, and his strength perfected in weakness: thus he glories in his infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon him. And as it is advantageous for their necessary instruction, so for their necessary correction, when they are sparing and remiss in using the means, and improving the advantages for driving out the Canaanites, indulging the flesh and the corruptions thereof; as it is said of Israel, Num. xxxiii. 55. If they would not drive out the inhabitants of the land, then it should come to pass, that those which they let remain should be pricks in their eyes, and thorns in their sides, to vex them. This is one of the severest ways of chastising them, when, to reprove them for one sin and lust, he lets them fall into the hands of another; and yet, in mercy to the true Israel of God, curing their disease in the issue: as he let Peter fall into a threefold pit among his enemies hands, for curing his self-confidence. One would think, the cure was worse than the disease; but our Lord hath sometimes very fearful ways of correcting and curing the souls of his own people.

4. It is by little and little that the Lord puts out the nations before them, to commend the excellency of the deliverance we have by Christ. Though there be no condemnation to them that are in Christ; yet, for their humiliation, God suffers their enemies to live among them, and sin to live in them, and oftentimes to afflict them, that they may know the benefit they have by grace, while they make continual recourse to him for help. It is but little we can take up at once, by reason of our want of capacity; therefore he gives one deliverance at this time, and another deliverance at that time, and a third deliverance at another time; and so on from time to time, that we may know how much we are obliged to him.

5. He delivers them by little and little, to shew the greatness of his glory, as the Captain of salvation. He shews the glory of his power, in keeping us, notwithstanding the great danger we are continually in, while the enemy is alive within us, without us, and round about us. How greatly does his power appear, in preserving the tossed ark amidst all the waves and billows of adversity that dash against it, and in keeping the burning bush from being consumed? He shews the glory of his triumphant arms, like some famous conquerors in battle, who, though they may, yet will not put all their enemies to the edge of the sword, but will take some captives, and others they will keep alive against their day of triumph, and then to suffer death, to the greater shame of the conquered, and the greater glory of the conqueror. When Joshua had discomfited these five kings that fought against Gibeon, chap. x. he would not slay them instantly, but shut them up in a cave closly, intending, when the battle was fully ended, to put them to death openly: so our great General and Captain, the Lord Jesus Christ, He strikes through kings in the day of his wrath; he leads captivity captive; he shuts up some of the kings and commanders of the hellish nations, into the cave of the heart, where they may rage, yet they cannot rule any more; and at last crowns the solemnity of his triumph, by making a show of them openly, and destroying them utterly.

6. He destroys them by little and little, that he may counterplot the enemies in their own plot, and fight them with their own weapons. It is the plot of hell, by little and little, to destroy sinners; yea, and to wear out the saints of the most High, Dan. vii. 25. by one temptation on the back of another;

another; therefore, by little and little the Lord will defeat the design of the devil, and take the wise in their own craftiness. The wisdom of heaven can easily counterplot the policy of hell; yea, thus he fights the enemy, and beats him with his own weapons. The tempter comes sometimes, and bruises the believer's heel, as he did Christ's; upon which the believer is stirred up to look again to him that was bruised for his iniquity, and then the devil is sure to get as good as he gave; for the bruised heel, he gets a broken head. Perhaps, some temptation gives the believer a trip, and down he falls; but the wise Captain makes use of that very fall for giving the devil, and his hosts, a greater foil than ever; for, after that fall, the believer goes alone, with Peter, and weeps it out; and watches, and prays, and fights better than he did before.

7. It is by little and little that the Lord conquers the nations of enemies in the way to the heavenly Canaan, because, by little and little, his people must be made ready for it; By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, till thou be increased, and inherit the land, Exod. xxiii. 30. As the Canaanites had kept possession till Israel was grown into a people; so there were to be some remains of them, till Israel should grow so numerous, as to replenish the whole. The land of Canaan had room enough to receive Israel, but Israel was not yet numerous enough to possess Canaan: even so here, the true Israel of God must be made ready for the heavenly Canaan, before they come there. They are not always in actual readiness, therefore there is some service they have to do for their Captain, some battle they have to fight with the enemy: they must have some more experience, and learn some more lessons; therefore their possession of Canaan is delayed till they be ready for it.

8. It is by little and little that the Lord drives out the nations before them, lest the beasts of the field increase upon them; to allude to that word which immediately follows the text, which we have also, Exod. xxiii. 9. I will not drive them out before thee in one year, lest the land become desolate, and the beasts of the field multiply against thee. And thus it is with the children of God; if they had not enemies without and within, and oppositions in their way, there are some dangerous beasts that would be ready to increase upon them: For instance, there is a beast they call pride, that might grow upon you, if you had no enemies to fight with; and while yet you are not ready for heaven, and sanctification is incomplete. Hence a thorn in the flesh was given to Paul, that he might not be exalted above measure. Is not the thorn in the flesh well ordered, that prevents confidence in the flesh?—There is a beast, they call security, might grow upon you; but now enemies are on all hands of you, to prevent your falling asleep, and to keep you both watching and waking, and constantly on your guard.—There is a beast they call presumption, that might grow upon you, and make you think you were able to go forward to heaven upon your own legs, and in your own strength, if you found no such enemy in the way.—There is another beast, they call worldly-mindedness, that might grow upon you; if you got no adversaries and adversities to vex you, and wean you from the world, you would be in danger of saying, It is good to be here: but now the wars and battles, in your way to heaven, make you say with your heart, O it is better to be there.—There is a beast, a filthy brute beast, that they call sensuality, that might grow upon you, believer, that might make you lukewarm and formal in all your duties, as well as carnal, and light, and vain in the intervals of duties: but the sight of your spiritual enemies on the field will make you to see a need to be spiritual, zealous, earnest, and fervent in spirit, serving the Lord.—There is also a filthy dumb beast, that they call forgetfulness, that would certainly grow upon your hand, and be very dangerous to your soul and spiritual welfare, if your enemies were all destroyed; therefore God says, Psal. lix. 11. Slay them not, lest my people forget. If the execution were quick and hasty, the impressions of it would not be deep and durable. Swift destructions startle men for the present, but they are soon forgotten; therefore, when we think that God's judgments upon the nations of our spiritual enemies come on but very slowly, we must conclude that God hath wise and holy ends in that gradual procedure; Slay them not, lest my people forget. They would forget to pray, if they had not enemies to pray against: they would forget to praise, if they had not still new deliverances to praise him for: they would forget to pity these that are afflicted and tossed with tempests like themselves: they would forget their Captain, and their duty of living by faith and dependence on him: they would forget to take with their proper name, saying, Truth, Lord, I am a dog; they would forget to mourn for sin, and repent: they would forget their own weakness, and their deliverer's power; and, like Jeshurun, in prosperity would wax fat, and forget God that made them, and lightly esteem the rock of their salvation: they would forget to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb at the side of the Red-sea of the Lamb's blood, where their enemies are always drowned; even to sing, saying, The Lord hath triumphed gloriously, the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea; the Lord is a man of war, the Lord is his name, Exod. xv. 1, 2, 3, &c.: they would forget to speak of the wonders of his mercy from time to time, and to give him the glory due unto his name: they would forget to employ him upon every new attack of the enemy, saying, Lord, thou hast delivered; and in thee we trust that thou wilt deliver. Better the enemy live and rage, and be not utterly destroyed, than that Christ want employment at your hand, and get not the glory of executing his saving office in your time of need. You would hardly think that so much advantage should accrue to the Israel of God, by the nations of their enemies not being destroyed at once, but by little and little.——You see some of the filthy beasts that would increase upon you, if the Lord did not spare some of your spiritual enemies, devils and lusts; which, though they may be called all beasts together, yet herein shines infinite wisdom in sparing one beast to destroy another, one corruption to devour another; he may let carnality live in a believer sometimes, to kill his pride; much ignorance remain, to kill his self-wisdom; much wandering in, and indisposition for duty, to kill his self-righteousness.

Now, as it is with believers in particular, so with the church in general; why does God suffer tyrants, and atheists, and hypocrites, and heretics heretics to live among them, and vex them, but for reaching many, if not all, of these ends that I have been naming. When the church was in adversity under the primitive ten persecutions, then religion flourished; the life of the tyrants tended to the life of religion in the persecuted church: but when the Roman emperors became Christian, and friendly to the church, then pride and security crept in with their prosperous state; the beasts of the field increased so much, that, by degrees, a blasphemous beast assumed the very name and office of being the head of the church, even a beast with seven heads and ten horns, mentioned, Rev. xiii. 1.; I mean, the Roman Antichrist. And then, why hath a nation of heretics, with erroneous principles and doctrines, been spared and continued in the church from time to time, but that the friends of truth might have occasion to clear and vindicate it, and to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints? There must be heresies, says the apostle, that they that are approven may be made manifest; there must be errors, that truth may be more clearly discovered and mantained. Some precious truths had never been set into such a clear light, if opposite errors had not been vented for darkening the same. Thus our Covenant-obligations in Scotland are denied by some, that their obligation may be the more asserted by others: thus also there is an ungodly nation left alive, that the godly may be distinguished from them, and exercised the more unto godliness; and a hypocritical nation, that true Israelites, that are so indeed, may try themselves, and become the more sincere and upright.

VII. The application now remains to be spoken to. Is it so, that as the true Israel of God have nations in their way to the possession of the heavenly Canaan, so the Lord their God will conquer these nations by little and little?

1*st*, It may be applied in a word of dehortation and caution, in these four particulars;

1. Beware of thinking that you may safely neglect the means, because this work of putting out the nations belongs wholly to the Lord. This were a lazy Antinomian conclusion, drawn from such promises, as rather bear the greatest encouragement in the world to make a diligent use of the means. If it be a good reason of working out our salvation with fear and trembling, that the Lord works in us both to will and to do, which is the apostle's argument, Phil. ii. 12, 13.; then it is as good a reason for warring, and using all the means necessary for accomplishing this spiritual warfare, that it is the Lord our God that conquers the enemy for us by little and little. Yea, this is such a necessary consideration, that, take away this argument, and there remains no encouragement to use the means at all: and hence it is only believers that are capable of this spiritual warfare; and only believers in Christ that are capable of the right and diligent use of the means that relate thereunto: for they cannot be used duly, but in the faith of this encouragement, The Lord thy God will go before thee, to conquer the nations of enemies in your way. Unbelievers, indeed, ought to use the means, because the Lord commands the use thereof; and therefore, for the Lord's sake, neglect no commanded duty and ordinance wherein the Lord uses to be found. But yet, I say again, never will any soul use the means aright, and acceptably, till something of the real true faith of this encouragement excite him: therefore, O believer, neglect not to read, and hear, and pray, and meditate, and use all commanded duties and ordinances; for there you must expect to meet with your Captain, that hath engaged to put out the nations before thee.

2. Beware of thinking that the stress of the warfare lies upon you, because you are obliged to use the means; and that it is your using the means that will do the business. As the former is a lazy, so this is a legal thought, and as pernicious and destructive as the other: for, if you lean upon the means, and think that your reading, praying, hearing, and the like, will drive out the nations, bring down the body of death, or subdue one corruption, that were a beating your enemies with a sword of straw: such a fleshly weapon will never draw blood of your spiritual enemies; and, instead, of getting victory over your sins by such legal weapons, you are brought under greater bondage; For as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curse: and to be under the law, is to be under the dominion of sin; for, the strength of sin is the law. This legal method then were to be opening a fore-door to let out the enemy, and, at the same time, opening a back-door to let them in, and that with more advantage against you than ever. As it is a dangerous extreme to neglect means, upon pretext that Christ must do all, since his doing all is the greatest encouragement thereunto; so it is as dangerous on the other hand to use means, upon a notion that you must do all, or that the weight of the warfare depends upon you, and your duties: for your entertaining that notion, is the greatest discouragement in the world to the use of the means, and gives your enemies the greatest advantage against you, even in that wherein you think to defeat them.

3. Beware of thinking that you may lawfully enter into a league with any of your enemies, because they are not to be destroyed but by little and little. See what God says to Israel, with respect to the Canaanites, ver. 2. of this chapter where the text lies, and elsewhere; Thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor shew mercy to them. While we are showing that sanctification and mortification is not perfected in the saints while they are here, and that the nations of lusts even in their heart, are not all to be destroyed in this world; some carnal heart may be ready to think, My blessing on the minister, who, by this doctrine, makes me think I may get to heaven though my lusts be not all destroyed, and though I indulge myself in some of the pleasures of the flesh; and, I hope, I may have peace, though I walk in the imagination of my heart, adding drunkenness to thirst, and one sin to another. Say you so, man, woman? I must tell you, that your speech bewrays you, that you are not an Israelite bound for the heavenly Canaan; for, cursed is that peace that is consistent with a standing league and covenant with any lust whatsoever. Such are in covenant with death, and at agreement with hell; and, There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked. The children of God dare not maintain a league with any lust, nor will they shew mercy on their most darling lusts: nay, as it is said of some, that their tender mercies are cruelty; so I may say of the believer, in this case, that his most tender mercy toward his his moſt beloved luſt is cruelty: when he acts like himſelf, he is ſo cruel-hearted, he would cut the throat of it, if he could, and even of all his luſts.

4. Beware of thinking that believers have no advantage againſt the nations of their enemies, ſins and luſts, more than others, becauſe they are not utterly deſtroyed: nor let believers themſelves think, that becauſe their deliverance is not effected preſently, therefore it will never be effected; for the Lord their God is upon the deſtroying work, only he will take his own time and his own way to his own work, and his time and way both is the beſt: The Lord thy God will do it by little and little. Hence a believer may be getting advantage, and gaining ground upon corruptions and luſts, even when he feels them ſtirring and raging moſt violently: it may be they have got a dead ſtroak for all that; as a beaſt that hath got a death's blow, may break off from thoſe that are holding it, and turn more mad than ever, and yet will die at length of the ſame blow. The devil may rage moſt, when he knows that his time is ſhort, and that he will be ſoon caſt out, and bruiſed under feet. Corruption is not always ſtrongeſt, when its motions are moſt felt; it may be ſtrongeſt, when the ſtrength of it is not ſeen.

Uſe 2. The ſecond uſe may be for information. Many things might be here inferred; as,

1. Hence we may ſee the privilege even of a viſible church, whom the Lord hath not utterly forſaken, though filled with ſin, as it is ſaid, Jer. li. 5. As they have the Lord for their God, in the ſenſe that I explained before, and as Iſrael here was privileged; ſo, by virtue of that relation to God as their God, they may have manifold mercies in common among them, as a mixed viſible church, beyond the reſt of the world: the Lord may appear for them againſt the heathen nations that are about them, and that are among them; and he may do great things for them, by virtue of that relation that he ſtands in to them as their God, and they his profeſſing people. As this text relates to Iſrael of old literally, it repreſents a privilege common to all that people, namely, the Lord's driving out the nations of the Canaanites before them; and may we not ſay, The Lord hath in like manner dealt with us, particularly in the church of Scotland, ſeveral times?—As the Lord planted a church here very early, not many years after Chriſt's aſcenſion; ſo by little and little he drove out the heathen nations before us: when our own forefathers were a race of blind pagans here, the Lord deſtroyed that idolatry, and gradually enlarged his church, till, in proceſs of time, Popery entering in, we were over-run with Antichriſtian nations. But lo, when the time to favour Zion was come; I mean, the time of the Reformation from Popery, the Lord was pleaſed to drive out theſe other nations before us by little and little, and gradually carried on the Reformation-work, and that by the method of ſolemn covenanting with him; and this covenanting work was carried on by little and little, again and again, till the whole nation came under ſolemn obligations this way.—As Iſrael avouched the Lord to be their God, by ſolemn covenants, that were binding and obligatory upon them and their poſterity after them; ſo, in this duty of vowing to the Lord, which is a moral duty, and conſequently incumbent on the church of God under the new, as well as old diſpenſation, and not like the types and ſhadows that were to be done away: in this moral duty, I ſay, we in our forefathers followed the example of the church of God in ſcripture, by entering into ſolemn Covenant with him; which work the Lord, in many ſignal ways, countenanced with his preſence, in the remarkable effuſion and out-pouring of the Spirit, to the converſion of multitudes. It is the glory of a church, when God avouches them for his people, by the external diſpenſation of the covenant of grace; and it is alſo the glory of a church, when they avouch God to be their God, in a ſolemn Covenant of duty and ſervice. This was a part of Scotland's glory, attended with internal diſplays of the power and glory of God in the ſanctuary.—To prove the obligation of theſe Covenants upon poſterity to all generations, were, I ſuppoſe, needleſs in this auditory; neither would time allow me to inſiſt here: but I think, to diſparage theſe Covenants, and to deny the obligation thereof, is to caſt dung upon our glory, and to tread our honour in the duſt; yea, I think it worſe than the breaking, burning, and burying of them: for a broken covenant may be mended again; a burnt covenant may come forth out of the furnace again; yea, a buried covenant may riſe again, when God raiſes up a Reformation ſpirit: but to beſpatter the reputation of them, and impugn the obligation of them, is, I think, to render them odious to all generations, inſtead of binding upon them.—But now, as our Reformation was carried on by little and little; ſo, when it is under a decay in many reſpects, let us look to the Lord our God, that, by little and little, it may be revived again, in the Lord's own time and way.

2. As we ſee hence the privileges of a viſible church; ſo the ſpecial and peculiar privilege of the true Iſrael of God, the church ſpiritual and inviſible, though militant on earth: the Lord their God will caſt out the nations before them in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and that by little and little. May it not be ſaid of them, as it is, Deut. xxxiii. 29. Happy art thou, O Iſrael; who is like unto thee, O people ſaved by the Lord, who is the ſhield of thy help, and the ſword of thine excellency? And, ver. 27. The eternal God is thy refuge, underneath are his everlaſting arms; He ſhall thruſt out the enemy before thee, and ſhall ſay, Deſtroy them. What though all the nations of the world were againſt them, outward and inward; the nations of earth and hell both? Yet he, who is the King of nations, is for them; and if God be for them, who can be againſt them? He can deſtroy nations for their ſake; I gave Egypt for thy ranſom; Ethiopia and Seba for thee. The nations may fight, but cannot prevail; nay, the gates of hell can never prevail againſt them. Why? they have the Lord for their God; and their God is their guard. And as the common relation, that God ſtands in to a mixed viſible church, intitles them to many privileges while that relation ſtands; ſo the ſpecial relation, that the true Iſrael of God ſtand in to him, as their God in Chriſt, by a ſpiritual, indiſſolvable union, intitles them to all ſpiritual bleſſings and ſpiritual deliverances. However difficult and dangerous their way to the heavenly Canaan is, by reaſon of the numerous oppoſing nations, which they can never deſtroy of themſelves; yet their God and Captain tain leads the van, and drives out the nations before them.

3. See here the miserable case of the nations that know not God, and are enemies to the people of God. Why, like the cursed Canaanites, they are devoted to destruction; they vex themselves in vain, when they fight against the Lord and his anointed. The Lord God of Israel is to drive them out; yea, he will drive them to hell, that continue in their enmity against God and his people. The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God. Yea, the greatest misery of all the wicked, that remain in a Christless state, lies in this, though they do not see it to be their misery, namely, that they are under the power of all the nations of hell, under the power of the devil and their lusts, and in league with the nations that oppose the true Israel of God in their way to the heavenly Canaan.

4. Hence we may see the reason of the multiplied experiences of the believer, both sad and sweet; because the nations are cast out before him by little and little, and not utterly destroyed while he is here. Hence many sad tales he hath to tell of the nations compassing him about; iniquities prevailing against him; and lusts again and again, and a thousand times, stirring, and working, and warring, and overthrowing him, and treading upon him. And, on the other hand, notwithstanding all this, he hath many sweet tidings to narrate of the Lord's humbling and healing, convincing and converting him: many convictions, many conversions does he get from time to time; and the next conviction more deep than the former, and the next conversion more sweet than the former; and one conversion on the back of another, because of one defection on the back of another, through the power of the nations of hell within and without him. As a dying saint that was asked, when he was converted? said, He had been converted a hundred times: so, in this sense, it is possible some believers, of long standing, may be converted a hundred times, and a hundred too. That saints may need conversion, is plain from what Christ said to Peter who was a saint, When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren. Yea, every new conversion of the believer, may be more remarkable than another, while the Lord is thus, by little and little, destroying the enemy; because every touch of the nations power and policy in drawing him aside from the Lord, and the recurring power of corruption, is so horrible and monstrous to him, that he thinks with himself, Oh! will ever the Lord return again to the like of me? And, when the Lord returns, he wonders more than ever.

5. Hence we may see, why there is no justification by the deeds of the law, nor mortification by the means of the law: no justification by legal works, nor sanctification and mortification by legal means. How does this follow, say you? Indeed it is plain, there can be no justification by the deeds of the law; for the best believer on earth must own, that at best he hath two nations in his womb, and the company of two armies; an army of lusts, and an army of graces; the flesh lusting against the Spirit, as well as the Spirit against the flesh: and when he finds nations of lusts and corruptions in his womb, in his heart, can he expect to be justified by the deeds of the law, by a legal righteousness of his own? No; he is made content to be obliged to grace, free grace, through the righteousness of Christ, for justification. And as there is no justification by legal works, so there is no mortification by legal means; they never saw the power of corruption, that are not convinced of this, that nothing in the world but the power of God can destroy it: The Lord thy God will put out these nations before thee, by little and little. O Sirs, pity ignorant papists, that think their whipping, and scourging, and beating themselves, will do it: pity ignorant professors, that think their fasting, and praying, and legal endeavours, will do it. It is true, our Lord speaks of some devils that go not out but by fasting and prayer: not that these means of themselves do it; nay, let our Lord explain his own word; The Lord thy God will put out these nations, he will subdue your iniquities: such things go not forth but by fasting and prayer; that is, by Christ Jesus, sought and found in these means. Neglect not the means then; but, for the Lord's sake, remember, that if you go forth against lusts in the strength of means, or only with a verbal mention of the strength of Christ, without ever having taken on with this glorious Captain, or being joined to him in order to draw strength from him; your leviathan lusts will but laugh at the shaking of your spear. Therefore,

6. Hence we may see where the believer's strength lies. You heard before where the strength of the enemy lies; but now, where lies the strength of the Israel of God? Even in the GOD of Israel, the KING of Israel: The Lord thy God will put out these nations before thee. Psal. lxxiii. 25. My flesh and heart faileth; but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever. My outward advantages, inward vigour, and all fail me; but my God will not fail me. More particularly, Israel's strength lies in God, as manifesting himself in Christ. There are two things in Christ that strength lies in, for the believer's safety and deliverance from the power of sin, and victory over the nations of lusts and devils: one is the blood of Christ; we overcome by the blood of the Lamb: the death of Christ was the death of sin, for he nailed sin to the cross, and destroyed the devil's power. Another is the Spirit of Christ, who being in the believer, greater is he that is in them, than he that is in the world; and the Spirit mortifies sin. Here lies the believer's great strength, for actual mortification of sin, and victory over it; If ye through the Spirit mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live, Rom. viii. 13. And the Spirit carries on this work,

(1.) By the application of the death of Christ to the soul; for, it is the virtue flowing forth from the death of Christ, that destroys sin; and the Spirit applies that virtue, and implants the soul into Christ, that being ingrafted in him, and unite to him, the sin-killing, soul-quickening virtue of Christ may flow in to the believer.

(2.) By the implantation of grace, and of grace contrary to corruption: in opposition to unbelief, he implants faith; in opposition to enmity, he implants love; in opposition to slavish fear, he implants fortitude and spiritual courage.

(3.) By the excitation of the grace he hath implanted; which, though it be active in itself, yet, by reason of our indisposition, needs to be whetted and actuated: when the Spirit lets grace alone, sin revives, and gathers strength.

(4.) By drawing forth faith, especially to a lively exercise; and then this is the victory whereby

we

we overcome the world, even our faith; while the Spirit of faith draws forth the grace of faith: for faith carries up the soul to him in whom strength lies; and then says, I can do all things through Christ strengthening me: and faith employs the strength of Christ against the strength of the enemy, and so triumphs in its noble General, being strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Faith begets, in the soul, an antipathy against all sins and lusts, purifying the heart, and setting it directly against sin. Tell a carnal heart, sin lies at the door; why, let it come in, it is a friend of mine: but, acquaint a believer, exercising faith, that there is sin in such a thing; oh! it is an abomination. Faith discovers the danger the soul is in by the nations of lusts that encompass it, and excites all the faculties of the soul to rise up against it, saying, Rise, Samson, for the Philistines are upon thee; canst thou sleep in the midst of troops and armies of lusts? And so it rouzes the soul to sigh, and groan, and pant, and pray, and cry, and wrestle; and so to overcome, under the standard of the glorious Captain.

Use 3. The third use is for examination. Hence we may see matter for trying our state by: what is the mark of a candidate for heaven, a traveller to Canaan? Why, the Lord his God is driving out the nations before him, by little and little. Is the battle with the nations commenced, and fairly begun? And, is the Lord gradually carrying it on?

QUEST. How shall I know if the war is commenced, and progressively going forward?

ANSW. For a solution of this inquiry, you may take a mark or two out of the bosom of the text.

1. Have you got a view of the nations, that are in your way? I mean, a view and discovery of your corruption, your original and actual sin, and your natural bondage and slavery by reason thereof? Have you seen nations of lusts within you? and have you seen them to be such powerful nations, that nothing but the power of omnipotence can drive out? And consequently, have seen your own utter impotency to drive them out of yourself? Have you seen them to be such politic nations, and so fraudulent, that nothing but the infinite wisdom of God could counteract this policy of hell; knowing your heart to be deceitful above all things, as well as desperately wicked? Have you seen them to be such spiritual nations, spiritual wickednesses in high places, that no carnal weapon could avail in this warfare, but only such spiritual weapons as are mighty, through God, to the pulling down of the strong holds? Have you seen them to be such numerous nations, that your name is LEGION; a legion of lusts, a legion of devils, that nothing but a word from Jesus can put out?—Now, this mark excludes all that never saw themselves, and their own natural bondage and thraldom; they are yet serving the nations, which they ought to be driving out. They who know the plagues of their own heart, and have experienced the power of these nations in their way, look more like the travellers to Canaan. But take this mark in conjunction with what follows.

2. Have you got a discovery of a God in Christ, the glorious Captain of salvation, in whom alone your help and salvation lies, and who alone can put out these nations before you? Hath the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Christ been given to you, so as to reveal Christ in you, and so as you have sometime or other got Christ in you the hope of glory, Christ in you the hope of victory? Have you seen Christ, as a victorious Conqueror, triumphing over all the nations of spiritual enemies, Travelling in the greatness of his strength, treading the wine-press alone, when of the people there was none with him, staining all his raiment with the blood of the enemy, and trampling them in his fury? as this is elegantly represented, Isa. lxiii. 1, 2, 3. Have you seen help laid upon One that is mighty, one whose name is JESUS and JEHOVAH both? JEHOVAH is his name, in the first word of our text; and his name is called JESUS, because he saves his people from their sins. As many discoveries as you have got of the glory of Christ as the Captain of salvation, so many marks of victory begun have you.—But this mark excludes all that never get their eyes opened to see any form or comeliness in Christ, or any beauty wherefore they should desire him: and hence the beauty and glory of a present world bulks more in their eyes.

3. Hath the discovery of the glory of the Conqueror loosed your heart from all other lords and lovers, and joined your heart unto him as the Lord your God, the Lord your captain, the Lord your righteousness, the Lord your strength, the Lord your salvation? The Lord thy God will put out the nations before thee. Now, the heart-drawing discovery of Christ, uniting the soul to him, is a great matter; for thus the believer is unite to Christ by faith, and the relation constitute, so as he is the Lord thy God, thy Head. Indeed a saving discovery of God in Christ, natively brings this along with it: if you see not God in Christ, thou cannot see him to be thy God, but rather thy enemy; but to see him in Christ, is to see him thy God, and thy friend: for they that see him in Christ, they see him in whom he is well-pleased; and to see God well-pleased in him, is to see God as thy God. This appropriation, then, is imported in the very nature of faith, according to the measure of it; and the ground of this believing appropriation is the word of promise, I will be thy God, which is the great fundamental promise; and the proper echo of faith is, AMEN; I will take it on thy word, that thou wilt be my God, Zech. xiii. 9. I will say, It is my people; and they shall say, The Lord is my God. There the Spirit of God declares what shall be the language of faith, when it acts like faith indeed, The Lord is my God. But, say you, can every believer say, The Lord is my God? My friends, I never thought that every believer could say so, nor that any believer in the world could always say so: but as every believer is not always believing; so I speak of what faith says when it is acting, and what the believer says when he is believing, not when he is doubting and misbelieving. Neither do I think that every act of faith is a saying expressly, He is my God; but every appropriating act of faith says this upon the matter, and every heart-engaging view of a God in Christ hath a my God wrapt up in the bosom of it, whether it dare say it expressly or not; for, in Christ, they see him to be a well-pleased God, and a friend. You know, saving faith is thy "receiving and resting on Christ for salvation, "as he is offered to thee, to thee in the gospel-"promise;" and this receiving is no other thing than believing, John i. 12.; and so it is a taking taking him on his word for ſalvation to thee, as a Captain to thee. Take away this particular application, and it is no faith at all, and conſtitutes no union to him, no relation to him as the Lord thy God. I aſk then, if the diſcovery of the glory of Chriſt hath joined your heart to him as the glorious Captain of ſalvation, ſo as you have been taken on with him? Then thou art intitled to the complete victory; The Lord thy God will put out theſe nations before thee.—This mark excludes all theſe that never cloſed with Chriſt by a peculiar believing, but ſatisfy themſelves with a general faith, and may be called but general believers; they have no particular words on which they have been cauſed to hope, and no particular faith applying Chriſt to themſelves. Such ſeem not yet to have entered the field of battle, nor cloſed with the Captain.

4. Hath the Lord begun to put out theſe nations before you? Hath he begun to exert his power, by ſubduing your luſts? Did you never know the day wherein Satan fell like lightening, as it were, from heaven; when the ſtrong man and his goods, that were at eaſe, were caſt out of his habitation? How was it with you in the day of believing, in the day when the Lord your God manifeſted himſelf, and appeared as a mighty Conqueror to you? Got you not all your luſts and corruptions, as it were, drowned in the blood of the Lamb, ſo as you thought you ſhould never ſee them again? You know, believer, that was a falſe thought, but yet it was a glad thought to you, to think you would never be under the feet of your corruptions again, and you would never diſhonour the Lord as you had done, however ſome time or other you have found the Lord pulling down the ſtrong holds of unbelief, atheiſm, and enmity, and giving you the necks of your enemies. This looks like a good work begun, a battle begun, and a breach made upon the rule and dominion of ſin.—This mark excludes all theſe, in whom ſin ſtill reigns, and in whom the glorious Captain hath never ſo much as begun to give a blow to the enemy.

5. If you be a ſoldier on your march to the heavenly Canaan, then I aſk you, If you be of any conſiderable ſtanding in the Lord's way? Have you not had many a bloody battle with the nations, and many a fearful onſet by the enemy, attacking you with main force, and may be taking you captive; yea, and bringing you into captivity to the law of ſin that is in your members? Rom. vii. 23. Have you not found your enemies returning with ſuch power and prevalency, that you was ready to think that you had loſt all ground that ever you had got, and loſt all the victories that ever you had gained, the Canaanites prevailing againſt you? Iniquities prevail againſt me, ſays David. You will think this an odd mark; for, ſays the believer, it is the prevalency of ſin that makes me fear I am not a true Iſraelite bound for Canaan. But, ſtay a little till I further clear it.—This mark excludes all theſe, in whom ſin and luſts have not the power of prevalency only, but the power of dominion.

QUEST. What is the difference between the power of PREVALENCY, and the power of DOMINION?

ANSW. The power of dominion is a regal power; there ſin is king: but the power of prevalency is a tyrannical power; there it is only a tyrant, whoſe authority is rejected. The power of dominion is a monarchical power, where ſin rules alone; but the power of prevalency only is where another power is alſo; there are two armies on the field. The power of dominion is uncontroulable, the man ſins without controul; but the power of prevalency is a reſiſted power, where it meets with reſiſtance unto blood. The power of dominion is an abſolute power; but the power of prevalency is a limited one, with reſpect to ſome particulars only. The power of dominion is a habitual power; but the power of prevalency is occaſional only. And, in a word, the power of dominion is an intire power; but the power of prevalency is a broken power, the head of it is broken, and the back of it is broken, though it prevail.—Now, to find the prevalency of the enemy, is not inconſiſtent with the believer's militant ſtate, which ſuppoſes manifold inroads and incurſions of the Canaanites upon him. And, indeed, they are not capable to find the joy of the victory, who never feel the ſtrength of the battle: ſin reigns in the wicked, and hath too peaceable dominion with them; iniquity cannot be ſaid to prevail againſt them, but rather it prevails with them; it goes well enough with them, before and after their ſinning. But, Oh! ſays David and the believer, Iniquity prevails againſt me; it is againſt my heart, againſt my will, againſt my deſire, againſt my deſign, againſt my reſolution, againſt my hope, againſt my faith, againſt my tears, againſt my prayers.

6. If you be ſoldiers on your march to the heavenly Canaan, then I would aſk, Whether or not you find the power of the glorious Captain as neceſſary for your deliverance, upon every new aſſault of the enemy, as ever you found it before? For true Iſraelites, fighting their way to heaven, find more and more evidences of their own utter inſufficiency, and more and more need of grace's all-ſufficiency. Oh! the nations are as ſtrong as ever, and the need of powerful ſuccours and auxiliaries from heaven as great as ever. This is plain alſo from the text; it is the Lord thy God that begins the battle; and the Lord thy God that carries on the extirpation of the Canaanites. Do you find, then, as much need of his power to excite grace, as to work it at firſt; as much need of his fencing the rear, as of his leading the van?—This mark excludes all theſe that have a power in their own hand, and never came out of themſelves, both for righteouſneſs and ſtrength, in to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt: but it is encouraging to theſe who are ſaying, in the exerciſe of faith, I will go in the ſtrength of the Lord, making mention of his righteouſneſs, and his only. O to be clothed with his righteouſneſs, and girded with his ſtrength, is the great deſire of all true Iſraelites!

7. If you be ſoldiers on march to the heavenly Canaan, you may try it by this, you will not only be perfectly at a point in this matter, that the battle is the Lord's, and that without him you cannot give one fair ſtroke to the enemy; but alſo you will find to your experience, that, by little and little, the conqueſt is carried on, and the Canaanites driven out; and that help and aſſiſtance comes from heaven by degrees, as the ſovereign General is pleaſed to order: though you get not all the great things you would be at, yet by little things you are carried through. Can you not ſay, believer, that ſuch a place was a little BOCHIM, where you you got leave to weep out your heart before the Lord, becauſe of the prevalency of ſin; and ſuch a place was a little BETHEL, a houſe of God, where you had ſuch a meaſure of divine preſence, as ſtrengthened you againſt the enemy; ſuch another place was a little PENIEL, where you ſay God face to face, as it were, and a ſight of the Captain of ſalvation gave the nations of hell a daſh? And though, in the interval, your enemies and luſts riſe up again in fury, and rage againſt you, like to devour your ſoul, to devour your graces, to devour your comforts, and to devour your peace; yet there comes another little recruit from heaven, that gives you a new occaſion to ſet up an EBENEZER, ſaying, Hitherto the Lord hath helped; and to ſing with the church, Pſal. cxxix. 1, 2. Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth, may Iſrael now ſay; many a time have they afflicted me from my youth, yet have they not prevailed againſt me. Many a time have theſe Canaanites vexed me, and foiled me, yet they have not prevailed to my utter overthrow; for ſtill, when I was brought to an extremity, the Lord was a little ſanctuary to me, and communicate his grace by little and little to me, in a ſuitableneſs to my need; allowing me here a little crumb of comfort, when I was like to faint in battle; and there a little crumb of courage, when I was like to yield; and at another time a little crumb of wonderful deliverance out of the hands of mine enemies, after I was led captive by them. Why, what is the meaning of all this? It is the Lord thy God driving out theſe nations before thee, by little and little.

Uſe 4. The fourth and laſt uſe ſhall be in a ſhort addreſs to two ſorts of perſons here. 1. To theſe that are at peace with the nations that ſtand betwixt them and the poſſeſſion of the heavenly Canaan, and ſo are at war with heaven. 2. To theſe that are making war with the nations, and before whom the Lord hath begun to drive out the nations by little and little.

1*ſt*, To you that are at peace with the nations of hell, at peace with the devil, at peace with your luſts; I would ſpeak a word to you, 1. By way of conviction. 2. By way of counſel.

1. For your conviction. Is it not evident, that the moſt part are at peace with hell, being ignorant of the ſin-mortifying principles of the goſpel, being ſlighters of the means of converſion, living in ſecurity under all the calls of heaven by the word and the rod, and living in enmity againſt the power of godlineſs, indulging themſelves in many known ſins, and knowing no reſtraint from ſinning, taken from its nature, but from its conſequents only. Are there not many here, that have nations of luſts ſwarming in their heart, yet were never convinced of, or made to know the plagues of their own heart? Some will ſay they have a good heart to God, even though their mouth be filled either with curſing, lying, ſwearing, and ſlandering; or elſe with nothing but vain, frothy, carnal, worldly diſcourſe. What! ſhall we think you have a clean heart, when you have ſuch a foul mouth? Does not Chriſt ſay, Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth ſpeaketh? When a man ſees abundance of ſmoke coming out at the top a chimney, he may ſay, For certain, that is a ſign of much fire in the hearth: ſo, when there is nothing but vain, worldly words in the mouth; we may ſay, There is much vanity and corruption in the heart. Carnal lips that are not ſhaped for any ſpiritual diſcourſe, except in hypocriſy and deceit, diſcover a carnal heart. Oh! how many here are willing ſlaves to the nations, the Canaanites, the luſts of the fleſh! Of all ſlaves, they are in the worſt caſe that are ſold; of theſe that are ſold, they are in the worſt caſe that are put in priſon; of theſe that are in priſon, they are in the worſt caſe that are bound and chained in priſon: yet ſuch ſlaves to ſin and luſts are all here by nature, ſhut up in cloſe priſon, bound and chained there; ſhut up under unbelief: and unbelief is ſuch a cruel jailor, that, while you are ſhut up under it, it will not ſo much as ſuffer you to lift up your head, or to look up to heaven for deliverance. Oh! how miſerable is this thraldom that you are under! For theſe nations that rule in you, and over you, and under which you are bearing arms againſt the God of heaven, will, at laſt, deſtroy you for ever, if they be not deſtroyed in time; if they be not put out of your heart, they will keep you out of heaven; yea, if they be not driven out of your heart, they will drive you to hell. If that legion of luſts, that you are in league with, be not caſt out of your heart, by the power of that glorious Captain of ſalvation, that caſt out a legion of devils out of one man; then you muſt lay your account with it, that, like the ſwine poſſeſſed of the devil, you will be driven down into the ſea of God's everlaſting wrath, and drowned in perdition. But then,

2. I would offer you a word of counſel. O will you break league with theſe curſed Canaanites, and come and take on with our glorious Captain of ſalvation, that can drive them out before you? O ſinner! man, woman; young and old; you that have been a ſlave to the devil all your days, a ſlave to the numerous nation of luſts, that, as ſure as God lives, will keep you out of heaven, and drive you to hell, if they be not driven out; will you come and take on with our glorious Lord Jeſus, whoſe office and work, as a Redeemer, is to force out the nations before you? Our Captain-general hath ſent us, as officers under him, to cry in the public meetings and aſſemblies of this ſort, ſaying, Whoſoever will, let him come, and take on to be a ſoldier under the KING of kings, and LORD of lords, againſt the king of hell and the nations of luſts, that would keep you out of heaven: and as we are warranted to declare them curſed with bitter curſes, that will not join in this war, according to what is ſaid of Meroz, Judg. v. 23. Curſe ye Meroz, curſe ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, becauſe they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord, againſt the mighty: ſo we are warranted to declare to ſinners, that there are here the greateſt encouragements that ever were offered to ſoldiers, to excite you to take on with him. Why, he offers you money to bear all your charges; I counſel you to buy of me gold, tried gold; he offers to take off your filthy garments, and to clothe you with change of raiment, the king's livery; yea, he offers you a coat of meal, that will defend you againſt the ſhot of death, and the ſhot of devils; the robe of his own righteouſneſs, a garment of ſalvation: he offers you further, that, if you be wounded in the war, he will give you a balm to heal your wound, the balm of his own blood: yea, if you take on with him, he offers offers to do all your works in you and for you; yea to fight all your battles, to drive out all the nations before you, and then to crown you as a conqueror; yea, and more than a conqueror, even though you have done nothing of yourself. He offers to give you all the armour you need for the war: do you need the sword, the breast-plate, the helmet, the shield, mentioned, Eph. vi. He himself is the great magazine of all the military provision; and therefore, if you take on with him, you shall want for nothing that is necessary for carrying on the war to a complete victory. O come and take on with him for wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; take on with him for armour, and strength, and victory, and all.

But, say you, what mean you by taking on with him? I know not how to take on with him. Why, Sirs, to take on with him, is to believe in him. But what am I to believe, say you, that I may take on with him?

(1.) You are to believe, that he is speaking to you, and inviting you to take on with him; even you man, you woman. Let none here say that there was not a word spoken to them at Carnock: nay, I take you all to witness, that have ears to hear, that the Lord is, by the poor mortal that is here preaching, speaking to every one of you, and saying, To you, O man, do I call, and my voice is to the sons of men; and he is entreating you to take on with him. Believe that he is speaking to you, and that this gospel-offer is to you.

(2.) You are to believe that you cannot believe, This were one good step towards faith, to believe that you are an unbeliever, and shut up in unbelief as in a prison, which none can open but the Captain of salvation. And therefore,

(3.) You are to believe in him for grace to believe in him, or to come to him for grace to come to him, and to take on with him for faith, as well as for other things, because he alone is the Author of faith. He never called any to bear the expence of one jot, from the beginning to the end of the war, out of their own pocket; and much less the expence of this great thing we call believing, which is the effect of the exceeding greatness of his almighty power. And then, having believed these things,

(4.) You are to believe his word, that he will not fail you in a jot of what he is offering to you. Take his word for it that he will do as he hath said unto you; and trust him that speaks to you by us. To take on with him by faith, is to take his word, who is truth itself, for your security; and lay the stress of the whole war upon him, saying, Lord, art thou calling me, even me, that have been a slave to the devil and nations of lusts? Art thou calling me to take on with thee? Content, Lord; Come thou and reign over us, as the trees said, in Jotham's parable, Judges ix. 10. Come thou and reign over me, and be thou my glorious Captain, to fight for me, and to slay all the nations of lusts in my heart. And if you, indeed, take on with him in this manner, he will do as he hath said; he will put out these nations before you by little and little.—May the Lord back his call with power.

2*dly*, To you that are believers, on the field of battle, making war with the nations, the spiritual Canaanites; and before whom the Lord hath begun to drive them out by little and little: I should offer you, 1. A word of comfort. 2. Of counsel.

[1.] For comfort. O believer, though the nations be greater and mightier than you, yet the Lord hath engaged to drive them out; there is a power in Christ, the believer's Head and Husband, that will, in process of time, bring every power contrary to him in subjection; it is in Christ that believers shall be more than conquerors. It is very grievous to the believer to feel the assaults of sin, such as that of pride, filthiness, covetousness, unbelief, atheism, and enmity: but it is the privilege of the believer, that he hath such things that he may be humbled, not that he may be conquered and destroyed thereby. You know, a snake may be so handled, by taking out his sting and teeth, that it cannot hurt us, though it touch us; yet we abhor it for the nature of it, and are afraid to have it come near to us: even so, sin is in such a manner handled by our Lord Jesus Christ, that it cannot hurt the believer in Christ; hence the believer is many times more afraid than hurt: yet it is very becoming the true believer to hate sin from the very nature of it, and stand at a distance from it. Mean time, you have the greatest encouragement in the world to fight against the nations of enemies, the nations of lusts; for the battle is the Lord's, he stands engaged to put out the nations, Deut. vii. 17, 18. Were there an uncertainty of the victory, you might be discouraged and loath to undertake such a warfare. But now, when the Lord hath assured you of the victory, and that you have his blood, his Spirit, his faithful promise for it, there is no more ground of discouragement.

OBJECT. Oh! what comfort can I take, when I find the nations of enemies and lusts still living and lively; yea, strong, mighty, and prevalent, and even growing stronger and stronger upon my hand, instead of being subdued and destroyed?

ANSW. Perhaps it is so between battles, or single combats, that you have with your corruptions; but do you not find your Captain coming sometimes in to your assistance, and making up all that you lost, by his gracious, powerful, sanctifying, and comforting presence? And thus, do you not find even after sin's victory over you, which makes you judge the nations are increasing on your hand; do you not find, I say, your hatred of sin increased, your self-abhorrence increased, your dependence on the Lord for strength increased, your desire to be rid of sin increased, and your heart-longing for the final victory over the nations, and the full possession of Canaan? Why, what is this but the Lord your God putting out the nations before you by little and little? Mean time, during these battles, is it not ground of comfort,

(1.) That there is a sentence past in your favours against the nations, even a sentence of condemnation and destruction? and accordingly, sin is condemned in the flesh, Rom. viii. 3. And Satan is condemned to destruction; The God of peace will bruise Satan under your feet.

(2.) Is it not ground of comfort, that the sentence past against sin and Satan is executed in part? Your old man is crucified; the head of the serpent is bruised; For this cause was the Son of God manifested, to destroy the works of the devil; and, by death he hath destroyed him that had the power of death.

(3.) Is

(3.) Is it not ground of comfort, that the day of full and final execution is at hand, wherein he will take vengeance on the nations? For the day of vengeance is in mine heart; the year of my redeemed is come, Isa. lxiii. 4. the day of the Lord is at hand, wherein he will bring forth judgment into victory, and death shall be swallowed up in victory: Christ will reign till all his enemies become his footstool; to him every knee shall bow.

(4.) Is it not ground of comfort, that the remaining power of the nations in the interim shall never be able to break the relation that is betwixt your Captain-general and you, nor to cast you out of his covenant, out of his heart, nor out of his love? My covenant will I not break, says he; my loving-kindness will I not take away, Psal. lxxxix. 33, 34. He is still the Lord thy God; and, therefore, he will put out the nations before thee by little and little. I offer you,

[2.] A word of counsel. O believer, are you indeed engaged in battle against the nations? And has the Lord begun to drive them out before you? Then pursue thy victory, and fight out the good fight of faith, for the Lord thy God is he that does fight for thee; as the apostle says in a like case, Phil. ii. 12, 13. Work out the work of your salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure: Even so, fight out the battle against the nations; for, the Lord thy God will put them out, before thee, by little and little. And, since the battle is the Lord's, and your Captain goes before you to divide the spoil with the strong, go on courageously: and, that you may do so the more successfully, I shall branch forth this word of counsel in these particulars.

1. Put on the whole armour of God; and go not forth against the nations in your own strength, otherwise you will find them too hard for you; but, Go on in the strength of the Lord, making mention of his righteousness, and his only; being strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might; and strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus; having no confidence in the flesh, but always your confidence in, and dependence upon the Lord Jesus Christ, the Captain of salvation.

2. Search out the nations that are most invisible and hidden; for your greatest danger is from your most secret enemies: you wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, and spiritual wickednesses. And there are spiritual lusts not easily discerned: if these be neglected, and more open enemies only noticed, it is as if one should gaze upon the smoke, and neglect the fire that is within; or, as if one should gaze upon the ulcer, but never consider the corrupt humour within.

3. Having found out the enemy, and discerned where the strength of the nations lies, then set upon them, and endeavour, through grace, to bring them into a consumption, and that both by starving and storming of them.

(1.) By starving them. O starve them, and keep them from their food; Make no provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof. Beware of every thing that may contribute to strengthen the nations. Say not, A confederacy with them: do not spare them, nor let their strong holds stand: draw not up a league with them, nor border too near to them. It is said of Israel, The people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations. Keep not company with the wicked: be not too much conversant with the world; many bury themselves, by digging too deep there.

(2.) As by starving, so by storming the nations. You are to consume them; and you ought to storm them, by bringing them under the battering engines of the gospel, under the stroak of God's word, which is the sword of the Spirit; under the stroak of the blood of Christ; for, we overcome by the blood of the Lamb; and under the stroak of the Spirit of Christ; for, If you, through the Spirit, mortify the deeds of the body, you shall live.

4. Take all the advantages you can against the nations. Take advantage of the times and seasons, even when you are like to be overpowered with inward corruption, and under fear of falling one day by the hand of some strong lust; then get to the mighty power of Christ, and reinforce yourself and resist; and, in resisting, believe you shall overcome: remembering, for your encouragement, that the almighty Captain stands within sight, when you are fighting in the valley; and he waits but a call from you, when distrest in the battle; and he will come for your rescue. Jehoshaphat cried in the midst of the battle, and was helped: how much more may you expect his aid in your spiritual combat?

5. Watch against the nations, and resist the first onset of the enemy. Corruptions are the natives, and they are not wholly destroyed: if therefore you do not watch, nature will turn to her old bias. Native and natural inclinations are very forcible: as, bend the bough of a tree downward, if you let it go, it will start up by and by; so, if you give up your watch, the nations will return, and resume their power. Particularly watch against, and resist the first motions of sin: if you stop not the current of a wicked motion, it will soon land in a wicked action; for, When lust hath conceived, it brings forth sin, James i. 15. Great evils arise from small beginnings: one spoonful of water will quench that fire, which afterwards whole buckets cannot abate; therefore it is a good rule, Principiis obsta, "Resist the beginnings of sin."

6. Put the nations in the hand of the Captain, that he may destroy them; and endeavour so to do, in the daily exercise of faith and prayer. O seek to the Lord Jesus, that he would avenge you of these Philistines; as in the parable of the unjust judge, Luke xviii. 1,—8. The parable was put forth for this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint. The judge there mentioned was one that feared not God, nor regarded man: a widow comes to him saying, Avenge me of mine adversary; and through her importunity she prevailed with him: And shall not God avenge his elect, that cry day and night to him; though he bear long, yet he will avenge them speedily. Therefore, go to a God in Christ, and cry, Lord, avenge me of my lusts, avenge me of my pride, avenge me of my unbelief, avenge me of my carnality, avenge me of mine enemies.

7. After all, rest not satisfied with any small victory obtained over the nations: sit not down, as if you had no more ado; for the nations are not all dead and destroyed at once; you will have them to fight with, as long as you are on this side of heaven: enemies will up again; and, therefore, you must up again, and press forward to a complete victory. As the body of sin and death remains while you are here; so, whatever particular lust you have been troubled with, you cannot expect a full and final victory while here, even though it hath been a mortified mortified luſt, a ſubdued luſt. No doubt, Peter got his feet upon the neck of his ſin of denying his Maſter, when he went out and wept bitterly after Chriſt looked to him; yet even that ſame corruption afterwards did ſtir in him, by a partial denying of his Maſter, though not in the ſame degree; as when Paul withſtood him to the face, Gal. ii. 12. A particular corruption may, through grace, be ſubdued, and it may ceaſe to ſtir ſo violently for a time; yet you cannot ſay that it is wholly killed; yea, it may afterwards riſe up as violently as ever. A luſt, that lay long dead, may revive again; and therefore you little need to be ſecure, but much need to be ſober and watchful, and ſtill going on in the warfare, ſtill depending on the Lord for new ſupplies of ſtrength againſt new aſſaults. After one victory obtained, make ready for battle immediately; when ſomething is done, look to the Lord to do more: after one ſtroak, ſeek another to be given; for it is by little and little the victory is obtained. Think not ſtrange, therefore, though the nations rally their forces again and again, and be not diſcouraged thereupon, but learn a daily, momentany, cloſe, and conſtant dependence upon the Captain of ſalvation, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that through him you may do valiantly. It is he that girdeth you with ſtrength, and ſubdues the nations under you.

8. In order to purſue the nations to death, purſue the claim you have to the victory over them, in the uſe of all appointed means, with an entire dependence upon the Lord; not depending upon means; nay, nor yet depending upon ſenſible manifeſtations, nor relying even upon the graces of the Spirit, but upon the God of all grace; pleading your right and claim, by virtue of the divine promiſe, ſaying, Lord, haſt thou not interpoſed thy faithfulneſs, thy word, thy oath? and is not thy promiſe ſealed; ſealed by the blood of Chriſt, ſealed in the ſacrament of the ſupper? Haſt thou not ſaid, Solomon ſhall reign? though now, behold, Adonijah uſurps the throne: Haſt thou not ſaid, Grace ſhall reign, and ſin ſhall not have the dominion? Behold how it uſurps. Well, put him to his word, and purſue your claim. Surely the Lord will not deny himſelf; nay, JEHOVAH-JIREH, In the mount of the Lord it ſhall be ſeen: though you have no ſtrength, no might againſt this great multitude; yet, let your eyes be toward him, who is mightier than the noiſe of many waters, and who hath wrapt in your intereſt with his own glory, his own faithfulneſs, and truth. Let your difficulties be never ſo great, your enemies never ſo many, and their power never ſo invincible; it is not you they have to do with, but Chriſt: and, can any thing be too hard for him? Wait on thy God continually, who hath here promiſed to accompliſh the warfare gradually: The Lord thy God will put out theſe nations, before thee, by little and little.

SERMON XLV,-L.

The STRENGTH of SIN, and how the Law is the Strength thereof, opened up and unfolded *.

1 COR. xv. 56.——The ſtrength of ſin is the law.

PERHAPS there was never a generation wherein the ſtrength and dominion of ſin did more diſcover itſelf, in the life and converſation of the people, than in this preſent age. Such is the mighty power thereof, that as all the children of men are ſlaves, ſo moſt of the children of God are captives to it. How are the thoughts, words, and actions of men and women, as ſo many ſlaves, captives, and drudges to ſin? But, for as ſtrong as it is, the ſtrength of it is little ſeen, and few know where the ſtrength of it lies. As the Philiſtines did not know that the ſtrength of Samſon lay in his hair, or in the locks of his head, which whenever it was ſhaved his ſtrength was gone; ſo the world little know this myſtery, that the ſtrength of ſin is the law, inſomuch, that till the ſinner be ſhaved, as it were, with the ſharp razor of the Spirit of Chriſt, ſo as to be cut off from the law, and united to Chriſt, the end of the law, the ſtrength of ſin remains, and the rule of it.

That I may come to the purpoſe I deſign, you may only notice, that as the apoſtle in the preceding part of the chapter, is treating the great doctrine of the reſurrection of the dead, proving it from the reſurrection of Chriſt, anſwering objections againſt this truth, and ſhewing what a remarkable change will be made upon the bodies of believers, both theſe that are dead, and theſe that ſhall be living at the ſound of the laſt trumpet: ſo, in the context here, he is diſcovering the complete conqueſt that then the ſaints will obtain over death and the grave, and that then will be accompliſhed what the prophet Hoſea ſays, chap. xiii. 14. Death ſhall be ſwallowed up in victory; I will ranſom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy deſtruction. What the prophets declare were to have their initial accompliſhment in the New-Teſtament days, the apoſtles declare are to have their full and conſummate accompliſhment at the day of judgment; yet, ſo ſweet and ſatisfying is the begun accompliſhment thereof in Chriſt Jeſus, that the apoſtle, for himſelf, and in name of all believers in Chriſt, ſings their EPINIKION, their ſong of triumph and

* This ſubject appears to have been handled in ſix ſermons, preached on ſacramental occaſions. The firſt two at the ſacrament of Kinglaſſy, July 21*ſt*. The next two at Orwel, Auguſt 7*th*, 8*th*, 1727. The laſt two are an enlargement on the ſame ſubject; but when or where delivered is uncertain. It hath undergone three impreſſions.

victory, whereof these words are a part, saying, O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, the strength of sin is the law: but thanks to God, that giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Death had a sting, even power to hurt and kill; and the grave had a victory: but now where are they? In Christ they are spoiled and disarmed, so as they are not to be seen; where are they? And the day is coming, with respect to the saints, when not so much as the sign and vestige of death's power or the grave's victory will remain; where are they? The sting of death is sin: for sin gives power unto death, which would have no power to hurt, did not sin give venom to its darts: but Christ, by death, hath taken out this sting, made atonement for sin, and obtained remission: so that though death may hiss, it cannot hurt. The strength of sin is the law; for sin hath strength to condemn us, and strength to destroy us, from the law, and its curses, and threatenings: but Christ hath removed the curse of the law, by becoming a curse for us. Yea, the whole power and sanction of the first covenant, the law of works, was transferred upon Christ, and in him fulfilled and ended; so that sin is deprived of its strength and sting, by Christ's obedience unto death, even the death of the cross: therefore, though death may seize the believer in Christ, yet it can never sting him, nor hold him in its power: Thanks be to God, then, that giveth us the victory, says the apostle, through Jesus Christ. By faith the believer shares of his conquest and victory; the victory is given through Christ to them, yet they are stiled the overcomers: To him that overcomes, will I give to eat of the tree of life. Who are the overcomers? Even they to whom it is given of God through Jesus Christ. Christ hath obtained it, and gives it. As heaven, and eternal life, is the gift of God through Christ; so the the victory over sin, and death, and hell, and all enemies in the way to heaven, is the gift of God through Jesus Christ. Hence the apostle in the last verse, infers duty and service incumbent upon all believers; Therefore, beloved brethren, be ye stedfast and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; teaching us, that there is no gospel-service, without the faith of victory through Christ; no gospel-holiness, till a person, being in Christ, hath victory in him over sin, death, and the law, which is the strength of sin; then he is in case to abound in the work of the Lord, from a principle of gratitude; knowing that his labour shall not be in vain in the Lord. The believer hath in view the recompence of reward; and this is the reward of grace, that as in the Lord he hath victory, in the Lord he hath righteousness, in the Lord he hath strength for work and warfare; so in the Lord his work and warfare will be crowned: he shall not obtain the crown, no more than the victory, by his own work and labour, nor because he or his works are worthy, but because of Christ, in whom he is worthy, and hath by his dying obtained the victory and the crown both; only his work of faith, and labour of love, is an evidence of his union to Christ, in whom he is blessed with grace and glory. Therefore he knows, according to the measure of his faith, that his labour is not in vain in the Lord.

But now, the verse where my text lies, seems to be an explication of the first part of the apostle's song; he had said, O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? But if any should ask, What mean you, Paul, by the sting of death? Why, says he, the sting of death is sin; so that, take away sin, and then death hath no sting, no strength to hurt or harm us. Well, but may it be said, Where lies the strength of sin? and whence hath it such strength? The answer is, The strength of sin is the law; as sin is the strength of death, so the law is the strength of sin. Sin puts arms in the hand of death, and the law puts arms in the hand of sin: The strength of sin is the law.

Where you may notice these three things following.

1. The grand evil that ruins all mankind, here spoken of, namely, SIN; this is that which makes us need a Saviour, whose name is JESUS, because he saves his people from their sin. The apostle speaks not here of any transient act of sin, but even of the root and fountain of sin; the corruption and depravation of nature, together with the lusts and affections of the flesh.

2. You have here the quality of sin; STRENGTH is ascribed to it. There are several attributes this monster hath, particularly these two, guilt and filth; but STRENGTH is the compend of all its other qualities. It hath strength to defile, and strength to destroy; strength to kill, and strength to damn. The strength of sin makes us stand in need of a strong Saviour, and of that help which is laid upon One that is mighty.

3. You have here the accidental source or rise of the strength of sin, namely, the LAW; the law of works, commanding obedience, as the condition of eternal life, and discharging disobedience on pain of eternal death. The moral law, under the form of a covenant of works, is the law the apostle here speaks of: and this law, as it is violated and broken by our apostacy and rebellion against God; for, as this law is become so weak through the flesh, Rom. viii. 3. that it cannot justify nor sanctify a sinner, nor save a breaker of it; so it is become powerful only to condemn, and powerful to damn the sinner; and this it does, by giving sin a power to ruin, condemn, and destroy the sinner. As sin, in a manner, took justifying strength from the law, so the law gives condemning strength to sin, leaving the sinner under its curse: and, because sin violated the holy command of the law, the law gives sin a commanding power over the sinner, and makes sin to rise, and rage, and reign over the sinner, so as it commands him to serve like a drudge and a slave. This the law does, both by virtue of its curse, and by virtue of its command; the power of sin being a part of the curse of the law, and consequence of the command. Not that the holy, just, and good law of God, that commands holiness, can possibly command sin or unholiness; but by reason of our corruption, which, like water, the more it is dammed up, the more it swells. The command of holiness excites and stirs up the rule and command of sin over us; which bears no more reflection upon the holiness of the law, than the stink of a dunghill, raised and excited by the heat of the sun, reflects any indignity upon, or in the least stains the purity of the beams thereof. The more pure and refulgent the beams of the sun are, the more influence it hath for stirring up the filthy vapours of the dunghill; so, the more holy that the law is, the more does it excite excite the filthy ſteams, and raiſe and exaſperate the impurity of corruption. But in what reſpect the law is the ſtrength of ſin, may be ſhewed more at large in the ſequel.

Having offered this ſhort view of the words, there are two doctrines might be treated from them.

I. That ſin is a very ſtrong and powerful thing.

II. That the ſtrength of ſin is the law: Or thus, That the law of works is the ſtrength of ſin to a ſinner that hath violated and broken it.

DOCT. I. That ſin is a very ſtrong and powerful thing.

In treating of which, I would eſſay to do the following things.

I. Speak a little of the nature of ſin; and ſhow what it is.
II. I would enquire into the ſtrength of ſin, in the qualities and degrees of its ſtrength.
III. I would ſhew how the ſtrength of ſin diſcovers itſelf.
IV. Whence the ſtrength of ſin comes, and where it lies.
V. Draw ſome inferences from this for application.

I intend, through divine aid, to illuſtrate both theſe propoſitions; but ſhall confine myſelf to the firſt at this time. If we get right views of the ſtrength of ſin, it will commend the ſtrength of a Savioar to us.

I. I propoſe to ſpeak a little concerning the nature of ſin. I ſhall confine myſelf to theſe two accounts of it, namely, (1.) That it is a tranſgreſſion of the law, 1 John iii. 4. (2.) That it is an oppoſition to God the Lawgiver, and enmity againſt God, Rom. viii. 7.

1. Conſider it as it is a tranſgreſſion of the law; and all mankind are tranſgreſſors from the womb, ever ſince Adam and Eve began the rebellion: we daily tranſgreſs it, in thought, word, and deed. It is ſtrange to conſider how many poor ignorant ſinners expect to be juſtified by that law which they are daily tranſgreſſing; which declares, that they know not themſelves to be ſinners and tranſgreſſors thereof. They ſay they are ſinners, but they do not believe what they ſay; or, if they believe they are ſinners, they do not believe they are ſuch ſinners, but that the law may bear with them; for they cannot ſee ſuch depravity in their actions, as that the law ſhould condemn them; and when once they imagine, that the law will not condemn them, they fancy next, that the law will juſtify them. Some, whoſe lives and actions are not evidently groſs and profane, may be filled with fooliſh ignorant thoughts of this ſort, that the law hath little to ſay againſt them; yea, that they have done all theſe things from their youth up. O dreadful arrogance and ignorance, for a brat of hell to imagine that he hath not tranſgreſſed the law by any wicked deed!

But if any be ſo groſly ignorant, as to juſtify their deeds as being conform to the law; let them ſet the law of God, and even their words in oppoſition to each other, and ſee if they have tranſgreſſed the law: for, though in many things we offend all; yet, if any man offend not in word, the ſame is a perfect man, ſays the apoſtle, James iii. 2. But where is there even ſuch perfection as this among the children of men, if you conſider how every command of the law is broken by the ordinary ſpeech of men?—Why, every word that ſavours of atheiſm, unbelief, and contempt of God, and carnal confidence, is a breach of the firſt command.—Every word that ſavours of diſreſpect to divine ordinances, whether preaching, praying, reading, meditating, communicating, and the like, is a breach of the ſecond command.—Every word that tends to the abuſing of God's name, by raſh ſwearing, minched oaths, carnal praying, formal devotion, and hypocritical proteſtations and profeſſion, is a breach of the third command.—Every idle and unprofitable word on week-days, and eſpecially on Sabbath-days, whereon we are in a peculiar manner called to abſtain from our own words, is a breach of the fourth command.—Every diſreſpectful and diſhonourable word of ſuperiors, inferiors, or equals, and eſpecially of parents and relations, whether natural, civil, or ſpiritual, is a breach of the fifth command.—Every malicious, invective, bitter, offenſive, and killing word, that cuts like a ſword, is a breach of the ſixth command.—Every immodeſt, unchaſte, ſenſual, and laſcivious word, that ſavours of a vile, polluted mind, is a breach of the ſeventh command.—Every cheating word, as in buying and ſelling, when you vilify too much what you buy, and magnify too much what you ſell, is a breach of the eighth command.—Every railing word, every reproachful, backbiting, lying, and falſe accuſation, whether to, or of your neighbours, is a breach of the ninth command.—And, finally, every murmuring and fretful word, that ſavours of diſcontent, grudging, and envy, is a breach of the tenth command.

You then that hope for juſtification by the works of the law, if you be not conſcious of your ill works, what ſay you of your words? If in word you have offended, know, that by your words you ſhall be condemned. Why, ſay you, Who are they that want their faults of that ſort? But, whatever words eſcape me, yet, I hope, I have a good heart to God. Alas, man! will you examine that heart of yours with the good law of God, and ſee if it be a good heart or not; and if it be found a tranſgreſſor of the law, then the fountain is defiled, and never call it good again. If you be chargeable with any of theſe tranſgreſſions of the law, that I have named, whether in your works or words, know, that the heart is the very fountain of theſe evil words and actions; for, out of the heart they proceed, Mat. xv. 19.; and if the fruit be evil, the root cannot be good: if the ſtreams be bitter, the fountain cannot be ſweet. The ſmoke of vain words and evil actions, that comes out at the chimney of your daily converſation, declares that there is a fire within doors, a furnace of corruption in the heart.

But more particularly, will you ſet your heart and the law together a little, and ſee what it is.—Compare your heart with the firſt command, and you will find it to be nothing but a throne of iniquity, a receptacle of falſe gods, where a thouſand other gods are worſhipped.—Compare it with the ſecond command, and then you will ſee it to be nothing but a chamber of imagery, filled with ſo many images, and miſrepreſentations of God.—Compare it with the third command, and you will find nothing elſe but a bench of blaſphemy, iſſuing forth forth indignities and affronts to the name of God.—Compare it with the fourth command, and you will find it to be nothing but a dunghill of profanity, a play-houſe of idleneſs, and a ſacrilegious waſter of holy time.—Compare it with the fifth command, and you will ſee it to be nothing but a palace of pride, and a tower of ſelf-exaltation, ſetting yourſelf above all others.—Compare it with the ſixth command, and here it will be found to be nothing but the devil's ſhambles, and a ſlaughter-houſe of malice and murder; for, he that hates his brother in his heart, is a murderer.—Compare your heart with the ſeventh command, and you will find it nothing but a cage of unclean birds, unclean thoughts, vile affections.—Compare it with the eighth command, and then you will ſee it to be nothing but a tabernacle of robbers, though your hand ſhould be free of theft and robbery; but if you had ſtollen all that your heart went after; many a horſe and cow hath it ſtollen; yea, many a fine houſe and yard hath your heart robbed your neighbour of.—Compare it with the ninth command, and you will find it to be nothing but a fountain of calumny, either inventing ill tales of your neighbour, or exaggerating and magnifying any falſe report, or tickled, with and glad of any occaſion to caſt a blot upon his name.—Compare your heart with the tenth command, and you will find it alſo to be nothing but a temple of idolatry; for, covetouſneſs is idolatry, ſays the apoſtle. As many objects as the covetous heart purſues after, ſo many idols does it fall down before.——And now, tell me, after all, Is that a good heart? Nay, alas! every imagination of it is evil, and evil continually; yea, it is deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked.

Thus ſin is a tranſgreſſion of the law, whether in heart, ſpeech, or behaviour; and thus we are all tranſgreſſors: yea, though we could free ourſelves of actual ſins, which is impoſſible, and ſay that we are clean in thought, word, and action; yet as we have ſinned in Adam, Rom. v. 12.; ſo our very natures are ſinful and corrupt, and deſtitute of conformity to the law; as void of righteouſneſs, as Chriſt was free of ſin; and altogether filthy, as Chriſt is altogether lovely. The law requires holineſs of nature, heart, and way, and curſes every one that continues not in all things required therein, Gal. iii. 10. Why then, the meaning of that word to a ſinner, If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments, is as much as to ſay, O ſinner, you have forfeit eternal life by your not keeping the commandment, and thou art doomed to eternal death, which, as ſure as God lives, will be your everlaſting lot, if the law get not a better keeper than you in your room and ſtead: the reaſon then, why I declare you tranſgreſſors of the law, is, that I may recommend Chriſt the more to you as the end of the law for righteouſneſs. Sin is a tranſgreſſion of the law.

2. Conſider it as it is an oppoſition to God, the Law-giver: it is called enmity againſt God. Some may have a notion of ſin, that it is a tranſgreſſion of God's law, and yet not a due ſenſe of ſin in the intrinſical evil of it, as it is an oppoſition to God's nature: as every actual ſin, whether of omiſſion or commiſſion, is a walking contrary to God, Lev. xxvi. 27.; ſo ſin, in its nature, is a contrariety to God's nature, and a deſpiſing of him, as well as diſpleaſing to him, 1 Sam. ii. 30.: yea, nothing is ſo oppoſite to God as ſin. God is wiſdom, ſin is folly; God is holineſs, ſin filthineſs; God is juſtice, ſin is iniquity; God is goodneſs itſelf, ſin is badneſs itſelf; God is faithfulneſs, ſin is treachery; God is light, ſin is darkneſs; God is life, ſin is death; God is beauty, ſin is deformity; God is majeſty, ſin is baſeneſs; God is love, ſin is enmity. Sin is ſo oppoſite to God, that if the leaſt drop of it ſhould get into his nature, he would ceaſe to be God. The wicked think, becauſe God is patient and long-ſuffering, therefore he approves of their ſin, and is of the ſame judgment with themſelves; Becauſe I held my peace, thou thoughteſt that I was altogether like thyſelf; but I will reprove thee, and ſet thine iniquities in order before thee, Pſal. l. 21. Know, when you have any ſuch thoughts of God as this, you do blaſpheme God; for, if God did approve of your ſin, he would ceaſe to be God, he would be God no longer: why ſo, think you? Even becauſe then God would not be infinitely holy: now, holineſs is his being; therefore, if he ſhould ceaſe to be infinitely holy, he would ceaſe to be God: ſo oppoſite is ſin to God, that if he did not hate ſin as much as he does, he would ceaſe to be God. If his hatred of ſin were leſs than it is, then he would not be infinitely holy; and infinite holineſs muſt needs have infinite hatred againſt ſin. This is the very thing that makes ſin to be an infinite evil, objectively conſidered: and whatever ſome may think of ſin, ſure we cannot ſpeak enough of the evil of it. You that have but light thoughts of ſin, you have light and ſlight thoughts of God; and you that have light thoughts of ſin, have light thoughts of Chriſt: it cannot be a light matter, that the eternal God gave his eternal Son to be a ſacrifice for, otherwiſe we had been eternal ſacrifices to his incenſed juſtice. The more diſhonourably that we ſpeak of ſin, the more honourably muſt we ſpeak of Chriſt, the Saviour that ſaves from it. Nothing expoſes ſin ſo much as the goſpel of Chriſt, declaring him to be the ſacrifice for ſin; which ſays, that the infinite hatred that God bears to ſin, is equal to the infinite love that he bears to his own Son, that his hatred to ſin is as deep, as his love to Chriſt is high; and that the depth of the one, and the height of the other, are both equally infinite. As Chriſt's death is the great ſacrifice for ſin, that we commemorate at this occaſion; ſo the view of the infinite value thereof, relates to the infinite evil of ſin. As there would be no need for Chriſt, as a Saviour, if there were no ſin; ſo there would be no need for ſuch a Saviour as he is, if ſin were not ſuch an evil as it is: and as the guilt of it cannot be expiated without ſuch an infinite ranſom as he gave; ſo the power of it cannot be deſtroyed but by ſuch an almighty arm as he hath, who alone is able to ſave to the uttermoſt.——But this leads me, having thus far touched the nature, to ſpeak next of the ſtrength of ſin.

II. The ſecond thing propoſed here is, to enquire a little into the ſtrength of ſin. The devil is called the ſtrong man, yet he is without; but ſin is the ſtrong man within; or, as the apoſtle calls it, the old man, Eph. iv. 22.; where he exhorts even the ſaints to put off the old man. Sin is no child, but a man: it is no young ſtripling, but an antient, ſtrong, old man; one that in grown in years, and carries power, command, mand, and authority with it in the beſt of God's children: and if it many times powerfully prevails in and over them, how powerfully does it reign in the reſt of the world? But, that the ſtrength of ſin may be farther opened, I ſhall lay before you, 1. Some of the qualities of the ſtrength of ſin. 2. The degrees of its ſtrength, poſitive, comparative, and ſuperlative.

1ſt, As to the quality of the ſtrength of ſin: what ſort of a ſtrength it hath, may appear in theſe ten qualities and bad properties of it.

1. Sin hath a commanding ſtrength, requiring obedience, and obliging its ſervants, to obey it in the luſts thereof, Rom. vi. 12, 16. Indeed, the commands of ſin are very unlawful and unreaſonable; yet it commands men to go, and they go; to come, and they come: and men obey the commands of ſin, by diſobeying the commands of God; for, when they do not what God injoins them, they do what ſin requires them.

2. Sin hath a condemning ſtrength: as ſin is a great commander, ſo the commanding power of ſin, when yielded to, delivers us over to the condemning power of ſin. Now, what this condemning power of ſin is, the apoſtle ſhews plainly, Jam. i. 15. Sin, when it is finiſhed, bringeth forth death. Sin is a faithleſs and ſhameleſs tyrant and tempter; for, at firſt it promiſes life and immunity from death, ſaying, like the devil that ſinned from the beginning, You ſhall not ſurely die: yet, no ſooner does a man obey the command of ſin, than it condemns him to death; The wages of ſin is death, Rom. vi. 23. Hence,

3. Sin hath a deceiving ſtrength. See Heb. iii. 13. Exhort one another while it is called to-day, leſt any of you be hardened through the deceitfulneſs of ſin: hence the luſts of the fleſh are called deceitful luſts, Eph. iv. 22. Sin powerfully deceives, by blinding the mind, corrupting the judgment, hardening the heart, alluring the affections, and perſuading the ſinner that there are ſome things forbidden in the law that are good and profitable, and may be done without any ſcruple of conſcience. Sometimes it will perſuade the greedy-minded worldly man, that is thinking how to enrich himſelf, that to do it by the ſubtilty of his pate, the forgery of his tongue, the villany of his hand, and by violent means, is an eaſier and ſweeter way than to toil and labour to inrich himſelf by honeſt means. Sometimes it will perſuade the ſinner, that there is no hell, no fear of puniſhment; or, if there be, yet he may afterwards repent and prevent it; and ſo he is emboldened to ſin, and deceived.

4. Sin hath a working ſtrength; When we were in the fleſh, the motions of ſin that were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death, Rom. vii. 5. And, ver. 8. Sin taking occaſion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiſcence. Sin then, and natural corruption, is no idle thing; no, by no means: it hath an effecting and working power, to bring forth evil motions. Hence, Jam. i. 15. When luſt is conceived, it bringeth forth ſin; and the fleſh is ſaid to luſt againſt the Spirit, Gal. v. 17. By reaſon of corruption, there is an inclination and a proneneſs of all the faculties of the ſoul to that which is evil.

5. Sin hath a conquering and captivating ſtrength: the children of God themſelves are many times brought into captivity to it; I ſee another law in my members, warring againſt the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of ſin, which is in my members, Rom. vii. 23. And if it ſometimes carry all before it, in a manner, where there is grace, how muſt it be where there is no grace, and where the man is under the law, and not under grace? Surely it carries them whitherſoever it pleaſes, except in ſo far as the man is under the reſtraint of providence.

6. Sin hath a defiling and polluting ſtrength; To the pure all things are pure; but to them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure, but even their mind and conſcience is defiled, Tit. i. 15. Sin defiles the mind, defiles the conſcience, defiles the will, defiles the affections, defiles the memory, defiles the imagination, defiles the thoughts, defiles the words, defiles the actions, and defiles and ſtains all the duties the man puts his hand to: it defiles his hearing, defiles his reading, defiles his praying, defiles his meditating, defiles his communicating, defiles his conferring with others; and, in a word, defiles ſoul and body, inward and outward man; yea, defiles and infects neighbours, friends, ſtrangers, and all that come near to it.

7. Sin hath a dementing ſtrength, to make people mad; They are mad upon idols, Jer. l. 38. Sin makes men nothing but mad fools, and beſide themſelves. We reckon him a fool that would drink a cup of poiſon: that is what the ſinner does. Is he not a fool that would deſpiſe his food? So do ſinners, that deſpiſe Chriſt and the goſpel. Is he not a mad fool, that would prefer a ſhadow to a ſubſtance? So are they, that prefer earth to heaven, and the things of time to theſe of eternity. Hence alſo,

8. Sin hath a transforming ſtrength, inſomuch, that when it comes to a height, it turns the ſoul to a devil. This muſt be a great ſtrength, that can turn a man to a devil. What are wicked men, in whom ſin reigns, and rages, and is come to a height, but like ſo many devils? It can even turn diſciples into devils; I have choſen you twelve, and one of you is a devil, John vi. 70. Yea, ſuch is the ſtrength of it, that it can, in ſome reſpect, turn a ſaint to a devil, at leaſt to act the part of one: hence Chriſt ſays to Peter, a ſaint, Get thee behind me, Satan. The godly man, out of a miſtaken affection to his Maſter, ſpoke the language of Satan: and therefore received this ſharp reprimand from his Lord. Ye need not wonder at this, for ſin turned angels to devils; the ſin that the angels did commit, preſently turned them to devils: therefore you need not think ſtrange, if ſin hath ſuch a tranſforming power, as to turn men and women into devils.

9. Sin hath a weakening and wounding ſtrength; it weakens the hands even of ſaints, that they cannot do what they would, Rom. vii. 15. How much more is the Chriſtleſs ſinner under an utter inability and incapacity to do any good thing? Nay, we are by nature without ſtrength; for the ſtrength of ſin hath taken away the ſtrength of man. So weak by reaſon of remaining ſin and corruption is the ſaint, that he is not ſufficient of himſelf to think any thing as of himſelf, but his ſufficiency is of God, 2 Cor. iii. 5. What then can a Chriſtleſs ſinner do? Let Arminians, who magnify the power of nature, tell. Sin hath weakened our hands; yea, and wounded us to death. For,

10. Sin hath killing and ſlaying ſtrength; Sin, taking occaſion by the commandment, deceived me, and by

by it ſlew me, Rom. vii. 11. Every ſin we commit, is a wound and a ſtab to our ſouls. And, Oh! my friends, we have wounded ourſelves with ſin, and rendered ourſelves liable to eternal death. Let us not remain and die in our wounds, without ſearching and ſeeking for recovery, relief, and redreſs. As the ſmart of a wound ſends us to the ſurgeon, may the ſmart of our ſins ſend us to the phyſician of ſouls, to Jeſus Chriſt: his precious blood alone can cure that deadly wound. The Son of man is lifted up, like the brazen ſerpent among the Iſraelites, that whoſoever look to him may be healed of the deadly wound. If you ſay, what warrant have I to look to him for healing? Why, you need no better than his own call and command, Look to me, and be ſaved. But, will I come ſpeed, and be ſucceſsful? Yea, Him that cometh to me, I will in no wiſe caſt out; even ſo, him that looks to me, I will not fail to ſave.

But, ſay you, my wounds are old and feſtered, and, I fear, incurable; I have had them now theſe many years: If I had come to Chriſt in time, perhaps, he might have cured me; but now, I think, he will not.

To this we reply; It is, indeed, very dangerous to fight many years under Satan's banner, where you ſhall get ſcar upon ſcar, and wound upon wound, to the hazarding of your ſoul's everlaſting death. The danger is exceeding great, and it will be a wonder of mercy, if Chriſt undertake the cure: but, ſince wonders of mercy are many times performed by him, therefore, be your wounds old or new, it is all a matter to him, and to the Father's infinite, boundleſs, bottomleſs mercy in him; and therefore, in a way of looking to the mercy-ſeat, ſprinkled with the blood of Chriſt, there is yet hope in Iſrael concerning you. If you ſay, Such is the ſtrength of ſin that you have been ſpeaking of, and the ſtrength of unbelief, that I cannot come, I cannot believe, I cannot turn to God in Chriſt. Why, Sirs, for what end do we point out the ſtrength of ſin to you, but that you may ſee your utter inability to ſave yourſelves, and that you may look to him, in whom almighty ſtrength is, for working faith, and drawing you? Therefore, O cry to him, and plead with him, that the right-hand of the Lord may do valiantly, in delivering you: but reſt not ſatisfied in ſaying you cannot come, while the matter is, you will not come; you have no ſtrength, becauſe you have no will. If you were willing, ſtrength is at hand; the day of your willingneſs is the day of his power: Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power. When the will is gained to Chriſt, the power of Chriſt hath been there, and will be more and more.—But, that you may ſee ſtill the more need of the ſtrength of Chriſt, take a further view of the ſtrength of ſin,

2*dly*, In the degrees of its ſtrength. And here you may conſider the ſtrength of ſin in a poſitive, comparative, and ſuperlative manner.

[1.] Poſitively, ſin hath a manifold ſtrength. If we look further into the ſcriptural account thereof, you will find, that,

1. Sin hath the ſtrength of a law; hence called the law of ſin and death, Rom. viii. 2. What this law requires, that men do by their commiſſions; and what this law forbids, that men forbear by their omiſſions. And what is required by this law? Even all acts of enmity againſt God. And, what is forbidden by it? Even all acts of duty towards God.

2. Sin has the ſtrength of a king. Where there is a law, there is a lawgiver, a legiſlator; and ſin is both law and lawgiver, for it reigns like a king: hence ſin is ſaid to reign, Rom. vi. 12. Let not ſin reign in your mortal body.

3. Sin hath the ſtrength of a conqueror. Some kings are weak and impotent, and cannot be ſtiled conquerors; but ſin is both a king and a conqueror, a victorious conqueror. All the myriads of fallen angels, that are now devils; and all the millions of fallen men that have been, and are in the world, are ſo many black trophies of the conqueſt thereof.

4. Sin hath the ſtrength of a tower and ſtrong hold: and hence the weapons of the goſpel-warfare are ſaid to be mighty, through God, to the pulling down theſe ſtrong holds, 2 Cor. x. 4, 5. And many a pull do they take before they be pulled wholly down, even though every pull that does any execution, muſt be a pull of omnipotency.

5. Sin hath the ſtrength of an army. Sin, even in believers, is compared to an army; they are ſaid to have in them a company of two armies, an army of luſts and an army of graces; and the former army ſometimes prevails againſt the latter. How ſtrong muſt the army of hell be in theſe that want grace, and have no army to oppoſe it?

6. Sin hath the ſtrength of a mountain, the advantage of the ground, even in the children of grace; their corruptions, like the Canaanites, have poſſeſſion, old poſſeſſion, and they keep the mountain: yea, ſin and corruption themſelves, are compared to high and ſtrong mountains, mountains of Bether, and hills of ſeparation. When Chriſt comes, he is ſaid to come ſkipping on the mountains, and leaping over the hills. Who art thou, O great mountain? Before our Zerubbabel thou ſhalt become a plain.

7. Sin hath the ſtrength of a priſon; it is a dark priſon, a cloſe priſon, a ſtrong priſon: and ſinners are called priſoners; and hence the work of a Saviour, is called the opening of the priſon, Iſa. lxi. 1.

8. Sin hath the ſtrength of a chain. Of all men, ſlaves are in the worſt circumſtances; of all ſlaves, priſoners are worſt; and of all priſoners, theſe that are in chains and fetters. Sinners are not only ſlaves, but priſoners; not only priſoners but in chains within their priſon, held in the bond of iniquity, ſhut up in unbelief, as in a priſon and chain: and ſo ſtrait is the chain, that their hands are in chains, they cannot work; their feet in chains, they cannot walk; their head chained down, that they cannot look up to God for mercy; their heart in chains, that they cannot ſo much as deſire the Lord Jeſus to looſe, and ſave, and deliver them. But then,

[2.] Conſider the ſtrength of ſin comparatively, and you will find it ſtronger than many ſtrong things.

1. Sin is ſtronger than all the children of men; for it hath made them all its captives; yea, and willing ſubjects. As it is ſaid of Chriſt, Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power; ſo, ſuch is the ſtrength of ſin, that we may ſay, it hath made millions of willing ſubjects and ſlaves to it in the day of its power; and the day of its helliſh power is always till a day of divine power come to conquer it.

2. Sin is ſtronger than affliction, no rod will drive it away; Iſa. xi. 13. The people turn not to him that ſmites them, neither do they ſeek the Lord: nay, they are apt to revolt more and more; Iſa. lvii. 17. For the iniquity of his covetouſneſs was I wroth, and ſmote him; yet he went on frowardly in the way of his heart.

3. As it is ſtronger than affliction, ſo it is ſtronger than conviction. Many go to hell with a boſom-full of convictions: and, does not ſin hurry people to run its errands by a multitude of wicked actions, and that over the belly of a thouſand convictions, conſcience flying in their face for omitting ſuch a duty, or committing ſuch a treſpaſs; yet ſin maſters it?

4. Sin is ſtronger than warnings, calls, and all external means; for it makes men ſlight all theſe as trifles, and ſtand out againſt them. Sin is not daunted with the threatenings of hell and wrath; Becauſe ſentence againſt an evil work is not ſpeedily executed, therefore the heart of the children of men is ſet in them to do evil. Neither can it be allured with the promiſes of the goſpel; Who hath believed our report? Again,

5. Sin is ſtronger than reſolutions, vows, and promiſes. Perhaps you have reſolved an hundred times, and ſolemnly vowed againſt ſuch ſins; but all your vows and reſolutions have been but like flax or tow before the fire of a new temptation. Your legal weapons of warfare againſt ſin are too weak; your leviathan luſts, they but laugh at the ſhaking of your ſpear. Again,

6. Sin is ſtronger than the world. The frowns and flatteries of the world are very ſtrong, very deceitful and enſnaring; but ſin in the heart is yet more ſtrong and deceitful: The heart is deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked. Sin is ſtronger than all the good examples and good education of the world, let be the evil things in it.

7. But no wonder that it be ſtronger than the world; for it is ſtronger than the devil, the God of this world. The devil may tempt, but he cannot compel, as ſin does; he may work upon the fancy, but he cannot conquer the will, as ſin does: ſin does all that work to his hand, and ſo his work is the more eaſy.

8. Sin is ſtronger than death and the grave. Death itſelf cannot kill ſin: death hath deſtroyed millions of millions of men and women, but it never deſtroyed one ſin. The power of death is very great, inſomuch that none among mere men could ever yet either withſtand the arreſt of death, nor break the priſon of death, which is the grave; yet it is eaſier to bring a dead body out of the grave, and to raiſe it to life, than to raiſe a dead ſoul out of the grave of ſin. The dead bodies will not reſiſt, as the ſoul dead in treſpaſſes will do. Yea,

9. Sin is ſtronger than hell; for all the flames of hell cannot burn out the droſs of ſin and corruption: all the torments of the damned will not make them ceaſe from blaſpheming the name of God, Rev. xvi. 9, 11.; where you may learn, that all the torments of hell will not make a man repent, but rather increaſe his impenitency, and augment his blaſphemy. What ſhall I ſay?

10. Sin is not only ſtronger than the ſufferings of hell, but ſtronger than the ſuburbs of heaven; I mean, it is ſtronger than real grace, which is the beginning of heaven. It is not only ſtronger than common grace, for common grace can hardly ſtand before a common temptation; but ſtronger than real habitual grace. Peter had a large ſtock of habitual grace, yet ſin was ſtronger, and brought him down to the ground by a baſe denial of his Lord: Paul had a great meaſure of true grace, and yet he was led captive to the law of ſin that was in his members, Rom. vii. 23. till a new recruit of auxiliary grace came from the Lord Jeſus to him. Sin is not only ſtronger than the common motions of the Spirit, which men through the power of ſin do reſiſt every day; but it is ſtronger than ſpecial influences formerly received, till new ſupplies of influences come from the glorious Head; ſtronger than former influences, till a new communication come; ſtronger than former communications, till once a new manifeſtation come; ſtronger than former manifeſtations, till new divine aids ſtill ſucceed. Thus it is ſtronger than the very ſuburbs of heaven; and you need not think ſtrange of this: for, what if I ſhall ſay, and prove, that ſin is ſtronger than perfect holineſs, and the formal immediate viſion of God in heaven, when it is poſſible for ſin to get in its hand there, as you know it did once among the glorious angels? Notwithſtanding of the ſtrong bulwark of perfect holineſs and formal viſion of God that they were bleſſed with, ſin brake in upon them, and brought down legions of them: it overcame them, ſo as now they are devils, under the rule and government of ſin. If ſin then brought devils and men from their excellency while they were in their beſt eſtate, you need not think ſtrange that we ſay ſin is ſtronger than that which may be called the ſuburbs of heaven; and therefore, little wonder that you find ſin to be ſo ſtrong, that it is much ſtronger than your prayers and tears: may be, for this you beſought the Lord thrice, as Paul did in a like caſe; yea, perhaps, three hundred times, and yet the bow of ſin abides in ſtrength. Alas! ſin is ſtronger than prayers and tears, ſtronger than ſighs and groans; it is ſtronger than afflictions and enlargements, ſtronger than ſermons and ſacraments. Oh! a greater ſtrength than all that, is requiſite for pulling down the ſtrength of ſin; and if you get a view of the ſtrength of ſin this day, ſo as to be led out of yourſelf, and out of your duties, and a little further than means and ordinances to the ſtrength of the Redeemer, it would be a good communion-ſeaſon.

[3.] Conſider the ſtrength of ſin ſuperlatively, or in the ſuperlative degree. I muſt tell you, ſin is not only a ſtrong thing, and ſtronger than many things that I have named, but alſo it is the ſtrongeſt thing in nature, the ſtrongeſt thing in hell, and the ſtrongeſt thing out of heaven. Particularly,

1. Sin is the ſtrongeſt weight and burden, the ſtrongeſt preſſure that ever was, the moſt burdenſom thing in the world; for it is a burden to the great God: No wonder then that the whole creation groan under the burden of it; for it is a burden to God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt: God is ſaid to be weary with it, ſpeaking after the manner of men; Ye have wearied me with your iniquities, Iſa. xliii. 24. It was a burden to Chriſt, that made him ſweat great drops of blood; it is a burden to the Holy Ghoſt, therefore called a vexing, grieving, and doing deſpite to him. What a burden will it be to men that die in it? And what a burden do the people of God find it? Nothing preſſes them down ſo much as this?

2. Sin

2. Sin is the ſtrongeſt ſting, the ſtrongeſt torment: it is the ſting of all ſtings, the ſting of ſorrow, the ſting of affliction, the ſting of deſertion, the ſting of death, as here in the context, The ſting of death is ſin. The pains of death are nothing to the ſting of death: the pain is tolerable, but the ſting is intolerable.

3. As it is the ſtrongeſt ſting, ſo it is the ſtrongeſt poiſon: if but a drop of that poiſon could poſſibly get into the nature of God, he would ceaſe to be, as I formerly noticed. What a mighty poiſon would it be, that if one drop of it were caſt into the ocean, it would poiſon the whole ocean? So it is here; and little wonder then, when ſome of this poiſon entered the human and angelical natures, it poiſoned them, and turned them to devils and monſters. There is no antidote againſt it, but the blood of Chriſt.

4. Sin is the ſtrongeſt plague and diſeaſe that ever was; you that know the plagues of your own hearts, will know this. Sin is the mother of all maladies and ſoul-diſeaſes, and is a compound of all. The worſt fever in the world is the inflamed luſts of the fleſh; the moſt dangerous tympany is the towering pride of the heart, and ſwelling of the vain mind; the moſt fearful flux is the bloody flux of ſin and corruption. O what divine power is requiſite for drying up this bloody iſſue! What dropſy is ſo deadly as that of drinking in iniquity as the ox drinketh water! What apoplexy and palſy is ſo direful as that by which people fall into miſchief, and hinders all ſpiritual breathing and motion! And what lethargy ſo lamentable as that of ſpiritual ſecurity and ſtupidity! The world is an hoſpital of diſeaſed ſouls. O if the Phyſician Jeſus Chriſt would come and heal!

5. Sin is the ſtrongeſt tyrant, and the moſt cruel. It hath a tyranny moſt lawleſs and intolerable. There is not any other oppreſſor but will give ſome reſt ſometimes, at leaſt to theſe that are under his ſlavery; as cruel Pharaoh gave the Iſraelites leave to refreſh themſelves with meat, and drink, and ſleep: but ſin gives no reſt to its miſerable captives and ſlaves; for, whether they eat, drink, or ſleep, it always exacts of them the ſervice of ſin. Auguſtine ſpeaking of the tyranny of ſin, even over the people of God, "Many times, ſays he, ſin does "that when they are ſleeping, that it cannot "do when they are waking." And if ſin be ſo tyrannical towards the children of God, how great is its tyranny towards its ſlaves! Surely there is no peace to the wicked, no reſt for them. Satan put it in Judas's heart to betray Jeſus; and behold, he would not let him reſt till he had performed that evil ſuggeſtion: the devil was ſo ſtrict with him, that he would not let him eat his meat, but haſtened him from the table to the treaſon. Thus Amnon, being incited by his own deviliſh luſts to defile his ſiſter Tamar, was ſo inwardly vexed, that his very fleſh wore away, and his mind had no reſt; he could not eat, or drink, or ſleep, till he had ſatisfied his luſt. What an intolerable tyrant is the man's inordinate affections, giving him no reſt day nor night! As it is ſaid of ſome, Prov. iv. 16. They ſleep not, except they have done miſchief; their ſleep is taken away, unleſs they cauſe ſome to fall.

6. Sin is the ſtrongeſt witchcraft; Gal. iii. 1. O fooliſh Galatians, who hath bewitched you, ſays the apoſtle, that you ſhould not obey the truth, before whoſe eyes Chriſt hath been evidently ſet forth crucified among you? People think it a terrible thing to hear that ſuch a body is bewitched or poſſeſt of the devil; but I muſt tell all you who will not receive the goſpel, you are bewitched; ſin hath bewitched you: and to be bodily poſſeſt with a legion of devils, is not ſo great a miſery, as to be under the power of one ſin. A man poſſeſt is an object of pity; thus Chriſt pitied the man whoſe name was Legion: but ſin makes a man the object of Chriſt's hatred. When God gave up Job's body to the devil, why did not the devil take poſſeſſion of him? Says one of the fathers, "Why, ſays he, becauſe, though "he had taken poſſeſſion of his body, and made "him fret and tear himſelf, it had not been "his ſin, but his affliction: whereas, to bring "him to ſin, and curſe God, was the great "thing he ſought after." Therefore, to be given up to ſin, is a greater evil than to be poſſeſt. Ye that are parents, and have children whom you have cauſe to fear that they are given up to the power of ſin, know, it is worſe than if they were poſſeſt with the devil; therefore, ſuch ſhould come more earneſtly to Chriſt with their children, than theſe in the goſpel that brought to Chriſt their children poſſeſt with devils: they are worſe than bewitched.

7. Sin is the ſtrongeſt waſter. Oh! how mightily does ſin waſte you! Sin waſtes your ſoul and body; it waſtes your time, and waſtes your talents; it waſtes your opportunities, it waſtes your ſtrength, and waſtes your ſpirit, and all to no purpoſe. Oh! how many waſted Sabbaths, ſermons, waſted communions, waſted meals, and waſted mercies, all waſted and abuſed by ſin!

8. Sin is the ſtrongeſt death. Sin itſelf is ſpiritual death, and ſpiritual death is the moſt ſtrong and powerful death; inaſmuch as the ſoul is ſuperior to the body, ſo much is ſpiritual death more powerful and terrible than temporal or bodily death; and inſomuch as the cauſe is more conſiderable than the effect, ſo much is ſpiritual death more powerful and dreadful than eternal death: I mean, ſin is more dreadful than hell itſelf, as it is a place of torment; for, as the ſtrongeſt cord that draws people to hell is ſin; ſo the ſtrongeſt flame to torment the ſinner there, is ſin. The wrath of God would ceaſe, if ſin did not feed and increaſe it.——Thus much of the ſtrength of ſin.

III. The third thing here propoſed was, To ſhow how the ſtrength of ſin diſcovers itſelf. Here I may ſhow you, 1. At what ſeaſons eſpecially does the ſtrength of ſin diſcover itſelf. 2. By what effects.

1ſt, At what ſeaſons more eſpecially does the ſtrength of ſin diſcover itſelf?

1. When men ſhould be moſt holy, ſin readily diſcovers itſelf to be moſt ſtrong. In the unregenerate, ſin is equally ſtrong at all times, but not equally evident. Some will ſay, Oh! my heart is never ſo ill as on the Sabbath-day: why, perhaps it is juſt the ſame thing at other times, only the ſtrength of it may be more evident then. In the regenerate, ſin is ſometimes ſtronger, ſometimes weaker; but ordinarily it diſcovers its ſtrength moſt when they would moſt gladly be quit of it; When I would do good, evil is preſent with me, Rom. vii. 21. It is in this caſe many times as with the children of theſe that obſerve the worſhip of God daily in their families, they find the children moſt fretful fretful and ill-natured in time of worſhip, when they ought to be beſt. Perhaps it may be ſo, indeed, and the tempter may have a hand in it for diſturbing the worſhip of God; but, for ordinary, it is not then that they are worſt; but then they are moſt noticed.

2. Sin diſcovers its ſtrength moſt, when a heart-change comes to be ſought after. It is eaſy to wear Chriſt's livery for a while, by a fair profeſſion; but when he comes to ſeek the heart, there is no hearing on that ſide of the head. People may ſoon be induced to give ſome compliment to Chriſt, to give him the outward man, to give him the hand: but to give him the heart, is another matter; for, when it comes to that, the ſtrength of ſin appears. And then,

3. When a darling luſt is demanded, then the ſtrength of ſin appears; for the man will quit any thing for Chriſt but that. Naaman will part with any thing ſave a bow in the houſe of Rimmon: the young man in the goſpel will hold on with Chriſt, till Chriſt touch him on the ſore, and ſtrike upon his covetouſneſs; then he goes away ſorrowful.

4. When long cuſtom hath taken place, then the ſtrength of ſin appears; for, Can the Ethiopian change his colour, or the leopard his ſpots? No more can ye that are accuſtomed to do evil, learn to do well. It is hard, yea, extremely difficult to pull up an old tree by the roots.

5. When a time of ſpiritual drouſineſs takes place, then the ſtrength of ſin diſcovers itſelf. Take the heart while awake, and it can then pray, and wait, and praiſe, and worſhip: but let drouſineſs come on, it cannot watch with Chriſt one hour, for all Chriſt's intreaty; for then the eyes are heavy; then is the hour and power of darkneſs. When the believer is waking and watchful, believing and holy, then the power of God appears; it is the hour of God's power: but when ſpiritual drouſineſs comes on, then the power of ſin appears; the ſoul cannot ſtir hand nor foot.

6. When a time of temptation comes, then the ſtrength of ſin appears. The perſon will be very meek, very modeſt, very chaſte, very moderate, very devout, and very innocent like, when there is no temptation, no opportunity for ſin's working; and at ſuch a time ſin will be very ſilent, very quiet, very ſtill, and faſt aſleep: but let a ſtrong temptation, and a ſtrong luſt meet together, then the ſtrength of ſin ſtirs up itſelf. Sin is like a thief, who would ſeem to be a very honeſt man till a fit opportunity come, and then his hand falls to. "It is, as "one ſays, like the ſpider, that never appears "out of her hole till the flie be intangled in "her net; then ſhe appears, and deſtroys the "poor creature, and carries it along with her." When temptation is at a diſtance, perhaps, you hope you will withſtand it; you pray, and promiſe, and what not? and ſin lets you be ſaying, and never a word from it, till the new temptation comes, and then it appears with new ſtrength.

7. When a time of trial and temptation comes, ſin diſcovers its power. It may be, you can preach patience and ſubmiſſion to others in affliction; but when it comes to your own door, then you will find the heart rebelling againſt the providence, and that it is eaſier to give an advice than to take it. The power of enmity falls a working, as againſt the preceptive, ſo againſt the providential will of God.

8. When difficult duties are preſſed, then the ſtrength of ſin appears.—When duties croſs to fleſh and blood, croſs to ſelf and ſelf-righteouſneſs are preſſed, what! muſt I reprove even my ſuperiors and great ones when they err? This, ſays ſin, will expoſe you to their wrath and indignation. Muſt I profeſs Chriſt even before a wicked company? Nay, ſays ſin, this will expoſe you to ſhame and reproach. Muſt I bear with injuries and affronts? Nay, ſays ſin, fleſh and blood cannot bear with that. Muſt I deny myſelf, and all my beſt duties and righteouſneſs? Nay, ſays ſin, this is a hard ſaying, who can bear it? May I not hope that my duties will profit me as to my acceptance and juſtification before God? No, no; the heart caſts out with God, and ſin ſhows its ſtrength in theſe caſes.—Again, in a time when all diligence in duty is required, as well as deniedneſs thereunto; and when the law is urged to be regarded as a rule of obedience, as well as renounced as a rule of acceptance: What! to be ſtedfaſt and immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; to make religion the conſtant trade; to be holy in duties, and holy in the intervals of duties: the ſtrength of ſin here appears in its mighty oppoſition to this kind of life. A man will be content to pray, and hear, and read, and ſing, if he may be allowed a latitude when he is done; but to be always praying, always watching, and always waiting on the Lord, the carnal heart reſiſts this like death: it may be reſtrained a while, like a ſtream that is dammed up for a time; but it breaks out with greater violence at laſt.

9. When the commandment comes powerfully, ſin revives, and diſcovers its power, Rom. vii. 9. The ſpirituality of the law wakens up the malignity of ſin.

10. In a time when goſpel-light ſhines moſt clearly, then the ſtrength of ſin appears moſt evidently. The law of works, and legal doctrine, may be preached, and yet the ſtrength of ſin never touched, never truly diſcovered; yea, the legal heart may fall in with the legal ſtrain, and comply with all the legal duties and means of life, and yet the ſtrength of ſin more and more increaſed, though hidden under a legal covert; for, the ſtrength of ſin is the law; and therefore ſin does not differ with the law as it is a covenant of works: But, let the goſpel-light ſhine clearly, then ſin will diſcover itſelf more evidently, and rage more deſperately, unleſs it be conquered by goſpel-grace. Why? becauſe though the law of works, or the works of the law and the power of ſin, are no oppoſites, but friends that live and die together; yet the goſpel of grace, and the power of ſin, are direct oppoſites: for nothing in the world can deſtroy the power of ſin, but the graces of the goſpel; and therefore the ſtrength of ſin reſiſts the grace of the goſpel with main force. Goſpel-grace ſeeks no leſs than the very life of ſin; therefore ſin muſt now fight for its life. Wonder not that the world oppoſes the goſpel ſo much, in conjunction with the god of this world, who blinds the minds of them that believe not, &c. Neither wonder if ſin appear very ſtrong, where the goſpel ſhines very clear; or if there be the greateſt oppoſition, where there is the cleareſt light. Men naturally underſtand ſomething of the law, that ſays, Do, and live; work, and get your wages: and this natural underſtanding is what men pride themſelves in, ſo as in the the pride of their heart they reject the gospel, which is wholly supernatural and divine, and wherein Christ is set up as the only Potentate that can demolish the strength of sin, by executing his saving offices in us. But, behold, pride of wisdom opposes him as a Prophet, and so man's folly is increased; pride of righteousness opposes him in his priestly office, and so the guilt of sin is increased; pride of strength opposes him as to his kingly office, and so the power of sin is increased: and thus, through an evil heart of unbelief, they depart from the living God. The gospel sets up Christ against the strength of sin, and therefore the strength of sin appears in arms against the gospel.——Thus you see at what seasons, and on what occasion, especially, the strength of sin appears.

2*dly*, By what effects does the strength of sin discover itself? I am not here to run through all the sad effects of sin: otherwise I might show how it brought angels out of heaven, and Adam out of paradise; how it brought fire and brimstone upon Sodom, and a deluge of water on the old world; and what confusion, calamity, and misery it hath brought into the world; what temporal, spiritual, and eternal judgments it brings on: these are common topics, and too large a field for me now to insist upon; therefore I confine myself to that effect of sin that the text and context leads me to. Know then, that the strength of sin appears in the STING of it, and the sting of death is sin: there is the great discovery that the strength of sin makes of itself.

And there are two deaths I would here speak a little of, as the greatest discoveries of the strength of sin, namely, 1. The death of the sinner. 2. The death of the Saviour. Both these deaths discover the powerful sting and mighty strength of sin.

[1.] The death of the sinner discovers the strength of sin; for, The wages of sin is death. And here, first, Sinning angels were stung to death by their sin; and hence we are told, Jude ver. 6. That the angels that kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, are reserved in everlasting chains under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day. And, next, sinning man was stung to death; By one man sin entred into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned, Rom. v. 12. The death of the sinner, whereof death is the sting and strength, is threefold, namely, external, internal, and eternal: external relates to the body, internal relates to the soul, and eternal relates to the soul and body for ever.—Death external, or of the body and outward man, includes not only the separation of soul and body, to the privation of bodily life; but also all the pains and sickness, public calamities, personal miseries, and grievous diseases that do attend a present life, or are the forerunners and attendants of death: all which are parts of this sting and strength of sin.—Death internal, includes soul-defilement and pollution; soul-debasement and degradation to the rank of beasts; soul-disturbance, disorder, and confusion; soul-separation from God, and alienation from the life of God; the life of God being gone, and the candle of the Lord put out, so as nothing remains but the darkness of death and hell. Oh! how great a death is the loss of God, the loss of his favour, his image, his fellowship, and sweet communion with him! All the life of the carnal man, who is but dead while he lives, is at best (instead of righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, which are part of the spiritual life) nothing but a little while's eating, and drinking, and playing, and laughing, and living in filthiness, and enjoying no better pleasure than brute beasts; but so much the worse, that, having an immortal soul, the issue is terrible, nothing remaining but torment and terror of mind and conscience whenever it begins to awaken.—Death eternal, includes everlasting separation from the presence of God: indeed, the former deaths were not so terrible to the sinner, if there were not two sad words and sadder things following thereupon, namely, judgment and eternity, that tread upon the heels of death; for, whenever the soul is separate from the body, it must see the things it would never believe, nor seriously think upon, that verily there is a God that judgeth in the earth, and that, dying in sin, and out of Christ, it must receive from that just Judge a sentence of excommunication from the glorious and joyful presence of God, and that for ever and ever; besides the suffering of everlasting torment, as the due demerit of sin.——Thus, in the death of the sinner, the strength of sin is discovered. But more especially,

[2.] The death of the Saviour shews forth the strength of sin above all other things; for sin was the cause of it, and the very sting by which he suffered unto death. Every life, whether it be the life of beasts, the life of men, the life of angels, or the life of God, hath an excellency according to its kind; and the more excellent the life is, the more powerful, terrible, and hurtful is the cause of the privation thereof. "The life of a flie, says Augustine, is more excellent than the sun, because the sun, though an excellent creature, hath not life; but the flie, though little, yet it hath life: it shows the excellency of God to make such a living creature." But if the life of a beast, or insect, be so excellent, how much more the life of a man! And if the life of a man, or an angel, be excellent, what infinite excellency is there in the life of God! Now, the principal excellency of the life of man lay at first in this, that he was in the image of God; and how terrible is that sting of sin, that could deprive man of that excellent life, so as to strike at God's image in man, both to deface and destroy it! But if sin strike at God himself, and aim at the highest life, even the life of God; and if the stroak reach so far, as to kill and take away the life of that person who was God as well as man; then we may see and conclude, that the strength of sin is inconceivably more great and terrible than it can be seen to be in any other glass. But so it is, though God cannot die, and though the divine nature of Christ could not be touched with the sting, yet he, who was God-man in one person, was pressed down to death with the strength, and wounded even to death with the sting of sin. And this one thing makes a greater discovery of the strength of sin, than all the torments of the damned to eternity can do. In the red glass of the sufferings of Christ you may see more of the power and strength of sin, than if God should let you down to hell, and make you see all the tortures and torments of the damned. In order, therefore, to your having a clearer insight into the strength of sin, O Sirs, look to a crucified Christ: look upon upon his agony and croſs, when he was wounded for our ſin. O ſee the ſting of ſin, and the ſtrength of it, when it made the Son of God to ſay, My ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful, even unto death, Mat. xxvi. 38. There the ſting was ſticking in his ſoul, while he was under the apprehenſion of God's wrath, and was about to bear the wrath that ſin deſerved. Perhaps, upon the ſight of ſin, you content yourſelf with ſome little ſlight ſorrow, ſaying, I am ſorry for it; Lord, have mercy on me; and ſo it paſſes away: but when the weight of ſin was lying on Chriſt's back, it made his ſoul ſorrowful, compaſſed about with ſorrow, and ſorrowful even unto death, and that for our ſins.—See the ſtrength of ſin in the ſufferings of Chriſt, expreſſed alſo in that word, Mark xiv. 33. He began to be ſore amazed, and to be very heavy: amazed at the dreadfulneſs of that cup of wrath for ſin, which he, as Surety, behoved to drink. He knew very well, and underſtood perfectly, what that wrath of God was; and this made him ſtand amazed. Many hear of God's wrath, but are never amazed at it, never affected with it, as all Chriſtleſs ſinners ought to be: but, alas! they do not underſtand it, they do not know what it is for a creature to ſtand before the wrath of an infinite Deity; they know not the power of his wrath, therefore they are not amazed. Chriſt ſaw to the bottom of that cup, and to the dregs thereof; and when he was to drink it, he ſtood amazed: how great then is the ſtrength of ſin, that procured this amazement of the Son of God!—See again the ſtrength of ſin in Chriſt's ſufferings for it, while it is ſaid, He was in an agony, Luke xxii. 44.; that is, as it were, in a COMBAT; in combat with the infinite juſtice and wrath of God, and with the dreadful threatenings and curſe of the law, that ſin brought upon him, when he ſtood our Surety. How great is the ſtrength of ſin, that put the Son of God, the Strength of Iſrael, the Captain of ſalvation, into ſuch an agony!—Again, it is ſaid, Mark xiv. 35. that he fell down to the ground; and Mat. xxvi. 39. that he fell on his face: Alas! Sirs, when he, that upholds the heavens and the earth by his power, fell grovelling on the earth, when the weight and burden of ſin was upon him; how ſtrong muſt ſin be! Chriſt fell upon his face, and fell to the ground; ſurely that weight, that made Chriſt fall to the ground, would have preſſed all the angels of heaven, and men on earth to the bottomleſs gulf of deſpair. If all the ſtrength of all the men that ever were from the beginning of the world, and of all the angels in heaven were put into one, and that perſon had the weight upon him that Chriſt had, it would make him ſink to the loweſt hell, and ly there for ever. If Chriſt had not been God, as well as man, he could never have born it, but would have ſunk down eternally: but though he was God as well as man, yet ſuch was the ſtrength of ſin, that under its burden he ſunk down to the ground.—Again, the ſtrength of it appears, in that it made him to ſweat great drops of blood, Luke xxiii. 44. The word ſignifies GREAT CLOTS of blood; blood thickened into clots. Never was there ſuch a ſweat, and that upon the cold ground, in a cold winter-night, and nothing elſe upon him to make him ſweat but the burden of ſin, and the weight of wrath that it brought upon him.—But again, how does the ſtrength of ſin appear, in his crying under this weight, Father, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſs from me? And thus he cried three times. Why, this was the very end for which he came to the world, to drink that cup; and he knew that the ſalvation of an elect world of poor ſinners depended upon his drinking of it: and, was he now unwilling? No, by no means: but knowing the dreadfulneſs of it, when it was put to his head, he put it away, as it were, ſaying, Father, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſs from me: but now he ſees, if he drink it not, all the children of men muſt eternally periſh; therefore, he put it to his mouth again the ſecond time; but knowing the dreadfulneſs of it, he takes it away again, and cries, Father, if it be poſſible, let it paſs away from me. But, becauſe he could not ſee ſo many thouſands of poor ſinners periſh eternally, he put it to his mouth again, the third time; and yet, beholding the dreadfulneſs of it, he put it away again, ſaying, Father, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſs. But, after all, his infinite love overcame his dreadful amazement; and away he goes to the croſs, to drink that bitter cup of vengeance to the bottom: and while he is drinking it, he cries out with a more bitter cry than ever, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? This was ſuch a cry from the Son of God, the Son of his eternal love, that heaven was not able to hear it without bluſhing, nor the earth to bear it without trembling: therefore, as the ſun withdrew his light, and became dark and black at the ſight; ſo the earth ſhook, the rocks clave, and the vail of the temple was rent in twain, from the top to the bottom. Mean time, the ſting went to his heart, and ſtabbed him to death; and all this was done, that the ſting of death, which is ſin, and the ſtrength of ſin, which is the law, might be vanquiſhed by him, and that poor ſinners might be victorious through him.

However, the more we view here the ſtrength of ſin, the more ſweet will be the ſong of victory. Dwell a little further upon this then: Chriſt is the Strength of Iſrael; but never was the Strength of Iſrael tried ſo much as by the ſtrength of ſin, when he had that to deal with, and when by the ſin of man he was made a curſe, Gal. iii. 13. What made the death and ſufferings of Chriſt ſo dreadful to him, even before he ſuffered? Let me aſk here four queſtions.

1. Did not Chriſt perfectly know all that he was to ſuffer, long before he ſuffered? What made it then ſo dreadful when he expected it? Had he any ſin of his own, to weaken him, or take away his ſtrength? No; he had none, but by imputation. Had he any impatience? No; his patience was abſolutely perfect. What then was the matter? Weakneſs of patience makes us cry; but Chriſt cried, not from want of the ſtrength of patience, but from the feeling of the ſtrength of ſin, the whole power and force of the fiery law.

2. Was not Chriſt the Captain of all that were to ſuffer afterwards? How came the martyrs to ſuffer with joy, and yet the Captain to fall to the ground, and cry out of exceeding ſorrow? Was it not through the ſtrength of Chriſt that all that ever did ſuffer were enabled to ſuffer for his name what they did? Yea, but the matter was, he had ſome other thing to ſuffer than they had; he had even the wrath of God, and the ſtrength of ſin to grapple with, which they had nothing to do with, he having thus taken it away.

3. Did

3. Did not Chriſt know what infinite good his ſuffering would do, that he was to ſave ſo many thouſands of thouſands of ſinners, and that thus he was to reconcile God and man, to glorify his Father, and to do the greateſt work for God that ever was done, and to bring in a tribute of eternal praiſe from men and angels? And did he not know, that though his ſufferings were extreme, yet they were to laſt but a few hours, and then he was to be glorified? Why then was his ſuffering ſo dreadful to him? Why, becauſe then the whole ſtrength of ſin was preſſing him, the whole ſtrength of a broken law.

4. Had not Chriſt the ſtrength of an infinite Deity to ſupport him? the divine nature to ſupport the human? Was there not a perſonal union betwixt the divine and human nature at that time? Was he not God-man in one perſon? Yea, why then was his ſuffering ſo dreadful to him? Why, the ſtrength of ſin lighted on him with its whole weight, and the ſtrength of ſin brought on him the ſtrength of the law, the ſtrength of the broken law brought on him the ſtrength of offended juſtice, the ſtrength of infinite juſtice brought on him the ſtrength of infinite wrath and vengeance for ſin; and therefore, though his ſtrength was the ſtrength of God, he behoved to cry and roar, and die under the ſtrength of ſin.

O my dear friends, you cannot conceive how infinite wiſdom, though inventing a way from all eternity, to diſcover the ſtrength and dreadfulneſs of ſin, could do it ſo much to the life, as it is diſcovered in the death and ſufferings of the Son of God. If ever you ſee the evil and ſtrength of ſin here, you will ſee it to be ſin indeed.

IV. The fourth head propoſed was, to ſhow whence the ſtrength of ſin comes, and where it lies. I ſhall very ſhortly ſpeak to this, in theſe four particulars.

1. As the ſtrength of a tree lies in the root of it, and the ſtrength of the water lies in the fountain; ſo the ſtrength of ſin lies in the root and fountain of ſin, viz. The original violation of the covenant of works, by our firſt parents; the righteous imputation of that guilt unto us; and the total depravation of our nature, iſſuing from thence, and called, A body of ſin and death. Hence, no leſs power can deſtroy the ſtrength of ſin, than that power that can pull up the root, and dry up the fountain of ſin.

2. As the ſtrength of an army lies much in their general; ſo the ſtrength of ſin and luſts lies in their commander the devil. I ſaid before, that ſin is ſtronger than the devil; and yet the devil may be ſaid to be the ſtrength of ſin, as a general or commander is the ſtrength of an army; for, though the army may be ſtronger than the general that commands it, yet his ſkill and management may be the principal cauſe of their victorious power, while his leading and directing them gives them great advantage againſt their enemies. Thus the devil is the commander in ſin's army, and the great quarter-maſter that fills the ſinner's heart, as it is ſaid of Ananias, Acts v. 3. Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lye to the Holy Ghoſt? It is the devil that fills the hearts of people to lye, and drink, and ſwear, and do other acts of wickedneſs; for, he rules in the children of diſobedience, Eph. ii. 2.; and the god of this world blinds the minds of them that believe not; and ſo holds them under the ſtrength of ſin, in chains of darkneſs and ignorance. No leſs power, then, can ſubdue the ſtrength of ſin, than that power that can deſtroy the devil and his works.

3. As the ſtrength of Samſon lay in his locks, and the ſtrength of a ſociety lies in their unity, or the ſtrength of a company lies in their conjunction; ſo the ſtrength of ſin lies in its union with the ſinner, and in its conjunction with and relation to him: the ſtrength of ſinful luſts lies in their oneneſs with, and relation to ourſelves. And for a man to deſtroy his luſts, is to deny himſelf: they are ſuch a part of a man's ſelf, that they ſeem to be the beſt part, and the moſt powerful part of himſelf; his right-hand, his right-eye, his moſt uſeful and powerful members; Mortify therefore your members that are upon the earth, Col. iii. 5. The power then that can deſtroy the power and ſtrength of ſin, is ſuch as can pull down ſelf, and all the members of it, and divide one member from another. The power that is neceſſary for deſtroying ſin, is that divine power that can divide and ſeparate a man from himſelf, and even deſtroy nature itſelf by a new creation.

4. As the ſtrength of a kingdom lies in the conſtitution and government thereof; ſo the ſtrength of ſin lies in the law of works: The ſtrength of ſin is the law. Now, to ſhew how the law is the ſtrength of ſin, is the ſubject of the next doctrine, which I deſign to treat of afterwards. In a word, as the command of the law irritates ſin, and gives it a commanding power over the ſinner; and as the threatening of the law curſes ſin, and gives it a condemning power over the ſinner; ſo the power alone that can bring down the ſtrength of ſin, muſt be ſuch as can give full ſatisfaction both to the precept and penalty of the law of works. And whereas ſin draws its commanding ſtrength from the violated precept, and its condemning ſtrength from the incurred ſanction of the law, and yet the precept of the law derives its ſtrength from the holineſs of God, and the ſanction of the law derives its ſtrength from the juſtice of God; therefore, the power that can vanquiſh ſin, muſt be ſuch as can give infinite holineſs all the obedience it commands in the precept, and infinite juſtice all the ſatisfaction it demands in the threatening of the law: conſequently no man is freed from the power, ſtrength, and dominion of ſin, till he be unbottomed from the law as a covenant of works, united to Chriſt the ſecond Adam, and inveſted with his everlaſting law-biding righteouſneſs.

V. The fifth thing propoſed, was, to make ſome application of this doctrine. Is it ſo, that ſin is ſuch a ſtrong and powerful thing as I have ſhown? Then hence we may learn,

1. That it is no eaſy matter to be delivered from the power and ſtrength of ſin. Let Arminians magnify the power of man's nature and free-will as they pleaſe; yet let us hence ſee the need of the power of God, and magnify the power of ſovereign grace. If any man think ſo proudly of himſelf, that he can, at his own will and pleaſure, deliver himſelf from the bondage of corruption, he is both ignorant of the ſtrength of ſin, declaring himſelf to be under the power of it, and running on in the way to his own eternal ruin: yea, by ſuch a conceit as this, ſin gathers more and more ſtrength, and holds ſinners ſo much the faſter under its power; for thus they are hardened in a continuance in that courſe which they fancy they can reform when they will: and hence, though their time of returning to God is always, even when they will; yet that time never comes. To will is preſent with a child of God many times, Rom. vii. 18. when he finds an oppoſing power of ſin withſtanding him: but a preſent will to come to Chriſt, and forſake all ſin, is never preſent with a natural man. A future will he may have, thinking that after ſuch or ſuch a time he will repent, and reform, and come to Chriſt; but that future will is a preſent nill and denial. The ſtrength of ſin remains in the will, and will remain there, unleſs a day of power come to make him willing.

2. If ſin hath ſuch a ſtrength, then ſee the miſerable thraldom of Chriſtleſs ſinners; they are ſlaves to the baſeſt maſter in the world, namely, ſin: and if they live and die in that ſlavery, they are to have the fearfulleſt wages, and that is death. As nothing is more baſe than ſin, ſo nothing is more bitter than death. You have heard of the miſery of galley-ſlaves among the Turks, who uſe to chain them to their ſeats, and ſcourge them cruelly with rods; how ſweet is it to be delivered from ſuch bondage! But, alas! what is a Turk to a devil? What is the labour of oars to the ſervice of ſin, and the torments of hell?

3. If ſin hath ſuch a ſtrength, then ſee the neceſſity of regeneration, and the power of grace to break the power of ſin. It was the ſpeech of one to a ſkilful philoſopher, that upon the calculation of his nativity, had foretold him ſome ſpecialities concerning his future ſtate: he anſwered in this manner, "Such, perhaps, I was "born at firſt; but, ſince that time, I have been "born again; and my ſecond nativity hath "croſt my firſt." Some will excuſe their ſin from their birth, and excuſe their wickedneſs by their natural inclination, ſaying, I am born choleric, I am born covetous, I am born amorous, or born thus and thus vicious: why, indeed the power of nature is a plauſible plea for theſe that acknowledge no power above nature; but for a profeſſed Chriſtian to excuſe his ſin from his nature, is an apology worſe than the fault; for, wherefore ſerves the power of godlineſs, but to ſubdue the power of ſin, and to govern nature? We are ſo far Chriſtians, indeed, as we have the power and government over ourſelves by the power of regenerating grace; and religion, without this, is nothing but form and ſpeculation.

4. If ſin be ſo ſtrong, then converſion is a miracle, an inward miracle. Outward miracles cannot convert a man, where there is no inward power accompanying them. Ten miraculous plagues could not convert Pharaoh; the thunder, and hail, and frogs, and flies, and lice, and locuſts were deſtroying the land of Egypt, but could not deſtroy Pharaoh's pride and obſtinacy; nor could all the miracles that Chriſt wrought, deſtroy the Phariſees pride and infidelity. And do we not daily ſee, from ſad experience, how the ſtrength of ſin makes men break through the thouſands of means, that might be thought would be effectual to converſion, ſuch as vows, promiſes, mercies, croſſes, ſickneſs, convictions, terrors, ſermons, warnings, challenges; yea, and break through them all into hell? It is ſome internal miracle only that will do the buſineſs; and, indeed, the ſtrength of God is in nothing more known, than in ſubduing the ſtrength of ſin, which requires the exceeding greatneſs of his power, Eph. i. 19.; even the power of his power. Hence believers are ſaid to be ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might; that is, in the power of his power, the very quinteſſence of power. Was it a miracle for God to make a world out of nothing? It is yet a greater miracle for him to make a ſaint out of a ſinner, that was under the power and ſtrength of ſin. Indeed, miracles are not ceaſed, ſo long as there are any converts in the world.

5. If ſin be ſo ſtrong and powerful, then ſee the happineſs of believers in Chriſt, that are delivered from the ſting of death, and the ſtrength of ſin. The leaſt branch of that vine that is in Chriſt is too high for Satan's reach; yea, while there is ſap in the root, they ſhall not want it: they will not want the Spirit, that, through the Spirit, they may mortify the deeds of the body. There is a power in Chriſt, which will bring down every contrary power, and diſanul the law of ſin. Chriſt hath ſo handled that ſnake, by taking out the ſting and teeth of it, that, though it hiſs, it cannot hurt. Though ſin be not killed outright in the children of God while here, yet it is ſo maimed, and ſo weakened, that, like the proud king Adonibezek, when once his hands and his toes were mangled, and he faſt in chains, he could not endanger Iſrael in any thing; ſo neither can ſin or Satan with reſpect to the children of God: The God of peace ſhall bruiſe Satan under their feet ſhortly. Strong is the devil, and ſtronger is the captain of their ſalvation; great is the power of ſin, but greater is the power of Chriſt, whoſe ſtrength will be perfected in their weakneſs.

6. If ſin be ſtrong, then ſee to whom ſalvation from ſin is to be aſcribed, and in whom it is to be ſought, namely, Chriſt the valiant conqueror. It is ſo mighty and ſo glorious a work to defeat his ſtrength, that our glorious Lord thought it not unbeſeeming omnipotency to meddle with it: O Iſrael, thou haſt deſtroyed thyſelf, but in me is thy help. Our perdition is of ourſelves; but our ſalvation belongs to the Lord, and to the Lamb that ſits upon the throne. No part of the glory of this work muſt be aſcribed to any elſe: his glory will he not give to another. The believer's ſong, therefore, will be, as in the context, Thanks be to God that giveth us the victory, through Jeſus Chriſt: Not by our own righteouſneſs or our own ſtrength; nay, In the Lord only have we righteouſneſs and ſtrength: Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, ſaith the Lord of hoſts. And hence,

7. If the ſtrength of ſin be ſo great, then, how great is the ſtrength of grace that can conquer ſin! By grace we are ſaved, from the power of ſin, through faith, and that not of ourſelves, it is the gift of God; not of works, leſt any man ſhould boaſt. It is the ſin-pardoning grace, the ſin-ſubduing grace, the free mercy of God in Chriſt offered to ſinners in the goſpel, that is mighty through God, to the deſtroying of the power of ſin. All hearers of the goſpel that are not believers, are impenitent ſinners: and they that will venture to ſay, that it is an affront to God, to offer pardon to the impenitent, they know not what they ſay; for it is by offers of pardoning grace and mercy to impenitent hard-hearted ſinners, that God breaks their heart, and deſtroys the ſtrength of their ſin and impenitency: Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return to the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. Why, what influences ſuch a ſinner to turn and repent? Even the offer of pardoning mercy: For our God will abundantly pardon, Iſa. lv. 7. He will multiply to pardon. O Sirs! when the impenitent ſinner gets an ear to hear ſuch an offer as this, that God will multiply pardons even upon one that hath multiplied tranſgreſſions, this goodneſs of God leads him to repentance, and melts his heart. If any thing in the world break the ſtrength of ſin, it will be the ſtrength of grace, and of God's love and mercy, through Chriſt, held out in the goſpel.

8. If the ſtrength of ſin be ſo great, then hence I infer, that there can be no goſpel-repentance before faith: No repentance, or turning from ſin to God, till a man come to Chriſt for righteouſneſs and ſtrength, againſt the ſtrength of ſin. It is another piece of the new and odd divinity of ſome in our day, that goſpel-repentance, or ſome acts of it, are before ſaving faith: but this doctrine of the ſtrength of ſin declares the contrary; for, when true goſpel-repentance takes place, then the ſtrength of ſin is broken, and the man is actually in arms againſt it. But where got he his armour, if he never came to Chriſt by faith for ſtrength? Repentance is a turning to God; but, who ever turned to God, without taking Chriſt by the way? For, no man comes to the Father but by him. Much hypocritical, and feigned, and legal repentance there may be without faith; but, true, actual, goſpel-repentance is always the fruit both of Chriſt's look to the ſoul, as he did to Peter, whereupon he goes out and weeps bitterly; and alſo of faith looking to Chriſt; They ſhall look upon him whom they have pierced, and mourn. And this, by the by, may ſerve to gloſs ſeveral abuſed texts of ſcripture, where repentance is firſt named before faith, which never import that true goſpel-repentance is before faith; but only, as we may firſt ſpeak of the end, and then of the means to accompliſh that end; ſo repentance may be the firſt named, which is the end, even turning to God; and then faith comes in, as the mean to that end. Thus, Repent, and believe the goſpel, there is the end; repent and turn to a right mind, by turning to God: Why, he muſt even come to Chriſt by believing the goſpel, otherwiſe he will never repent ſo as to turn unto God: thus we read of repentance towards God, and then faith towards our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; where, though repentance towards God be firſt named, yet faith towards our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, without which there is no coming to God, is firſt acted. If I ſhould ſay, Go up to heaven, and climb the ladder; though going up to heaven is firſt named, yet the mean of this, though laſt named, muſt be firſt uſed; for, who will ever win up to heaven, unleſs they get up by the true Jacob's ladder, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt? In a word the ſtrength of Chriſt muſt be improved by faith, and ſet againſt the ſtrength of ſin; otherwiſe no part of its ſtrength is in the leaſt broken.

9. If the ſtrength of ſin be ſo great, then, hence I infer, that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is the great and eternal God, becauſe he alone could deſtroy the ſtrength of ſin, and through him alone we can have complete victory over it. Oh! curſed Arianiſm! that would diminiſh our only ſtrength, by denying the ſupreme Deity of our Lord Jeſus. If he had not been true God, eſſentially one with the Father, as well as perſonally equal to him, when the ſtrength of ſin, and the whole power of it was laid upon him, it would have deſtroyed him. The power of ſin, which ſtrikes againſt an infinite Majeſty, brought the power of infinite vengeance upon him, which would have ruined him to eternity, if he had not been God; but, becauſe he was the infinite and eternal God, he was able, by his death in the fleſh, to condemn ſin in the fleſh, Rom. viii. 3.; and ſo to deſtroy the ſtrength of ſin. And hence,

10. If the ſtrength of ſin be ſo great, ſee the duty of poor ſinners, that are captives to the power of ſin, viz. to look to him who is the ſtrength of Iſrael, that they may be ſaved from the ſtrength of ſin; Iſa. xlv. 22. Look to me, and be ſaved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none elſe. None elſe can ſave from the ſtrength of ſin: ſet the ſtrength of angels againſt it, it will be too hard for them; the ſtrength of means and ordinances, the ſtrength of miniſters and ſermons, the ſtrength of duties and prayers will not do of themſelves. I have already ſhewed that ſin is ſtronger than all theſe? but here is a ſtrength that is able to ſave to the uttermoſt from it, even the ſtrength of Chriſt; therefore, Let him take hold of my ſtrength, Iſa. xxvi. 3. But, ſay you, why deſire you one, that is under the ſtrength of ſin, to lay hold on the ſtrength of Chriſt? The ſtrength of ſin weakens me, ſo that I have no ability to lay on his ſtrength. It is true, you have no ſtrength, nor ever will have ſtrength in yourſelf, or power in your own hand, while you are in this broken ſtate; but as you are called to lay hold on his ſtrength, ſo you are called to go out of yourſelf, for ſtrength to lay hold on his ſtrength: if you had ſtrength in yourſelf to lay hold on him by faith, Chriſt would never be preſented to you as the author of faith, as well as the object of it. Therefore, when you are called to believe, you are not called to bring ſtrength out of yourſelf for that end, but to ſay, with your ſoul, Oh! I have neither righteouſneſs nor ſtrength; but, ſurely in the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength. And though it be almighty power alone that can make you ſay that with the heart, and believingly; yet, while you cannot ſay it, though God be offering Chriſt to you for your righteouſneſs and ſtrength, your are ſaying in effect, It is a lye that God ſays; I cannot believe it; he is not offering any ſuch thing to me; I cannot take it to me; I cannot truſt his word for it: and ſo, by unbelief, you make him a liar.

Oh! Sirs, caſt yourſelf on the Lord Jeſus, for ſalvation from ſin, and from all your ſins, and from the ſtrength of all your luſts; for he is freely offering himſelf and all his grace to you ſaying, Ho, every one that thirſteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat; yea, come buy wine and milk, without money and without price. Why, what means this, Ho, every one? Why it is even as Chriſt ſhould ſay, Ho, every guilty perſon, come to me for pardon; Ho, every filthy ſinner, come to me for cleanſing; my blood only cleanſes from all ſin; Ho, every naked ſinner, come to me for a robe of righteouſneſs to cover you; Ho, every needy ſinner, come to me for ſupply out of my infinite fulneſs; Ho, every faithleſs unbelieving ſinner, come to me, as the author of faith, that I may give you faith, and help your unbelief, and then increaſe your faith; Ho, every impenitent ſinner, hard-hearted ſinner, come to me, as to a Prince exalted, by the right-hand of God, to give repentance, and to give you the heart of fleſh promiſed in the covenant; Ho, every great ſinner, come to me for the great ſalvation from your great ſins, and from God's great wrath; Ho, every graceleſs ſinner, come to me for grace and glory, and eternal life. Why will you not come to me, that you might have life? To come to Chriſt for life, ſuppoſes death; and, how can the dead come to him for life? Why, it is his call, who is the Lord of life, and can make the dead to hear and live; therefore, Ho, every powerleſs ſinner, in whom the ſtrength of ſin and luſts is ſtronger than hell and the devil, come to me for ſtrength, and look to me for ſtrength; for I am God, and there is none elſe. None elſe but the mighty God can ſave from the might of ſin, which, if he ſave you not, is mighty to defile you, and mighty to deſtroy you. But, what is the Mediator's name? His name is Wonderful, Counſellor, the mighty God; and never did he appear more mighty than in deſtroying mighty luſts, and ſubduing the ſtrength of ſin: all the ſtrength of men and angels could have done no more againſt ſin, or the wrath of God that it brought on, than if you ſhould ſet a piece of paper againſt a mighty flame. Such is the wrong that ſin hath done to God, that all the created power of heaven and earth coming in betwixt God and man, to ſatisfy for that wrong, had been but like a piece of dry, thin paper betwixt you and a mighty devouring flame. But, behold, Chriſt, who undertook to remove the ſtrength of ſin, and the power of wrath that it entails, is the mighty God, the infinite God, able to expiate that infinite wrong that ſin had done to God: and as he hath diſcovered his ability, by pouring out his blood to ſave meritoriouſly; ſo he is ready to diſcover his ability, by pouring out his Spirit to ſave efficaciouſly. Ho, every powerleſs ſinner then, here is a powerful Saviour, ready to ſave you freely, without money and without price; having no merit but only this, that you merit hell and damnation: having no power but this, that you are under the power and ſtrength of ſin. If you could merit any good, you would have no need of Chriſt to ſave you by price; if you had power to help yourſelf, you would have no need of Chriſt as a Saviour to ſave you by power: and, therefore, it is even becauſe you have no merit, no power, no grace, no good, that this all-ſufficient Saviour is offered to you, and boding himſelf upon you ſo freely.

If the ſtrength of ſin could be broken any other way, the ſtrength of a Saviour would not be thus freely offered by the great God unto you: God would not expoſe his great eternal Son to contempt, by offering him thus to poor ſinners, if they could be ſaved without him. But, though you have contemned him all your days, to your own ſhame, in deſpiſing your own mercy; yet now again he is offering himſelf anew to you, as fully and freely as ever: and think not the leſs of ſin, that ſalvation from it is ſo freely offered to you, and ſo freely boded upon you by this goſpel; for, I declare to you, in the Lord's name, that this free diſpenſation of the grace of God to you, is a greater buſineſs, and more momentous, than the tongues of men and angels can expreſs: for God to come and offer his Chriſt, and for Chriſt to come and offer himſelf, to ſave you from the ſtrength of ſin, is more than if he ſhould offer you ten thouſand worlds.

There is more of the glory of God in one word of the goſpel, in one line, one ſentence of the goſpel, than in all heaven and earth beſide; more of God's glory ſhines in this goſpel of grace, wherein he freely offers his pardoning and purifying grace, to take away the guilt, and filth, and power of ſin; more of his glory ſhines here, than ſhines in the making of heaven and earth: for, here the great Counſel of God, working from all eternity, is diſplayed. In the work of creation he opens his hand, as it were; but in this goſpel-diſpenſation he is opening his heart, and diſcovering his deep deſign, eſpecially of redeeming love through Chriſt, to the glory of all his perfections, in deſtroying ſin and ſaving the ſinner.

Think not the leſs of ſin then, that ſalvation from it is offered ſo freely, and at ſuch an eaſy rate: for as you cannot have it at all, unleſs you have it freely, conſidering your loſt, doleful, and deſtitute circumſtances; ſo the thing offered to you is moſt becoming to infinite Majeſty to offer, and moſt declarative of the infinite evil of ſin. For the things offered amount to no leſs than an infinite price to ſave from the guilt of ſin, and infinite power to ſave from the ſtrength of ſin: for, Chriſt, in all his fulneſs of merit and Spirit, is laid to your hand. And therefore, lay your hand to your heart, and ſee if it be panting after, and welcoming a Saviour or not, and cloſing with him for righteouſneſs and ſtrength. Say not, the ſtrength of ſin is great, the ſtrength of enmity, the ſtrength of unbelief, the ſtrength of other ſins ſtand in the way; for the ſtrength of ſin is the very reaſon for which Chriſt is offered to you, and the very thing which he is offering to take away by his almighty ſtrength. What, ſay you, can he not do it without me? Yea, but he will not do it without your conſent: it is his ſtated method of ſaving; he does not ſave any againſt their wills, but by making them willing, and gaining their conſent. And, what is the meaning of this free offer, but to gain your full conſent?

Well then, O ſinner, is it come to this with it, What wilt thou that he ſhould do unto thee? Wilt thou have him to pull down the ſtrength of ſin, and of all your luſts and idols? Is your heart ſaying, O welcome, Jeſus, to ſave me a poor ſinner, not only from the guilt of ſin, by thy pardoning grace; but from the ſtrength of ſin, by thy ſanctifying grace? Why then, there were ground to conclude the work of power is begun: Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power. If you have no manner of will that Chriſt ſhould ſave you from the ſtrength of ſin, alas! then, who is to blame that you die in your ſin, and periſh under the power of it?

But, perhaps the caſe of ſome one perſon or other may be this, Alas! I not only feel the ſtrength of ſin that you have been ſpeaking of, but alſo a ſtrength of unwilline ſs to be ſaved from it; and if I were made willing, and ſo and ſo diſpoſed, I might be welcome: but while it is not ſo, is there any hope for me?

I anſwer, 1. This ſtrong Redeemer is offered to all the hearers of the goſpel without an if.

The

The covenant of works is a covenant of ifs; if you do, you ſhall live; if you be ſo and ſo qualified, you ſhall be ſo and ſo bleſſed: but it is not ſo in the abſolute promiſe of the covenant of grace. And as the promiſe of the covenant is without an if; ſo the offer of the goſpel is without an if, to whoſoever will, whoſoever pleaſes. It is true, he only that believes ſhall be ſaved: but as they are different queſtions, Who they are that ſhall be ſaved? and, Who they are to whom ſalvation is offered? So, ſeeing ſalvation is of faith, that it may be by grace, the meaning of theſe words, He that believes ſhall be ſaved, is, He that will have ſalvation freely by grace, and without any if, he may have it.

2. If you feel the ſtrength of ſin, I hope the ſtrength of a Saviour will be the more welcome to you; and if the ſtrength of unwillingneſs to be ſaved be your plague, the healer is at hand, the ſtrength of a ſtrong and mighty Redeemer is at hand, in the offer and promiſe, ſaying, He gives power to the faint, to him that hath no might he increaſeth ſtrength. Let Chriſt therefore get the glory of conquering your will: put your unwilling will into his able hand, ſaying, Lord, make me willing; O ſubdue the rebellion and reſiſtance of my will, and ſubject my will to thy will. They that are willing to have Chriſt, bending and bowing their will, are both convinced of their natural enmity, and partly cured of it. However, whether your willingneſs to part with ſin, and join with Chriſt, be cured or not; whether you be willing or unwilling, the offer of Chriſt is come to your door, inſomuch, that you are invited freely to come to him. Chriſt's complaint is, You will not come to me, that you might have life; which ſays, that though they were unwilling to come, yet they were invited to come. The goſpel-invitation then is to all poor ſinners to come, be who they will, and be the ſtrength of ſin that they are under never ſo great, that the Son may make them free, and then ſhall they be free indeed.

But if this call be ſlighted, I have this to tell you, that the ſtrength of ſin never exerted itſelf ſo much in all the ſins that ever you committed to this day, as it does in rejecting a Saviour. Ye may think, if ſin ſhould excite you to murder, and adultery, and blaſphemy, and other horrid things of that ſort, then the ſtrength of ſin would be great: very true, ſo it would; but I muſt tell you, whether you think it or not, that there is a thouſand times more of the ſtrength of ſin put forth in your ſlighting of Chriſt and his offered ſalvation, than is put forth in all the horrid villanies beſides that can be committed: for, as all your ſins would loſe their ſtrength by your laying hold on Chriſt for righteouſneſs and ſtrength, ſo your refuſing Chriſt to be your ſtrength, is the ſin that is the ſtrength of all your other ſins; they have ſtrength to command you, and ſtrength to condemn you, becauſe of your unbelief, which ſtrengthens every ſin; yea, and is the very ſtrength of the ſtrength of ſin; all your departures from the living God flow from the evil heart of unbelief, Heb. iii. 12. The faith of the goſpel would be the death of ſin, but unbelief keeps you under the law, which is the ſtrength of ſin.

Perhaps, ſome may ſay, Though Chriſt be offered to me for righteouſneſs and ſtrength, and I am called to believe in him with application, as the Lord my ſtrength; yet how ſhall I believe thus in him for ſtrength, unleſs I feel his ſtrength?

Why, man, to feel his ſtrength, is ſenſe and not faith, and imports the preſence of the thing believed, and the enjoyment of the thing promiſed: but there is a vaſt difference betwixt believing the promiſe, and enjoying the thing promiſed: to believe the promiſe of ſtrength in the Lord Jeſus, is to take his word, even when you want the thing promiſed, or want the feeling of it; for, faith is the evidence of things not ſeen, nor felt; for, if they were ſeen and felt, they would not be the object of faith, but the object of ſenſe. Faith's proper object is nothing elſe but the word of the God of truth.

Why, ſay you, but can I believe that Chriſt will be my ſtrength, without getting ſtrength to believe?

I anſwer, Strength to believe is one thing, and to believe in Chriſt for ſtrength is another; ſtrength to believe, is God's enabling one to the act of faith; but to believe for ſtrength is faith's acting upon Chriſt the object held up in the word of promiſe. And again, though none can believe, without getting ſtrength to believe; yet it is one thing to get ſtrength to believe, and another thing to get the feeling of that ſtrength; for, though faith cannot be acted without the feeling of that power and ſtrength of God within the man: yea, ſo far is the believer many times from feeling any ſtrength within him when he believes, that he feels nothing but want and weakneſs, utter inability and impotency; which makes him go out of himſelf, and look to the ſtrength of Chriſt that lies in the goſpel-offer and promiſe. Nay, the very language of faith ſuppoſes, that the man hath no feeling of ſtrength in himſelf, but believes his ſtrength to be in the Lord. Faith is not acted in the ſenſe of ſtrength, but in the ſenſe of weakneſs, ſaying, In the Lord only have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength.

But, ſay you, If I felt the ſtrength of ſin broken, then I might believe in him as my ſtrength, and take him for ſuch; but, how can I believe in him as my ſtrength, and perſuade myſelf that he is ſo, according to the offer and promiſe of the goſpel, when I find the ſtrength of ſin ſtill remaining?

ANSW. 1. The work of God, in breaking the ſtrength of ſin, and the feeling of that work, is the fruit of faith; and the reaſon why you do not feel that work of God, is becauſe you do not believe his word: If you would believe, you ſhould ſee the glory of God.

2. The word of God, wherein he offers and promiſes to be your ſtrength, is the ground of faith, upon which alone the perſuaſion of faith is to be founded. Beware of confounding the ground and foundation of faith, with the fruits, marks, and effects of it. The ſenſible decay of the ſtrength of ſin, is a mark, a fruit, and effect of faith, and might yield a perſuaſion of ſenſe: but God's word alone is the ground and object of faith; and to build the perſuaſion of faith upon it, is the very means of producing all theſe fruits of faith that are the objects of ſpiritual ſenſe. To ſay, therefore, that you cannot believe in Chriſt as your ſtrength, till you feel the ſtrength of ſin once broken, is the ſame as if one ſhould ſay, I cannot lay the foundation, till once I ſee the houſe is built;

I will

I will not come to the phyſician, till once I ſee the diſeaſe healed. Nay, if you ſaw the houſe well built, what need would there be of laying the foundation? If you ſaw your plagues healed, what need would there be of coming to the phyſician? If you felt the ſtrength of ſin removed, what need would there be of employing Chriſt for ſtrength? Nay, the very feeling of the ſtrength of ſin, which you make the reaſon why you cannot believe, is the very reaſon why you ſhould believe, and lay ſtreſs upon the divine teſtimony concerning Chriſt, with particular application of him to you as your ſtrength.

My friends, Chriſt puts himſelf in a promiſe for your uſe; he puts his righteouſneſs in the promiſe, his ſtrength in the promiſe, his grace in the promiſe, and Chriſt hath put himſelf there, that faith may ſeek him there: therefore, ſeek the Lord and his ſtrength; otherwiſe the ſtrength of ſin will be your death. There are but two ways wherein it can be ſuppoſed the ſtrength of ſin may be broken or removed; either by the law, or by the goſpel. As to the law as a broken covenant, it may well diſcover ſin and condemn it; and you for it; but it is ſo far from giving ſtrength againſt it, that ſin gathers ſtrength from it, The ſtrength of ſin is the law; which is the ſubject I purpoſe to treat of in the next doctrine. Therefore, it is only in the goſpel, and the promiſe thereof, that ſtrength is to be found; and the ſtrength that is in the promiſe, is the ſtrength of Chriſt, in whom all the promiſes are Yea and Amen: and hence, when you quit the promiſe by unbelief, you quit the ſtrength of Chriſt; when you rely on the promiſe by faith, you rely on the ſtrength of Chriſt: curſed unbelief, then, gives ſtrength to ſin; whereas faith ſets the ſtrength of Chriſt againſt it. O may this goſpel come to you, not in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt.

Let me cloſe this purpoſe with a word to you that are believers, and have fled for refuge from the ſtrength of ſin, to the ſtrength of a Saviour. If this hath been your courſe, I muſt tell you, though the free offer of the goſpel was your warrant to take that courſe, yet the great power of God was the thing that determined and enabled you thereunto: therefore, bleſs him that gave you counſel; for now the ſtrength of ſin is broken.

Alas! may one ſay, that hath fled to Chriſt for ſtrength, if the ſtrength of ſin be broken in all that have fled to Chriſt, then I think, I am a ſtranger to him; for I feel the ſtrength of ſin more than ever.

ANSW. Sin is not always ſtrongeſt, when the ſtrength of it is moſt felt. The world, that are under the power and dominion of ſin, have no ſenſe or feeling of the power of it, becauſe it is their element: even as a man that is in the water, feels not the weight of it, becauſe he is in the element of it; but, bring him out of the water, and put a tub full of water on his head, he will then find the ſtrength and weight of it, becauſe he is not within its element. The wicked world feel not the ſtrength of ſin, becauſe they are under the power of it, and within the very element of ſin's ſtrength: but, believer, thy beginning to feel the ſtrength of ſin, ſays, thou art getting out from under the power of it; yea, the prevailing power of ſin may ſometime take place, where the killing and domineering power of it is broken: Iniquity prevails againſt me, may the believer ſay: and, yet ſin ſhall not have dominion over him; for, he is not under the law, but under grace. But though the ſtrength of ſin be broken in you, believer; yet even the broken ſtrength of ſin may be ſo great, as to break your heart, and break your back, and break your peace, and break your confidence and courage: therefore, as you have begun to flee to Chriſt for refuge from the ſtrength of ſin, ſo you muſt hold on; living by faith on him as your ſtrength, and that in the courſe of all his appointed means, ſuch as reading, hearing, meditating, watching, and praying, and guarding againſt all the motions of that ſtrong enemy; and particularly againſt the firſt motions of ſin, and the firſt beginnings of it: great evils ariſe out of ſmall beginnings; one ſpoonful of water will quench that fire, which afterwards whole buckets cannot abate. Therefore reſiſt the beginnings of ſin, as you would reſiſt the devil. When it does not ſeem to be ſhewing all its ſtrength, that which ſin aims at, even in its weakeſt aſſaults at firſt, is to put forth its utmoſt ſtrength: Watch, therefore, and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: and let not down your watch; for if you watch one half hour, and think you may ſleep ſafely the other half, the Philiſtines will be upon you, Samſon. Whenever you begin to ſleep in ſecurity, ſin will waken upon you in its ſtrength and fury, though it were upon the back of a ſaving manifeſtation: yea, if you have been upon the mount with God, even upon the top of the mount; Satan, if he can, will throw you down from the pinacle of the temple: therefore, keep near to your Lord, your ſtrength. And, whatever means you uſe, beware of going back to your old huſband the law; for, as I deſign to ſhow in the following doctrine, the law, inſtead of helping you, will hurt you. If you wind up a clue of legal performances, expecting to overcome ſin that way, you will find it vain labour, and that you muſt wind it off again, and begin upon a new bottom, namely, Chriſt, the Lord your righteouſneſs and ſtrength. To work hard in the duties of religion, without faith in Chriſt, as your righteouſneſs, for acceptance; and ſtrength, for aſſiſtance, is as vain labour, as for a weaver to throw the ſhuttle from one ſide of the web to the other, without a threed in the ſhuttle. Why, let him work never ſo hard with feet and hands, it is loſt labour, he will never make out his web that way; yea, he but waſtes his ſtrength in doing nothing. Therefore, being divorced from the law, as a covenant of works, and condition of life, and married unto Chriſt, live upon your new Huſband Jeſus Chriſt, and live near him by faith, that you may bring forth fruit unto God. The more you live under grace, the more free will you be from the ſtrength of ſin; but the more you live under the law, the more will you be under the dominion of ſin: for, the ſtrength of ſin is the law *.

THAT ſin hath a great ſtrength, will be denied by none, but ſuch as are wholly under the power of it, and have utterly loſt the underſtanding of their own miſerable condition. There are two arms of ſin, by which it puts forth and exerts its power, and by which it attains to its unlawful dominion; the one is fraud,

* This is the concluſion of what was delivered at Kinglaſſy. The next two diſcourſes following were delivered at Orwel. The firſt two paragraphs are introductory.

fraud, and the other is force: the fraud of it is so great, that it is dreadful above all things; and the force of it is so violent, that, like a mighty torrent, it carries down all before it, with respect to which it is promised, Psal. lxxii. 15. concerning our Lord Jesus Christ, in behalf of the poor and needy that cry to him, He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence; and how he redeems them from the strength of sin, when it takes and holds them with these powerful arms, is here discovered in this triumphant song, O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? When a powerful enemy is to be subdued, the great and leading inquiry is, where the strength of the enemy lies, that so it may be attacked in its principal strength: but, if the ignorant world, that are strangers to the grace of God revealed in the gospel, should be examined and asked, Where does the strength of sin ly? They would never answer it as our apostle does here; yea, it would be a hard question, a difficult catechism to the most part of gospel-professors, especially such as are under the powerful influence of a legal spirit. It cannot but be a mystery to their understanding, to hear, that the strength of sin is the law. If the apostle Paul had been living and preaching in our day, it is likely, upon his delivering such doctrine as this, he had been taxed as a ring-leader of Antinomians and enemies to the law: and it is plain from his epistle, he did not escape this reproach, which therefore we find him wiping off, Rom. iii. 31. Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid; yea, we establish the law. Why, but is it possible to establish the law, and yet assert, that the strength of sin is the law? How can this be? Yea, it may be asserted in a consistency both with the honour of the law, and with a casting the greatest contempt upon sin: and therefore it is an essay to open this mystery, that, through grace, I would endeavour at this time, namely, that the strength of sin is the law.

After a communion-solemnity the battle is to be expected; for even in the banquetting-house, the banner of love supposes a battle at hand; yea, a battle present, as well as a battle to come: now, the strength of the battle, to be sure, is to be against the strength of sin. Believers, that know what it is to be brought to the banquetting-house, do also know that sin is the great enemy they have to combat with: and if it be asked, on the one hand, Where the believer's strength lies? Surely it lies in the Lord Jesus, his righteousness and strength, and in the banner of love and grace that he spreads over his people, who are not under the law, but under grace. And, since the apostle sets the law and grace in opposition to one another, and since the love and grace of God in Christ, is the banner and strength of the believer, it is no wonder if it be asked, on the other hand, Where the strength of sin lies? Then the apostle answers it in this manner, saying, The strength of sin is the law. Hence Christ and the law are the two main strengths here opposed: The strength of sin is the law; but thanks be to God, that giveth us the victory through Jesus Christ our Lord. Surely there is a greater mystery in sin than the world can imagine, particularly in that it could, in a manner, get the law of God upon its side, and set the law and the Law-giver at variance, insomuch, that the main battle stands betwixt them, as being the two great contending parties and opposing powers; for, as the strength of the believer is Christ's, so the strength of sin is the law. * * *

Having elsewhere finished the first doctrine, I laid down from these words; I come now to the second doctrine proposed which was,

DOCT. That the law of works is the strength of sin to the sinner that hath violate and broken it.

The method I propose is, after proving that the law is the strength of sin,

I. To enquire what law is the strength of sin.
II. What strength it is that sin hath from the law.
III. What sin the law is the strength of.
IV. How and in what respect the law is the strength of sin.
V. Whence it is that the law is the strength of sin.
VI. Make application of the whole in several uses.

I am first to prove that the law is the strength of sin. You may see a clustre of proofs for it, Rom. vii. 5,—9. compared with Rom. vi. 14.; where you see, that the reason of man's being under the dominion of sin, is his being under the law; which plainly proves, that the strength of sin is the law: But it is needless to insist in proving what is expresly asserted in the sacred text.

I. The first question I proposed was, What LAW is it that here is said to be the strength of sin? For understanding this, you would consider, that the law is taken two ways;

1. More largely, for the whole revelation of the will and mind of God in the word; To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this, it is because they have no light in them, Isa. viii. 20. It is not in this sense that you are to understand the law here; for thus the law is not the strength of sin, but is rather the means of light, life, and strength against sin, Psal. cxix. 1, 2, 3, &c. For, in this respect, it contains not only precepts to obey, but also promises of strength; and the whole covenant of promise, which is the mean of conveying spiritual life and strength. Now, in this sense, it is not opposed to the gospel of the grace of God, but contains the gospel in it; and therefore the law, under this consideration, is not here intended.

2. More strictly, the law is taken for the old-covenant rule of perfect obedience; and under this form, Do, and live. In this sense it is the strength of sin, as being opposite to the gospel, or to grace, which believers are said to be under; Ye are not under the law, but under grace. "All men besides are under the power, rule, "conditions, and authority of the law as a "covenant, says Dr. Owen; even all men who "are not instated in the new covenant through "faith in Christ Jesus, who sets up in them "and over them the rule of grace: for all "men must be, one way or other, under the "rule of God; and he rules only by the law, "or by grace: and none can be under both at "the same time."

But, for further clearing what this law is, that is here called the strength of sin, you may consider it,

(1.) In its distinction: it is to be viewed formally, as a covenant of works; and materially, as a rule of life. The law, materially considered, is the matter of the covenant of works, the ſimple precept of obedience relating to the abſtaining from what is evil, and doing what is good; this is continually and eternally binding upon all rational creatures. The law, formally conſidered, is the form of the covenant of works, commanding all duties, with a promiſe of life upon our obedience; and forbidding all ſin, with a threatening of death in caſe of diſobedience. Thus it is a covenant of life or death, upon doing or not doing. In this reſpect, the believer is not under it; it is not binding upon him: he is, indeed, bound to do what is good, and ſhun what is evil, becauſe he is ſtill under the law, materially conſidered as a rule of life; but under no obligation to it formally as a covenant, as if he were to be juſtified upon his obedience, or condemned upon his diſobedience: No; he is not under the law as a covenant, to be either juſtified or condemned. But then,

(2.) Conſider it in its parts, namely, the command, and the ſanction: the command of it, as a covenant, is not ſimply Do, or yield obedience; for this was incumbent on man before ever there was a covenant of works made with him, the law as a rule of holineſs being written on the table of his heart in his firſt make and conſtitution, before ever God entered into covenant with him: but the command of the covenant of works was that ſame Do, in its connexion with the ſanction of the promiſe of life upon doing, and threatening of death upon not doing; Do, and live: if thou do not, thou ſhalt die.

(3.) Conſider it in its properties: it is holy, juſt, and good, ſays the apoſtle, Rom. vii. 12. Holy, in its command; juſt, in its threatening; and good, in its promiſe. The command of holineſs is a holy command, the threatening of death is a juſt threatening, the promiſe of life a good promiſe. The holineſs of the command, requiring perfect perſonal obedience, flows from the holineſs of God, and the purity of his nature; the juſtice of the threatening of eternal death againſt ſin, flows from the juſtice of God, and the demerit of ſin; the goodneſs of the promiſe of eternal life upon man's obedience, iſſued from the ſovereignty of God, that was pleaſed to make ſuch a promiſe, not from the merit of that perſonal and perfect obedience, though it had been performed: no creature-obedience, whether of man or angel, hath any merit of condignity; all the merit that could take place, even in a ſtate of innocence, was a merit of paction: for, though man had obeyed perfectly, he did no more than what he was bound to do, and ſo could never merit; and therefore the promiſe of life, annexed to obedience, was a good promiſe, ſhewing forth the ſovereign goodneſs of God. Now, before this law was violated and broken by ſin, it could never be the ſtrength of ſin to man in theſe circumſtances; nay, it was rather, in every part and property of it, a bulwark againſt ſin: the command was a bright glaſs wherein the beauty of holineſs ſhined; the threatening of eternal death was a flaming ſword to make ſin terrible; and the promiſe of eternal life, upon obedience, was a golden bait to made duty delectable. But now,

(4.) Conſider this law in the violation of it, and as it is a broken law, a violated covenant; and under this conſideration it is, that the law is the ſtrength of ſin, namely, to the ſinner that hath violated and broken it: and ſo it became the ſtrength of ſin to Adam upon his fall, and to all his poſterity, for failing in the obedience and righteouſneſs therein required. We have forfeited the life therein promiſed, and incurred the death therein threatened; By one man ſin entered into the world, and death by ſin; and ſo death paſſed upon all men, for that all have ſinned, Rom. v. 12. And thus the life of God in man being loſt, through his being alienated from it, the life and ſtrength of ſin muſt ſucceed. The law then, that is the ſtrength of ſin, is the law of works, violated by the ſinner. It could not be the ſtrength of ſin to the keeper; but it is ſo to the breaker of it. To the perfect keeper of it, it is life; but to the leaſt breaker of it, it is death: and if the law be death to the breaker, it muſt be, of conſequence, the ſting and ſtrength of ſin, according to our apoſtle here, The ſting of death is ſin, and the ſtrength of ſin is the law. Now, the ſting and the ſtrength of ſin is much the ſame, even as the ſtrength of the bee lies in the ſting of it; and therefore the ſtrength of ſin muſt be the law, which, to the leaſt breaker of it, is death. The perfect keeper of the law is ſafe, if ſuch an one could be found; for it ſays, The man that does theſe things, ſhall live by them, Rom. x. 5. And this ſafety and life flows from the promiſſory ſanction of it, Do, and live. But every breaker of the law is a dead man; the law that he breaks is his death; for it ſays, Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things, written in the book of the law, to do them, Gal. iii. 10.; or, the man that does not theſe things, ſhall die in and by his ſin and diſobedience: and this death iſſues from the minatory ſanction of the law; If thou do not, thou ſhalt die. The ſtrength of ſin then, is that violated law, that made death the wages of ſin, by the penal ſanction of it. But more of this afterward.

II. The ſecond thing promiſed here was, To ſhew what ſtrength it is that ſin hath from the law. In general, all the ſtrength it hath is from that violated law of works; it would have no ſtrength to enſlave us, no ſtrength to ruin us, if there were no law violated thereby; Rom. iv. 15. Where no law is, there is no tranſgreſſion, no ſin: and where no ſin is, there is no ſtrength of ſin; conſequently, where a broken law is, there is ſin and its ſtrength; and ſo the ſtrength of ſin is the broken law: thus, whatever ſtrength ſin hath, it is from the law. But more particularly, I name only a ſix-fold ſtrength that ſin hath from the violated law of works, viz.

1. The commanding ſtrength of ſin is from the law; hence ſin is ſaid to have dominion over all that are under the law, Rom. vi. 16. For it is there declared, that it ſhall not have dominion over them that are not under it: and juſt it is, that man, who would not remain under the command of God, ſhould be put under the command of ſin; yea, it follows neceſſarily, that theſe who cannot be ſubject to the law of God, muſt be ſubject to the law of ſin. Sin receives from the law a kind of title to the dominion and rule over all the breakers of it, that remain under it, and through unbelief abide out of Chriſt, the end of the law for righteouſneſs. How the commanding ſtrength of ſin is from the law, may appear more clearly afterwards; only, it cannot be otherwiſe, if you conſider it as

as a broken law. Where the law is not broken, the law hath the command; but where the law is broken, which is a tranſgreſſion of the law, there ſin hath the command. It is true, the commanding power of the law ſtill remains in point of obligation, inſomuch, that all that are under it are obliged to obey it upon pain of death; but the tranſgreſſor of the law is under the commanding power of ſin in point of ſubjection; inſomuch, if he is enſlaved to it, and willingly captivated by it: the broken law then is the ſtrength of ſin, becauſe the breaking of the command of the law neceſſarily brings a man under the command of ſin. Though he remain under the command of the law in point of original, righteous, and indiſſolvable obligation; yet he is under the command of ſin in point of ſubjection: hence the ſtrength of ſin to command, is the law as it is broken by ſin; the refuſing of ſubjection to the law of God, is a chuſing of ſubjection to the law of ſin: to break the command of God, is to give the command to ſin; and therefore the commanding ſtrength of ſin neceſſarily iſſues from the law as it is broken by ſin.

2. The condemning ſtrength of ſin is from the law; this is more eaſy to be underſtood, therefore I inſiſt not much upon it: ſin would have no ſtrength to condemn us, if the law did not condemn ſin, ſaying, Curſed be the breaker of it, Gal. iii. 10. Now, all men are included under ſin; therefore, all are under the curſe that remain under the law. The law hath paſt a ſentence of condemnation upon all ſinners; and this gives ſin a ſtrength to condemn. It is true, ſin hath no ſtrength to condemn a believer; There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt, becauſe the law is ſatisfied, both in the commanding and curſing part thereof, in and by their head Jeſus Chriſt; yea, they are not under the law, but under grace, being united to Chriſt, the end of the law: therefore, though the law ſtill condemn their ſin, yet it cannot condemn their perſon, nor involve a member of Chriſt under the curſe. They may be afraid of condemnation through unbelief; but they are more frighted than hurt. But as to all that are out of Chriſt, ſin hath a condemning power over them; and this it hath from the law, which not only condemns their ſin, but their perſon: the condemning ſentence lights and terminates on the ſinner, that hath no covert to ſecure him therefrom.

3. The working ſtrength of ſin is from the law: ſin is no idle thing in the ſinner; nay, it is a working thing; and whence its working ſtrength flows, ſee Rom. vii. 5, 8. The motions of ſin that are by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death. Why are the motions of ſin ſaid to be from the law, and theſe motions ſaid to work in our members, but to ſhew that the working ſtrength of ſin is from the law? And how that is, the apoſtle explains, ver. 8. For ſin, taking occaſion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiſence. Hence,

4. The warring ſtrength of ſin is from the law; hence, Rom. vii. 23. it is called the law in the members, warring againſt the law in the mind: yea, it wars and wins both; for it conquers and captivates even the children of grace, Leading them captive to the law of ſin and death. This warring ſtrength of ſin iſſues out of the working ſtrength of it, for the work of it is the warfare of it; therefore, if the working ſtrength of it be from the law, ſo muſt the warring ſtrength of it be: and if it work and war in believers, how powerfully does it work and carry all before it in theſe that have no true grace, and when it meets with no oppoſition? It is true, the ſtrength of it appears moſt, where there is moſt oppoſition to it; but yet they are moſt under the ſtrength of it, to whom the ſtrength of it does leaſt appear.

5. The wounding ſtrength of ſin is from the law. Whence comes a wounded ſpirit, but from ſin? Whence come the wounded ſtrength of ſin, but from the law? A wounded ſpirit who can bear? Why, what makes it intolerable? Even becauſe the broken law preſents the intolerable wrath of God, the interminable wrath of God, the everlaſting wrath of God, as the native fruit of ſin: and when eternal wrath and eternal death is ſtinging and tormenting the man's conſcience, what is then a doing? Why the matter is, The ſting of death is ſin, and the ſtrength of ſin is the law; and that ſting is ſticking in the heart, and wounding the ſpirit. Many, indeed, are not wounded by ſin, becauſe ſin is ſleeping, and the guilty conſcience ſleeping; but, the leſs they feel of the wounding ſtrength of ſin, the more wounds are abiding them, when ſin revives and conſcience wakens.

6. The killing ſtrength of ſin is from the law, and the deſtroying power thereof; for the wages of ſin is death by the law, Rom. vi. 23.; Soul-death, as well as bodily death: and the text ſays, that as ſin is the ſting of death, ſo the law is the ſtrength of ſin. And thus the law not only hath a condemning ſtrength, that it derives unto ſin, but a damning and deſtroying ſtrength alſo; ſin could not damn the ſinner, if the law did not damn ſin, and give a damning ſtrength thereunto. All that die out of Chriſt, and under the law, will ly under the damning and deſtroying ſtrength of ſin for ever, which it derives from the law. Thus the moſt part are miſerably ſlain by ſin to eternity. There are ſome few, that are mercifully ſlain by it in time, as the apoſtle ſays, Rom. vii. 11. For ſin, taking occaſion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it ſlew me: it ſlew him, and put an end to his ſelf-righteous life; I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, ſin revived, and I died, ver. 9. This is when the Spirit of God ſhews to a man the Spirit of the law, that had ſtudied nothing before but the letter of it, and ſo kills all his hopes of life and juſtification by the deeds of the law. —— Thus you have a hint at the ſtrength that ſin derives from the law; and whatever other ſtrength it hath, is reducible to theſe particulars named.

III. The third thing propoſed, was, To ſhew, what ſin the law is the ſtrength of. In general, the law is the ſtrength of all ſin, whether original or actual. The apoſtle ſpeaks here of ſin in general; The ſtrength of ſin is the law. More particularly,

[1.] The law is the ſtrength of original ſin, whether imputed or inherent. Imputed original ſin, you know, is the guilt of Adam's firſt ſin, which is ours by imputation: inherent original ſin is the total want of original righteouſneſs, and the corruption of the whole nature, which we have by derivation from Adam. Now, the ſtrength of both is the law, and the ſtrength of both remains in all that are under the law, and out of Chriſt; for, while men are under under the law, they are members of the first Adam, in whom as their federal head, they stand guilty of the first sin, the violation of the law, or covenant of works; and from whom, as their natural root, they derive the whole depravation and corruption of their nature: for, By the offence of one, judgment came upon all men unto condemnation; and, By one man sin entered into the world, Rom. v. 12, 18. The strength then of this original guilt and corruption flows from the violated law: all that are under the law, are guilty and filthy by nature, before ever they be capable of actual sin. The most innocent-like children that are born, and come of Adam, are nothing but a generation of vipers by nature; the venom of the serpent is in them.

[2.] The law is the strength of all actual sin: it is not only the strength of the root, but the strength of the fruit; and, indeed, being the strength of the fountain, it must be the strength of the streams. The fountain of sin is the strength of sin; and if the law be the strength of the fountain, it is the strength of the streams of sin. While a man is out of Christ, the strength of sin remains, even though it were possible that he had not been guilty of any actual sin; because the strength of original sin, both imputed and inherent, remains, while he remains under the power of a violated law. But with respect to actual sin, both inward and outward, the strength thereof is this broken law, that men remain under, while they remain in unbelief, and out of Christ. For instance,

1. The strength of Atheism arises from the broken law that men are under; hence, all that are without Christ, are said to be without God, [or, ATHEISTS,] in the world, Eph. ii. 12. The power of atheism is never broken, while people are under the law; because, as the broken law can give them no right notions of God, being never designed of God as the mean of the saving knowledge of God to a sinner, so it fills the sinner with wrong notions of God, who is not to be found in the law, but in the gospel. Since the violation of the law by sin, God, in a manner, is gone out of the law, and is to be found no where but in Christ and the gospel. Now, when the sinners, that are under the law, cannot apprehend God, or seek him any where but where they themselves are, namely, in the law, and under the law; and he is not there to be seen and found, no wonder that they begin to think that he is no where, and consequently to say in their heart, There is no God; and thus atheism is strengthened: and hence the most part of men have no clear notions of God at all, because they are under the law, where God is not present with them; or, if they who are under the law have any clear notions of God, suited to the state they are under, it is a notion of him as a consuming fire to the breaker of his law. But this view of God, if it be not mercifully ordered and overruled, for making a man flee to Christ for refuge, that he may not be consumed with that fire; if it be not thus mercifully overruled, I say, then it is but a root of practical atheism; for, it makes him run away from God as Adam did, and hide himself, where he atheistically dreams that God shall not see him.

2. The strength of unbelief arises from the broken law that men are under, and keep themselves under to their own ruin. Why do they not believe the gospel? They will not join in marriage with Christ, because they are married to the law: hence marriage to Christ, supposes a divorce from the law, Rom. vii. 4. Mens legal faith, believing God will give them life and mercy upon their own obedience, or doing so and so, is the very strength of unbelief: for gospel-faith stands upon a quite other foundation, while it is a believing life and salvation to be had by the obedience of another, even of Jesus Christ. Now, while the law of works says, Come to me for life; or, Do and live; and the gospel of Christ says, You will not come to me that ye might have life; and the sinner's ears are open only to hear what the law says; he cannot believe what the gospel says, nor can fall in with it; because the remaining power of the broken law, which he is under, hath broken his courage and confidence in coming to God upon any other footing.

3. The strength of enmity arises from the broken law, which is the strength of sin, and which men are naturally under. It is the strength of enmity against God and Christ both, against law and gospel both. On the one hand, while a man is under the law that is violated by him, it says, that he is not subject to the law that he is under, as it is with all that are under the law; The carnal mind is enmity against God, and is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be, Rom. viii. 7. He cannot be subject to the law he is under: and it is strange that men should naturally desire to be under the law as a covenant, which yet they cannot be subject to as a rule, by reason of their carnal mind and wicked nature. However, the enmity of the nature is not cured, but strengthened by the law: for, let God therein appear as a commanding God, we cannot obey him; let him appear as a threatening God, we cannot endure him; let the law thunder out vengeance, this may fill the man with slavish fear, but cannot create love; nay, it increases enmity.—On the other hand, as the carnal mind is enmity against God in the law, so the legal mind is enmity against Christ in the gospel, Rom. x. 3. Men being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, do not, and will not, submit unto the righteousness of God. Hence,

4. The strength of prejudice against Christ arises from the broken law that men are under, and wedded naturally unto: the law of works, that they are under, can neither save them itself, nor will it suffer them to go to Christ to be saved by him. Though the law cannot save a sinner, but damns all that are under it, and remain under it; yet it points out no other way of salvation; it is the gospel does that: the law leads a sinner no where but to itself. It is true, the law is said to be a schoolmaster to lead unto Christ; or, as the word is, Gal. iii. 24. a SCHOOLMASTER UNTO CHRIST; or, UNTIL CHRIST COME. At the school of the law, under the convincing influence of the Spirit, men may come to see their need of a better master than the law, and so their need of Christ; but the law of itself, as it never revealed Christ, nor led to any other righteousness but that which is personal; so, as it is a covenant of works, it seeks no righteousness but the man's own personal obedience; and this being naturally impressed upon all men, they having some dim notions of life by doing, are filled with prejudice, dice againſt life by believing in another for righteouſneſs; hence, all that are wedded to the law, are filled with prejudice againſt the goſpel, as if it were no friend to the holineſs of the law; becauſe, forſooth, it decries their rotten righteouſneſs, in order to lay another foundation on which true holineſs doth grow: but this the man under the law cannot underſtand. For,

5. The ſtrength of pride ariſes from the law; Where is boaſting then? It is excluded: By what law? Of works? Nay, but by the law of faith, Rom. iii. 27. As pride was the root of the firſt rebellion and breach of the law, while this temptation was yielded to, You ſhall be as gods; ſo, in the righteous judgment of God, the broken law is the root of pride. They that are under the law, are proud of that which ſhould lay their pride; proud of a trifle, proud of a nothing, proud of rags that cannot cover their nakedneſs; yea, of filthy rags that but defile him: they glory in their ſhame. Whenever a man comes in to Chriſt, he is aſhamed of that which was his glory, and counts that but loſs which he reckoned gain to him; but while he remains out of Chriſt, and under the law, he glories in that which is his ſhame. Is it not a ſhame for a man to glory in that which is but ſtinking dung? So do theſe ſecretly boaſt of, and pride themſelves in ſome poor petty duty and righteouſneſs of theirs; whereas the apoſtle calls all perſonal righteouſneſs dung, when compared with Chriſt's imputed righteouſneſs, Phil. iii. 8, 9. But much more, is it not a ſhame for men to glory in their ſins, as ſome do in their profane ſwearing, and drinking, and the like debauchery? Yet, even this is rooted in the violated law. For,

6. Even the ſtrength of profaneneſs ariſes from the broken law, that men are under and remain under by unbelief. Though profane perſons are evidently under no ſubjection to the law, yet even their profaneneſs proves that they are under bondage to it: for no man is under the bondage of ſin, and under ſubjection to it, but he that is under the bondage of the law, both in its commanding and condemning power; and though the ſenſe of their obligation to the law-command be of no force to bind them to obedience, yet the ſtrength of their ſin and diſobedience diſcovers the ſtrength of a legal temper, and the power of a covenant of works that they are under. You will think ſtrange to underſtand, that there is a ſecret boaſting of their law-righteouſneſs, even under the open contempt they are pouring upon the authority of the law; and this appears, either in their ignorant hope, on the one hand; or their fooliſh deſpair on the other.—On the one hand, their ignorant hope, thinking either the law will juſtify them in their preſent impiety, or upon their future amendment and penitency: hence profane men will juſtify themſelves in their curſing, and ſwearing, and drinking, though they ſwear by faith and conſcience; Why, ſay they, that is no ſwearing: and though they drink away their ſtock, or tipple away their time; yet if they have any ſenſe or reaſon left, why, ſay they, that is no drunkenneſs: and as they juſtify themſelves, ſo they hope the law will not condemn them; and ſo they expect it will juſtify them: there is part of their ignorant hope, Deut. xxix. 19.—On the other hand, fooliſh deſpair may be latent at the root of their profaneneſs, which alſo diſcovers how much they are wedded to the law, even when they are breaking it. Perhaps they have eſſayed ſome duties, at a certain time of their life; or, at leaſt, been conſcious of the obligation they were under to obey the law; but having little hope of ſucceſs, or coming ſpeed that way, or of gaining life by their doing, they are become deſperate: and, the more they give up themſelves to profaneneſs, the more deſperate they grow, and hopeleſs of winning life by the law, or of paying the debt they owe to it; therefore, like deſperate debtors, finding themſelves out of capacity to pay it, they take on ſtill more and more, concluding there is no hope, Jer. xxii. 25. and xviii. 12. Which does not at all prove that they have no manner of inclination to pay debt, but rather their ſecret willingneſs to do it if they were able, but that they have no hope. Such is the caſe of many profane perſons, they are deſperately taking on more and more debt to the law by their ſin, which is ſo far from proving them to be under the law, that as it declares them under the curſe of it; ſo it proves their ſecret inclination to do and live; that it is through deſperation they give up themſelves to all wickedneſs, having no hope of life that way: and the more their profaneneſs increaſes, the more their deſperation grows, whereby they take on more and more debt, being hopeleſs of ever paying it, and expecting no profit in obeying the law, Job xxi. 15. Thus there is at the bottom a ſtrength of legal pride: becauſe the man cannot win life by his doing, therefore he deſperately fights againſt that law which he hath no hope of ſatisfying, and chuſes rather to be damned in his unrighteouſneſs, than be obliged to the righteouſneſs of another.

7. The ſtrength of hypocriſy and formality ariſes from the broken and miſtaken law; hence, they that are under the law, are under this deluſion, that the law will be pleaſed with any ſervice they may give it, though it be but outſide conformity thereunto; like the Phariſees, of whoſe legal performances Chriſt ſays, Except your righteouſneſs exceed the righteouſneſs of the ſcribes and Phariſees, you cannot be ſaved. The legaliſt is a lover of himſelf, and his own righteouſneſs; and his ſelf-love blinds him, that he ſecretly ſuppoſes any thing that comes from him will be acceptable to the law. As the law is broken and violated, ſo it is but broken pieces of the law that he ſees, becauſe his underſtanding alſo is broken and blinded, he knows not the perfection thereof; and therefore, making to himſelf an imperfect law, he doubts not but it will be ſatisfied with his imperfect righteouſneſs: yea, he may think his righteouſneſs as perfect as the law is, ſaying, with the young man in the goſpel, All theſe things have I done from my youth up. Thus hypocriſy and formality iſſue from the law as it is broken and abuſed, manked and maimed by them that are under it.

8. The ſtrength of ſecurity ariſes from the law, as it is broken and abuſed by men: for they that are under the law, make their very obedience to it (however moral and external only it is) a handle for their ſecurity, contempt, and neglect of the law. Thus ſaid the whore in the Proverbs, chap. vii. 14. This day have I paid my vows, and offered my peace-offering; come let us take our fill of loves. Her duty hardened her in ſin and ſecurity: and thus many go to the church, they go to their prayers, they go to their duty; and then they imagine, that as they have made ſufficient amends for what is paſt, ſo they have made ſufficient proviſion for preventing the bad effects of what is to come; they may now indulge themſelves in their pleaſure, ſince they ſuppoſe they have ſatisfied the Law-giver with ſome obedience. What is this but the ſtrength of ſecurity foſtered by the law? When men after ſuch and ſuch duties allow themſelves a latitude, they draw ſtrength to their carnal ſecurity from the law; We ſhall have peace, though we walk after the imaginations of our hearts. And thus it is the ſtrength of negligence alſo: none are readily more negligent of the duties of the law, than theſe that boaſt of the law, and of winning to heaven by their good works; whence is this, but from the law of works cutting them ſhort of ſtrength through their abuſe of it? Why, is it poſſible that men will neglect duty, and yet think to be juſtified by their duties? Yea, and why ſo? Becauſe they make their own duty a ſalve for their ſore; and as they but ſeldom find their ſores, ſo they ſeldom make application even of their own ſalve. In a word, the law of works is thus the ſtrength of all ſin.

IV. The fourth thing propoſed, was, To ſhow how and in what reſpect the law is the ſtrength of ſin. This is the main queſtion and the grand myſtery here to be ſolved; for, that the law is the ſtrength of ſin, is plain from the text, wherein the Holy Ghoſt declares it in expreſs terms; terms that we durſt never have uſed, if the Spirit of God had not uſed them before us: but how the law is the ſtrength of ſin, remains yet to be conſidered. Beſides the hints that I have given before, there are theſe eight following reſpects, wherein the law of works, now violated and broken, is the ſtrength of ſin, ever ſince the original breach and violation thereof.

1. The law is the ſtrength of ſin, in reſpect of the extenſive malediction and curſe of the law, whereof the power and ſtrength of ſin is a principal part, and ſo the breach of it could not but neceſſarily infer the ſtrength of ſin. Death temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal, was the penalty of the law, in caſe of the breach thereof. Now, ſpiritual death is nothing elſe but the power of ſin; and this power of ſin, or ſpiritual death, being the main breach of the law-threatening; In the day thou eateſt thou ſhalt ſurely die, Ezek. xviii. 4. Gal. iii. 10. Now, this is the primary and radical reſpect wherein the law is called the ſtrength of ſin; any other particular that I am to mention is rather ſecondary and conſequential unto this. Let this, therefore, be remembered, as the main thing, the chief reſpect wherein the law is the ſtrength of ſin, that it cannot be otherwiſe in the nature of the thing, and according to the conſtitution of the law, or covenant of works, denouncing the leading judgment of ſpiritual death upon the breaker of it. No ſooner was it broken, than mankind came under the curſe of it; and all men, by nature, being under the curſe of the law, they are by this very curſe under the power and ſtrength of ſin, becauſe the ſtrength of ſin is the main part of the curſe of the law: man's being given up to the power of ſin, is the main branch of the puniſhment of ſin, and the chief death threatened in the law. Temporal death is nothing, if you take away the ſtrength of ſin; it hath no ſting, no ſtrength to harm. Eternal death would have no being; and, as it lies in mere torment, is but the conſequential evil of ſin, and nothing to the intrinſical evil and power of it in ſpiritual death. This being the main threatening, the main curſe; to be under the curſe of the law, and under the power of ſin, is one and the ſame thing. In this reſpect then, eſpecially, the ſtrength of ſin is the law. Happy is the believer in Chriſt, that is delivered from the curſe of the law; for, ipſo facto, by this very mean he is delivered from the ſtrength of ſin: and ſad is your caſe, that are Chriſtleſs unbelieving ſinners, and who have never fled to Chriſt for refuge; for you, being under the curſe of the law, are neceſſarily under the power of ſin: This is the main part of your curſed ſtate, that the ſtrength of ſin is not felt, is not broken, is not weakened in you; but its commanding and condemning power both of them remain, and will remain while you are under the law, for the ſtrength of ſin is the law; and if you be not diſjoined and divorced from the law, and joined and united to Chriſt the end of the law, the ſtrength of ſin will be your death and your doom for ever. But then,

2. The law is the ſtrength of ſin, in reſpect of its office, to diſcover ſin, and make it known in the power and ſtrength of it; Rom. iii. 20. By the law is the knowledge of ſin; for, without the law, ſin was dead, ſays the ſame apoſtle, Rom. vii. 8. Dead, and, as it were, deſtitute of life and ſtrength, becauſe the life and power of it was hid and out of ſight: For I was alive without the law, ſays he, ver. 9. Before the commandment came with power, diſcovering the ſpirituality of the law, I was, as it were, without the law; and ſo they that are without law, are without ſin; for, where no law is, there is no tranſgreſſion. Without the law, then, ſin was dead; and I was alive, the life and ſtrength of ſin did not appear; and I thought, I had an innocent and holy life of it: But when the commandment came, ſo as by the law I got the knowledge of ſin, then the life and ſtrength of ſin appeared; ſin revived, and I died. Before the law came with convincing power, might he ſay, ſin was dead, and I was alive; but whenever the commandment came, giving me the knowledge of ſin, then ſin was alive, and I died; my carnal confidence died, my hope of life by the law died: for then I ſaw the ſtrength of ſin. Thus the law is the ſtrength of ſin, in reſpect of its diſcovering the life and ſtrength of it, which without the law is dead. Why, may one think, if ſin be dead without the law, then better want the law that gives life to it. To this we reply; The apoſtle here ſpeaks of ſin's being dead in point of the diſcovery thereof; and ſin's being dead in this ſenſe, and the ſtrength of it hid, is no mercy, but a miſery. It is the miſery of unconverted ſinners, that the ſtrength of it lies dead and buried, as it were, in the rotten ſepulchre of their wicked heart and corrupt nature, where, like a ſtinking carcaſe, it is putrifying the whole ſoul; while yet the ſinner, that is alſo dead in ſins and treſpaſſes, does not find the filthy ſmell thereof; for ſin is nothing but death and putrifaction, but the dead man does not find the filthy ſmell of death and rottenneſs about him. The life and ſtrength of ſin is juſt ſpiritual death, and ſoul-defilement; and when this death is hid and out of ſight to the ſinner, ſinner, and unfelt by him, the ſtrength of that ſin and death is not the leſs, but the more fearful and ſtrong, that it is not ſeen and felt: therefore, as it is a mercy to get effectual conviction of ſin by the law, ſo it is a miſery to be under the power and ſtrength of ſin, and yet not to know it; for then the ſinner, that is alive without the law, is but living in ſin, and yet dead while he lives: the ſtrength of ſin being dead and hid to him, while without the law, which is the ſtrength of ſin, in reſpect of its office to diſcover it.

3. The law is the ſtrength of ſin, in reſpect of its deficiency and weakneſs through our fleſh to deſtroy the ſtrength of ſin; For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the fleſh, God ſending his own Son, in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and for ſin condemned ſin in the fleſh, Rom. viii. 3. The law is ſaid to be weak through the fleſh, or through our corrupt nature, inſomuch, that it cannot juſtify a ſinner, it cannot ſanctify, it cannot ſave: the broken law cannot give life or ſtrength to the breaker of it; there is no help to be expected there againſt the ſtrength of ſin. Its commanding, condemning, enſlaving, and ruining ſtrength being from the law, is violated by us; ſurely no help againſt the dominion and rule of ſin can come from the law: yea, the law was never ordained of God to convey grace, or ſpiritual ſtrength, to the ſoul of man: had it not been ſo, the promiſe and the goſpel had been needleſs, as the apoſtle argues, Gal. iii. 21. If there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteouſneſs ſhould have been by the law. If it could have given life or ſtrength, then it would have produced righteouſneſs, and we ſhould have been juſtified by it. The law diſcovers ſin and condemns it, but gives no ſtrength to oppoſe it; it was never deſigned of God as his ordinance for the dethroning of ſin, nor for the deſtruction of the power of ſin. It was deſigned to declare the whole duty of man, but never had power to bar the entrance of ſin, nor to caſt out ſin, when it is once enthroned: and the broken law hath nothing to do with ſinners, but to judge, curſe, and condemn them; it neither contains any grace, nor communicates any for the deſtroying of ſin: therefore they that are under the law, are under the dominion of ſin. The law is holy, but it cannot make them holy that have made themſelves unholy; the law is juſt, but it cannot make them juſt, nor juſtify them whom it does condemn; the law is good, but it can do them no good that have once broken it. Sin will never be dethroned by it, and will never give place to the law, either in its title to dominion, or in its power to exert the ſame. When the law preſſes on the conſcience of theſe that are under it, perplexing or diſquieting them; or when the commandment comes unto them, ſo as ſin revives, and they die, as I ſaid already; that is, when the law gives power to ſin to ſlay the hope of the ſinner, and to diſtreſs him with the apprehenſion of guilt and death; when the law is thus giving power to ſin to diſquiet and condemn ſinners, then, being preſt with a ſenſe of the guilt of ſin, and deprived of all reſt and peace in their minds, they will reſolve to caſt off the yoke of ſin, and endeavour it in ſome inſtances of duty, and abſtinence from ſin. But, alas! the law cannot enable them hereunto; it cannot give them life and ſtrength to go through with what their convictions preſs them unto; and hence they faint after a while, and grow weary, and at length give quite over, if grace come not in with that aid that the law cannot give.

4. The law is the ſtrength of ſin, not only in reſpect of its deficiency, for giving ſtrength againſt ſin; but in reſpect of its efficiency, in giving ſtrength to ſin through the corruption of our nature. As the law is weak through the fleſh, and affords no ſtrength againſt ſin; ſo it is ſtrong through the fleſh, for increaſing the ſtrength of ſin. In the former it is deficient, in this latter it is efficient through the fleſh; hence it is ſaid, Rom. iv. 15. The law worketh wrath; that is, not only wrath in God againſt the ſinner, that breaks the law; but alſo wrath in the ſinner againſt God, and enmity againſt him; and both theſe go together. If the law work wrath in God againſt the ſinner, the revelation of this wrath works wrath and enmity in the ſinner againſt God. It is only the love and grace of God, revealed in the goſpel, that works love; We love him, becauſe he firſt loved us, 1 John iv. 19. Now, the law makes no revelation of the love, but only of the wrath of God; and therefore the law, as it is the revelation of wrath, worketh wrath. Try it when you will, you will find that it is only the revelation of God's love that worketh love; and that is the revelation of him in the goſpel, as a gracious God, a promiſing God, a pitying, and ſin-pardoning God, a reconciled God in Chriſt, this works love: but God, as revealed in the broken law is merely a commanding God, a threatening God, a judging and avenging God, a terrible God, a conſuming fire to ſinners; and this works wrath and enmity. Now, love being the fulfilling of the law, and the ſum thereof; enmity is the ſum of all ſin: therefore, while the law works wrath and enmity, it is the ſtrength of ſin. The goſpel works love, the law works enmity: and as the faith of the goſpel works by love; ſo legal faith, or rather unbelief, works by enmity: and as the law works wrath and enmity, ſo it works fear and bondage; ſlaviſh fear, and dreadful bondage, which is attended with diſorder, diſturbance, and deſpair.

5. The law is the ſtrength of ſin, in reſpect of its oppoſition to the goſpel, wherein grace and ſtrength alone is exhibited for the deſtruction of ſin. The law is not of faith, Gal. iii. 12.—The law and grace are ſet in oppoſition to one another, in many places, as Rom. xi. 6. If by grace, then it is no more of work, otherwiſe grace is no more grace; but if it be of work, then it is no more grace, otherwiſe work is no more work. The command of the law, as a covenant of works, Do and live, ſtands directly oppoſite to the call of the goſpel, which is to lay hold on eternal life upon the doing of another: the threatening of the law, and the promiſe of it alſo, ſtand directly oppoſite to the profer and promiſe of the goſpel; the threatening of the law is a threatening of death to the ſinner for his diſobedience; the promiſe of the goſpel is a promiſe of life to the ſinner through the obedience of the SURETY: the promiſe of the law was a promiſe of life to him that works for it, and works perfectly; the promiſe of the goſpel is a promiſe of life to him that works not, but believes on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, Rom. iv. 4, 5. The conditional promiſe of the law, whereof the condition is no leſs than perfect, perſonal perſonal obedience, is directly oppoſite to the free and abſolute promiſe of the goſpel, and the freedom of the grace thereof, which is to be had without money and without price.—The righteouſneſs of the law, and the righteouſneſs of the goſpel, ſtand alſo directly oppoſite: the righteouſneſs of the law is only for the perfect man, that never ſinned; the righteouſneſs of the goſpel is for a ſinner, a ſinner overwhelmed with ſin: the righteouſneſs of the law is the righteouſneſs of man, and the righteouſneſs of the goſpel is the righteouſneſs of God; it is a righteouſneſs of another, and in another than ourſelves: it is a righteouſneſs imputed without works, to a ſinner believing in Chriſt, Rom. iii. 21, 22. The ſtrength of the law for obedience, was the natural ſtrength that God gave to Adam at firſt; it was home-bred, and yet but ſtrength only in the ſtream, which is dried up, ſo as by nature we are without ſtrength; and ſin hath the poſſeſſion of all the ſtrength of nature: but the ſtrength of the goſpel is a borrowed ſtrength, as well as the righteouſneſs a borrowed righteouſneſs, ſaying, In the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength; and ſo it is the ſtrength of the fountain, that can never be dried up. The law requires all to be done in our own ſtrength; the goſpel expects nothing to be done but in the ſtrength of another: the law gives no ground of claim for life, but by debt to the doer; the goſpel gives to claim for it, but by grace to the ſinner. Now, there can be nothing more oppoſite than law and goſpel; and therefore, in reſpect of the oppoſition of the law to the goſpel of the grace of God, it may be called the ſtrength of ſin, ſince it oppoſes that which alone can deſtroy that ſtrength.

6. The law is the ſtrength of ſin, in reſpect of its agreement with the natural impreſſion that it hath left upon the heart of the children of men; and by reaſon of which they ſtand out againſt Chriſt, in and by whom alone the ſtrength of ſin is broken: I called it an agreement, becauſe the law, though it will never accept of any work that a ſinner can do, yet it requires the ſinner to do whatever it required at the firſt, and that under the pain of eternal death, which he hath already incurred by ſin; and under the pain of forfeiture of eternal life, which he hath already forfeit by his failure; for the law hath not loſt its authority to command, though we have loſt ability to obey. Now, the natural impreſſions that the law hath left upon the children of men, are agreeable to the original conſtitution of the law, or covenant of works. The law was the firſt liquor poured into the veſſel of man's nature, and the veſſel ſmells of that liquor that was firſt put into it; hence it is ſo natural for all men to expect life no other way but in a way of doing for it. And theſe legal impreſſions, left on our nature by the law, are the ſtrength of ſin in manifold reſpects, eſpecially in their agreement with the law to oppoſe Chriſt in the goſpel: hence the legal mind oppoſes Chriſt as a Prophet, as it is ignorant of God's righteouſneſs, and averſe from being taught this leſſon, taking up God as ſtill dealing with it in the old-covenant way. The legal conſcience oppoſes Chriſt as a Prieſt; for, whenever it is awakened, it knows nothing of ſeeking peace by the blood of Chriſt, but natively looks to the law, and its own obedience for it, ſaying, O ſince I have diſpleaſed God by my diſobedience, how ſhall I pleaſe him but by my obedience? If I have offended him by my ſin, how ſhall I pacify him but by my duty? It is as natural for conſcience thus to act and ſpeak when it is preſſed, as it is natural for man to breathe in the air, or for a fiſh to ſwim in the water: hence the natural conſcience, inſtead of leading men to Chriſt, in whom alone God is well-pleaſed and ſatisfied, it leads them to the law, and ſo the quite oppoſite way to Chriſt. The legal will alſo oppoſes Chriſt as a King; for, when he is rejected as a Prieſt, he cannot be received as a King: for his ſpiritual kingdom is founded upon his Prieſthood, inſomuch, that they who receive him not for righteouſneſs, cannot receive him for ſtrength; and conſequently the ſtrength of ſin, both to condemn and command, remains. In a word, the will is unwilling to be ſaved in this way of grace, and the natural man cannot receive theſe things of the Spirit of God and the goſpel; men's legal notions and imaginations exalt themſelves againſt the knowledge of Chriſt, 2 Cor. x. 4, 5. And they are ſo high and mighty, that nothing can pull them down but the power of omnipotency; the weapons that are mighty through God to the pulling down of ſtrong holds, caſting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itſelf againſt the knowledge of God.—Again, theſe legal impreſſions left by the law, have a weakening influence upon the graces of the Spirit, where they are implanted; for the implantation of grace does not wholly root out the impreſſion of the law in time, ſuch a deep rooting it hath in our nature. Theſe weeds of legal impreſſions, that grow up in the garden of the heart, draw away the ſap and ſtrength of the fruits of the Spirit, and weaken them. They either hinder or weaken faith, For the law it not of faith; it oppoſes both the doctrine of faith, and the grace of faith: it hinders and weakens repentance; for goſpel-repentance iſſues from that faith which the law oppoſes: it hinders and weakens love; for the man cannot love that God, whom, by the law, he apprehends to be an enemy: and hence it hinders and oppoſes joy in the Lord; for the legal ſpirit is a ſpirit of heavineſs, in oppoſition to joy; and ſo it eats out the man's ſtrength, for the joy of the Lord is our ſtrength: and conſequently, when thus the law weakens and oppoſes the ſtrength of grace, in this reſpect it is the ſtrength of ſin; its agreement with the natural impreſſion that it hath left on the hearts of the children of men, creates a natural diſagreement betwixt us and Chriſt, betwixt us and the goſpel, and the grace of the goſpel. Pride of natural righteouſneſs ſtands up againſt, and oppoſes the goſpel-righteouſneſs.

7. The law is the ſtrength of ſin, in reſpect of the irritating quality of its precept upon corrupt nature; Sin, taking occaſion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiſcence, Rom. vii. 8. And here it is ſtrange to think of the different effects of the law of works, in ſtrengthening ſin on the one hand, by its agreement with proud and ſelf-righteous nature, as I have been ſhewing; and on the other hand, by its diſagreeableneſs with, and oppoſition unto carnal and corrupt nature, which is irritated by the law. Sin takes occaſion by the commandment, and ſo the law is the ſtrength of ſin; as it is in the Latin proverb, Occaſio facit furem, "Occaſion makes the thief." Thus Achan cham; I saw such and such things, and seeing them I coveted them, and took them. The law does not, properly speaking, give occasion to sin; but sin takes occasion from the law to be operative and working; yea, such is the corruption of nature, that the more God's law forbids sin, the more we break out into sin; as a dam or bank made in the midst of a strong current of water, the more it is dammed up, the more it swells; and, when once it prevails, it breaks over with the greater violence: so here, the more God's law opposes sin, the more does sin rise, and swell, and rage: Nitimur in vetitum, &c. Why this? Even because there is such a contrariety betwixt God's holy law and our unholy nature.—Again, in regard of righteous nature, now proud and selfish, they seem to agree, and do really so in some things: for, according to the tenor of the covenant of works, man would have had a personal righteousness to have glorified in, if God had designed him life that way; and proud nature abused that original constitution, which God never designed should stand but for a little, to be like a scaffold for building up a better covenant; yet proud nature grips, as I said, to that wherein the law would have exalted it, if it had stood: but, in regard of corrupt and carnal nature, there is such an opposition to the very command of the law, that it is not subject thereto, neither can be; nay, instead of subjection to it, it is irritate and increased by it. In this sense it may be said, that when the law enters, offence doth abound: for sin, like a mad horse, rages, and is the more furious, that it is checked with the bridle.

8. To name no more, As the law is the strength of sin, in respect of the irritating quality of the command upon corrupt nature; so the law is the strength of sin, in respect of the severity of the sanction thereof; which, so far as it is regarded by us now in our obedience to the law, in these our sinful circumstances under a broken covenant of works, cannot but be the strength of sin and self, to all that are influenced in their obedience, with a respect thereunto. The sanction of the law, by which it was cast into the form of a covenant of works, was the promise of life upon our obedience, and threatening of death upon disobedience: now, to obey, or do, from a regard to that sanction, is to do duty, from the hope of eternal life by doing; and to shun evil, from the fear of eternal death and damnation: but, for a man to be thus under the coaction and compulsion of the law, is to be under the power of sin, notwithstanding his best performances; for the man that is acted and influenced by that sanction, cannot now be acted from love to God, which alone is true holiness, nor from a view to God's glory and honour, but merely to himself; which is evident from his legal hope of heaven, upon his obedience, influenced by the promissory sanction of the law; and from his legal fears of hell, upon his disobedience, influenced by the penal sanction of the law. This power of the legal sanction that he is under, keeps him under the power of sin; for, like a strong chain, it fetters him, that he cannot act freely and willingly; nay, he acts only in a mercenary and slavish way, like a slave to the law, and not like a servant to God. Believers, so far as they are delivered from the law, act freely, and with a willing mind; not by the coaction and compulsion of the law, but without respect either to the law-promise of life upon doing, or the law-threatening of death upon not doing; being, by virtue of the new nature, ready to do the will of their God and Father in Christ with pleasure: this title to life, and security from death, standing allenarly upon the obedience and satisfaction of their Head and Surety. Therefore, there is no law-promise of life, or threatening of death, that they have to regard; and consequently their obedience must be chearful, free, willing, and natural, without all legal compulsion. As the body needs no law-sanction, to compel it to eat, drink, sleep, walk, or stand, or do any of the works of nature; even so it is natural to the believer, according to the measure of his freedom from legal bondage, to act freely in the Lord's service, without the coaction of the law: being loosed from it, the strength of sin is broken, and he is at liberty to serve the Lord without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him. But such as are under the power of legal compulsion, and are acted and influenced by a regard to the sanction of the law-promise and threatening, and so under the power of legal hopes and fears; that is, the hope of eternal life upon their doing so and so, and the fear of eternal death upon their failure, they are, on this very account, under the power and strength of sin; where, if they remain, and live, and die, their hope will fail them, and their fears will come upon them: for, as their HOPE is a dead hope, that cannot purify their heart; so their FEAR is a slavish fear, that makes them depart from God. It is true, under the power of these legal hopes and fears, influenced by the promissory and penal sanction of the law, the poor sinner that is thus in bondage to the law, may perform a multitude of duties, and be very strict and devout, as if who but he? and yet, the more he does, the more he undoes himself, being intangled in that yoke of bondage, as the expression is, Gal. v. 1. The yoke but galls his neck, and holds him back from taking on Christ's easy yoke. Yea, in these circumstances, he can bring forth no fruit that is truly and spiritually good: for, as they only that are divorced from the law, and married to Christ, do bring forth fruit unto God, Rom. vii. 4.; so they that remain thus under the yoke of the law, can bring forth no fruit, but to themselves and the devil.—Thus you see how and in what respect the law is the strength of sin. I proceed

V. To the fifth thing proposed, which was, To show whence it is that the law is the strength of sin. From what spring and source does this arise? whence comes it, that sin should have a commanding and condemning power over a man, that is under the law; and that, as the law cannot deliver him, so it detains him a captive unto sin? Several reasons of this doctrine are interspersed among the particulars on the former heads: But, beside what hath been laid,

1. That the law, now violated and broken, is the strength of sin, proceeds from the holiness and justice of the Law-giver: he is of purer eyes than that he can behold iniquity; and, justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne: therefore, when his holiness and purity appearing in the precept of the law, is crossed by sin, his justice and equity declared in the threatening of

of the law, cannot but break forth againſt ſin in the righteous puniſhment thereof. Now, ſin being the greateſt evil, and the greateſt evil deſerving the greateſt puniſhment; and there being no greater puiſhment of ſin, than that of puniſhing it by ſin, and giving up the ſinner to the power and ſtrength of it; therefore, this juſt and holy God makes the ſtrength of ſin to be the ſtrength of the ſanction of the law, to the greateſt ruin of the breaker of it. There is no evil like the evil of ſin, which is the tranſgreſſion of the law; and no judgment like the judgment of being given up to the ſtrength of ſin: therefore, the moſt juſt and holy Law-giver makes the penalty of the broken law to be the ſtrength of ſin. So that to ſay, the ſtrength of ſin is the law, is ſo far from reflecting any diſhonour upon the purity of the law, that it is a declaration of the holineſs of the command, and the juſtice of the threatening both.

2. That the law is the ſtrength of ſin, proceeds from the nature of the LAW, in the office that God hath deſigned and aſſigned to it; and that is, not to be the miniſtration of life, and ſtrength againſt ſin, but to be ſubſervient to the goſpel, which is the miniſtration of life and righteouſneſs, 2 Cor. iii. 7,—10. The law was never appointed of God to be the miniſtration of life, but of death, even ſpiritual death, and thereupon of further condemnation; but yet, as it is a miniſtration of death and condemnation, it is appointed to be a ſervant to the goſpel; and hence law-commands, and law-threatenings both, are brought into the goſpel-diſpenſation, to be ſubſervient thereto, and to illuſtrate the glory thereof, and make way for its powerful efficacy, for the pulling down the ſtrong holds of ſin, to which office the goſpel only is appointed of God. And as the darkneſs of the night ſerves to ſhew forth the brightneſs of the day; ſo the ſtrength of ſin, that ariſes from the broken law, ſerves to illuſtrate and manifeſt the ſtrength of grace, that is brought in by the glorious goſpel.

3. That the law is the ſtrength of ſin, proceeds from the very nature of SIN, and its direct oppoſition and contrariety to the law. You know, when two are of a contrary diſpoſition, they never agree together, but will ever be brawling and quarrelling one with another; ſo, whatever agreement there be betwixt the law, as a covenant of works, and proud ſelf-righteous nature, yet ſuch a diſagreeing couple is God's holy law and our corrupt nature, that there is a direct contrariety betwixt them. The law of God bears the image of God; it is perfectly juſt, perfectly holy, and like unto God the giver of it: but the corruption of our nature bears the image of the devil, being wholly unjuſt, and altogether unholy: ſo ſays the apoſtle, The law is holy, but I am carnal; in me, that is, in my fleſh, dwells no good thing, Rom. vii. 14, 18. Now, as natural philoſophy teaches, that in winter-time, the coldneſs of the air and froſt, that may be about the fire, makes the heat of the fire more intenſe, ſo that it burns a great deal the faſter and fiercer; ſo God's law, coming to, and meeting with our corrupt nature, certainly it makes corruption more intenſe and more violent. Hence, when the commandment comes, ſin revives, and riſes up in the fury of its ſtrength; as, when a deadly foe comes upon one, the perſon gathers all his ſtrength together to oppoſe him. The ſtrength of ſin is not the leſs before the commandment come, or the law appear; but when the law appears, the ſtrength of ſin appears, and exerts itſelf: As fire and water are oppoſites, though at a diſtance; yet their oppoſition to one another is not ſo evident till they meet and come together, and then there is a mighty ſputtering and ſtriving between them: ſo the holy law and the unholy heart are oppoſite, though they do not meet; but when once they meet together, the heart riſes, and rages, and oppoſes it like the devil. This appears whenever a man is convinced by the law, and the conviction is merely legal, ſo as the man ſees nothing but the ſpirituality of the law-command, and the ſeverity of the law-curſe: I ſay, when the conviction is merely legal, the ſeverity of the curſe raiſes a trembling devil of fear in the awakened conſcience, and the ſpirituality of the command raiſes a devil of enmity in the carnal heart.——And thus, from the very nature of ſin, the law is the ſtrength of ſin.

4. That the law is the ſtrength of ſin, eſpecially to theſe that are under the goſpel-diſpenſation, ariſes from the nature of UNBELIEF, and the malignant influence thereof; as is evident from that word of our Lord Jeſus, John iii. 18. He that believes is not condemned, but he that believes not, is condemned already, becauſe he believes not in the name of the only begotten Son of God. He that believes not the goſpel, is condemned already by the law. Now, here conſider, what the law-condemnation is. I told you formerly, that the leading and ſevereſt part of the law-ſentence of condemnation is juſt the ſtrength of ſin; ſo as, to be under the curſe and condemnation of the law, is to be under the power of ſin, in its commanding and condemning ſtrength. But what influence hath the not-believing the goſpel upon a man's being thus condemned? Was he not in a ſtate of condemnation, though he had never heard the goſpel? Why then does Chriſt ſay, He that believes not is condemned already? Why, it demonſtrates, that though all the world be under the power of ſin, by the ſentence of the law; yet they that are under the goſpel, and believe not in the Lord Jeſus, their condemnation is condemnation indeed; they ſtand under the condemning ſentence of the law, and ſo under the power of ſin more than ever, becauſe the goſpel-news of freedom from that condemnation is rejected. It is not my office as a Saviour, might Chriſt ſay, to condemn them; For God ſent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be ſaved: but it is the office of the law, as it is the miniſtration of death and condemnation, to condemn them; ſo that they are condemned already by another hand; yea, condemned already by the law, becauſe they believe not in me, who am not come to condemn them, but to ſave them. No ſooner is this goſpel-ſalvation rejected, but the law-condemnation is ſtrengthened and fortified; for then the law, which before was dumb and ſilent, as it were, after the goſpel hath ſpoken a word of freedom and ſalvation from the ſtrength of ſin, and the man refuſes and rejects it, the law opens its mouth, in a manner, ſaying in effect, I take inſtruments upon this refuſal of yours, that under my dominion and power you ſtand by your own conſent, and that the ſtrength of ſin ſhall not be abated, but increaſed; and let this ſtand regiſtrated and recorded in the book of conſcience,

to bear witneſs to the equity and juſtice of my final ſentence, when the books ſhall be opened at the great day. In a word, unbelief holds and detains the man under the law, by refuſing Chriſt and the grace of the goſpel: and, as the law is the ſtrength of ſin, ſo unbelief ſtrengthens the hands of the law, to kill, and condemn, and enſlave the ſinner under the commanding and condemning power of ſin; and if the law be the ſtrength of ſin, and unbelief the ſtrength of the law, then unbelief is the ſtrength of the ſtrength of ſin, as it contributes to keep the ſinner more under the law than ever.—Thus you ſee how the law's being the ſtrength of ſin ariſes from unbelief, which rejects the ſtrength offered in the goſpel for deſtroying ſin. And ſo much for the grounds of the doctrine.

VI. The ſixth thing propoſed, was, To make Application of this doctrine. And this we ſhall eſſay in the following uſes, viz. 1. In an uſe of Caution. 2. Of Information. 3. Of Examination. 4. Of Exhortation.

1ſt, It may be improved, we ſay, for Caution and Dehortation. Is the law the ſtrength of ſin, in the manner I have deſcribed?

1. The firſt caution I offer is, O man, woman, think not the worſe or the leſs of the law, that it is the ſtrength of ſin: nay, you have reaſon to think the better of it, and to have the higher thoughts of it, as it is the eternal rule of righteouſneſs; for, if it were not a holy law, it would not irritate and exaſperate our unholy nature at that rate, ſo as to augment the commanding power and ſtrength of ſin: if it were not a juſt law, it would not condemn ſin at that rate, ſo as to give it a condemning ſtrength over the ſinner. That the law is the ſtrength of ſin, in the reſpect I have named, is ſo far from being a reflection upon, or a detracting from the holineſs and juſtice of the law, that it ſerves rather to illuſtrate the purity of the command of the law, as a rule of holineſs; and the equity of the penal ſanction thereof, as it is a covenant of works.

2. The ſecond caution is, As you are not to think the worſe of the law, ſo you are not to think the better of ſin, that the ſtrength of it is the law. As you are to think the better of the law, that it makes the troubleſom ſea of corruption to rage, and binds over the ſinner with ſtrong bonds of heavy curſes for his ſin, ſuch is the holineſs and ſtrictneſs of it; ſo you may think worſe of ſin, that turns ſuch a good thing as the law to ſuch an ill uſe, as to draw ſtrength to itſelf out of it; like a venomous beaſt, a viper, that ſucks poiſon out of the ſweeteſt flower.

3. The third caution I offer is, Think not to conquer ſin by the law, or by your perſonal obedience to it. That law, which is the ſtrength of ſin, can never be the deſtruction of it; it gives ſtrength to it, but cannot take ſtrength from it. They labour in vain, who think, by the ſtrength of their own beſt endeavours, to ſubdue ſin; for, do what they will, ſin hath ſtill dominion over them, becauſe they are under the law, Rom. vi. 14.: and all their endeavours are influenced by the law as a covenant of works; which makes their eſſays not only ineffectual for breaking the ſtrength of ſin, but rather effectual for augmenting the force and increaſing the ſtrength thereof.

4. The fourth caution we ſuggeſt is this, Think not that obedience to the law, as a rule of life, is needleſs or hurtful, becauſe the law, as a covenant of works, is the ſtrength of ſin: beware of thinking that God's writing the law in the heart, and that goſpel-holineſs and conformity to the law, as in the hand of a Mediator, is either dangerous or unneceſſary; this were an Antinomian principle indeed: but know, of a truth, that without holineſs no man ſhall ſee God; without holineſs, and conformity to the law, as a rule, no man hath evidence of juſtification, or of freedom from the law as a covenant; without holineſs there is no glorifying of God, nor edifying of man; without holineſs no adorning of the goſpel; without holineſs no evidence of love to God or Chriſt, who hath ſaid, If ye love me, keep my commandments.

Uſe 2. The ſecond uſe ſhall be by way of Information. There is a number of neceſſary leſſons may be deduced from this doctrine, That the ſtrength of ſin is the law; ſuch as,

1. Hence we may learn, that there can be no juſtification before God, by the deeds of the law; for, if the law be the ſtrength of ſin, then it can never take away the guilt of ſin; Rom. iii. 20. By the deeds of the law there ſhall no fleſh living be juſtified in his ſight; for, by the law is the knowledge of ſin. The force of this reaſon is very great; for, if it be the office of the law, under the influence of the Spirit of conviction, to give the knowledge of conviction of ſin, and ſo to condemn the ſinner, then ſurely it cannot juſtify him. And that it is the moral law the apoſtle here ſpeaks of, is plain; for, as it is that law by which men have the knowledge of ſin, and of which the ſame apoſtle ſaith, Rom. vii. 7. I had not known ſin but by the law; for, I had not known luſt, except the law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet; which is the moral law: ſo it is plain, chap. iii. from ver. 9th to 20th, ſpeaks of that law by which every mouth may be ſtopt, and all the world, Gentiles as well as Jews, may become guilty before God; or, as it is in the margin, SUBJECT TO THE JUDGMENT OF GOD: ſo that it is a vain thing for any to alledge, that in theſe ſcriptures the apoſtle intends only the ceremonial law, and the deeds thereof.

2. Hence we may learn, that as there is no life or juſtification by the law of works, it being the ſtrength of ſin; ſo there is no new or milder law in the room thereof, by which life and juſtification is to be obtained: for no new law can mend the matter; becauſe men remain under the ſtrength of ſin, by virtue of the old law, and in that condition cannot be juſtified by any law of God, being unable to perform any. Some cloud and darken the goſpel, by making it a new or milder law, requiring faith, and repentance, and new obedience, inſtead of the perfect obedience required in the covenant of works. The goſpel, properly ſpeaking, is no law, but a promiſe: and it might be eaſily evinced, that faith, repentance, and new obedience, are ſo far from being eaſier or milder terms, that they are harder conditions to us, in our lapſed ſtate, than perfect obedience was to Adam in a ſtate of innocence. And ſo the apoſtle argues againſt any ſuch new law; Gal. iii. 21. If there had been a law given, which could have given life, verily righteouſneſs ſhould have been by the law; or, as it may be read, verily righteouſneſs ſhould have been by A law. But there is no ſuch law given to fallen man, as could give life to him; therefore, fore, there is no righteouſneſs, or juſtification, to be had by a law, but by a promiſe; no life by any new law, but by a new promiſe of mercy and grace in Chriſt Jeſus: By the works of the law, no fleſh living can be juſtified. Eternal life is the gift of God, through Chriſt Jeſus our Lord.

3. Hence ſee, that there is no juſtification before God, partly by the law, and partly by the goſpel; or partly by our own righteouſneſs, and partly by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt: for, as this detracts from the glory, ſufficiency, and perfection of Chriſt's righteouſneſs; ſo it renders our juſtification lame and imperfect, and conſequently void and null: for, if the law be the ſtrength of ſin, and gives it a commanding and condemning power; then, till the law be ſatisfied, with a perſonal, perfect, and everlaſting righteouſneſs, the ſtrength of ſin remains, and ſo the man under it remains under condemnation. Why, the obedience of two put together, to make up a perfect obedience, is vain: for, in that caſe, the obedience both of the one and the other is imperfect, and ſo not conform to the law; therefore cannot be accepted for righteouſneſs: ſo that they who would be juſtified before God, muſt either bring to him a perfect and perſonal righteouſneſs of their own, and wholly renounce Chriſt; or elſe they muſt bring the perfect, perſonal righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and wholly renounce their own. It is one of the moſt ſoul-ruining deluſions among the generality of profeſſors in our day, that they are guilty of ſpiritual Bigamy; they think they muſt have two huſbands, Chriſt and the law both; they ſuppoſe that their own duties and righteouſneſs will not do their buſineſs alone without Chriſt's merit and righteouſneſs, which they hope will make amends, and make up what is wanting, and wherein they are deficient; and ſo his and theirs together is the ground of their hope: this is a popery, which makes Chriſt's righteouſneſs only a footſtool on which ſelf-righteouſneſs mounts the throne; yea, this is a Bigamy which Chriſt will not reliſh and put up with. If we be not married to Chriſt alone, as the end of the law for righteouſneſs, and divorced from the law, as a covenant, the ſtrength of ſin remains.

4. Hence ſee the excellency of the goſpel, and the great advantage of a clear goſpel-diſpenſation. Why, the law is the ſtrength of ſin, but the goſpel is the weapon that pulls down the ſtrength thereof: for, it is the power of God to ſalvation from ſin; becauſe therein is revealed the righteouſneſs of God, from faith to faith, Rom. i. 16, 17. Therefore, ſays the ſame apoſtle, 2 Cor. x. 4, 5. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God, to the pulling down the ſtrong holds, caſting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itſelf againſt the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt. It is the goſpel that is the revelation of divine grace; juſtifying grace, to pull down the condemning ſtrength of ſin; ſanctifying grace, to pull down the commanding ſtrength of ſin. It is true, the goſpel is not powerful this way, unleſs the Spirit of God accompany it, as a Spirit of faith, cauſing us to believe the goſpel ſavingly: but, whenever God ſaves a man from the ſtrength of ſin, as it is by hearing the goſpel that faith comes; ſo it is by believing the goſpel that ſalvation from ſin comes; Rom. x. 15, 16. Mark xvi. 15, 16. Go, preach the goſpel to every creature. What is that goſpel? It is the good news of of grace and ſalvation to ſinners, through Chriſt, the Lord our righteouſneſs. Well, what will be the iſſue? He that believes this goſpel ſhall be ſaved; he that believes not ſhall be damned. O Sirs, ſee then the excellency of the goſpel, which, as it is the inſtrument of Gods power for working faith; ſo, being believed, is the power of God to ſalvation from the ſtrength of ſin, and ſo from wrath and condemnation.

5. Hence ſee, that ſin, under the goſpel, is ſtrangely aggravated. They that are not only under the law, as all are by nature, but alſo under the want of goſpel-light, no wonder that ſin reign there; they cannot but live in ſin, and in the perpetual violation of the law as a rule, who hear of no deliverance from the law, as a covenant: but for theſe who live under the goſpel, which is the only antidote againſt the ſtrength of ſin, their ſin is dreadfully aggravated; their living in ſin, and remaining under the ſtrength of ſin, is an evidence of their unbelief, whereby they reject the goſpel, and ſo keep themſelves under the curſe of the law, of which curſe the ſtrength of ſin is a leading part. The breach of the law, as a rule of obedience, is egregiouſly aggravated, where freedom from the law, as a covenant, is proclaimed through Chriſt. The ſum of the moral law is love, the ſum of diſobedience is enmity; but, alas! how is enmity againſt God heightened, when God manifeſts ſuch love, grace, and goodwill towards ſinners! Enmity againſt God, under the goſpel, is enmity indeed: it is rendering him enmity for love. Oh! how do the offers of mercy heighten our malignity! And, what a dreadful and dangerous thing is it to live in ſin, under the diſpenſation of grace! An evil heart of unbelief, neglecting the goſpel, and ſo the great ſalvation tendered therein, is the ſpring of apoſtaſy, and departing from the living God. You will ſay, Ah! I have a wicked heart, a wandering heart, a vain heart, a looſe heart, a black heart; yea, but the worſt thing about it is, that it is an unbelieving heart: for your unbelief keeps you under the curſe of the law, and the law-curſe keeps you under ſin's power.

6. Is the law of works the ſtrength of ſin? Then ſee the neceſſity of union to Chriſt, as the end of the law for righteouſneſs, in order to freedom from the ſtrength of ſin. If Chriſt be the righteouſneſs of any, he is their ſtrength alſo; and, becauſe he is their righteouſneſs, he is their ſtrength, and both in a way of union to him: Surely ſhall one ſay, In the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength, Iſa. xlv. 24. See alſo, 1 Cor. i. 30. Of him are ye in Chriſt Jeſus, who of God is made unto us righteouſneſs and ſanctification. It is the character of believers in Chriſt, that they walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit, Rom. viii. 1, 4. Now, how comes this ſanctification of heart and way, and freedom from the ſtrength of ſin to take place? Why, the root of it is, the righteouſneſs of the law is fulfilled in them, by virtue of their union with Chriſt. The weakeſt ſaint in Chriſt hath perfectly ſatisfied every demand of the law; he hath completely paid every penny of debt that he owed to the law. Why, being united to Chriſt, they are like man and wife; as man and wife are one fleſh, ſo Chriſt and believers are one Spirit: and as man and wife are one perſon in law; ſo, Chriſt having perfectly fulfilled the law, the believer hath perfectly fulfilled it in him. And ſo the

righteouſneſs of the law being fulfilled in the believer, the commanding and condemning ſtrength of ſin, derived from the law, is broken; and conſequently he is in caſe to walk ſpiritually, and to evidence his freedom from the law, as a covenant, and his being a perfect fulfiller of it, by his walking not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit.

7. Hence ſee, That juſtification is the root of ſanctification, and juſtifying faith the root of a holy life, and is neceſſary, in order of nature, before it; ſeeing, as there is no conformity to the law, as a rule of holineſs, till once the perſon get freedom from the law, as a covenant, which, to the tranſgreſſor, is the ſtrength of ſin; ſo, in juſtification, the believer being no more reputed a breaker, or tranſgreſſor, but a perfect fulfiller of the law of works, it ceaſes to be any more the ſtrength of ſin unto him: whereupon the removal of the ſtrength of ſin lays a foundation for a life of holineſs, both habitual and actual; habitual, conſiſting in the immediate principles of action, in contradiſtinction from the remote principle infuſed in regeneration; and actual ſanctification, whether privatively, in the mortifying or killing of ſin; or poſitively, in the quickening of the ſoul to a newneſs of life: and that both internal, in the exerciſe of grace; and external, in the performance of duty. And hence, as juſtifying faith is ſaid to have a purifying virtue, Acts xv. 9.; ſo the whole life of the believer is ſaid to be by faith in the juſtifying righteouſneſs of God, revealed in the goſpel, Rom. i. 17. On which account, the goſpel is ſaid to be the power of God to ſalvation, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Greek; for therein is the righteouſneſs of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The juſt ſhall live by faith; that is, faith in this righteouſneſs of God. No man, therefore, can live a holy life, or walk abroad in the duties of the law, as a rule, in a courſe of ſanctification, till once his feet be looſed from the fetters, and his ſoul liberated from the priſon of the law, as a covenant, through juſtification by faith; and then, and not till then, is he in caſe to live a holy life by faith: yea, were he never ſo juſt and righteous, in reſpect of perſonal imparted righteouſneſs; yet he cannot live, but by the faith of this imputed righteouſneſs of God: renewed acts of faith thereupon tend to quicken his ſoul from time to time. The juſt, even the juſt, ſhall live by this faith; for, without it, all his own juſtneſs, righteouſneſs, and perſonal holineſs would languiſh, and die, and give the up ghoſt. What makes the obedience of a multitude of profeſſors vain and unacceptable; yea, and all their duties ſinful and hurtful? Why, they begin to yield obedience to the precepts of the law, by doing and working out a righteouſneſs of their own, before they be delivered from the curſe of the law, by believing and laying hold on the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and hence, the ſtrength of ſin being a grand part of the curſe of the law, and they not being delivered from that curſe, all they can do is curſed of God, becauſe the ſtrength of ſin remains. But, ſay you, may not this diſcourage profeſſors from obedience? No: it only directs them to the right and acceptable obedience, and not to dream that they ſhall ever yield any acceptable obedience to the precept of the law, as a rule, till they be delivered from the curſe of the law, as a covenant; and conſequently, that their firſt duty is to come to Chriſt, as the end of the law for righteouſneſs; and then, being delivered from the ſtrength of ſin, they ſhall be in caſe to perform duties of obedience acceptably.

8. Hence ſee, That the fruit of Chriſt's merit, and the fruit of his power go together: for, as a being under the law, and under the ſtrength of ſin, go together; ſo freedom from the law, through the law-biding righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and freedom from the ſtrength of ſin, go together: ſo that the fruit of Chriſt's merit and righteouſneſs, imputed for freeing a man from the law of works, and the fruit of his power exerted in freeing a man from the commanding, as well as the condemning power of ſin, go hand in hand together. It is worth our notice, my friends, that there is a fruit of the merit of Chriſt's death and reſurrection, and that fruit is called redemption and juſtification; and there is alſo a fruit of the power of Chriſt's death and reſurrection, and that is called likeneſs and conformity, Rom. vi. 5.: and theſe two go together. The fruit of the merit and righteouſneſs of Chriſt in his doing and dying, is never reaped by any ſoul, without the fruit of the power thereof alſo, which is the heart's being moulded to a conformity to his death and reſurrection, by dying to ſin, and ariſing again to newneſs of life. Now, there is a twofold ſtruggle and oppoſition in every heart by nature againſt both theſe two things: there is a ſtruggle againſt the merit and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and that is by ſelf-righteouſneſs, which cannot endure to be ſhut out of doors: and there is a ſtruggle againſt the power of Chriſt's death, and that is by luſts and corruptions, which cannot endure to loſe their ſtrength, rule, and dominion. But, whenever the merit of Chriſt, and his righteouſneſs, is effectually applied, for ſhutting ſelf-righteouſneſs out of doors, there alſo the power of Chriſt is effectually exerted, for pulling ſin and corruption down from its throne and dominion, and diveſting it of its ruling power and ſtrength. Hence, true faith cloſes with Chriſt both for righteouſneſs and ſtrength. As true obedience is called univerſal obedience, having a reſpect to all God's commandments; ſo true faith is an univerſal faith, having a reſpect to all the offices of Chriſt, and to all the capacities wherein he is held forth. It receives a whole Chriſt, without exception either of his righteouſneſs or ſtrength, merit or Spirit. Some have but a partial faith, reliſhing Chriſt only for freedom from the wrath of God, and not alſo for freedom from the power of ſin: this is an evidence of a rotten heart; for true believers prize Chriſt, not only as a Surety, for paying their debt, but alſo as a Root, for feeding them with the ſap of ſpiritual life, as a root feeds the branches; and they reliſh Chriſt, not only as one that appeaſes God's wrath, but as one that purifies the ſoul from ſin. To this purpoſe, read Exod. xxiv. 6, 8. And Moſes took half of the blood, and put it in baſons, and half of the blood he ſprinkled on the altar. And then took the blood, and ſprinkled it on the people, and ſaid, Behold, the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all theſe words. There you ſee that the blood of the covenant, part of it was ſprinkled on the altar, and part of it on the people: the blood was, as it were, divided two ways, ſignifying that the blood of Chriſt works partly upward, for pacifying the wrath and satisfying the justice of God, in paying the ransom and price for lost souls; and partly downward upon the people, for sanctifying, sprinkling, cleansing, and purifying them, that their defiled souls may be made clean.

9. Hence, if the law be the strength of sin we may see what it is that hinders the success of the gospel for pulling down the strength of sin. Why, the law stands in the way of every natural man his not submitting to Christ offered in the gospel. The fig-leaf covering of self-righteousness hinders men from putting on the white robe, the glorious garment of Christ's righteousness. As the spider hath a web, and the snail hath a shell, and these are their strong holds; so every man hath his strong hold that he flees unto for shelter, and something that his heart sets up as a ladder, by which he hopes to be saved and climb up to heaven: and though the law be a broken ladder, and Christ alone the true Jacob's ladder, that reacheth from earth to heaven, and which the gospel points at; yet the man will not quit the broken ladder, the law of works; and, the more they climb that ladder, the further they go away from Christ. Hence the greatest zealots for the law are the greatest enemies of Christ: witness, Paul before his conversion; he was one of the best men for his righteousness in the law; and yet one of the worst men we read of for his opposition to Christ. Think it not strange, Sirs, to see some very grave, sober, moral, and devout persons, and touching the law blameless and innocent outwardly, and yet these very persons, heart-enemies to Christ, and violent opposers of the gospel: why, even like Paul, the best legal-man may be the worst gospel-man; and hence the Gentile is brought in before the Jews, Rom. ix. 26.; yea, the publicans and harlots before the self-righteous Pharisees, Mat. xxi. 31. But you would consider, that it is not merely these that are by profession and outward practice zealous for the law, that are the only opposers of the gospel; but there is an underhand dealing with the law, that marrs also the success of the gospel, and that by two sorts of persons, which are not suspected to be in such friendship with the law of works, namely, 1. Profest breakers of the law. 2. Profest believers of the gospel.

(1.) There are profest breakers of the law; I mean, profane, wicked, and ungodly persons, who declare their sin as Sodom, and are in a manner professors of profanity, drunkenness, whoredom, swearing, Sabbath-breaking, and debauchery; being graceless, prayerless, godless persons, with a witness, that have no regard to the law as a rule of life, yet we will find they have an underhand dealing with the law, and a natural regard to it, as a condition of life, or covenant of works, and thereupon reject the gospel. Now, their regard to the law, as a covenant, appears, partly, when they are inwardly challenged by conscience; and partly, when they are outwardly challenged by men for their sin: when inwardly challenged by conscience, if at any time it be awakened, why then, they flee to the law for relief, saying with themselves, Oh! I hope, I will be a better man before I die; I will take up myself, and turn a new leaf: and so they build upon the law of works, hoping they will do something that they may obtain life by, and saying in effect, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all; and thus they reject Christ, the Surety of the better testament. Or, if such meet with no inward checks, and have no challenges inwardly for their sin; yet their zeal for the law will sometimes appear, when outwardly challenged by men; why, the profane swearer either takes the reproof with a jest, and laughs it over; or, if he find the reprover in sad earnest with him, then he will fall a justifying himself upon a law-bottom; why, says he, what take you me to be? do you think that I am an atheist or an infidel? Nay, whatever be my faults, I was never such an ill man as you take me to be; and, therefore, I hope in God that he will have mercy on me. What is this but the profane breaker of the law, underhand, building his hope of mercy upon the law, as a covenant, to the greatest dishonour of the law, and contempt of Christ, the end of the law for righteousness, and hereupon living in the open neglect of the great salvation offered in the gospel?

(2.) There are profest believers of the gospel, that yet have underhand dealing with the law for righteousness, to the neglect of the gospel, which yet they profess to believe, insomuch, that Christ is but a stumbling-block to them: such were the Jews, Rom. ix. 31, 32. But Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness: Wherefore? because they sought it not by faith, but, as it were, by the works of the law; for they stumbled at that stumbling stone. These words, as it were, are of great significancy, shewing, that they did not profess to seek righteousness by the law, or by their own works, but by Christ, the promised Messias, to whom they were directed by their sacrifices that typified him, and by the Old-testament prophecies and promises that pointed him out: but while they profest Christ the Messias, and faith in him for righteousness; yet they closely, and underhand, pursued their own righteousness, seeking life and salvation, not professedly and directly, but, as it were, by the works of the law, and secretly rested in the law and the works thereof, and so miscarried; and this was their stumbling stone, under a bright profession that they made to the contrary. Thus many profess the doctrine of justification by faith, and not by the works of the law; yet secretly and underhand closely pursue and go about to establish their own righteousness, if not directly, yet, as it were, by the works of the law; laying more stress, for example, upon what they call their sincere heart, sincere obedience, sincere endeavours, than ever they did upon the perfect obedience of Christ for justification. But whether a bottle be stopt with gold or dung, yet being full, whatever water you pour upon it, it will all run aside: even so, the water of life, freely dispensed in the gospel, runs aside like water spilt upon the ground, because mens hearts are stopt with the law, their own legal righteousness, which they esteem as gold; but Paul compares it to dung: Christ can get no admittance, because the soul is full already. But then,

10. If the strength of sin be the law, hence we may see, That the law can never pacify the duly awakened conscience; and that so far is any man from being able to stand before God in the best of his own righteousness, that he cannot so much as stand before his own conscience in the best righteousness of his own. Some go to the law for satisfaction to their conscience;

ſcience; they rock and lull their conſciences aſleep in the cradle of ſome outward duty; they go to church, and attend ſome ordinances; they ſay ſome formal prayers; and others go greater lengths, merely to gratify conſcience: but if conſcience were duly awakened and convinced, it would not be pacified with any thing leſs than that which pacifies infinite juſtice; nor would it be ſatisfied with any thing leſs than that which fully ſatisfies the law: ſo long as the law finds any fault with or defect in our righteouſneſs, ſo long does it curſe us, Gal. iii. 10.; and ſo long as the curſe remains, the ſtrength of ſin remains: and conſequently the law cannot give relief to the awakened conſcience by any the beſt righteouſneſs of our own, whether of inward graces, or outward duties; for the awakened conſcience will witneſs againſt us, judge and condemn us, in the beſt of theſe.

(1.) Suppoſe you have inward graces and good qualifications, the beſt of theſe will not give conſcience peace when God awakens it: I ſhall ſuppoſe you have faith; well, but have you not unbelief alſo, and more unbelief than faith? And may not conſcience condemn you for that, as Chriſt did his diſciples, How is it that ye have no faith, while you carry in many caſes as if you had none at all? Suppoſe you have repentance; yet have you not impenitency alſo? May not conſcience condemn you many times for a hard impenitent heart; ſo hardened from God's fear, that neither the word nor rod of God does make impreſſion on you; yea, neither mercies nor judgments do you lay to heart as you ought? Suppoſe you have humility; yet is there not pride alſo in your heart? and may not your conſcience accuſe you of much ſelf-elevation, and ſelf-confidence? Suppoſe you have love to God; yet, have you not much enmity alſo? and may not your conſcience condemn you, that you love not God with all your heart, with all your ſoul, mind, and ſtrength; and that your heart goes more out after the creature than the Creator, at leaſt ſome times, and in many inſtances? Suppoſe you have ſincerity; yet, may not conſcience witneſs againſt you, that your ſincerity is mixed with hypocriſy? Suppoſe you have zeal; yet, will not conſcience witneſs that you have too much lukewarmneſs? Suppoſe you have a fixed heart upon God, and Chriſt, and heavenly things at ſome times; yet, will not conſcience accuſe you of innumerable wanderings of heart? Why, then it ſeems your beſt righteouſneſs even of inward graces will not pacify conſcience. Nor,

(2.) Suppoſe you have outward duties to add to your inward graces; ſuppoſe you pray in your cloſet, in your family, and in public, which is well done; and ſuppoſe you hear the word carefully, and joyfully, and perform all other duties: yet, will not conſcience witneſs that ſin mixes itſelf with your beſt duties? And when you pray, yet you are not always praying in the Holy Ghoſt; when you worſhip, yet you are not ſtill worſhipping God in the Spirit; when you hear, you are not always hearing in faith; when you receive the word and ſacraments, you are not ay receiving Chriſt therein; and when you communicate, you are not ay communicating worthily: may not conſcience condemn you for theſe things, and put you to cry after all, Lord, be merciful to me a ſinner?

Well then, when you cannot ſtand before your own conſciences, in your beſt righteouſneſs, either of internal qualifications or external performances; how can you think to ſtand before God, who is greater than conſcience, and knows all things, and ſees more ſin and wickedneſs in you than ever you ſaw? He ſees the errors you cannot ſee, Pſalm xix. 12. Who can underſtand his errors? and the heart's wickedneſs you cannot diſcern, Jer. xvii. 9, 10. The heart is deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked, who can know it? I the Lord ſearch the heart, and try the reins, to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings. Now, O man, woman, if you cannot ſtand before the bar of your own heart and conſcience, but you muſt be condemned, though it knows not the thouſandth part of your heart-wickedneſs that God knows; how will you ſtand before the bar of God, whoſe underſtanding is infinite, and who is of glorious holineſs and dreadful juſtice? Oh! his fiery law will burn up all your filthy rags, if you have not another covering, when death, judgment, and eternity ſtare you in the face! Is it not your duty and intereſt then, to ſeek after a better robe, even that of Chriſt's everlaſting, law-biding righteouſneſs; that alone can pacify conſcience, becauſe it gives the law all its demands, and quenches the fire of it with blood? O ſeek then to be under this covert of the blood of the Lamb of God, that purple-covering of the new covenant chariot, that is paved with love for the daughters of Jeruſalem.

11. Hence ſee, why it is that ſin hath a reigning power over the ungodly, and a prevailing power over the godly; even becauſe the former are wholly under the law, and the latter partly under it. On the one hand, ſin reigns over unbelievers, becauſe they are under the law: men being in bondage to the law, are in bondage to their luſt. Whence is it that all manner of ſin and profaneneſs rages in our day, and ſo much practical oppoſition to the law, as a rule of holineſs? Even becauſe, people being under the law, as a covenant of works, the goſpel is ſlighted and diſparaged; grace, in effect, is cried down, and the law is cried up in oppoſition to it: therefore God leaves men to all lawleſs impiety, as a righteous puniſhment of their contemning of grace, by which alone the law can be honoured, both as a covenant and a rule, Iſa. xlii. 21. Mat. v. 17. Rom. iii. 31.— On the other hand, why does ſin prevail ſo much over believers? why are they ſo unholy and untender in their walk? Even becauſe they are partly under the law. It is true, they are not under the law, but under grace: in point of right, the law of works hath no authority over them; but yet, in point of poſſeſſion, it maintains a great ſway, while unbelief remains: and hence, though ſin hath no rightful legal dominion over them, yet it continues to have a great actual prevalence, while they do not make uſe of that grace they are under, Rom. vi. 14. When they let the grace of God out of their mind, then they are diſcouraged, and ſin gets advantage: they are apt to truſt partly to their own works, and endeavours, and frames; and therefore, like the woman with the bloody iſſue, they loſe both their time and pains, and ſpend all on phyſicians that do them no good, till they come back to Chriſt and grace again. Sometimes even believers, inſtead of uſing grace aright, are ready to miſuſe it, and make it a cover for sloth, under pretence that Christ must do all. They are thus in danger of practical Antinomianism, and turning the grace of God into wantonness: they pray not, watch not, and therefore they have nothing, because their hands refuse to labour; and they do not study, in all appointed means, to keep themselves under the droppings of grace, which would make their duties their pleasure; but, being under much legal bondage, it makes their duties their burden, and a wearisome task; which being thereupon shifted and slighted, sin gets advantage. But, Oh! if believers did but believe their privileges, and rightly use the grace they are under, it were impossible for them to be long under the feet of their enemies. If they by faith were reckoning themselves to be what they are, according to Rom. vi. 11. Likewise reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord; what a happy and holy life would the believer have, if by faith he were reckoning himself to be in Christ? For he should not conceive of God out of Christ, nor of himself out of Christ, nor of Christ and himself as two, but as one mystical person, by virtue of the mystical spiritual union betwixt Christ and him. If he were reckoning that he is a member of Christ, and can do all things through him; and reckoning that Christ is in him, and he is in Christ; reckoning that he is dead in Christ unto sin, and alive in Christ unto God; how would his spirit be raised, elevated, and nobilitated to the life of religion, looking to himself, not in himself, but in Christ, by virtue of marriage to him? If the believer were saying, by faith, O! I am complete in Christ; I am perfectly righteous in Christ, and accepted as righteous in the sight of God, only through the righteousness of Christ; I was once bound to the fiery law, the terrible law, and thousands in hell are paying that debt of satisfaction to it, and cannot pay it to eternity; but I have paid every farthing, and the law can ask no more; yea, in Christ, I have magnified the law, and made it honourable: Here is one of the greatest mysteries in the world, behold, a man who sees himself so sinful, that he thinks none in all the world so black, and ugly, and sinful as he, can, in this respect, reckon himself as righteous as Abraham or Paul; yea, perfectly righteous; and see himself in that gospel-glass, that says, Thou art all fair, my love, there is no spot in thee. Why, the believer being clothed with the sun of righteousness, he is righteous in the sight of God: to be righteous in man's sight is nothing to this, hypocrites may arrive at that; but to be righteous in God's sight, is to be so righteous, that infinite holiness, infinite justice can find no blot, no spot, no hole in the garment of righteousness with which the man is clothed. O believers in Christ, you that are perfect through his comeliness, you do not view sufficiently your privileges, otherwise it would elevate you above corruption, and fill you with holy triumph over all your lusts and idols, and make you think shame to sin; if you were reckoning what you are in Christ, you would reckon it below you to tread in the dirty steps of the world: but when unbelief darkens your gospel-privileges, and grace is out of view, you faint in duty, and are discouraged and disheartened in your work, so as sin recovers its spirit and strength.

12. Hence we may see, that whatever opposition and resistance to sin, hypocrites and unbelievers may make, yet still they are UNDER the strength of sin, because UNDER the law; and whatever prevalence sin may have over believers, yet they are FREED from the strength of sin, because they are NOT under the law. This twofold inference lays a foundation for resolving two difficult cases.

FIRST CASE is, Seeing hypocrites may RESIST sin, what resistance of sin is consistent with the DOMINION thereof? Hypocrites and reprobates do not always sin peaceably, but with some reluctancy; they forbear many sins, and get victory over them: how then may this be cleared? and how does it appear that they may make resistance against sin, and yet the strength of it never broken?

I answer, for clearing this, in these two assertions.

(1.) The first assertion is, That there is indeed a resisting of sin, which is consistent with the power and dominion of it; as I would clear in a few words. A person may solemnly resolve and swear against sin, and yet be under the power of it; as it was with Israel, Psal. lxxviii. 37. and Josh. xxiv. 18. People may confess their sins, and repent of them with tears; as Esau, and Judas, and Saul, Heb. xii. 17. Mat. xxvii. 3, 4, 5. 1 Sam. xxiv. 16, 17. and yet be under the power of it. People may separate some time for special fasting and humiliation, on the account of sin, and yet be under the power of it; as Ahab, 1 Kings xxi. 29. People may be zealous opposers and reformers of sin in others, and yet be under the reigning power of it; like Jehu, 2 Kings x. 1,—31. People may resist sin unto suffering and blood; as Alexander, mentioned, Acts xix. 33. and 1 Tim. i. 19. People may resist all motions, inclinations, and temptations to sin, so far as never to break forth into any gross outbreaking thereof, and be in all things blameless before the world; as Paul was before his conversion, Phil. iii. 9. And yet all this while they may be under the power and dominion of sin: Why? because their resistance of sin proceeds from wrong principles; such as fear of God's judgments, as Ahab, when Elijah threatened him; fear of man, like Herod; affectation of human applause, like the Pharisees; and because their resistance is but partial, chiefly bended against gross out-breakings, while heart-lusts are welcomed and entertained; the out-side of the cup being clean, while within it is full of corruption, Mat. xxiii. 24. — Thus, I say, there is a resisting of sin that is consistent with the power of it.

2. The second assertion is, That the power of sin is never broken in a hypocrite; why, because the nature of an hypocrite, the reigning sin, which is the sin of nature, and which gives life and breath to all his other sins, is never discovered, never groaned under; though some actual sins get a stroak, yet this remains in power: and hence, the opposition that a hypocrite or graceless man finds in himself sometimes to sin, is not the opposition of the Spirit to the flesh, but rather the opposition of one sin to another: As if two noblemen strive together in a kingdom, the king's power is never a whit weakened thereby, he rules absolutely notwithstanding; so two sins may cast out with one another, and yet the reigning sin, which is the sin of nature, remain remain in power: hence a man's pride and prodigality will differ with his avarice and covetouſneſs; a man's ſelf-love may diſcord with his ſloth, and put him upon ſeveral duties. Though one ſin contend with and caſt out another ſin, it will not ſay that ſin is exauctorate: the ſin that prevails, will yet do homage to the reigning ſin; but while the reigning ſin remains untouched, ſin hath dominion and power. The taking of a few villages does not much weaken the ſtrength of a king; but when his royal city is taken, and himſelf confined, then his power is gone: even ſo here, the forbearing, reſiſting, and down-bringing of ſome ſins, does much abate the power of ſin; but if once the reigning ſin of the nature be taken, then the power of ſin is gone. Now, Chriſt gives the body of death in every ſaint a deadly wound; he does not only bruiſe Satan's heel, but his head: when a man comes to ſee his wicked nature, his oppoſition to God and Chriſt, and all his ways in every thing, and mourns for this as the greateſt evil, and comes to the Lord Jeſus, and employs him for power againſt it, and renounces its dominion; though he cannot rid himſelf altogether thereof, yet then is the power of it broken and gone. But here notice further, The permiſſion to do ſome duties, and to leave off ſome ſins, does not evince that the power or ſin is broken, becauſe this may be done with ſin's authority and conſent; yea, and with Satan's leave: for if the devil ſee that Chriſt is like to get a profane ſoul from him, and that the man is like to break off from him, he compones, he ſuffers him to leave many ſins, and to do many good duties: as a man that hath no will to quit his lands, he pays a compoſition for it; ſo ſin makes a compoſition with many, whereas it reigns over ſome very abſolutely, yet it reigns over others ſo as to permit them to pay ſome acknowledgement to God, and yet ſin ſtill reigns. Many a man's conſcience is awakened for ſin; they confeſs and mourn for it, they ſeek pardon, and yet keep their ſins ſtill, and hold them faſt: many will tipple and drink, and live in covetouſneſs, and ſloth, and unbelief; O but their deſires are good; they pray privately and in their families, and confeſs theſe ſins, and are ſorry for them! What is this? Alas! this is nothing but the compoſition made betwixt Satan and you: you ſtill hold of ſin, and it reigns ſtill; even as your lands hold of ſuch a perſon of quality, it may be of the king, or of a nobleman: well, ſome lands are under greater ſervitude to the king, or other ſuperiors, than others; yet all hold of them: ſo, perhaps, your ſlavery to ſin is not ſo great as that of others, but yet you hold of ſin; ſin is your ſuperior, and it hath the power. So ſome miniſters in the late times, after the king's * ſupremacy was eſtabliſhed, when the king found and apprehended many to be diſſatisfied with his abſolute government, he offered and they accepted of an indulgence from him, giving them leave to preach in ſuch and ſuch places and circumſtances; this acceptance, many maintained, was ſuch a ſin, as that thereby they did hold their miniſtry of the king, and homologate or approve of his ſupremacy in matters ſacred as well as civil; or that the king was ſtill ſupreme over all cauſes, as well as perſons: ſo it is here; ſin perceiving that many begin to entertain a great diſſatisfaction with ſuch an abſolute form of government, or ruling in ſuch a manner, reſolve to alter their method and way of living, and to offer indulgences: perhaps, Satan ruled before in a way of drunkenneſs, ſwearing, whoredom, and profanity; but now he will rule by pride, formality, covetouſneſs, and ſetting up of mens own righteouſneſs: here is an indulgence offered and accepted; it is no change of government in the ſubſtantials of it, it is no change of the power of ſin, only ſome are indulged to do more than others; ſin and Satan indulge ſome to do many things, while ſin is ſtill king, only it rules in a different manner.——Thus, I ſay, that the power of ſin is never broken in hypocrites, as it is in the believer who is under grace.

The SECOND CASE was, In what reſpects are believers freed from the STRENGTH of ſin, while yet they are ſenſible of the PREVALENCY thereof? For ſin remains in them, and acts, and works, and ſtrives in them, and they are led captive thereby, Rom. vii. 23. Therefore, though they be not under the law, but under grace, it would ſeem that they are not freed from the power, dominion, and ſtrength of ſin; for the ſtrength of ſin is what they daily feel and complain of: how then, and in what reſpects, are they freed from it?

ANSW. Theſe are theſe following reſpects, wherein the believer is freed from the ſtrength of ſin.

(1.) In ſo far as they are under grace, it is ſure they are not under ſin's power. Indeed, if believers would take hold of the ſhield of faith, they would find little of the power of ſin; but they many times caſt this ſhield away by diſcouragements, and run in to the law through unbelief, and ſo they ſink: hence, caſting themſelves out, as ſaints may do for a ſtart, from under the influence of grace, they may, like Peter, begin to ſink, becauſe they begin to fear and doubt; ſo that it is true thus far, namely, ſo far as they are under grace, and through grace keep themſelves under the influence of grace, they are not under the power and dominion of ſin.

(2.) Believers are freed from the power of ſin, in ſo far as they are intitled to the promiſe, which ſays, Their ſin ſhall be ſubdued, and that ſin ſhall not have dominion. It is to be noticed, that it is not ſaid in the context, ſin hath no dominion or power over them, but it is ſaid, It ſhall NOT have dominion: now, in regard the time is coming, when all ſin ſhall be taken away, in all theſe that are under grace; its power and dominion is to be cut off, though for a while it rages. There is a counſel and determination againſt Babylon; God hath decreed and ordered, that ſin's dominion ſhall expire, Rom. xvi. 20. The God of peace will bruiſe Satan under your feet ſhortly; and he will turn judgment unto victory; but how long the believer may fight and groan under the prevalence of it, cannot eaſily be determined.

(3.) Believers that are under grace, are freed from the power of ſin, in regard it hath no righteous and lawful power and dominion over them; the firſt huſband is dead, and they are married to Chriſt, the ſecond Huſband, Rom. vii. 4.; and therefore they are not debtors to the fleſh to live after it, Rom. viii. 12. Though the fleſh may compel and crave them to obey, yet it has no juſt power ſo to do. Sin's juſt authority is exauctorate; and Chriſt, by ſatisfying the law, which is the ſtrength of ſin, hath condemned ſin,

* Viz. CHARLES II. The Supremacy was eſtabliſhed by the Parliament, 1661. And the Indulgence granted by the Privy-Council, 1669.

Rom. viii. 3. So that it being now condemned and exauctorate, though it keep poſſeſſion, yet there is a ſentence and decreet of ejection obtained againſt ſin. The believer hath law upon his ſide, whereas ſin hath no law, no right concerning him. Sin hath a ſort of right to reign in wicked men, and theſe that are under the law; for it hath a right of conqueſt over them, and they are ſervants, becauſe, by their actual obedience, they have homologate the right of conqueſt that ſin had: but in believers, who are under grace, and delivered from ſin by the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who ſatisfied the law, which is the ſtrength of ſin, and now renouncing the ſervice of ſin, and taking on with Chriſt as their Lord, who redeemed them by his blood from ſin, and overcame and condemned ſin, ſin hath no pretext of title any more. It is true, it actually exerciſes authority; yet that is but an uſurped authority; ſin rules by no lawful title. You will ſay, If ſin rule, what is the matter whether it hath a title or not? I anſwer, Yea, it is a great matter; for the juſt Lord of heaven and earth, upon the believer's complaining of unjuſt oppreſſion, will right him, and deliver him from ſuch an oppreſſion and oppreſſor in due time: and he hath encouragement, in oppoſing ſin, that he ſhall prevail, ſeeing his cauſe is juſt, and that he hath juſt matter of pleading with the righteous God, that ſin ſhall not have power over him. The believer may go to God, as Bethſheba did to David, when Adonijah did uſurp the kingdom, ſaying, My lord, O king, did thou not ſwear, ſaying, Aſſuredly Solomon ſhall reign? and yet, behold, Adonijah reigneth. So may the believer go to God, and ſay, Lord, haſt thou not ſaid that ſin ſhall not reign but that grace ſhall reign? And yet, behold, ſin and corruption uſurp the power: and, to be ſure, he will take order with this matter.

(4.) Believers, that are under grace, are freed from the power of ſin, in regard ſin hath no power to condemn or damn ſuch as are under grace; its authority is ſo far broken in them, that though they ſin, and though ſin may force them to ſome acts of obedience to it, yet it cannot condemn them to hell, as it may do theſe that are ſtrangers to Chriſt, and not under grace, in whom ſin is ſaid to reign unto death, Rom. v. 21. and chap. vi. 23. Now, whatever way it may reign and rule, yet it reigns not unto death in them that are under grace, and in Chriſt; for, there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt; and againſt ſuch there is no law, Gal. v. 23. As when the Romans conquered the Jews, though they left ſome authority, yet they took from them the power of life and death, as they acknowledge, John xviii. 32. It is not lawful for us to put any man to death: ſo, when Chriſt hath conquered ſin, though he did in his wiſdom not altogether deſtroy the power of ſin, yet he took away the power of life and death from it, ſo as ſin cannot now condemn any believer; and this is a comfortable privilege.

(5.) Believers under grace are freed from ſin, in regard they have renounced the dominion thereof, and their allegiance thereto; hence that word, 2 Cor. iv. 2. We have renounced the hidden things of diſhoneſty. Why, by cloſing and engaging with Chriſt to be his, and coming to him for protection from, and power againſt ſin, they have declared that they renounce ſin, and all allegiance thereto. Chriſt hath engaged all his ſervants in heart and practice againſt ſin directly and indirectly; there is war declared again ſin in all the ſaints. You know, it was a great impairing of Rehoboam's power, 1 Kings xii. 16. when the ten tribes revolted, and ſaid to him, What portion have we in the ſon of Jeſſe? See to thine own houſe, David; to your tents, O Iſrael; and ſo ſhook off his authority: whatever therefore ſin does in believers, whatever obedience it extorts from them, or entices them to yield to it, yet there is war irreconcilable denounced againſt ſin. This is a great matter, when a people ſhake off the authority of a prince, and declare themſelves free from his authority; however he be ſeeking to reduce them to obedience again, yet he hath, for the preſent, no dominion over them: ſo it is here; though ſin may endeavour to bring the believer into ſubjection, yet it hath not abſolute ſway over him.

(6.) In regard ſin hath not that power over ſuch as are under grace, as it had formerly before they were under it; for, notwithſtanding that ſin prevails, yet it prevails not as it did before, when the ſtrong man kept all his goods in peace, 2 Pet. iv. 4. They run not to the ſame exceſs of riot; there is ſome more in them that oppoſes ſin; and ſin does not rule ſo abſolutely and peaceably in them as it does in theſe that are under the law. Formerly the ſtrong man kept all in peace, while the man committed ſin with greedineſs; but now there are always proteſtations and upriſings againſt it, ſin hath not abſolute, peaceable, and voluntary dominion.

(7.) Believers under grace are freed from ſin, in regard ſin, in its principal deſign, is broken; its chief ſtrength is taken away: as when two great parties are competing and ſtriving with one another, there is a fort or principal city of the kingdom; and whoſoever of them can make themſelves maſter of that, they are fair to carry the whole kingdom; therefore both ſtrive to gain it, and he that firſt gains it has much weakened his enemy's power: ſo it is here, the great deſign of ſin and Satan is to keep the ſoul from cloſing with Chriſt; he hides their need of Chriſt from them ſo long as he can; and when they come to ſee their need of Chriſt, he ſeeks to comfort and ſalve them by the law, or by their legal endeavours: when this miſcarries with him, then, by a multitude of objections he ſcars them from Chriſt; all his forces and might are bent upon this, as his chief and only deſign, to keep the ſoul and Chriſt from joining together; for then he knows he hath loſt them for ever. Now, when the Lord Jeſus, in a day of power, hath ſo far overcome Satan, that he hath broken his chief deſign, and, maugre all the oppoſition of the devil and corruption, hath made the ſoul to come to him and believe on him, and ſo hath put the ſoul into a ſtate of reconciliation, life, and grace, then he hath very much delivered them from the power of ſin, eſpecially the mother-ſin of unbelief, John xvi. 9.

(8.) In regard that ſin hath got a deadly wound by the power of converting grace, of which it never heals again till it totally die. There is ſuch a plot laid in the day of believing and converſion, as ſin will certainly be blown up with; having got a death's wound, it will die ere long. Indeed, it may be like a man in a malignant fever, that hath ſtrength of humours, mours, and in whom the ſtrength of nature is overcome; he ſeems to be very ſtrong, ſo as three men perhaps cannot get him kept in the bed: yea, all this is but only the raging of his humour, and nature's laſt attempt; for within a few hours the man dies. So, after ſin hath got a death's wound, it may rage for a little, but dies at laſt, like an ox felled on the forehead with an ax; how does he leap and ſtamp, and put forth power with violence for a while? but at laſt falls down and dies. Thus the firſt draught of the water of life that the ſoul by faith drinks, proves poiſon to ſin; and, the more of this water that the ſoul drinks, the more is the power of ſin abated; there is a trap laid for ſin. You have a word, Obad. ver. 7. They have laid a wound under thee; there is a train laid for ſin, that cannot fail to be its death. Why, what for a train? why, the believer, by faith, ſets all at work againſt ſin; not only prayers and tears, and all means and duties, under the conduct of new-covenant grace; but the ſpecial train is the word and promiſe of Chriſt; the grace and fulneſs of Chriſt; the blood, righteouſneſs, and merit of Chriſt; the power, grace, and Spirit of Chriſt, are all employed to knock down ſin, and all clapt upon ſin's head; ſo that its power muſt ceaſe, and it cannot but die. *

MY friends, we need to ſeek ſalvation from ſin, elſewhere than in by the law and the works thereof; for the law of God cannot ſave or juſtify the leaſt tranſgreſſor of it, otherwiſe it muſt condemn itſelf, which is impoſſible: Curſed is every one, ſays the law, that continues not in all things written in the book of the law to do them; and we are obliged to ſay AMEN to that curſe, as every way juſt and righteous: Curſed is he that confirms not all the words of this law, to do them; and all the people ſhall ſay, AMEN, Deut. xxvii. 26. It is the very nature of the law to condemn the leaſt tranſgreſſor of it, whatever after-works of obedience he may perform; for, Whoever ſhall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all, James ii. 10. Therefore the higheſt act of obedience, even of the ſaints in heaven, cannot expiate the leaſt breach of God's law, neither can any duty performed take away the fault of a ſin committed. Sin therefore retains its ſtrength to enſlave, and ſtrength to deſtroy the ſinner, by virtue of the broken law that he is under, ſo long as he hath not wherewith to repair the honour of the law: the honour of the precept of the law muſt be repaired by a perfect obedience, and the honour of the threatening by a complete ſatisfaction, otherwiſe the ſtrength of ſin remains; but, whenever a man is clothed with the obedience and ſatisfaction of Chriſt, then being reputed no tranſgreſſor, but a perfect keeper and fulfiller of the law, it is no more the ſtrength of ſin in him; for, according to our doctrine from this text, the law of works is the ſtrength of ſin, only to the ſinner, by whom it is broken, not to the believer, by whom it is fulfilled in his glorious Head. ***

HAVING already, elſewhere, diſcuſſed the doctrinal part, finiſhed the firſt uſe of caution, and deduced twelve inferences for information; there are ſtill many moe leſſons may be learned from this doctrine, beſides what I have already deduced; ſuch as,

1. Hence we may ſee the dangerous and damnable influence of legal doctrine, that tends to keep ſinners under the law; for thus they are under the power of ſin. The legal ſtrain, under covert of zeal for the law, hath a native tendency to marr true holineſs, and all acceptable obedience to the law, inſomuch, that the greateſt legaliſt is the greateſt Antinomian, or enemy to the law: the goſpel is ſlighted and diſparaged by many, as if it left men to a lawleſs liberty, and the law is cried up in oppoſition to it; and therefore God leaves men to all lawleſs impieties, as a righteous puniſhment of their contemning of grace, by which alone the ſtrength of ſin can be broken, Rom. vi. 14. Why does the devil, in all generations, oppoſe himſelf ſo much to the goſpel, and to the doctrine of grace, and raiſes up all the calumnies in the world againſt it? Even becauſe it is the doctrine of grace that deſtroys his kingdom; for the devil knows, that while men are under the law, they are under his power, and under the power of ſin; therefore he hath no great ill-will at legal doctrine: but if one preach up grace, and nothing but free grace, then he will raiſe a hue after him, as an enemy to the law and holineſs †. Why, what ails the devil at the goſpel? Even becauſe nothing ſpoils his market among ſouls ſo much, as the goſpel, when it comes with power; for it is the goſpel, and not the law, that is the immediate inſtrument of converſion, Gal. iii. 2. and of true holineſs, Tit. ii. 11, 12. And what is it that makes the goſpel the power of God to ſalvation, and the powerful inſtrument of converting ſinners to God? Even becauſe therein is revealed the righteouſneſs of God, from faith to faith, Rom. i. 15, 17. and therein the righteouſneſs of God, without the law, is manifeſted, Rom. iii. 21. What was the reaſon, that, in the beginning of our glorious Reformation ſuch great multitudes were quickened to ſpiritual life, and made fruitful in the ways of God? Why, God raiſed up ſome inſtruments to publiſh and illuſtrate the doctrine of grace, and their preaching wrought wonders, the power of God attending the publication of it; they harped moſt upon this ſtring, to clear the doctrine of juſtification by grace, without the works of the law, and in oppoſition to the damnable doctrine of the church of Rome, which ſets up mens works as the matter of their juſtification: but as all the Reformers harped ſweetly upon the ſtring of grace, ſo this article, ſays Luther, reigns in my heart, "That "we are juſtified freely by grace, through the "redemption that is in Chriſt." But now-a-days, we are become ſo far aſhamed of the goſpel of Chriſt, that as all imaginable methods have been taken to diſparage the preaching of it; ſo ſome, that have but a faint inclination to preach it, are diſcouraged from meddling too much with this theme; and others betake themſelves to a legal ſtrain; or, if they preach grace, it is in ſuch a hampered way, and with ſo many cautions and circumlocutions, as if there were a great danger in preaching free grace, but no danger in preaching the law. Is there need of caution in preaching of CHRIST, and no caution to be uſed in preach-

preaching Moſes? I am not againſt ſuitable caution on all hands; but it is to be feared, there will be little revival of a Reformation, till the doctrine of grace vent more freely under the conduct of the Spirit, giving ſuch an appropriating faith and perſuaſion of the free favour, love, and grace of God in Chriſt, as took place in our Reformers days. Whence is it that all manner of ſin and profaneneſs rages in our day? Why, goſpel-light is either darkened or ſlighted, and men remain under the law, which is the ſtrength of ſin.

2. See hence the dreadful corruption and depravation of our nature, and the deplorable condition of ſinners in their natural ſtate, in that the law, which forbids ſin, ſhould be in men the ſtrength of ſin, and ſhould irritate corruption, and ſtir up to more ſin. The law, inſtead of healing that diſeaſe, does increaſe it; as it is ſaid, Hoſ. vii. 1. When I would have healed Iſrael, then the iniquity of Ephraim was diſcovered, and the wickedneſs of Samaria. See Rom. viii. 9, 10, 11. It fares with men under the dominion of the law, as with wolves and dogs, that grow more fierce by their being tyed up and confined: and as with a brook, which if not interrupted, runs calmer; but if it be dammed up, then Spumens et fervens, et ab obice ſævior ibit; "It "ſwells beyond its bounds, and rages and "runs down afterwards the more violently." When the ſun of the law ſhines upon mens dunghill-hearts, they bring forth the more noiſom ſmell; hence, tell the unregenerate man of his ſins, he is the more inclined thereto; tell him of his duties, he is the more averſe therefrom: why, whence does this proceed? It even comes to paſs by theſe two means, 1. God is provoked by ſin, to work theſe ſtrange effects upon men, as an angry Judge; he makes the law, which ſhould be their ſouls meat and drink, to be poiſon to them. 2. Becauſe the law is contrary to ſin, therefore ſin is contrary to it; they violently oppoſe each other. If there were no ſin, the law would be pleaſant to them, they would wear it as jewels about their neck, and write it upon the tables of their heart; but now, oh! how oppoſite is the carnal heart to all ſpiritual work! Some ſpeak of their good hearts, and good nature; but, can any good thing come out of Nazareth? any good thing out of a ſinful nature? Naturally we delight in good, juſt as fiſh delight to be out of the water; take a fiſh out of its watery element, and ſo long as it lives it is not quiet, it does nothing but leaps and tumbles up and down; ſo ſet carnal men upon ſpiritual work, they are out of their element, they cannot live, cannot reſt there, Hoſ. vi. 5. Praying and preaching does, as it were, hew and ſlay, vex and torment them; they are never eaſy till they be in their own element again. That horſe muſt be a froward beaſt, that, the more he is ſpurred forward, the more he runs backward; and a ſtubborn child, that, the more his father injoins him to do a thing, the more he ſets himſelf againſt it: this is the ſtate of every one by nature; men huff and ſnuff at reproof, and cannot endure contradiction. And as our nature is a corrupt and contradicting nature, in oppoſition to the law; ſo it is a heterogeneous and ſelf-contradictory nature: men are, while under the curſe of the law, both under the power of ſin, and under the power of ſelf-righteouſneſs; having a curſed oppoſition to the law as a rule of holineſs, and yet a woful inclination to be juſtified by the law as a covenant of works, Rom. x. 3.; and, as the expreſſion is, Gal. vi. 21. they deſire to be under the law, to be ſaved by it; and yet they cannot endure to be under it, to be ruled by it. They take occaſion to ſin from the law, Rom. vii. 8.; as ſome evidently do, when they ſcorn their teachers, and turn their preaching into ſcoffing: and yet they take occaſion to boaſt from the law, Rom. iii. 27. as if they were too wiſe to be inſtructed, and too good and righteous to deſpair of life by the law. Thus the law they are under is their ruin, and they know it not. While the commandment never came with power to their effectual conviction, ſin and ſelf remain in their power; and yet of this they are ignorant, that the ſtrength of ſin is the law. They perceive not the ſtrength of ſin that they are under, nor the ſtrength of natural corruption, nor the dreadful curſe they are under, becauſe they know not the law they are under, nor perceive it in its ſpirituality and ſeverity, in its mandatory and minatory power, which gives ſin both its commanding and condemning ſtrength.

3. Hence we may ſee the duty of all unbelievers under the power of ſin, namely, to come to Chriſt, and to come under his grace, who is the end of the law for righteouſneſs to every one that believeth, as they would not remain under the yoke of the law, and ſo under the ſtrength of ſin. Oh! what a fearful thing is it to be under the law! For as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curſe. Your works can never ſatisfy the law; to attempt this, were to build a caſtle in the air? and, as a ſnow-ball, the more it is rolled, the bigger it grows; ſo, the more you go on to get a righteouſneſs in yourſelf to fulfil the law, the further off are you from it, and the more involved under the curſe, as being a debtor to do the whole law, Gal. v. 3. And, Oh! how dreadful will your ſtate be in a dying hour, and on the brink of eternity, if you have no righteouſneſs that can pleaſe the holineſs, or pacify the juſtice of God! you will have nothing to expect, but to bear the weight of your own ſins for ever, while God will open the treaſures of his fury, and ſhut the bowels of his mercy for ever upon you; and when you have ſuffered millions of years in hell, yet not one mite of a million of your law-debt will be paid! O then, deſpair, abſolutely deſpair of getting any good by the law, whether by your own doing or ſuffering; and ſee the neceſſity of flying to Chriſt, and his doing and ſuffering, knowing that there is no other way of getting both the law and the Lawgiver ſatisfied. O happy theſe, who are perſuaded, through grace, to take this way, namely, of coming to Chriſt alone, for deliverance from the law, and ſo from the ſtrength of ſin!

4. Hence we may ſee what is the duty of believers in Chriſt, who are delivered from the law. Surely they ought to give evidence that they are delivered from the ſtrength of ſin, by aſpiring after the ſtrength of grace: for, as it is ſaid of believers, Rom. vi. 14. Sin ſhall not have dominion over you; for you are not under the law, but under grace; which ſays, that by their being delivered from the law, they are delivered from the reigning ſtrength of ſin; ſo it is the duty of believers to give evidence that they are not under the law, nor conſequently under the ſtrength of ſin, ſin, by aiming at the ſtrength of grace, or the higheſt and nobleſt degrees thereof, in oppoſition to the ſtrength of ſin.

If you aſk, When is it that the ſtrength of grace does appear in a believer?

I ſhall offer ſome inſtances of the ſtrength of grace: I ſpeak not now of grace in the fountain, as it is in God, but of grace in the ſtreams, as it ought to ſhine in the believer.

(1.) The firſt inſtance of the ſtrength of grace is, when the believer can be high and yet low; high in his attainments, and yet low in his thoughts and apprehenſions of himſelf. Thus Paul was high in gifts, high in graces, high in comforts, high in ſervices, high in ſucceſs, high in manifeſtations, high in many excellent reſpects, and yet low and humble in ſpirit: for, if we take his own verdict of himſelf, he looks on himſelf as the leaſt of all ſaints, the chief of all ſinners, not worthy to be called an apoſtle; as I might inſtance in ſeveral of his epiſtles; yea, he calls himſelf nothing, 2 Cor. xii. 11. And, O how becoming is it for believers to be low and humble amidſt theſe high and eminent graces and attainments! For he that was the higheſt became the loweſt; Learn of me, ſays Chriſt, for I am meek and lowly in heart: and yet ſo high, that, in the preceding verſe, he had ſhewed how all things were delivered to him by his Father, Mat. xi. 27, 28, 29. Oh! may not duſt and aſhes bluſh and be aſhamed to be proud, when GOD humbled himſelf! Oh! for a vile worm to ſwell, when MAJESTY humbled itſelf!

(2.) The ſecond inſtance of the ſtrength of grace, is, when the believer is low, and yet high; lying low in the duſt before God continually, and yet high and heavenly-minded, according to Col. iii. 1, 2.; when the lower he ſinks in ſelf-abaſement, the higher he mounts up as on eagles wings in ſpiritual-mindedneſs and holy loftineſs of heart, looking down with a generous diſdain upon worldly things, that carnal minds are ſo much taken up with.

(3.) The third inſtance of the ſtrength of grace, is, when a believer is full, and yet empty; full of worldly enjoyments, and yet empty of love to the world; enjoying all manner of temporal good things, and yet able to ſay, as Pſal. lxxiii. 25. Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none on earth that I deſire beſide thee: And with Paul, I am crucified to the world, and the world to me. It is an inſtance of great grace, when a man can ſwim in the ſtreams of creature-enjoyments, and yet ſo as not to forſake the fountain of living waters.

(4.) The fourth inſtance of the ſtrength of grace, is, when the believer is empty, and yet full; empty of all outward worldly enjoyments, and yet full, as having all, by having Chriſt. This is exemplified in Habakkuk, chap. iii. 17, 18. Though the fig-tree ſhould not bloſſom, nor fruit be found in the vine, &c. yet will I rejoice in the Lord, and be joyful in the God of my ſalvation. Thus, when a man having nothing, yet poſſeſſes all things, by ſeeing all in Chriſt, even amidſt outward wants, loſſes, croſſes, and afflictions, then the ſtrength of grace appears.

(5.) The fifth inſtance of the ſtrength of grace, is, when the believer is at eaſe, and yet afflicted; at eaſe in reſpect of outward and inward proſperity, and yet afflicted for the afflictions of God's church and people, laying the church's calamities duly to heart. You have a notable example of this in David, 2 Sam. vii. 1. There you ſee that he ſat in his houſe, and the Lord had given him reſt round about from all his enemies, and thus he was at eaſe, but he ſays to Nathan, Behold, now I dwell in a houſe of cedar, but the ark of God dwells within curtains, ver. 2. Though he was at reſt and eaſe, ſo that his own perſonal intereſt proſpered; yet he was afflicted, becauſe it fared not ſo well with the houſe and intereſt of God. It is choice grace, to be deeply afflicted with the affliction of the church, even when no perſonal affliction takes place.

(6.) The ſixth inſtance of the ſtrength of grace, is, when a believer is afflicted, and yet at eaſe. I mean, when he is compaſt about with perſonal affliction, and yet eaſy and quiet, in a holy, humble ſubmiſſion to the will of God, and chearfully acquieſces therein: I was dumb, and opened not my mouth, becauſe thou didſt it, ſays the pſalmiſt. Thus Aaron held his peace, even when God's diſpenſations toward his children were terrible.

(7.) The ſeventh inſtance of the ſtrength of grace, is, when the believer preſſes after the greateſt meaſure of perſonal holineſs and imparted righteouſneſs, and yet lives wholly and depends intirely upon an imputed righteouſneſs: See a notable example of this, in Paul, Phil. iii. 12, 13, 14. where he is preſſing after the greateſt degree of holineſs; and yet, ver. 7, 8, 9. he lives and depends only and wholly upon the imputed righteouſneſs of Chriſt for juſtification and acceptance with God.

(8.) The eighth inſtance of the ſtrength of grace, is, when a believer can apprehend love in God's heart, even when he ſees nothing but frowns in his face; and when, with Abraham, againſt hope he believes in hope; and ſays, with Job, Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him. To love a ſmiting God, and truſt in a ſlaying God, or notwithſtanding all his ſlaying diſpenſations, argues great grace; and even when walking in darkneſs, and having no light, then to truſt in the name of the Lord; and when he is calling him a dog, then to draw arguments for his faith out of ſuch a word, and to plead kindneſs on him amidſt all the frowns of his face, and blows of his hand: this is conquering grace.

(9.) The ninth inſtance of the ſtrength of grace, is, when believers ſee a beauty in the ſervice of religion, as well as in the ſweets of it; a beauty in ſpiritual employments, as well as ſpiritual enjoyments; when it is their meat and drink to do their Lord's will, and work his work, as well as enjoy his preſence; and when it is their very life to ſerve the Lord. O but they are come a great length, that can ſay, To us to live is Chriſt!

(10.) The tenth inſtance of the ſtrength of grace, is, when a man can rejoice in the gifts, graces, and uſefulneſs of others, even when they outſhine his own, and eclipſe him; and when a man can rejoice to ſee the work of God carried on by others, though himſelf be laid aſide, and ſhare not in the honour of it. Such eminent grace was in Moſes, when he ſaid, Envieſt thou for my ſake? would to God all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them, Num. xi. 29. And ſuch eminent grace was in Paul, when he rejoiced that Chriſt was preached, though with a deſign to cloud and eclipſe him, Phil. i. 18. Some have noticed two things as carrying noble grace in them: the one is, to be willing to be uſed in God's work, without without being taken notice of, or having the honour of it; and the other is, for a man to rejoice to see the work of God carried on by others, though he himself be laid aside.

(11.) The eleventh instance of the strength of grace, is, when a man can set the glory of Christ above his own interest, his own happiness, his own life and concerns. Moses and Paul were also eminent in this; Moses content to be blotted out of God's book, and Paul content to be accursed for Israel's sake: what was this, but, as some observe with respect to Moses, a preferring the glory of God before their own salvation, whose glory they looked upon as conjoined with Israel's preservation, in respect of the promises made to the fathers, and in respect of the blasphemy which the Egyptians and adversaries were ready to belch out against God, should he destroy them utterly. And again, we find Paul not only willing to be bound, but even to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus; Christ's honour being dearer to him than his life. O Sirs, it is rare grace for a man to be content that his name be eclipsed, and his honour laid in the dust, if the name and honour of Christ may be advanced thereby; and content to be a footstool on which Christ may ascend his throne.

(12.) The twelfth instance of the strength of grace, is, when a man can account no outward adversity too hard to suffer for the name of Christ on earth, and no outward prosperity too dear to part with for the enjoyment of Christ in heaven: when, on the one hand, he accounts no outward adversity too hard to suffer for the name of Christ on earth, and can glory in the cross of Christ; it is said of the disciples, Acts v. 41. They rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for the name of Christ; or, as the words may be read, that they were HONOURED TO BE DISHONOURED for Christ. And when, on the other hand, they account no outward prosperity too sweet, or too dear, to part with for the enjoyment of Christ in heaven. If a man be in affliction, adversity, distress, sickness, pain, and then be willing to be gone, there is not much here, this may be where there is no grace at all; but when a man enjoys abundance of worldly comforts and contentments, and yet longs for heaven and perfect holiness and happiness; when, though he may say, It is good to be here, yet he is saying, O it is better to be there, to be with Christ is best of all; and therefore is breathing with the spouse, Song viii. 14. Make haste, my Beloved, and be thou like to a roe, or to a young hart upon the mountains of spices: make haste to bring me to the place where I shall be for ever with the Lord, and shall be like him; for I shall see him as he is: no paradise here being like the paradise above. This were an instance of the strength of grace; and, O but a new discovery of the glory of Christ would make a man long to be above, and look with contempt upon all sublunary enjoyments! For, as a man that looks any time on the natural sun, when after that he looks down, the earth is but a lump of darkness to him; so, if we look to the glory of Christ, the Sun of righteousness, and the glory of heaven, how will it darken all worldly glory, and make us long to be above. —— Now, I say, it is the duty of believers, that are delivered from under the law, and consequently from the strength of sin, to discover, in opposition thereto, the strength of grace, in these or the like instances that I have named.

"To seek life by the law, or justification by "the deeds of it, says one, is to seek life in "death, justification in condemnation, and "heaven in hell." There are two things necessary to salvation, namely, justification, and sanctification; but the law can give none of them. Pardon sin it cannot; for, it is the office of the law to condemn sinners, and to curse the transgressors of it: renew unto holiness it cannot; for, though it be holy, yet it cannot make any holy, in regard, that whom it leaves under the curse, it leaves under the power of sin, which is the leading part of the curse; on which account it is declared in our text, that the strength of sin is the law. If the law could make a sinner either happy or holy, it could neither be just nor holy itself; but so just and holy is the law, that it punishes the least transgression with the greatest judgment: now, the strength of sin being the greatest judgment, and the greatest curse; to inflict this judgment on a sinner, and yet to make him holy, is a contradiction; therefore, though it require holiness, yet it cannot work holiness in a sinner: and hence, it does not detract from, but rather declare and illustrate both the justice and holiness of the law, to say, that the strength of sin is the law, And, from this subject,

5. We may further infer the woful nature and infinite evil of sin, as it stands in opposion to the infinite holiness of God manifested in his holy law: for, in this doctrine, we may see sin to be both a breach of the command, and a branch of the curse of God's law; for, as I shewed in the doctrinal part, the law threatened death to the transgressor, and spiritual death, which is the power and strength of sin, is the greatest death therein threatened. The meaning of this, in short, is, that the grand part of the threatening of the law was to this effect, In the day thou sinnest thou shalt die; which, when understood of spiritual death, the meaning is, If thou sin, and break my law, then thou shalt be left to the power of sin; I will punish thy sin with sin; there is no evil so great as sin, and there is no punishment so great as sin; if therefore, says the law, the commission of sin be thy choice, the strength of sin shall be thy doom: here is the greatest curse of God's law against sin; sin is a departing from God. Now, says God in the law, If you depart from me, then I will let you depart from me to sin, where the strength of sin shall be your greatest punishment in time; and at last I will bid you depart from me to hell, where the perfection of sin shall be your greatest punishment to eternity. The strength of sin then is to be considered, not only as it is a breach of the law, but as it is a branch of the curse thereof. This sentence of the law is past, and it is so far execute, as that a man is under the power and strength of sin, which, in this respect, is a penal evil, as well as a moral. The first sin that ever was committed by our first parents, was a moral evil; that is, a violation of the moral law, a breach of the command: but all the following sin, both in them and their sinful posterity, is not only a moral evil; that is, a breach of the command; but also a penal evil; that is, a branch of the curse, or a just judgment inflicted, according to the sentence of the holy law, against the sinner for his breach thereof. As sin is a moral evil, though it take occaſion from the law, yet the holy law can have no cauſality, no hand in it; for, on the contrary, as it commands holineſs, ſo it diſcharges ſin, and threatens it with the fire and ſword of God's everlaſting vengeance: but as ſin is a penal evil, or a righteous puniſhment of ſin, the law is properly the ſtrength of it; for, to ſay in this ſenſe, that the ſtrength of ſin is the law, is to ſay, that the ſtrength of ſin is a juſt judgment of God inflicted upon the ſinner, according to the threatening of his juſt and holy law. Ye ought, then, ſtill to diſtinguiſh here betwixt ſin, as it is a moral evil, and as it is a penal evil; for, not to diſtinguiſh well here, were to make this text always unintelligible to you: why? Becauſe to ſay that the law is the ſtrength of ſin, or the cauſe of it, as it is a moral evil, were to blaſpheme the holy law of God; but to ſay, that the law is the ſtrength of ſin, as it is a penal evil, and an execution of the ſentence of the law, is to commend the law, in its holineſs and juſtice both. Let this therefore be kept ſtill in mind, that the law is properly the ſtrength of ſin, not as ſin is a breach of its command, but as it is a branch of its curſe; and let this fill your heart with a deep ſenſe of the woful nature and prodigious evil of ſin, in that it is both a breach of God's command, and a branch of God's curſe. As it is a breach of the command, it is our giving up ourſelves to work wickedneſs; as it is a branch of the curſe, it is God's giving us up to ourſelves, and to the rule and ſtrength of ſin. Behold ſin here as the moſt fearful invention that ever was: for, as ſin is the greateſt evil that hell could invent, ſo God's puniſhing ſin with ſin, is the greateſt evil that heaven could invent. Sin, as it is a moral evil, and a breach of the law-command, is the moſt ugly brat of hell, a brat of our own, begotten in us by the devil; and in this reſpect it is an affronting of the holineſs of God, appearing in the precept of the law: and ſin, as it is a penal evil, or the ſtrength of ſin, as it is the puniſhment of ſin, and a branch of the law-curſe, is the moſt dreadful fruit and offspring of Heaven's vengeance againſt ſin; and in this reſpect it is a flaſh of the fire of God's infinite juſtice, ariſing out of the threatening of the broken law.——See here, then, the infinite evil of ſin, in that the ſtrength of ſin is the law.

6. Hence we may infer the ſtanding force and binding power and authority of the law over all that are under it, as a covenant of works: though it be broken, yet it is binding; though it be violated by us, yet it is obligatory upon us by nature, which is evident from its continuing to be the ſtrength of ſin to all unbelievers, who, if they were not both under the power of the command, and of the curſe of the law, would not be under the commanding and condemning power of ſin: the power of the law-command they are under, is the ſtrength of ſin occaſionally; and the power of the law-curſe is the ſtrength of ſin effectively.

(1.) The power of the command they are under, is the ſtrength of ſin occaſionally; Rom. vii. 8. Sin, taking occaſion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiſcence. Here the command is the occaſion that ſin takes, not that it gives occaſion; nay, the law, in its own nature, is ſo far from being the cauſe of ſin, that it does not ſo much as give occaſion of ſinning: but man's corrupt nature does take occaſion from it to break forth into more ſin, when it is ſtirred up, and irritate by the command and prohibition of the law; even as the ſparks ariſe out of a furnace when it is ſtirred up, ſo do the ſparkles of ſin ariſe out of the furnace of corrupt nature, when ſtirred up by the knowledge of the law that condemns it; and, inſtead of being amended thereby, doth bring forth ſin and ſinful deſires more abundantly. The law being the ſtrength of ſin this way, ſhews how much the power and force of the law takes place even over unbelievers, though in a way that is very terrible; and how much they are under obligation to the command, which yet they are ſo unwilling to yield ſubjection unto; yea, and are direct enemies to, Rom. viii. 7. Surely all things work together for evil to them that hate God, ſince the law itſelf, which ſhould ſerve to call men to God, makes them the more to flee from him, and run headlong unto ſin and death, through the untowardneſs of our nature, that is altogether eſtranged from God. This, by the way, takes the whole fault of our ſins from the law, and lays it where it ought to be, even upon our perverſe crooked natures: for the law is no more to be blamed by becoming the occaſion of ſo many great evils, than a phyſician is to be blamed, if, upon his forbidding cold drink unto a ſick man, the patient ſhould more frequently and vehemently thirſt after it. There are three ſorts of people that ſhould lay this matter to heart: All the children of diſobedience, that are in a natural ſtate, ſhould hereby be ſtirred up to ſeek after a new birth, and a new nature, ſince this is the wretched condition of corrupt nature: All the children of grace, whoſe natures are changed, ſhould hereupon be humbled, both in regard that they were once under the power of this poiſoned corruption, and have ſtill the remains of it ſticking in them, and prompting them to offend: and again, all the hearers of the word in general, ought hereupon to hear with fear, and to pray that they be not made the worſe by the word, through the fault of their own wicked nature; and particularly, that the goſpel itſelf be not the ſavour of death to them, and the ſtrength of ſin; which goſpel is the only thing in the world that preſcribes an antidote againſt the ſtrength of ſin. It is ſad enough, when men draw ſtrength to ſin from the law; but, what a dreadful thing it is, to draw ſtrength to ſin from the goſpel! This is the ſin of ſins, that turns the grace of God into wantonneſs, and when Chriſt himſelf is a ſtumbling-block, and a rock of offence. But,

(2.) The power of the curſe of the law, that ſinners are under, is the ſtrength of ſin effectively; Rom. iv. 15. The law worketh wrath; for where no law is, there is no tranſgreſſion: as if the apoſtle ſhould ſay, Mens corrupt nature cannot obſerve God's law; therefore, where there is a law, there is and muſt be tranſgreſſion; where there is tranſgreſſion, there is and muſt be wrath: for the law muſt curſe the breaker of it; and of this curſe, as I ſaid, the ſtrength of ſin is a principal part.—Both theſe particulars then do prove the ſtanding force and authority of the broken law over all that are under it, and out of Chriſt; though they have loſt ability to obey, yet it retains its authority to command; and though the law is weak to juſtify, yet it is powerful to condemn. Its weakneſs to juſtify, is not the fault of the law; it it is in us, Rom. viii. 3. It is weak through the flesh, our corrupt nature: it cannot justify us, because we cannot fulfil the righteousness of it, and it cannot give life, Gal. iii. 21. As the sun cannot give light to him that hath no eye; so the law cannot give life to him that hath no perfect righteousness: but its power to condemn is from its own nature, as it is a just law, cursing every transgressor, Gal. iii. 10.; and from the justice of the Law-giver, which appears in the sanction of the law, even as his holiness in the precept thereof. Every sinner out of Christ, then, remains under the commanding and condemning power of the law, as a covenant of works, as is evident from his being under the commanding and condemning power of sin; the strength of sin to command him, being occasionally from the commanding power of the law that he is under; and the strength of sin to condemn, being properly from the condemning power of the law that he is under: yea, the condemning power of the law influences the commanding as well as the condemning power of sin over him, while the sinner is by the sentence of the law righteously condemned to that slavery and bondage under sin, for his breach of the law; in which sense effectively, yet in a most holy and just manner, the law is the strength of sin. This standing force and binding authority of the law, as a covenant, both in its commanding and condemning power over unbelievers, is what makes them stand in absolute need of Christ, both in his active and passive obedience, as revealed in the gospel. The law-command they are under, when it is seen to be impreſtable, makes them need to flee to Christ's obedience; the law-curse that they are under. when it is seen to be intolerable, makes them need to flee to Christ's satisfaction: and hence it is said, Gal. iii. 24. The law is our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ; which it could not be, if sinners under the gospel were not under the commanding and condemning power of it: for, how does it bring us to Christ, but as it urges us to obedience, which is now impossible, and condemns us for our disobedience? Not that the law brings any to Christ directly; for it neither reveals Christ, nor can give strength to believe in him: but only accidentally, in that it accuses and condemns us, and so brings us to Christ, as a disease brings one to a physician.

7. Hence we may see the danger of being ignorant of God's righteousness, to the establishing of a righteousness of our own; seeing thus we keep ourselves under the law, and so under the power of sin: the danger of this is declared, Rom. x. 3. They being ignorant of God's righteousness, and so going about to establish their own righteousness, or to make their own rotten footless righteousness to stand, have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God: and thus they keep themselves under the law, which is the strength of sin. Whatever view we take of God's righteousness here, ignorance of it hath this sad effect. There are three ways in which God's righteousness is taken in scripture; either, 1. The righteousness that is in him, his essential holiness and righteousness: Or, 2. The righteousness that he requires of us by the law: Or, 3. The righteousness that he provides for us in the gospel. Now, ignorance of God's righteousness, in any of these respects, is a dangerous root of a legal spirit, and of establishing our own righteousness, and so of remaining under the law, that is the strength of sin.

(1.) If we consider it as the righteousness that is in God, his essential righteousness and infinite holiness of nature, as he is of purer eyes than that he can behold iniquity, and who will in nowise clear the guilty; surely they that know this righteousness of God, will never trust to a righteousness of their own. How can a sinner stand before this holy God, or be justified in his sight? Sinners may be justified in the sight of men by their works, but cannot be justified in the sight of God; nay, ignorance of God's righteousness fosters the opinion of self-righteousness and justification by works, which opinion is even the root of licentiousness of life. And whence is it that self-justiciaries, that hold justification by their own works, are ordinarily most licentious in their life and conversation? Why, the reason is, because the very same notions of God that make them fancy he is not so ill-pleased with their works, but that he can justify them by their works, do also make them fancy, that he is not so ill-pleased with their sins as that he will be too severe against them; and so here is a root of licentiousness on which sin grows, the strength whereof is the law.

(2.) If we consider God's righteousness, as the righteousness God requires of us in the law; ignorance of this makes them adventure on a righteousness of their own, and go about to establish it, and so remain under the law as the strength of sin. Men are ready to dream, that the law respects only some outward duties, which, when they comply with, they dream also that they are acquit by the law, and so they give loose reins to all other disobedience: but they do not know or consider, that the law requires perfection; and that internal, in heart and nature; external, in life and conversation; and eternal, in respect of perpetuity and duration; yea, sinless obedience; insomuch that it cannot justify any that is, or ever was a sinner. If this were considered, then their hopes by the law would give up the ghost.

(3.) If we consider God's righteousness, as the righteousness which God hath provided for us in the gospel; that is, Christ the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth, Rom. x. 3, 4. which is the principal meaning of the word here; it is the want of the knowledge of this righteousness, that makes men go about to establish a righteousness of their own, and trust to it; and so, remaining under the law, are under the power and strength of sin, because they remain under the curse of the law so long as they want this law-magnifying righteousness, this law-fulfilling righteousness: for the law cannot but curse every breaker of it; and so, the strength of sin being a part of the curse, they remain under the strength of sin so long as they remain under the curse of the law, through the want of this righteousness, which would make them to be accounted perfect keepers of the law, and so would really free them from the strength of sin.——See then, what a dangerous thing it is to be ignorant of God's righteousness.

8. Hence see, what need there was that our help should be laid upon such a mighty one as our Lord Jesus is, he being the end of the law for righteousness, who alone can deliver us from the strength of sin. There is no power can conquer sin, but that power that can satisfy the law, both both in its command and demand. It is utterly impossible for any man to deliver himself from the strength of sin; nay, we can no more do it, than we can shake off the curse of the law that we are under: the strength of sin hath the strength of the curse on its side; the strength of the curse of the law hath the strength of infinite justice on its side: and so, the power that can only remove or break the strength of sin, is that infinite power that can fully satisfy infinite justice; this, therefore, is the work of him who is the wisdom of God, and the power of God. We need not only a helper, but a strong One; therefore God hath laid help upon One that is mighty, Psal. lxxxix. 19. We need not only a Saviour, but a great One, and so Christ is called, Isa. xix. 29. He shall send them a Saviour, and a great One, and he shall deliver them. He must be a great Saviour, that is the author of so great a salvation; none else but the eternal Son of God, who is essentially One with the Father and Holy Ghost. Wo to the Arian blasphemy, that would rob us of the only ground of our hope; yea, rob the Son of God of his supreme Deity. This is our mighty Samson, that carries away the gates of Gaza, the gates of hell, that they might not prevail against us; and he only was able to carry away the strength of sin, by giving full satisfaction to the law and Law-giver, and so to stop the progress of God's infinite wrath against sinners with his everlasting righteousness; which law-magnifying righteousness being once imputed and applied, the legal and condmning strength of sin is broken, and thereupon the actual and commanding strength of it gradually broken, according to the measure of faith's daily improvement of this righteousness of Christ, till it be wholly destroyed in the very in-being thereof at death. For, as he is able, so he will save to the uttermost all that come to God by him.

9. Hence see, what obligations believers are under to Christ, their great Captain of salvation, and glorious Conqueror, that delivers them from the law. How sweet is this swan-song in the view of death, O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law; but thanks be to God that giveth us the victory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. What makes sin, as it is the sting of death, and death, as it bears that sting, to be so terrible? Why, it is the law, as it is the strength of sin; but now, the great Law-giver becoming, in the person of his Son, the law-satisfier, in the room of the sinner the law-breaker, and thereupon the judge becoming the justifier, according to Rom. iii. 26. the law hath no more power to curse the believer; and so sin hath lost its strength, and death lost its sting, and the grave its victory. The believer being perfectly delivered from the curse of the law, he is perfectly delivered from the strength of sin, as it is a branch of the curse.

QUEST. What is the strength of sin that still remains with the believer while here, if it be not a part of the curse?

ANSW. (1.) Sin in all unbelievers is, as I said, both a breach of the law, and a branch of the curse: but, with respect to believers, though their sin be a breach of the law, yet they are under no part of the curse of the law; for, though sin be a cursed thing, and the law curses sin where-ever it is, and curses the sin of believers, as well as the sin of others; yet, as the law cannot curse the person of the believer, so the sin that is suffered to remain in him, is designed for some other purpose than to be a curse to him; for it is one of the great privileges of the believer, that he is delivered from the wrath of God, and the curse of the moral law. Therefore,

(2.) Though sin in itself, and in its own nature, is a curse and a misery where-ever it is; yet, with respect to the believer, whenever he is delivered from the curse of the law; the remaining strength of sin in him is made subservient to some other end than ever it had before, through the infinite wisdom of that God who can turn a curse to a blessing, and a misery to a mercy. Though he still looks upon sin as his greatest misery, and on himself as miserable and wretched because of sin, saying, with the apostle, Rom. vii. 24. O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of sin and death? yet it is his mercy that he sees sin to be his misery now, inasmuch as it shall not make him miserable hereafter. Sin is still the greatest burden to the believer; but it is his mercy that sin is his burden now, that it may not weigh him down to hell, as it will do the rest of the world, who feel not the burden of sin in time. Sin is still, to the believer, the greatest disease; but it is his mercy that sin is his disease: for, whereas others that go on in sin impudently, and without spiritual remorse, sin is not their disease, with which they are affected or afflicted, and they are in danger of dying of that disease, like a man that is distempered with a fever, and yet hath no sense of it; but believers in Christ, having sin for their disease, under which they sigh, and sob, and moan, and groan, the disease is not unto death, eternal death, but unto the glory of God, and to their good. It is to the glory of God, as he is JEHOVAA-ROPHI, the Lord their helper and physician; and it is ordered to their good, the curse is turned so far to a blessing, that the remaining strength of sin in the believer is made subservient to these following good ends.

1. It serves for his instruction, that he may see more and more of the corruption of his nature and the daily need that he hath of Christ, both for righteousness and strength, that Christ may be more and more precious to him, as the brazen serpent to the stung Israelites. Sin in itself tends to destruction, but, through grace, it turns to the believer's instruction; for hereby he learns more and more that his own righteousness is but filthy rags, that Christ's righteousness is the only fair and glorious robe: he learns more and more, that as his damnation would have been just, if he had been sent to hell; so his salvation will be free, if he be brought to heaven: he learns more and more many sad experiences in the daily working of sin in him, and many sweet experiences in the daily improvement of Christ.

2. The remaining strength of sin in the believer serves for his correction, as Peter's fall was for the correction of his pride and self-conceit, when he said, Though all men forsake thee, yet will not I. Indeed, it is one of the sorest effects of God's fatherly anger towards his children, when he leaves them to one sin, thereby to correct them for another: under such a dreadful correction as this, the believer may have dreadful apprehensions of God through unbelief, as if he were designed to ruin and destroy him, saying, ſaying, as the church, Iſa. lxiii. 16. Wherefore haſt thou made us to err from thy ways? and hardened our hearts from thy fear? It is what the Lord's people may have frequent occaſions to obſerve, that the Lord ſharply reproves and corrects them for their ſloth and unwatchfulneſs, by leaving them to other ſins; as it was with David in the matter of Bathſheba: therefore, Watch and pray, ſays Chriſt, that ye enter not into temptation.

(3.) The remaining ſtrength of ſin in the believer ſerves for his humiliation; 2 Chron. xxxii. 26. Hezekiah was humbled for the pride of his heart. Believers are in danger of being lifted up, even after great manifeſtations; as Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 7.; therefore, a thorn in the fleſh, and a meſſenger of Satan, may be ordered to buffet them, leſt they ſhould be exalted above meaſure.

(4.) The remaining ſtrength of ſin in the believer ſerves for his excitation and upſtirring; it is ſo ordered, that ſin ſhould abide in believers, that it may be the continual ground, reaſon, and occaſion of the exerciſing of all graces, and putting a luſtre on their obedience: ſome excellent graces, ſuch as repentance and mortification, could have no exerciſe, if the ſtrength of ſin were altogether removed; and while we are in this world, there is a beauty in theſe graces, that is an overbalance for the evils of the remainders of ſin. And it renders ſpiritual obedience the more valuable, the more that remaining ſin renders it difficult and impracticable to nature.

[1.] The remaining ſtrength of ſin excites the believer to love and long for more of the enjoyment of Chriſt here, and for the full enjoyment of him hereafter, ſaying, O to be there, where there ſhall be no more ſin! O when ſhall the day break, and the ſhadows of ſin and ſorrow flee away! Haſte, my beloved, and be thou like a roe, or a young hart, upon the mountains of Bether.

[2.] The remaining ſtrength of ſin excites him to weary of this life: Oh! I am weary of my life, becauſe of the daughters of Heth, ſaid Rebekah; ſo, I am weary of my life, becauſe of the remains of ſin, ſays the believer; what is life to me, when I am in a continual conflict with ſuch boſom-enemies?

[3.] It excites him to pray without ceaſing, ſaying, with David, Pſal. xix. 12. Who can underſtand his errors? cleanſe thou me from ſecret faults; keep back thy ſervant alſo from preſumptuous ſins, and let them not have dominion over me. Where it is ſuppoſed, that ſecret ſins that are overlooked, and, perhaps, not known to be ſins, may make way for theſe that are preſumptuous. Thus there is a ſecret pride, that may ſeem to be nothing but a frame of mind ſuitable to our wealth, dignity, parts, or abilities; ſenſuality may ſeem to be nothing but a lawful participation of the good things of this life; paſſion may ſeem to be proper zeal; and covetouſneſs may ſeem to be but a neceſſary care of ourſelves and our families: but, when the ſeeds of theſe are covered with ſuch pretences, they will at length ſpring up, and bear bitter fruits in the lives of men. The beginning of all apoſtaſy lies in ſuch covered pretences: we need therefore to pray, with the pſalmiſt, to be cleanſed from ſecret faults, that we may be kept back from preſumptuous ſin: the remaining ſtrength of ſin excited him thus to pray.

[4.] It excites alſo to deprecate, with the pſalmiſt, Pſal. cxliii. 2. Enter not into judgment with thy ſervant, for in thy ſight no fleſh can be juſtified: The words here, Enter not into judgment with thy ſervant, may be read in the original, GO NOT TO LAW WITH THY SERVANT. Though David was a ſervant of God, a man according to God's own heart, yet he deprecates the law-trial: the beſt ſervants that ever God had, of mere men, cannot be juſtified by the law; they ſee ſin remaining in them, and therefore are excited to pray, Lord, go not to law with me; go not to the law-threatening with me, to purſue me for my debt; go not to the law-tribunal with me, but rather go to the goſpel-tribunal with me; go to Chriſt with me.

[5.] The remaining ſtrength of ſin excites them to make much of Chriſt, when they get a grip of him, and to ſay, with Jacob, Gen. xxxii. 26. I will not let thee go, except thou bleſs me. Oh! my woful ſin, and fearful departings had made a ſad ſeparation betwixt thee and me, inſomuch that I never thought thou wouldeſt have deigned to give me another viſit: but now, that I have got thee in my arms again, through grace I will keep the grip; I cannot think of our parting again, nor of my going back to that ſad and ſinful caſe again; nay, I will not let thee go till thou bleſs me.

[6.] The remaining ſtrength of ſin excites them to much heart-exerciſe, ſuch as ſelf-ſearching, and pleading that the Lord would ſearch, and try, and diſcover them to themſelves, ſaying, That which I know not, teach thou me: To ſelf-abaſement and abhorrence; Now I abhor myſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes: To ſelf-annihilation; Oh! I am nothing, leſs than nothing, worſe than nothing: To ſelf-condemnation; now the man judges himſelf, and paſſes ſentence againſt himſelf in the court of conſcience, that he may not be judged but abſoilzed in the court of heaven: To ſelf-obſervation and watchfulneſs; according to that of the apoſtle, Look to yourſelves; and that of the pſalmiſt, I ſaid, I will take heed to my ways, that I ſin not with my tongue; he is therefore excited the more narrowly to notice and obſerve the traitor that is in his boſom, and to keep a watch: And to ſelf-reformation, ſaying, with David, I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy teſtimonies. And, in theſe reſpects, God makes the believer's malady to be his medicine; and, on theſe accounts, the ſtrength of ſin is not wholly aboliſhed in believers in time; and infinite wiſdom ſees, that a ſtate of ſpiritual warfare is beſt for them.

Let none, from what hath been ſaid, take encouragement to ſin, nor abuſe this grace of God unto wantonneſs; for they that do ſo, will diſcover themſelves to be ſtrangers to Chriſt, and ſo under the ſtrength of ſin, as it is a branch of the curſe of the law. Shun, like hell, and abhor that peace of mind that is conſiſtent with the love of, and living in any known ſin; for, though believers may be often ſurprized into known ſins, yet while they refuſe all inward peace but that which comes in by moſt fervent deſires of deliverance from ſin, and continual application to Chriſt for the ruin of ſin, they diſcover that they are ſafe from the dominion thereof: yet theſe people that maintain a preſumptuous peace, while they live in any known ſin, are near the borders of the territories of helliſh ſecurity, where ſin reigns unto death.

10. To add no more from this doctrine, we may may infer the dangerous influence of any new doctrine of a legal ſtrain, that ſtands in oppoſition to this truth, That the law of works is the ſtrength of ſin, to all ſinners that have broken and violate it. Whence it being manifeſt, that all unbelievers are under the commanding and condemning power of the law, as a covenant of works, which appears by their being under the commanding and condemning ſtrength of ſin; and that it is the privileges only of believers that they are not under the law, as a covenant, either to be juſtified or condemned thereby; there is a twofold dangerous doctrine that ſtands in oppoſition to this truth.

[1.] That doctrine, which aſſerts, That unbelievers, under the goſpel, are not under the COMMANDING power of the law, as a covenant of works: Which ſome attempt to prove by this argument; Unbelievers, under the goſpel, cannot be under two oppoſite obligations, namely, to ſeek life by their own obedience; and, at the ſame time, to ſeek life by the obedience of another: now, they are, by the goſpel, obliged to ſeek life by the obedience of another, viz. of Chriſt; therefore, they are not obliged to ſeek life by their own obedience: and conſequently, ſay they, unbelievers are not under the commanding power of the law, as a covenant of works.

ANSW. This argument, or rather quirk, and ſophiſm, may be eaſily expoſed, if we conſider,

1. That it goes upon a wrong hypotheſis, ſuppoſing, as if the form of the command of the covenant of works did ly in this, that Adam was to ſeek life by his obedience, or that man was to ſeek juſtification by his own works; which is a ſuppoſition that is not matter of fact: for, Adam might have been juſtified by his works, or by his own perfect obedience, without ſeeking or aiming at any thing, but the pleaſing or glorifying of God, which is the ſupreme end of man's obedience; whereas, man's ſeeking, or aiming at life and juſtification by his obedience, is but a ſubordinate end thereof; yea ſuch, as that the command of that covenant might have been fulfilled without it: for, if Adam had yielded that perfect obedience, without ſeeking any thing elſe, or aiming at any other end, but the ſupreme one, viz. the glory of God, he would have got life by his obedience, even though he had generouſly neglected the ſupreme end altogether, namely, the ſeeking his own life by it, which was no part of the command itſelf. For, as our common Standards expreſs it, "When God created man, he entered into a "covenant of life with him, upon condition "of perfect obedience:" not upon condition of man's ſeeking life by his obedience; nay, this would have made the covenant of works run in a very ſelfiſh ſtrain, namely, inſtead of Do, and live; it would run, Seek life by your doing, and you ſhall live: and, inſtead of the threatening, If you do not, you ſhall die; it would run, If you ſeek not life by your doing, you ſhall die: which is a plain perverting the tenor of that covenant.

In oppoſition to that hypotheſis, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that if that covenant had ſtood, as Adam would not have claimed life ſo much upon his perfect obedience, as upon the free promiſe of God, connecting life with that obedience; ſo, in obeying, he would not ſo much, if at all, have ſought his own life and happineſs, as the glory of God, who graciouſly condeſcended to annex the promiſe of life with that obedience, which he was naturally obliged unto, prior to that annexation. Surely, what man was obliged to by nature was not made void, but rather furthered, by the covenant of works: but man was naturally obliged to obey his Creator perfectly, and that for this great end, viz. the glorifying of him; therefore, whatever hope of life, or fear of death, might be the conſequent of annexing the promiſe of life, and the threatening of death to the precept, yet it was the precept itſelf, to which life and death were thus annexed: that was the command of that covenant, and not man's ſeeking to have life, or to ſhun death by his obedience. The promiſe and threatening were motives to urge man's obedience; ſeeking to have life, or ſhun death, was but a ſubordinate end, that man might have lawfully had in his obedience. But now, to ſuppoſe, that man's being obliged to ſeek life by his obedience, was the command of the covenant of works, is to confound the command with the ſanction, and man's obedience to the command, with the ſubordinate end that he might have had in his obedience. If man had merely ſought himſelf, and his own life, by his obedience, without ſeeking God's glory; ſurely he had ſinned, and ſo broken that covenant: but if he had fought only God's glory, and yielded perfect obedience, merely with that view, and abſtracting from that ſubordinate end, the ſeeking of himſelf and his own life; I ſay, ſuppoſe he had done ſo, he would have got life by his obedience: therefore, ſeeing life might have been obtained by obedience, by virtue of the promiſe of life annexed to it, and obtained without man's ſeeking or aiming at himſelf, and his own life, by his obedience, then man's ſeeking life and juſtification thereby could never be the preciſe form of the command of that covenant. Why, the command could have been obeyed, and the promiſe of life, annexed thereto, could have been accompliſhed, without that ſeeking; ſeeing the promiſe was made to man's obedience, and not to his ſeeking life by his obedience. You ſee then, the error of the ſophiſm lies in miſtating and miſrepreſenting the form of the command of the covenant of works. Hence it is evident, that unbelievers, under the goſpel, may be obliged to ſeek life by the obedience of another, even of Chriſt, and yet remain under the commanding power of the covenant of works; ſince the command thereof did not ly preciſely in this, viz. that man was to ſeek life by his own obedience: no, this was but a ſecondary end, or a conſequent lawfully deducible from the promiſe annexed to the command, but no conſtitutive part of the command itſelf.

2. The fallacy of that ſophiſm appears alſo in this, that it ſuppoſes, as if ſinners, or unbelievers, not under the goſpel, were obliged, by the covenant of works, to ſeek life and juſtification by their own works and obedience: but though they, as well as other ſinners, do naturally, if they ſeek life at all, ſeek it by the law, or by their own works; yet the covenant of works never ſaid to a ſinner, Seek life by your own works. Though we ſhould grant, that ſeeking life by our perfect obedience were the proper command of the covenant of works, to man in his innocent ſtate, while he was capable to yield it; yet it never commanded a ſinner to ſeek life that way, nor did it ever promiſe life to a ſinner, a breaker of that covenant, upon his ſeeking life by his

his obedience; nay, it is impoſſible that ever the law ſhould do ſo, otherwiſe it would condemn itſelf, ſhould it offer to juſtify any tranſgreſſor of it, by whatever after-obedience of his; for, it is the very nature of the law to condemn the leaſt tranſgreſſor, whatever his after-works may be: no act of obedience, no not the higheſt, even of ſaints in heaven, can expiate for the leaſt breach of God's law; nor can any mortification take away the fault of ſin committed, Deut. xxvii. 26. Gal. iii. 10. Rom. iii. 20, 23. Jam. ii. 10. The law requires no leſs than a ſinleſs obedience; yea, the perfect obedience of a ſinleſs man; but never did, nor does require of any ſinner, that he ſhould ſeek life by his obedience. No man, that is a ſinner, is capable of any obedience but what is imperfect; now, imperfect obedience is a breach of the covenant of works, which requires abſolute perfection, Gal. iii. 10. Therefore, if it ſhould require any ſinner to ſeek life by his own obedience, then it would require him to ſeek life in a ſinful way, namely, by the continued breach of the law, which his beſt obedience would be, ſo long as it is, and cannot be but imperfect. Now, to ſuppoſe that the law requires this of any ſinner, whether under the goſpel or not, is to ſpeak wickedly of the holy and perfect law of God. The law of the covenant of works requires no leſs than ever it did; yea, it requires more of the ſinner, than it did of the ſinleſs man: it required only active obedience of innocent Adam, but now of the ſinner it requires active and paſſive obedience too; though the ſinner be inſolvent, and utterly unable to pay his debt, yet the law requires full payment of his double debt, both of obedience to the command, and ſatisfaction for his ſin in breaking of it.

Herein the caſe of unbelievers appears to be moſt miſerable, that they are under the commanding, as well as the condemning power of the covenant of works; that is, they are under an obligation to perfect obedience, and that upon pain of eternal death, under the ſentence whereof they already ly; and under the continued forfeiture of eternal life, and all title thereto, by reaſon of their want of that obedience, and violation of that covenant. That all unbelievers are under the command of the covenant of works, is plain,

(1.) Becauſe they are under the curſe of it. If they were not under the commanding power, they could not be under the condemning power of it; if they were not under obligation to the command of it, how could they juſtly be condemned by it, for want of obedience thereto, or tranſgreſſion thereof? Where no command, no tranſgreſſion; where no tranſgreſſion, no penalty: but under the penalty or ſentence thereof they are, Gal. iii. 10.: therefore they remain under the command of it, ſo long as they remain out of Chriſt.

(2.) That they are under the command of the covenant of works, is plain, becauſe they are under the law wherein eternal life is connected with perfect doing. That they are under the law, is evident, ſo long as they are not under grace, Rom. vi. 14. But it is now their miſery, that this law they are under, is a law wherein the connexion ſtands betwixt perfect obedience and eternal life: though there is no connexion by the law, betwixt their obedience now, and the promiſe of eternal life; yet there is a ſtanding connexion betwixt eternal life, and that perfect, perſonal obedience required by that law they are under, Rom. x. 5. The law ſtill continues to ſay, The man that does theſe things, ſhall live by them; and Mat. xix. 16. If thou would enter into life keep the commandments: which plainly ſays, that though they cannot yield obedience, ſuch as the law requires; yet the connexion betwixt life and obedience ſtands by that law they are under: it juſtifies all that can and do obey it, as it doth the elect angels; and it would juſtify men alſo, if they were in caſe, had they power, and did yield obedience to it, in the manner it requires.

(3.) That unbelievers are under the command of the covenant of works, is plain, becauſe it is "only the privilege of believers, that "they are not under the moral law, as a cove-"nant of works, to be thereby either juſtified "or condemned," as in our Confeſſion of Faith; which plainly ſays, not only the moral law was turned into the form of a covenant of works, by its being made a covenant of life and juſtification upon doing, and of death and condemnation upon not doing; but alſo, as it is the privilege only of believers in Chriſt, that they are neither under the command of the covenant of works, to be juſtified by their obedience, nor under the curſe thereof, ſo be condemned for their diſobedience thereto: which evidently ſhows, that it is the miſery of unbelievers, that they are not only under the condemning power of that covenant, wherein diſobedience and eternal death are connected; but alſo the commanding power of that law, wherein perfect obedience and eternal life are connected. This connexion betwixt life and perſonal obedience does not ſtand with reſpect to the believer, becauſe he is not under the law, Rom. vi. 14. Hence though the believers in Chriſt had a perſonal righteouſneſs of their own in perfection, as they will have in heaven; yet there is no connexion betwixt it and their juſtification, or eternal life, which is now to them the gift of God through Jeſus Chriſt; they being brought under another covenant, which makes their title to life to ſtand upon another foundation, namely, Chriſt's perfect obedience, active and paſſive, in their room and ſtead. But as for unbelievers, that are under the law, the ſtanding connexion betwixt life and obedience by that law, renders them as miſerable, in regard that it confirms their forfeiture of eternal life; as the ſtanding connexion betwixt death and diſobedience, by that ſame law, renders them miſerable, in regard that it continues them under the ſentence of eternal death.

(4.) That unbelievers are under the command of the covenant of works, is plain, becauſe they are, by the goſpel-diſpenſation, obliged to ſeek life by the obedience of another; which is ſo far from proving them not to be under the command of the covenant of works, that it plainly proves them to be under it. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as Surety, came to fulfil the righteouſneſs of the law, only as it is a covenant of works: and this he did, both by his active obedience, fulfilling the precept of the law; and by his paſſive obedience, ſatisfying the threatening, and enduring the penalty, of the law. Now, if unbelievers were only under the condemning power of the law, then they would need only to ſeek freedom from death, through Chriſt's ſuffering, or paſſive obedience, in their room; room; but if they were not under obligation to the command of the covenant of works, then there is no need they would have of Chriſt's active obedience, or doing in their room. They were never obliged, as I cleared before, to ſeek life by their obedience; but if they were not obliged, by the command of the covenant of works, to yield that perfect obedience, to which life was promiſed therein, then they would have no need to ſeek life by the obedience of another. What need they to ſeek that in the perſon of another; which they are not obliged to have in their own perſon? Who will ſee a need for ſeeking that which he is not obliged to have or yield? The unbeliever's obligation, therefore, to ſeek life by the obedience of another, namely, of Chriſt, is a plain argument to prove that he is under obligation to the command of the covenant of works.

See then the danger of that doctrine which aſſerts, that unbelievers are not under the command of the covenant of works: it croſſes one of the great ends of the Goſpel, which is to hold out Chriſt in his complete righteouſneſs, both of doing and ſuffering, that ſinners may come and take the whole benefit thereof, in order to their being intitled to eternal life, and ſecured from eternal death, according to the method of the covenant of grace; for, while they remain out of Chriſt, they are wholly and altogether under a covenant of works, both in its commanding and condemning power.

[2.] Another doctrine that ſtands in oppoſition to this truth that we are treating of, is, that which aſſerts, That believers by their NEW SINS come under a liableneſs, or obligation, to the penal ſanction of the law, and threatening of eternal death. I have elſewhere endeavoured to refute this error*; therefore, at preſent, I ſhall not enlarge upon it, but only repel it with the weapons that the text here affords me, namely, The ſtrength of ſin is the law; but thanks be to God, ſays the apoſtle in the name of all believers, that giveth us the victory through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Where it is plain, that all believers in Chriſt are delivered, by virtue of their union to him as the Lord their righteouſneſs, from the law and the curſe thereof; and conſequently from the ſtrength of ſin, as it is a part of the curſe of the law. See alſo Gal. iii. 13. Rom. viii. 1, 34. vi. 14. and vii. 6. But now, if believers are, after their union to Chriſt, brought, by their new ſins, under a liableneſs to the penal ſanction of the law; that is, to eternal death, and vindictive wrath; then they are brought under the curſe of the law again: and if ſo, then they are brought under the ſtrength of ſin, which is the leading branch of that curſe. If they that aſſert this doctrine, attempt to prove it from this, that every ſin deſerves God's wrath and curſe; and argue from the believer's ſins deſerving it, that therefore believers are liable to it, which is a very wide argument; then, by the ſame argument, I can prove, that becauſe there is no moment of a believer's life wherein he is perfectly free of ſin, ſo long as want of perfect conformity to the law, either in nature, heart, or way, is ſin; therefore there is not a moment of the believer's life, wherein he is not both under the curſe of the law and the ſtrength of ſin; and conſequently, no ſinful believers in this world, as all believers are, could ever, upon good ground, ſing this ſong of victory in the context. But this is ſuch dreadful doctrine, that I hope I need not enlarge in the refutation thereof.

Believers are neither juſtified upon their perſonal good, nor unjuſtified upon their perſonal evil; but their actual perſonal title to life, and their freedom from all legal obligation, and liableneſs to death, which are the two branches of juſtification, ſtand upon the active and paſſive obedience of Chriſt, imputed to, and received by them, whereby they are diſcharged from all law-debt. And though God continue to pardon the ſins of them that are juſtified, and they daily need his pardon, as he is a Father, whoſe Fatherly anger their ſins expoſe them to; yet they have no more to do with him as a wrathful Judge, except in their own unbelieving apprehenſions and legal fears, which are their ſin. Indeed the more aggravated their ſins are, the more are they liable to the bitter effects of God's Fatherly wrath and chaſtiſement; but to make either any good they do a prop to their juſtification, or any evil they do a flaw in their juſtification, this is Popery. The righteouſneſs of Chriſt, with which the believer is ever clothed, ſecures him ſo, that the ſentence of life is never revoked, neither is the ſentence of death ever incurred anew; for, He that believes hath everlaſting life; and, There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt.

Though the law cannot but curſe ſin, wherever it is, and even the believer's ſins; yet the curſe can never reach his perſon; Chriſt hath no curſed or condemned member. Simeon and Levi had been guilty of hainous crimes, in killing the Iſhmaelites; yet, as ſome think, they being good men in the main, Jacob does not curſe their perſons but their ſins; Gen. xlix. 7. Curſed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel; ſo cruel, that it might have brought a curſe upon them deſervedly. But Jacob, guided by the Holy Ghoſt, lays the curſe on their extravagant paſſion, not on their perſons: and every believer will join iſſue with that curſe of the law againſt his ſin, ſaying, Curſed and deſtroyed be my ſin, my unbelief, my enmity. — Believers are not under the law, as a covenant of works, either to be juſtified or condemned thereby: if they were brought, by their new ſins, under the curſe of the law, then they would be brought alſo under the power of ſin, and the reigning ſtrength of corruption; and ſo they are neither juſtified nor ſanctified; neither delivered out of the ſtate of ſin nor of miſery.

See the danger then of this erroneous doctrine, of believers being made liable to the curſe of the law: it is contrary to that goſpel-principle, which aſſerts, "That believers are delivered "from the wrath of God, and the curſe of the "moral law;" and it is contrary to that goſpel-practice of the believer's, which is influenced by the faith of his freedom from the curſe, and the faith of God's everlaſting love in Chriſt Jeſus. That doctrine of believers liableneſs to wrath, upon every ſin, tends to create ſlaviſh fear and dread in God's children; and ſo to diſcourage from duty, and marr true goſpel-holineſs, which is a ſerving of God, not out of ſlaviſh fear, but a child-like love, and of a willing mind: for the fear of hell, and of falling into eternal wrath, and the fear of loſing their ſonſhip, and being diſinherit, which ſome, that pretend much to orthodoxy, tell us, believers ought to be influenced by; theſe fears, I ſay,

* See, in particular for this, the Author's diſcourſe, on Gal. iv. 28. intitled, the PREGNANT PROMISE, p. 432.

I say, can never be filial or child-like, because they go upon the supposition of an allowed act of unbelief, namely, their apprehending God not to be their everlasting Father in Christ, according to the tenor of the new covenant; which if they believed him to be, they could not fear these evils, but would rejoice in the faith of the contrary; and this faith would work by love, and love would constrain them to holiness. So that the doctrine I here oppose, is not a doctrine according to godliness, but rather a doctrine of licentiousness, tending to keep believers themselves under the law, which is the strength of sin.

This text then shows us the dangerous tendency of both these new doctrines, the one making the believer not to be under the command of the covenant of works, and the other bringing the believer under the curse of it: but, as they that are not under the command of the law of works, cannot be under the curse of it; for, where no law, no transgression: and as they that are under the curse of the law, cannot but be under the command of it; for, where no transgression no penalty, and where there is a penalty there is transgression; so this strange doctrine in effect, and by plain consequences, makes unbelievers happy, and believers miserable: by freeing the believer from the command, it frees him from the curse; and by bringing the believer under the curse, it brings him under the command: and, by this means, unbelievers would not be under the law, but free both from the commanding and condemning power thereof; and believers would be under the law, and in bondage, both to the command and the curse.—I dare not think, that all who maintain the foresaid doctrine, are chargeable with asserting these dreadful consequences that flow from it; but surely it is dangerous to maintain such positions, from which such consequences are naturally deducible.——So far have I enlarged upon an use of information, because of the manifold lessons that arise from this text and doctrine.

Use 3. The third use shall be by way of examination and trial, namely, to see what state we are in, whether or not we be delivered from the law of works, as it is the strength of sin. In order to our having a clear view of this, there is a fourfold inquiry we may make.

Inquiry First, In order to try this matter, viz. Whether delivered from the law of works, as it is the strength of sin; let us enquire whether the strength of sin be truly broken; for sin has dominion, and a ruling power, over all that are under the law, Rom. vi. 14.

Why, say you, who are these, in whom the RULE and STRENGTH of sin remains unbroken?

ANSW. 1. All you that do not find a daily exercise with sin: they in whom the strength of sin is dashed, will be at work to get themselves purged from it; they are still either lamenting their sin, or plotting against it, praying against it, watching against it, making use of the blood of Christ against it, and sometimes mourning and crying against it, and against themselves for it: whereas they in whom it reigns, live peaceably and undisturbedly with it.

2. All you who have been your whole lifetime strangers to Christ, and to fellowship and communion with him, you are not yet delivered from sin; there is a throne of iniquity set up in your hearts, which shall not have fellowship with God, and indeed cannot.

3. All you that know nothing of that dispensation of grace, to wit, God's hearing of your prayers, and giving you his countenance therein; sin reigns in your hearts, and you regard iniquity in your hearts, therefore the Lord hears you not, but is saying, Go to the gods whom you have served:

4. All you that never found any pain in parting with sin, nor any thing of the cross of Christ, or of suffering in the flesh, 1 Pet. iv. 1. It is such as have suffered in the flesh, that have ceased from sin. Some were never disturbed in their making provision for the flesh; never knew the painful exercise of repentance and self-denial; never burdened with the vileness of sin; nor exercised in the work of judging themselves. When a gangrene is to be cured, because it is in the flesh, the flesh must be cut; so, because sin is seated in the flesh, the flesh must suffer by self-denial. There is a woful tenderness that we have of ourselves, that keeps us from mortifying our corruption. Have you never discovered or seen the evil and bitterness of sin, but lived always in peace? Why, then it seems the strong man keeps the house: if the passing of the gravel-stone never pained you, ye are not yet quit of it; if your heart was never pained with sin, it says your heart was never yet circumcised: the strength of sin remains where there has been no gospel-mortification. Which leads to a Second Inquiry, For helping you to try if you be delivered from the law of works, as it is the strength of sin, namely, inquire if you be acquaint with gospel-mortification. It is almost incredible to think how great a length people may go in legal mortification of sin, while yet they are utter strangers to the gospel. It is strange to think, what some heathens have done this way, and what many Popish monks have done; yea, what great reformations have taken place among some, so as by their life you would think they were real converts, because of their exactness and tenderness, while yet they are enemies to grace, and strangers to the gospel, and consequently to true mortification, which cannot be by the law, it being the strength of sin.

QUEST. How shall I know, whether it be by the GOSPEL that I MORTIFY sin, or by the LAW?

ANSW. 1. Gospel and legal mortification differ in their principles from which they proceed. Gospel-mortification is from gospel-principles, viz. the Spirit of God, Rom. viii. 13. If ye through the Spirit mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live: Faith in Christ, Acts xv. 9. Purifying their hearts by faith:—The love of Christ constraining, 2 Cor. v. 14. The love of Christ constraineth us.——But legal mortification is from legal principles; such as, from the applause and praise of men, as in the Pharisees; from pride of self-righteousness, as in Paul before his conversion; from the fear of hell; from a natural conscience; from the example of others; from some common motions of the Spirit; and many times from the power of sin itself, while one sin is set up to wrestle with another, as when sensuality and self-righteousness wrestle with one another: the man, perhaps, will not drink and swear; why? because he is setting up and establishing a righteousness of his own, whereby to obtain the favour of God: here is but one sin wrestling with another.

2. Gospel and legal mortification differ in their their weapons with which they fight againſt ſin: the goſpel-believer fights with grace's weapons, namely, the blood of Chriſt, the word of God, the promiſes of the covenant, and the virtue of Chriſt's death and croſs, Gal. vi. 14. God forbid that I ſhould glory, ſave in the croſs of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom [or, as it may be read, WHEREBY, viz. by the croſs of Chriſt,] the world is crucified to me, and I to the world. But now, the man under the law fights againſt ſin by the promiſes and threatenings of the law; by its promiſes, ſaying, I will obtain life, and win to heaven, I hope, if I do ſo and ſo; by its threatenings, ſaying, I will go to hell and be damned, if I do not ſo and ſo. Sometimes he fights with the weapons of his own vows and reſolutions, which are his ſtrong tower, to which he runs and thinks himſelf ſafe.

3. They differ in the object of their mortification: they both, indeed, ſeek to mortify ſin; but the legaliſt's quarrel is more eſpecially with the ſins of his converſation: but the true believer ſhould deſire to fight as the Syrians got orders; that is, neither againſt great nor ſmall, ſo much as againſt the king himſelf, even againſt original corruption: a body of ſin and death troubles him more than any other ſin in the world; O wretched man that I am! who ſhall deliver me from this body of death? Rom. vii. 24. His great exerciſe is, to have the ſeed of the woman to bruiſe this head of the ſerpent.

4. They differ in the reaſons of the conteſt: the believer, whom grace teaches to deny all ungodlineſs, he fights againſt ſin, becauſe it diſhonours God, oppoſes Chriſt, grieves the Spirit, and ſeparates between his Lord and him; but the legaliſt fights againſt ſin, becauſe it breaks his peace, and troubles his conſcience, and hurts him, by bringing wrath and judgment on him. As children that will not play in the duſt or ſtour; why? not becauſe it ſullies their clothes, but flees into their eyes, and hurts them: ſo the legaliſt will not meddle with ſin; why? not becauſe it ſullies the perfections of God, and defiles their ſouls, but only becauſe it hurts them. I deny not, but there is too much of this legal temper even amongſt the godly.

5. They differ in their motives and ends: the believer will not ſerve ſin, becauſe he is alive to God, and dead to ſin, Rom. vi. 6. The legaliſt forſakes ſin, not becauſe he is alive, but that he may live: the believer mortifies ſin, becauſe God loves him; but the legaliſt, that God may love him: the believer mortifies, becauſe God is pacified towards him; the legaliſt mortifies, that he may pacify God by his mortification. He may go a great length, but it is ſtill that he may have whereof to glory, making his own doing all the foundation of his hope and comfort.

6. They differ in the nature of their mortification: the legaliſt does not oppoſe ſin violently, ſeeking the utter deſtruction of it; if he can get ſin put down, he does not ſeek it to be thruſt out: but the believer having a nature and principle contrary to ſin, he ſeeks not only to have it weakened, but extirpate: the quarrel is irreconcilable; no terms of accommodation or agreement; no league with ſin is allowed, as it is with hypocrites.

7. They differ in the extent of the warfare, not only objectively, the believer hating every falſe way; but alſo ſubjectively, all the faculties of the believer's ſoul, the whole regenerate part being againſt ſin. It is not ſo with the hypocrite or legaliſt: for as he ſpares ſome ſin or other, ſo his oppoſition to ſin is only ſeated in his conſcience; his light and conſcience oppoſe ſuch a thing; while his heart approves of it.—There is an extent alſo as to time; the legaliſt's oppoſition to ſin is of a ſhort duration, but in the believer it is to the end; grace and corruption ſtill oppoſing one another.

8. They differ in the ſucceſs: there is no believer, but as he fights againſt ſin, ſo firſt or laſt he prevails, though not always to his diſcerning; and though he loſe many battles, yet he gains the war: but the legaliſt, for all the work he makes, yet he never truly comes ſpeed: though he cut off ſome actual ſin, yet the corrupt nature is never changed; he never gets a new heart; the iron-ſinew in his neck, which oppoſes God, is never broken; and when he gets one ſin mortified, ſometimes another and more dangerous ſin lifts up the head: hence all the ſins and pollutions that ever the Phariſees forſook, and all the good duties that ever they performed, made them but more proud, and ſtrengthened their unbelieving prejudices againſt Chriſt, which was the greater and more dangerous ſin.——Thus you may ſee the difference between legal and goſpel-mortification, and try yourſelves thereby.

Inquiry third, In order to try whether or not you are delivered from the law, as it is the ſtrength of ſin; enquire whether you have renounced your own righteouſneſs: for they that make their duties their righteouſneſs, and rely thereupon, are yet under the law, and ſo under the ſtrength of ſin.

QUEST. Who are they that make their DUTIES their righteouſneſs, and eſtabliſh a righteouſneſs of their own, and rely thereupon?

ANSW. 1. Theſe that pleaſe themſelves with a form of godlineſs; and, like the Phariſees, make clean the outſide, while yet they have a ſecret enmity at the power of godlineſs, having outward conformity to the letter of the law; and, like Paul before his converſion, touching the law blameleſs, yet little regarding the ſpirituality of it: they profeſs a regard to the law, but if they knew the inſide of it, they would hate it.

2. Theſe that reſt in a certain pitch of religion, when they have as much as they think will ſave them, and are for no more; not knowing what it is to preſs towards the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus.

3. Theſe that ſet their duties againſt their ſins, and againſt the wrath of God, and the fear of judgment; not fleeing to Chriſt for refuge, as all true believers do, Heb. vi. 18,; but to their duties, their prayers, and no further. Their betaking themſelves to duties would be well done, if they went a little further; but they ſet their duties againſt their ſins, and thereupon have peace, ſaying, Though my ſins be ſo and ſo great, yet my duties are ſo and ſo many; therefore, I hope all will be right. Thus they ſpeak peace to themſelves, when God never ſpake it: here is a dead fly that ſpoils all the ointment.

4. Theſe who are at enmity with the doctrine of grace; however much they may be engaged in duty, Chriſt is a ſtumbling-block to them, as he was to the Jews, Rom. ix. 33. The doctrine of duties and works, they underſtand; but the doctrine of grace, and of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, Chriſt, they will not underſtand; they ſuſpect it, as an enemy to the law, and Antinomianiſm: they are ignorant of God's righteouſneſs.

5. Theſe that perform duties in their own ſtrength, are eſtabliſhing a righteouſneſs of their own: though they ſay they can do nothing without Chriſt, yet they can do all without ſeeing much need of him. But, where Chriſt is the righteouſneſs of a ſoul, he will be the ſtrength alſo, Iſa. xlv. 24. Some, indeed, profeſs to take Chriſt for their ſtrength, but they ſet Chriſt againſt himſelf, as it were, by employing the ſtrength of Chriſt againſt the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; that is, when they cry to Chriſt for ſtrength to perform duties, that when they are enabled to perform them, they may make them their righteouſneſs. Hence many will ſay, O for a ſoft heart! O for an enlarged heart in duty! O for grace to ſeek, and a heart to pray! And if they get any thing like it, what make they of it? Why, then they think they have a good enough righteouſneſs, and ſeek no further.

6. Theſe that are of a wrathful and implacable diſpoſition, they diſcover themſelves to be under the law, and under the ſtrength of ſin, and ſo not delivered from eſtabliſhing a righteouſneſs of their own; The law worketh wrath, Rom. iv. 15. Not only wrath in God againſt man, and wrath in man againſt God; but wrath and enmity alſo in man againſt man, eſpecially upon any real or ſuppoſed injury. When wrath riſes, and reſts, and remains from day to day, from week to week, from month to month, from year to year, and the man will by no means be reconciled to one that has offered him any affront; nay, he will not pardon, he will not forgive, he will not forget; ſurely that man is under the law, and under the ſtrength of ſin: he never got a pardon from God, that cannot pardon his neighbour an offence; he has not the image of God, not being merciful as his heavenly Father is merciful; he cannot pray, Forgive me my ſins, as I forgive them that ſin againſt me. Anger reſts in the boſom of fools, ſays Solomon. Anger and wrath may riſe and rage a little in the boſom of a wiſe man, a good man, but it cannot reſt there; it reſts only in the boſom of fools. This fooliſh and implacable diſpoſition ſhews the man to be ſelfiſh and ſelf-righteous.

7. Theſe whoſe good hope, founded upon and drawn from duties, never utterly failed them, ſo as to ſay, as it is, Iſa. lvii. 10. There is no hope; no, they are wearied in the greatneſs of their way, and have found the life of their hand, &c.

8. Theſe who, the more they go about outward duties, the more liberty they take to ſin, ſaying, as it is, Prov. vii. 14. and 18. compared, I have peace-offerings with me; this day have I paid my vows: come let us take our fill of love, until the morning; let us ſolace ourſelves with loves.

9. Theſe who neglect duties, through deſperation and hopeleſneſs of getting any good by them, ſaying, It is vain to ſerve the Lord, why, what is this, but that becauſe they would rely on duties, as their Saviour, when they find they may not do ſo, they will rather forbear them, and caſt all behind their back, ſaying, There is no hope? Hence,

10. When men are madly purſuing their luſts, it may be a ſign they are relying on their duties, even when they commit ſin deſperately. Why, they are deſperate debtors; and, perhaps, have been trying, ſome time or other, to pay their debt by doing ſomething that they might live: but finding that will fail them, they ſay, There is no hope of paying that debt; therefore they deſperately take on more; Jer. ii. 25. There is no hope; for, I have loved ſtrangers, and after them will I go: and, Jer. xviii. 12. There is no hope; but we will walk after our own devices, and do every one the imagination of his evil heart. They want not a natural inclination, as all others have, to pay their debt in the way of a law of works, with their own righteouſneſs, which appears whenever conſcience is awakened; but for the preſent they are deſperate: if they cannot win to heaven by their own righteouſneſs, they will rather go to hell in their wickedneſs, than be obliged to the righteouſneſs of another for heaven and eternal life: ſo ſtrong is the law of do and live, even at the root of their wickedneſs. The ſtrength of ſin is the law.

Again, it may aſked here, Who are they that have RENOUNCED their own righteouſneſs?

ANSW. 1. Such as have renounced their own righteouſneſs, are eaſily brought to the ſenſe and acknowledgement of their ſin; whereas others are ready to ſay, with theſe who are commanded to return to the Lord, Wherein ſhall we return to him? Such were the Phariſees, Luke xviii. 11, 12.

2. The great care of ſuch will be to advance in the knowledge of Chriſt; they have a high eſteem of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, accounting all other things, on which they formerly relied, but dung; and expecting juſtification and abſolution before God, only upon the account of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, laid hold upon by faith, Phil. iii. 8, 9.

3. From a ſight of their own imperfection, and inability in duty, they go on and make progreſs in Chriſt's ſtrength, Pſal. lxxi. 16. Phil. iii. 12, 13, 14. And in all their approaches to God, they are concerned how to get the Spirit with them, and the internal part of duty performed, as well as the external; and their ſpiritual joy and comfort ariſes from Chriſt: Philip. iii. 3. They worſhip God in the Spirit, rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh.

4. Such will juſtify God in all his diſpenſations of providence towards them, though never ſo harſh; and undervalue damages and loſſes, if they can but win Chriſt, Phil. iii. 8.

5. As they are not lifted up upon the account of their inherent righteouſneſs, but ſay, with Job, chap. x. 15. If I be righteous, yet will I not lift up my head; and with the church, Iſa. lxiv. 6. All our righteouſneſſes are as filthy rags; and dare plead for nothing at the throne of grace on the account thereof, Dan. ix. 18. Job ix. 15.: ſo their obedience is moſt free; the believer acts freely, not by the coaction and compulſion of the law, and without reſpect to the promiſes or threatenings of it, as it is a covenant of life; he being, by virtue of the new nature, ready to do the will of God with pleaſure. As there is need of no law for the body, which may compel it to eat, drink, ſleep, walk, ſit, ſtand, or do any works of nature, as I ſaid before, becauſe it is ready to do theſe things naturally; ſo there is need of no law-coaction and compulſion to drive the believer to obedience: there are goſpel-threatenings and promiſes, that are lined with love, which work upon him, and conſtrain him; but to be acted by the law-threatening of death in caſe of diſobedience, or the law-promiſe of life upon obedience, is not

not compatible with the ſtate of the believer, as ſuch; he not being under the law, but under grace, his obedience is free, Luke i. 74, 75.

6. They that have renounced their own righteouſneſs, have renounced their own ſtrength alſo, and ſaid, In the Lord only have we righteouſneſs and ſtrength, Iſa. xlv. 24. They ſee the need of the ſame creating power that began the good work, to carry it on every day, as long as the new-creation work is a working. As in the firſt creation, after God made heaven and earth, he left not the work there, but every day the Lord ſaid, Let there be this, and, Let there be that; Let there be light; and then, Let there be fruit; ſo, in the new creation, believers ſee a need every day of an almighty word, ſaying, Let there be light, ſpiritual light; and after that, Let there be fruit, ſpiritual fruit; and again, every day another word of power from God, to carry on the new-creation work, during the whole ſix days of our life here, till the Sabbath of everlaſting reſt come.

Enquiry fourth, In order to try whether or not you are delivered from the law, as it is the ſtrength of ſin; enquire whether you be experimentally acquaint with the goſpel, as it is the means and the ſtrength of holineſs.

QUEST. What is it in the GOSPEL that contributes to the ſtrength of holineſs, that believers, who are not under the law, have ſaving experimental acquaintance with?

ANSW. There are theſe following things in the goſpel, that contribute to the ſtrength of holineſs; and you may try what experience you have thereof.

1. What experience have you of the ſanctifying diſcoveries of the goſpel? Some diſcoveries are introductory and preparatory unto, and ſome are effective of holineſs to the deſtroying of the ſtrength of ſin. The introductory diſcoveries are ſuch, as give perſons the faith of the law; ſuch as, conviction from the evidence and demonſtration of the Spirit; this may be called a goſpel-diſcovery, in ſo far as it is by the Spirit promiſed in the goſpel, John xvi. 7, 8, 9. If it be aſked here, Does not the law prepare us for the grace of the goſpel? We reply; Not in itſelf, any more than ſin and miſery doth: for the law makes known ſin, and leaves a man under wrath, Rom. iii. 19. 20. The whole revelation of the remedy, and application thereof both, is by the grace of the goſpel; Luke xix. 10. Chriſt came to ſeek and to ſave that which was loſt; both to ſeek, by the revelation of the goſpel; and alſo to ſave, by the application thereof. Yet theſe introductory diſcoveries may be called goſpel-diſcoveries, in reſpect of the author, namely, the Spirit promiſed in the goſpel; and becauſe of their connexion, in the elect, with the ſaving work that follows, even though they be not ſaving in their own nature; and therefore, theſe convictions may be called legal, in reſpect of the man's ſtate, who is the ſubject thereof, he not being yet in Chriſt; and in reſpect of the ſubſerviency of the law under the influence of the Spirit, for making theſe diſcoveries of the man's ſinful and miſerable ſtate: without this faith of the law, and theſe convictions, one will never prize goſpel-grace, which is the channel wherein true holineſs runs.—But again, ſome goſpel-diſcoveries are effective of holineſs, namely, the diſcovery of the glory and fulneſs of Chriſt, and of the glory of the grace of God in him: Holineſs to the Lord, is the immediate effect thereof, 2 Cor. iii. 18. Beholding, as in a glaſs, the glory of the Lord, we are changed into the ſame image. Now, what know ye of this goſpel-diſcovery of a God in Chriſt, reconciling the world to himſelf? If ever Chriſt was revealed in you, the revelation would be ſanctifying and transforming.

2. What experience have you of the ſanctifying attractive charms of the goſpel? have you always ſtopt your ears at the voice of the charmer therein? and, was you never taken and captivated with the joyful ſound? or, have you been allured with the charms, and drawn by the attractives thereof? What theſe attractives are, you ſee, Hoſ. xi. 4. Jer. xxxi. 3. John xii. 32. The bands of love; the divine loving-kindneſs; and all in and through a crucified Chriſt, lifted upon the croſs, on the throne, and on the goſpel-pole. Theſe goſpel-attractives are of ſuch a ſanctifying nature, and ſo contributive to the ſtrength of holineſs, that they natively conſtrain the believer thereunto, 2 Cor. v. 14, 15. This love of God to the ſinner, begets love in the ſinner to God; We love him, becauſe he firſt loved us: and love to God is the very heart of holineſs; Love is the fulfilling of the law; and therefore, the more love, the more holineſs.

3. What experience have ye of the ſanctifying attire of the goſpel? for the goſpel-garment contributes to the ſtrength of holineſs. There is a twofold goſpel-garment; the one is an unchangeable, and the other a changeable one: the unchangeable goſpel-garment is the imputed righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which, when it is put on by faith, the ſoul is ſaid to be clothed with the ſun, Rev. xii. 1.; and it is ſuch an unchangeable robe, that it is never taken off the back of theſe that are once clothed with it, but they remain always fair and perfectly righteous in the ſight of God. It is true, this may be called, and is, indeed, their juſtifying attire; and yet I call it ſanctifying alſo; becauſe, as juſtification is a root and cauſe of ſanctification, ſo it is this righteouſneſs of Chriſt that purchaſed holineſs, and conſequently brings its purchaſe ſtill along with it: and hence the faith of this righteouſneſs works by love, and ſo producing holineſs of heart and way.—The changeable goſpel-garment is the imparted righteouſneſs of Chriſt; that is, holineſs itſelf: I call it changeable, like the moon; not becauſe the ſoul that is clothed with it is ever altogether naked or denuded of it again, but becauſe of the various degrees it admits of; ſometimes more and ſometimes leſs, and the changes from better to worſe, and from worſe to better therein, according to the meaſure of the communication of the Spirit, and according to the need of the new creature, Iſa. xl. 31. They that wait on the Lord ſhall renew their ſtrength; they ſhall CHANGE their ſtrength, as I formerly noticed, the word imports: like a man changing his clothes, having ſeveral ſuits conform to his occaſions: a garment for working, and a garment for walking abroad withal; a garment for night, and a garment for day; one for the week-day, and another for the Sabbath: he hath changes of raiment; ſo the believer hath changes of ſtrength: if he need to walk, he has walking ſtrength; if to run, running ſtrength; if to flee, flying ſtrength is communicate: for ſo it follows, They that wait on the Lord ſhall renew their ſtrength; they ſhall mount up with wings as eagles, they ſhall run and not weary, and walk and not not faint.——Examine your experience with reſpect to this twofold robe: do you know the ſanctifying influence of the juſtifying righteouſneſs of Chriſt? If you be delivered from the law as it is the ſtrength of ſin, you have ſometime or other experienced, that the juſtifying righteouſneſs of Chriſt hath a ſanctifying effect; and this it hath, when the ſenſe of pardoning mercy melts the heart for ſin; when the faith of forgiveneſs draws forth heart-lothing of ſin, and heart-love to holineſs; and when the apprehenſion of the mercy, love, and grace of God, quickens the ſoul to a lively performance of duty, and enlarges the heart to run the way of God's commandments.

4. What experience have you of the ſanctifying promiſes of the goſpel? That they contribute to the ſtrength of holineſs, is evident from 2 Cor. vii. 1. 2 Pet. i. 4. Was ever a promiſe applied with power and majeſty to your heart? If ſo, then, what effect had it? Did you not ſee your own helliſh nature, even to ſelf-abhorrence? and, was not the deſire of your ſoul after the participation of the divine nature, excited to ſuch a degree, that, perhaps, you could have wiſhed rather to die, than not to be holy; and your breathing was, O to be holy! O to be like unto Chriſt! O to have all heart-plagues healed, and all ſpiritual maladies cured.

5. What experience have you of the ſanctifying principles, truths, tenets, and doctrines of the goſpel? Ye ſhall know the truth, ſays Chriſt, and the truth ſhall make you free; free from the ruling power of ſin; free from the bondage of the law; at liberty to ſerve the Lord; free from that ſlavery to ſin and Satan, that the reſt of the world are under, who want the true knowledge of the ſanctifying principles and doctrines of the goſpel, Eph. iv. 19, 20, 21.; where we ſee, that the knowledge of the goſpel directs to another courſe than the world take; ſome are altogether ignorant of the ſanctifying principles of the goſpel, others have a head-knowledge and notion of ſome goſpel principles, but no ſanctifying knowledge thereof; theſe abuſe the grace of God to licentiouſneſs. But, what experience have you of the power of goſpel-truth, and the ſanctifying virtue of goſpel-doctrine? If the grace of God has taught you nothing but looſeneſs, you have no true knowledge of it; for it teaches otherwiſe, Tit. ii. 12. Did never the doctrine of Chriſt's death and reſurrection, as the Lord our righteouſneſs, tend to beget you to a new and lively hope? Did you never feel the power of that doctrine for killing ſin? Examine your experience by that of Paul, who deſired to know more and more of Chriſt, and of the power of his reſurrection. Phil. iii. 10. compared with 1 Pet. i. 3.

6. What experience have you of the ſanctifying privileges of the goſpel? Goſpel-privileges, enjoyed by believers, are the foundation of goſpel-holineſs. By the law of works, obedience was firſt to take place, and then privileges; but by the goſpel of grace, privileges firſt come in, and thereupon obedience influenced thereby. Have you experienced goſpel-joys and comforts in the Lord, inſomuch that the joy of the Lord was your ſtrength? Goſpel-conſolation is a great furtherance of goſpel-ſanctification. Have you ever experienced a goſpel-day, I mean, not a day of preaching only, but a day of power? Why then, ſurely willingneſs to ſerve the Lord in holineſs was wrought; Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power. But not to enlarge this uſe further, I come to cloſe with a word, by way of exhortation.

And our exhortation ſhall be firſt to unbelievers, that are under the law, and ſo under the commanding and condemning ſtrength of ſin. Oh! Sirs, do not ſtay there; for it is a fearful ſtate, to be under the law, and under the power of ſin: if you die in that ſtate, you muſt bear the weight of your ſins for ever; and, how dreadful will it be, when God ſhall open the treaſures of his wrath, and ſhut the bowels of his mercy for ever upon you! O unbelievers! ſee the neceſſity of fleeing to Chriſt and his righteouſneſs: think not to pleaſe God by your own feeble endeavours; there is but one way in all the world to get from under the law-curſe, and ſo from under ſin's ruining power, and that is, to get in to Chriſt, who hath fulfilled, and is the end of the law for righteouſneſs to every one that believeth. Where there is but one way, there is no room for conſultation: were there many ways to heaven, you might conſult which to take; but there is only one, Chriſt the way, the truth, and the life; there remains no more ſacrifice for ſin. If a man were fallen into a great pit, full of ſnakes, and ſerpents, and fire, and all that can be imagined terrible and dreadful; and there comes one, and caſts a rope into this deep pit; will there be need of arguments to perſuade the man to take hold of it? He is in a miſerable caſe, and there is no other way to help him: even ſo here, you are in a pit full of ſnakes, and ſerpents, and fire, the power of Satan, the ſting of ſin, the fire of God's wrath; you are in a manner in hell already; and God has ſent his Son, with a law-biding righteouſneſs in him; he lets down this rope, that poor periſhing ſinners may lay hold upon it: what will you do in this caſe? will you put off time, ſaying, What ſhall I do? when there is no other way left for you, but to come to Chriſt, as the Lord your righteouſneſs. Alas! ſtand not trifling and dallying till you go to the devil in hell, as many do. Will you take adviſement till the next year, when, for ought you know, you may be in hell the next hour? Are you brought to that queſtion, What ſhall I do to be ſaved? There is no other anſwer in the world to be given to it, but this one, Believe in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and you ſhall be ſaved; deſpair of life by the law, as you would not live under the ruling, and die under the damning ſtrength of ſin: but repair to the goſpel, by applying the promiſe thereof; for there is exhibite to you the ſaving ſtrength of Chriſt. Give up with the old covenant of works; for there ſin reigns, through want of righteouſneſs, to eternal death: but take hold of the new covenant of promiſe; for there grace reigns, through righteouſneſs, unto eternal life, by Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, Rom. v. 21. Be content not to think of paying a farthing of your own debt to the law, and to be obliged to Chriſt for paying it all for you. To believe in Chriſt, is to come out from under the law, that you may be under grace: and to come under grace, is to be ſubject to it, ſo as to be content to be in grace's debt, and that grace do all for you and in you, and that grace be glorified in you, and Chriſt glorified in grace, and God glorified in Chriſt. May the power of grace perſuade you to flee to Chriſt, and out from under the law, which is the ſtrength of ſin.

ſin.——I might here adduce manifold motives and directions; but, referring you to other parallel ſubjects, and having enlarged ſo much beyond my intent in the preceding parts of this diſcourſe, I haſten to a concluſion. Therefore, 2dly, I would offer a ſhort word of exhortation to believers, that are NOT under the law, and ſo are delivered from the ſtrength of ſin. O let it be your care to ſtudy conformity to the law as a rule of life, ſince you are graciouſly delivered from it as a covenant of life: give evidence, that being delivered from the law, you are delivered from the ſtrength of ſin: ſhake off the power and dominion of it; you are under ſtronger obligations to mortify ſin than any in the world; yea, than Adam in a ſtate of innocency; for you are not under the law that he was under, but under grace; and grace hath brought you to poſſeſs a more glorious and honourable righteouſneſs than ever Adam could have yielded, though he had never violate the covenant of works. Grace gives you more encouragement to obey the law, as a rule, than ever Adam had to obey it, as a covenant. You have ſuch grace as Adam never had in that ſtate, even grace in a better hand, where it can never be loſt. Adam never had a title to life by the covenant of works, becauſe he failed in the condition; but you have a title to life, and the condition alſo in your Head: Will you ſin, becauſe you are under grace? God forbid. Will you turn looſe, and carnal, and formal, becauſe you are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid. Will you hate God, becauſe he loves you? Oh! monſtrous ingratitude! Becauſe God has a regard for your happineſs, will you have no regard to his honour? Becauſe he is gracious, will you be ungrateful? Alas! tell it not in Gath!—Has grace juſtified you, and will you not evidence your juſtification by your ſanctification? — Has grace adopted you, and will you not be followers of God as dear children? —Has grace given you the hope of glory, and will you not, having this hope, purify yourſelf even as he is pure?—Has grace given you all the promiſes, and will you not, having theſe promiſes, cleanſe yourſelves from all filthineſs of the fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting holineſs in the fear of God?—O give evidence that you are not under the law, which is the ſtrength of ſin; but under grace, which is the ſtrength of holineſs. If you be under grace, ſurely you will have a regard to the glory of God, and to the credit of grace, that the goſpel of grace be not reproached as an Antinomian doctrine of licentiouſneſs. We call you to mortify ſin, and ſtudy holineſs and conformity to the law, as a rule of life, as you have a regard to the love and grace of God, and to your own peace and comfort; for, Great peace have they that love his law: as you have a regard to the welfare of others, and their converſion and converſion; and as you have a regard to your family and poſterity, and would entail a bleſſing on following generations, and leave a bleſſing behind you. In a word, it is by your holineſs of heart and life, that the power of grace is ſeen, the truth of grace is tried, the beauty of grace is diſcovered, and the comfort of grace is felt, as I noticed on a former occaſion. The power of grace will not be ſeen, if you be not holy, and if it be not ſo powerful, as to make the hardeſt command eaſy to you: The truth of grace will not be evident to you, if you be not holy; for ſin will caſt a cloud over it: The beauty of grace will not appear to others, if you be not holy; they will ſay, You are juſt like neighbour and other, if you do not ſhow your faith by your works: The comfort of grace will not accrue to you, if you be not holy; it is they that walk in the fear of the Lord, that walk in the comforts of the Holy Ghoſt. The ſweets of religion, and the exerciſe of it go together. Go therefore in the ſtrength of grace, leaning upon your Beloved, ſetting the ſtrength of Chriſt, who is the Lord your righteouſneſs, againſt the ſtrength of ſin, which is the law. The more firm and fixed that a man's faith is, with reſpect to Chriſt, as the end of the law for righteouſneſs, the more faſt will he follow the Lord in the works of holineſs; for the true believer hath two feet, as I have formerly ſaid elſewhere, like the feet of a pair of compaſſes, the one foot ſtands faſt in the centre, and the other draws the line, and goes round; now, if the foot that is in the centre do not ſtand firm and fixed, if it move out of its place while the line is a drawing, then the other foot can never make an exact circle: ſo here, the believer hath two feet, the one is the aſſured faith of juſtifying grace, this ſhould be ſtill firmly fixed in its centre Chriſt, the Lord our righteouſneſs; the other foot is goſpel-obedience, and a holy walk influenced by faith, and this ſhould be always moving about in the work of the Lord, and running its holy round of ſpiritual duties: now, if one foot, namely, the faith of juſtifying grace, be not fixed, and firmly eſtabliſhed in its centre, then the other foot, namely, that of obedience, cannot perform its motion with any exactneſs. While a believer is fixed in the faith of God's grace and love, then this love conſtrains him to obedience; but when his faith begins to waver and totter, and he begins to jealouſe the Lord's love, and to deny his grace, then he loſes his heart, and ſtrength, and courage; and ſo, by an evil heart of unbelief, departs from the living God. O then, ſeek to be firmly fixed in the faith of divine grace, and in the full aſſurance of your privilege, that you are not under the law, but under grace; then ſhall you be able to mortify ſin with ſucceſs. And, ſeeing the moſt thankful believer is the moſt obedient, entertain ſtill a thankful rememberance of your merciful deliverance from the law, and let the apoſtle's ſong of victory in the text be much in your hearts and mouths, O death, where is thy ſting? O grave, where is thy victory? The ſting of death is ſin, and the ſtrength of ſin is the law: but thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

SERMON

SERMON LI.

The MEDIATOR'S POWER in Heaven and Earth.*

MATTH. xxviii. 18.

And Jeſus came and ſpake unto them, ſaying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.

HAVING now in view the adminiſtration of one of the moſt ſolemn and auguſt ordinances of God upon earth, namely, our New-Teſtament ſolemn feaſt, the ſacramental Supper of our Lord Jeſus; if any ſhould queſtion, by what authority we ſet about ſuch a work? We need only look to the context here, and notice the Lord Jeſus giving a commiſſion to his diſciples, and their ſucceſſors to the end of the world, to diſpenſe the word and ſacraments to all nations. The ſacrament of baptiſm is here mentioned, and the ſacrament of the ſupper included in that word, ver. 20. Teaching them to obſerve all things whatſoever I have commanded you; and this commandment among the reſt they received of the Lord, 1 Cor. xi. 23. But, to corroberate and fortify this commiſſion given to his ſervants, if any ſhould queſtion further, by what authority did Chriſt give a commiſſion to this effect in the church of God? If he had aſſumed a power to himſelf, without having any divine commiſſion of his own, then theirs, received from him, might be reckoned not valid; therefore, our Lord here clears to them the validity of their commiſſion, by declaring to them the nature and extent of his own, ſaying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.

My friends, we are called this day to commemorate the death and ſufferings of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; yet it may be no loſs to our faith, that it is not the manner of his death and paſſion, but rather the remarkable effects of his death, and the grand reward of his ſufferings, that my text leads me to: I ſay, it may be no loſs, but rather an advantage to our faith, could we follow him from the croſs to the crown; for, though they believe to advantage, who look to a crucified Chriſt hanging on a croſs, yet they believe to more advantage, who ſtep up a little higher, and look to a crucified Chriſt ſitting upon a throne of power and majeſty. It is beſt looking to Chriſt where he is, and not where he was: as the angel ſaid to the woman, ver. 6th of this chapter, He is not here, for he is riſen, when they were ſeeking him in the grave; ſo we may ſay to theſe who would ſeek Chriſt upon the croſs, He is not here, but upon the throne. It it true, as the angel further ſaid to the woman, Come ſee the place where the Lord lay, though they were not to ſtay there, but ſeek after a riſen Chriſt; ſo may we ſay to you, it is not amiſs for you to come ſee the place where he was, namely, in Golgatha, hanging on a croſs, Making his ſoul an offering for ſin: but, having finiſhed that work, he is not there; therefore, let not faith ſtop and tarry only in the place where he was, but come ſee the place where the Lord is: and, behold, it is a place of abſolute ſupremacy and univerſal government wherein now he is fixed: All power in heaven and in earth is given unto me.

Our Lord Jeſus, after his reſurrection, having appeared to the eleven diſciples, ver. 16. we find the different entertainment he met with from them, ver. 17. When they ſaw him, ſome worſhipped him, and ſome doubted. Now, the words of our text meet with the caſe both of worſhipping and doubting diſciples; for, that the worſhipping diſciples might know they had a right object of worſhip, and that the doubting diſciples might know they had no reaſon to doubt, he tells them, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Theſe words have both a retroſpect or back-look to what went before, and a proſpect or looking forward to what follows. As they have a reference to what went before, they ſhow, that as there is good reaſon why all ſhould worſhip him, ſo there is no reaſon why any ſhould doubt concerning him; for, All power in heaven and in earth is given unto him. Again, as they have a reference to what follows, they ſhow not only the ground and foundation of all our miniſterial adminiſtrations of word and ſacraments, as I ſaid already, but alſo the ground of hope we have of ſucceſs therein, according to the promiſe in the cloſe of the chapter, Lo, I am with you alway to the end of the world; q. d. As I have power and authority to inſtitute theſe ordinances, ſo you may be ſure that my powerful and ſpiritual preſence will never be wholly wanting to make them effectual; for, All power in heaven and in earth is given unto me. Here is a great word, ſuch as none but he can ſay; and it imports a great dignity and advancement.

More particularly, you may notice therein theſe four things following.

1. The Perſon dignified, even our LORD JESUS CHRIST, the bleſſed ſpeaker of theſe words, who lately before this was hanging on a croſs, and lying in a grave; humbled to the loweſt, and now exalted to the higheſt.

2. Notice the nature and kind of this dignity; namely, power, and ALL power repoſed in him; all ſupremacy, ſovereignty, might, and dominion; and a plenitude thereof.

3. Notice the degree of this dignity, or the extent thereof; what are the vaſt dominions to which his power extends? Why, it is all power in heaven and in earth. Our Mediator is an univerſal Monarch, having all power in heaven above, and earth beneath.

4. Notice here the manner of the conveyance of this dignity, and the way how he came by it as Mediator; it is given to him; All power is GIVEN unto me. He did not uſurp this dominion, but was legally intitled to it, and inveſted with

* This ſubject was handled in an Action-ſermon, preached immediately before the celebration of the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper, at Dunfermline, July 14th, 1728. It hath undergone four impreſſions.

it

it by divine donation. Chriſt hath a twofold right to this power and univerſal dominion.

(1.) A natural right, as he is God, equal with the Father; and thus, all power is originally and eſſentially his: he is the omnipotent God.

(2.) A donative right, as he is Mediator, God-man; and thus, all power is given to him. But who is the giver? Who can give all power? Who but God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, eſſentially conſidered, hath lodged all power in the perſon of the Man, the God-man, Jeſus Chriſt, as our Mediator? Wherever this donation is aſcribed to the Father, there the Father is to be conſidered eſſentially; as in Mat. xi. 27. It is the whole glorious Trinity, one God in three perſons, by mutual concert, that confer this honour and dignity upon the Man Chriſt; as may appear in the ſequel. The further explication of this great ſubject I refer to the proſecution of a doctrine.

OBSERV. That all ſovereignty and ſupremacy of power is delegated to, and reſides in the perſon of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: or, to the ſame purpoſe, That, by divine donation, Chriſt is inveſted with all power and dominion over the whole creation of God. ALL POWER IN HEAVEN AND IN EARTH IS GIVEN TO ME.

Now, as he that hath all power may be pleaſed to aſſiſt and enable, I will ſpeak to this great doctrine in the following method;

I. I would confirm the truth thereof from other parallel texts, and ſcriptural inſtances.

II. Enquire what this power is, that is delegated to, and reſides in the perſon of Chriſt.

III. Speak of the extent of his power, as it is declared to be all power in heaven and in earth.

IV. Touch at the divine donation thereof, by ſhewing when and how it was given to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

V. Offer ſome reaſons of the doctrine, why it is that all power in heaven and earth is given to him.

VI. Draw ſome inferences for the application.

And, O may our eyes be towards him for power to ſpeak and hear of his power! His powerful preſence would make it a precious communion-day to us.

I. The firſt head propoſed is, To confirm the truth of the doctrine. But what do I ſpeak of confirming a truth that is delivered out of the mouth of TRUTH itſelf? What needs more confirmation than his own declaring it here, All power in heaven and in earth is given unto me? Here is the teſtimony of the faithful and true Witneſs concerning himſelf, and that after he was declared to be the Son of God with power, by his reſurrection from the dead. It is the teſtimony of the eternal Son of God, in the name of his eternal Father, under the glorious effuſion of his eternal Spirit; and therefore, to doubt of this teſtimony, would import the higheſt blaſphemy, and be a queſtioning the veracity of the glorious God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. Therefore, not to ſay for the eſtabliſhing of this doctrine, but for confirming our faith therein; let us conſider, that what Chriſt ſays here, is the ſame that he ſays elſewhere, and that the Father ſays of him, and that the whole ſcripture teſtifies concerning him. I ſhall, for clearing of this, give you a ſhort view of ſeveral things that are ſaid to be given to Chriſt, which carry in them this gift of all power.

As Chriſt is the unſpeakable gift of God, ſo every thing that he hath, as Mediator, is the gift of a glorious Trinity made over to him.

1. A call and commiſſion was given to him, and that from all eternity in the counſel of peace, when he was ſet up from everlaſting, with reſpect to his being the Mediator betwixt God and man, and the Saviour of a company of loſt ſinners, whom he was to redeem by the price of his blood, and the power of his Spirit, according to that gracious covenant-tranſaction, Iſa. lxii. 6. I the Lord have called thee in righteouſneſs,—and will give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles, &c. This is what our Lord Jeſus points at, John x. 18. when he ſpeaks of the commandment given him of the Father, concerning his giving his life a ranſom for many, and taking his life again, to complete the redemption-work by power as well as by price. Here was a call and commiſſion given him, with reference to a work attended with ſuch difficulties from heaven above, and earth beneath, that indeed required all power in heaven and earth to accompliſh it; and the giving of the former, plainly ſuppoſes and imports the giving of the latter to him.

2. A ſeed was given him, and that alſo from all eternity; an elect ſeed and offſpring, which it was promiſed he ſhould actually ſee in time and to eternity, when once he made his ſoul an offering for ſin; Iſa. liii. 10. He ſhall ſee his ſeed, he ſhall prolong his days, and the pleaſure of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand; he ſhall ſee the travel of his ſoul, and ſhall be ſatisfied. Concerning this ſeed that was given him, he ſpeaks, John xvii. 6. Thine they were, and thou gaveſt them me. Now, here was a vaſt ſeed; when God declares the decree concerning it, Pſal. ii. 7, 8. he ſays, I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermoſt ends of the earth for thy poſſeſſion: yea, it is a numberleſs number out of all nations that was given him, Rev. vii. 9. Now, when ſuch a ſeed was given him, to be ſaved and governed by him, to be fitted for heaven, and guided on earth, it required and imported all power in heaven and in earth, which accordingly was given him.

3. A body was given to him in time, for accompliſhing, in our nature, the great buſineſs that was committed to him from eternity; Heb. x. 5. It is not poſſible that the blood of bulls and of goats ſhould take away ſins; wherefore when he came into the world, he ſays, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldſt not, but a body haſt thou prepared me; that is, a human nature to be a ſacrifice to offended juſtice; which ſacrifice we commemorate this day: and, O may it be a day of power from him that hath all power in heaven and in earth! O ſure, when this body was given to the Son of God, and our nature was joined into the ſame perſonality with him, then he had all the power of heaven and earth to grapple with; all the vengeance of heaven, and all the violence of earth lighted upon him: and, did not this require all power in heaven and in earth to be given for his ſupport? But ſome may think, What! had he the power of heaven to grapple with, and yet the power of heaven to ſupport him? Was there a battle betwixt two powers in heaven? Yes, there was a ſeeming war in heaven betwixt the power of God's wrath and the

the power of his love; the power of his wrath must vent againſt ſin, and yet the power of his love muſt vent upon the ſinner, according to the eternal concert: but finite wiſdom cannot tell how both theſe could come to paſs; but, behold, theſe two powers made an appointment, as it were, with mutual conſent, to meet in the body, the humanity that was given to our IMMANUEL, and there they met together, and kiſſed each other, Pſal. lxxxv. 10. And can you tell me which of theſe powers prevailed? Indeed, I think, they both prevailed; and none of them without blood upon this wonderful field of battle: for, Without ſhedding of blood there could be no remiſſion. The power of God's wrath prevailed, and got a condign ſatisfaction by that ſacrifice: and the power of his love prevailed, and got a bleſſed vent through that ſacrifice: therefore, if it be ſaid, Who knows the power of his wrath? May I not alſo ſay, Who knows the power of his love? Now, when the humanity of our IMMANUEL was the theatre on which this wonderful ſcene was acted, ſurely, while all the vengeance of heaven and violence of earth was preſſing him down, he needed all power in heaven and earth to bear him up, and accordingly he had it: for,

4. Help was given him; yea, all the help and aſſiſtance of the glorious Trinity was given to him; Iſa lxii. 6. I the Lord have called thee, and will hold thine hand and keep thee; and ver. 1. Behold my Servant, whom I uphold. To this ſame purpoſe you read, Iſa. xlix 8. and l. 6, 7. The fountain of all power was opened, and guſhed in upon him in an everlaſting flood; while he offered his human nature a ſacrifice on the altar of his eternal Godhead, he was upheld in the arms of his eternal Father, and the power of his eternal Spirit: for,

5. The Spirit was given him, even the Spirit of power; Iſa. xi. 1, 2. and xlii. 1. I have put my Spirit upon him, and he ſhall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. Iſa. lxi. 1. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, for he hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the meek. And, according to the promiſe and prophecy concerning him, the Spirit deſcended and reſted upon him, Mat. iii. 16. And he received not the Spirit by meaſure, but above meaſure; For God gives not the Spirit by meaſure unto him, John iii. 34. Now, the Spirit of power above meaſure given to him, carries in it all power in heaven and in earth given to him.

6. To ſhew that it was no dumb Spirit that was given to our Lord Jeſus, he that gave him a body to be a ſacrifice, gave him a tongue to be a teacher; and a powerful tongue, to teach with a ſtrong hand, and to ſpeak as never man ſpake; Iſa. l. 4. The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I ſhould know how to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon to him that is weary. O! Who teaches like him! None in heaven or earth hath power to teach like him; To whom ſhall we go? thou haſt the words of eternal life, John vi. 68. Such grace is poured into his lips, that eternal life hangs upon his tongue, and depends upon a word from him; The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear ſhall live, John v. 25. He that, by his divine power, ſpoke the world from a ſtate of nothing to a ſtate of being, even he had the tongue of a man, a human tongue given him, to ſpeak man from a ſtate of death to a ſtate of life. But whence can he do this? Why, that bleſſed tongue is in the mouth of a God-man, who can ſpeak words of power from heaven to earth, and that even by the means of poor mortal tongues whom he employs for him; which imports all power in heaven and earth given to him.

7. A robe and raiment was given to him, Iſa. lxi. 10. It is our Lord Jeſus that is there ſpeaking both of himſelf and his bride, I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my ſoul ſhall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of ſalvation, and covered me with the robe of righteouſneſs, as a bridegroom decketh himſelf with ornaments, and as a bride adorns herſelf with her jewels. Chriſt, as Mediator and Surety, the bleſſed Bridegroom of his church, rejoiceth in his being clothed with this garment of ſalvation and robe of righteouſneſs for the behoof of his bride, whom he covers with the ſame mantle, and fills with the ſame joy. As he was, in the capacity of Surety and Cautioner, ſolemnly condemned in the fleſh for our ſin; ſo, having paid all the debt by his doing and dying, he was as ſolemnly juſtified in the Spirit, and abſolved as the Lord our righteouſneſs; and, having riſen again, is clothed with righteouſneſs and ſalvation: and the Man Chriſt rejoices in God as his Father and Juſtifier, that hath thus clothed and adorned him; He is near that juſtifies me, who will contend with me? Iſa. l. 8. Now, this righteouſneſs being ſuch a glorious one, as brings in glory to God in the higheſt heaven, and peace and good-will towards men on earth, implies all power in heaven and in earth that was given to him.

8. A throne was given to him: not only a prophetical tongue and a prieſtly righteouſneſs, but alſo a royal kingly throne, according to God's oath unto David, Acts ii. 30. which refers unto Pſal. cxxxii. 11.; and therefore ſays the apoſtle, Acts ii. 30. Let all the houſe of Iſrael know aſſuredly that God hath made that ſame Jeſus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Chriſt. See how he was ſet upon this throne, Pſal. ii. 6, 7. I have ſet my King upon my holy hill of Zion: I will declare the decree; the Lord hath ſaid to me, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. As God coequal with the Father, he ſits upon the ſame ſupreme throne with the Father and eternal Spirit, which are one God in three perſons; but, as God-man, the imperial throne is given him, and his throne is an everlaſting throne; Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; the ſceptre of thy kingdom is a right ſceptre, Heb. i. 8. Pſal. xlv. 6. Heaven is his throne, and the earth is his footſtool; which imports all power in heaven and in earth.

9. A name was given him ſuitable to his throne, majeſty, and dignity, Phil. ii. 9, 10. God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name above every name. It is a name above men; Thou art fairer than the ſons of men: a name above ſaints; for he is the King of ſaints: a name above angels; for he is the Lord of angels: a name above all names; for he is the Head of all principality and power. See his name that is given him, Iſa. ix. 6. To us a Child is born, to us a Son is given, and the government ſhall be upon his ſhoulders; and his name ſhall be called, Wonderful, Counſellor, the mighty God, the everlaſting Father, the Prince of Peace. See his name, Rev. xix. 16. He hath upon his veſture and his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS. In a word, his name is, JEHOVAH OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. And who can explain his name, or his Father's name? Prov. xxx. 4. What is his name, and what is his

Son's

Son's name, if thou canſt tell? Becauſe he is God as well as man, God equal with the Father, therefore, though he hath a new name with relation to us, yet his name is not changed no more than his nature; the man Jeſus Chriſt is the ſupreme God: it is Arian blaſphemy that would rob him of this part of his name. But in vain do they rob him of that which God hath given him; God the Father calls him God, Pſal. xlv. 6. Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: there is a name given him above all names. But, perhaps, ſome one may think, if it be only given to him, then it does not belong to him but by gift, and ſo not by nature. I anſwer, As God, it is not given to him, for it is natural to him to be God; but it is given to the man Chriſt, becauſe he is God eſſentially, as well as man; and God-man in one perſon: He hath then given him a name above every name. And as there is no name above his, ſo there is no God above him; he is the God, the Angel that ſwears by himſelf, becauſe he could ſwear by no greater, Heb. vi. 13. I am God, and there is none elſe, ſays Chriſt, Iſa. xlv. 22. And hence his name is the Supreme, the moſt mighty God, Pſal. xlv. 3. Gird thy ſword upon thy thigh, O moſt Mighty, with thy glory and thy majeſty. Thus then all power in heaven and earth muſt be given to him.

10. To add no more, all things were given to him, and therefore all power in heaven and in earth; Mat. xi. 27. All things are delivered unto me of my Father. John iii. 37. The Father hath given all things into his hand. John xiii. 3. Knowing that the Father had given all things into his hand; and therefore he ſays, John xvi. 15. All things that the Father hath are mine. Here I might tell you ſome of theſe all things that are given him. —All gifts and graces are given to him; He hath aſcended up on high, received gifts for men, even for the rebellious, that God the Lord might dwell among them. —All bleſſings are given to him: all the ſtock we loſt in the firſt Adam is more abundantly in him; Grace is poured into thy lips, therefore God thy God hath bleſſed thee: and hence he is the fountain of all bleſſings; and men ſhall be bleſſed in him. —All treaſures are given to him: In him are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge; all the treaſures of power and pity, grace and glory. —All fulneſs is given to him; It pleaſed the Father that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell: yea, In him dwells all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily. —— Now, there is not one of theſe things I have mentioned on this head, that could have been given him, unleſs all power in heaven and earth alſo had been given him. Let our faith then be fortified in the truth of this doctrine of Chriſt here. What could he have done with all things, if he had not all power to manage them? Yea, it could not be true that all things were given him, if all power were withheld: but it is an eternal truth, that our God and Saviour, the fountain of truth, ſays here, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. I go on,

II. To the ſecond head propoſed, which was, To enquire, what this power is, that is delegated to, and reſides in the perſon of Chriſt: All power, ſays he, is given unto me. As to the nature of this power, I ſhall only ſay in general, it is what we cannot define nor pretend to give a full deſcription of: only, to hint at the ſcriptural definition of it; It is a power above all power that Chriſt hath; for he is ſet far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but alſo in that which is to come; and hath put all things under his feet, and given him to be head over all things to his church, Eph. i. 21, 22. It imports his juſt and indiſputable right to govern the world, and diſpoſe of all creatures in it according to his ſovereign will and pleaſure. But, more particularly, to give ſome further ſcriptural account of this power that is given to Chriſt, I would touch at theſe four things, 1. The kind of this power. 2. The parts. 3. The acts. 4. The qualities and properties thereof.

1. His eſſential power, as he is the great God, from everlaſting to everlaſting, whoſe kingdom ruleth over all; Rom. ix. 5.—Of whom as concerning the fleſh Chriſt came, who is over all, God bleſſed for ever, Amen, ſays the apoſtle; ſo it is, ſo let it be, and ſo ſhall it be: and, AMEN, will all the church of Chriſt ſay, except damnable Arian and Socinian blaſphemers. And if he were not a God of infinite patience, as well as of infinite power, he could not have born ſo long with the high affronts which have been of late caſt upon his ſupreme Deity in Britain and Ireland, and even in the church of Scotland alſo; wherein the groundleſs noiſe and outcry of novelties in doctrine, and *dangerous Antinomianiſm, is, in the righteous providence of God, like to be drowned with a more hideous noiſe of damnable Arianiſm †. However, this eſſential power of our Lord Jeſus is the ſame with that of the Father and Holy Ghoſt, who are one in eſſence. And if we view him in his perſonality, as he is the eternal Son of God, he is equal in power and glory with the Father and eternal Spirit; He was in the form of God, and thought it not robbery to be equal with God, Phil. ii. 6.; being the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, and upholding all things by the word of his power, Heb. i. 3.

2. His œconomical power, as he is the great Meſſias, God in our nature. This is the power, that is properly ſaid to be given to him: and this mediatorial power of Chriſt, though it be of another kind, yet it is not ſeparate from, but founded upon his eſſential power, inſomuch, that he could not be our almighty Mediator, if he had not been the almighty God; but our help was laid upon One that is mighty, Pſal. lxxxix. 19. One that is MIGHTY; there is his eſſential power: I have LAID help upon him; there is his œconomical power, given to him as Mediator: in which reſpect, it is given him to have power over all fleſh, John xvii. 2.; and to be Head over all things to his church, Eph. i. 22.

2dly, I would touch at the parts of this power that was given to the Lord Jeſus. For clearing of this, you are to conſider, that the œconomical, or mediatorial power of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt is twofold, namely, his power of authority, and his power of ability.

1. His power of authority: he took not [illegible] office on himſelf, without the call of God, Heb. v. 4.; He was choſen of God to it, Mat. xii. 18.; He was anointed to it, Pſal. ii. 6.; and thus ſealed and authoriſed of the Father, John vi. 27. This divine call and commiſſion conveys authority to all his mediatory acts. The word here in the text, πᾶσα ἐξουσία, properly ſignifies, not not simply potentia, that is, force and strength, as δύναμις among the Grecians does; but potestas, that is, authority and right to rule, grounded upon law: a legal authority, a rightful power over all.

* See this accuſation opened up, p. 70, 149, 150, 178, 190.

† See this matter briefly cleared up, p. 322, 454.

2. His power of ability, whereby he is able to save to the uttermost, Heb. vii. 25.; yea, both able to save and to destroy, James iv. 12. And no wonder, he is the very same person who was able to create the world out of nothing, and did so; who clave the sea, and made a way for his ransomed to pass over; who was able to lay down his life, and to take it up again; which accordingly he did, John x. 17, 18. These two parts of power in the Lord Jesus Christ are inseparable, notwithstanding that they are distinct things, and separable in themselves. Some kings, for example, have a power of legal authority over their rebellious subjects, but they want a power of ability to repress them; that is, they have right, but they want might: others again have a power of ability to subdue their neighbours, but it is an act of iniquity, for they have no legal authority over them; that is, they have might, but they want right: but both these, you see, do concur in our Lord Jesus Christ; he hath both a power of authority, and a power of ability over all things in heaven and earth; All power is given unto me. Now, from these essential parts of his œconomical, or mediatorial, power issue these four consequential parts thereof, which I but name.

(1.) There is a power of pre-eminency given him; He is the Head of the body the church, who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead, that in all things he might have the pre-eminence, Col. i. 18. He that came from above is above all, John iii. 31.: above all, by nature, as God; and above all, by donation, as Mediator; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence.

(2.) There is a power of dominion that is given to him, a power of government; The government shall be upon his shoulders, Isa. ix. 6. This dominion is an universal dominion over all in general, as he is the King of kings; and particularly over his church, as he is the King of Zion, and Head over all things to his church.

(3.) There is a power of dispensation that is given to him, to dispense, distribute, communicate, give, and bestow what he will upon whom he will; John xvii. 2. Thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he might give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him; that is, to as many as he pleased: for he and his Father are one in will and pleasure, as well as in essence and nature.

(4.) There is a power of judgment given to him; As the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son, even as Mediator, to have life in himself, and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man, John v. 26, 27. Authority to execute judgment both in this world and at the last day. Thus, I say, there is given to him all power of authority and right; all power of ability and might; all power of pre-eminency, whereby he is above all; all power of dominion, whereby he rules over all; all power of dispensation, to give what he pleases, to whom he pleases; and all power of judgment, to acquit or condemn whom he will. These are the parts of his power.

3*dly*, I would touch at the acts of his power; whereby he exercises that power that is given him. And here, all that can be said is but a dilating upon the former head; for all these acts of power that can be mentioned, are but so many more pieces of his power, founded upon, and included in what I have said. The acts then and egress of his power may be viewed in these following outgoings thereof, especially in his church.

1. He hath power to gather a church to himself out of all the corners of the world, as it is said, To him shall the gathering of the people be: so he, having all this power in his hand, hath no more to do but to lift up his royal standard, and then there is a rendezvous under his banner, who is the standard-bearer among ten thousand; Isa. xi. 11, 12. He shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah, from the four corners of the earth.

2. He hath power to give laws and ordinances in his church, and to commissionate officers and servants to dispense these ordinances of his appointment: hence it follows in the context here, All power is given unto me; Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations. Well, but may they teach any thing he hath not ordered nor invented, any new ceremonies he hath not instituted? No; Teach them to observe whatsoever I have commanded you. Whatever, therefore, is not his institution, but of human invention, is to be rejected as spurious, though it were inforced with the authority of all principalities and powers in heaven, let be of all the popes and prelates on earth; if it bears not his superscription, who hath all power in heaven and earth, it is to be rejected.

3. He hath power to convert sinners, to subdue rebels, and to draw whom he will to his obedience; Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, Psal. cx. 3. When I am lifted up, I will draw all men after me. There is many a hard, stony heart here; but, O Sirs, it is good news that he hath power even out of stones to raise up children to Abraham.

4. He hath power to justify the guilty, and pardon whom he pleases, Mat. ix. 6.: there he wills us to know that the Son of man hath power even on earth to forgive sins. Had the Prince of peace this power when he was in a state of humiliation, in the depth of his povery? Who then will question, his power now when exalted to the height of his pomp, and when he is exalted by, and to the right-hand of God, to be a Prince and a Saviour, for this very end, to give repentance unto Israel and remission of sin?

5. He hath power to adopt the fatherless, and to bring these that are the children of wrath, by nature, out of the devil's family, and to make them the children of God by faith, whereof he himself is the powerful author; To as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the children of God, even to them that believe on his name, John i. 12. The power of adoption and filiation is in his hand, whereby he can make these that were heirs of hell to be heirs of God, and joint heirs with himself: for, as he is the everlasting Son, so he is the everlasting Father.

6. He hath power to sanctify the filthy, and to purify his church, and to present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, Eph. v. 26. It is he that hath power to purify the sons of Levi, Mal. iii. 3. And though it seem to be a contemptible office for him that hath all power in heaven and earth, to stoop down so low as to wash and purify such abominable filthy lepers as we are; yet, yet, if he waſh us not, we have no part in him: and he wills us not to ſay to him, Depart from us, for we are ſinful men; nay, but rather, Come to us, for this very reaſon, becauſe we are ſinful men and women. For as he alone hath power to waſh us in his blood, and invites us to come to him that he may waſh us, ſo he commands us to invite him to come to us and waſh us; Take with you words, and ſay, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciouſly, Hoſ. xiv. 2.—But to mention all acts and outgoings of his power, is impoſſible: he hath power to reveal all myſteries, and to make known the very mind and heart of God; All things are delivered to me of my Father, and no man knoweth the Son but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father ſave the Son, and he to whomſoever the Son will reveal him, Mat. xi. 27. No man hath ſeen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the boſom of the Father, he hath declared him, John i. 18.—And again, he hath power to make effectual all his ordinances, word, and ſacraments: they are all lifeleſs and powerleſs without him; but they are effectual through his powerful preſence, which, glory to his name, he promiſed when he appointed them; Lo, I am with you always to the end of the world, Mat. xxviii. 20.—He hath power to deſtroy unbelief, and create faith, being the author and finiſher of it: and indeed, in working it, he ſhews the exceeding greatneſs of his power, Eph. i. 19. For why, (O admire his power!) he hath power to ſend the Spirit, John xv. 26. and xvii. 7. Here is a power above all finite power, a power to ſend the Holy Ghoſt, the third perſon of the glorious Trinity, that is equal in power and glory with the Father and with the Son; If I go, I will ſend him: when I go up, I will ſend him down. O let us ſay, AMEN, Lord; thou haſt gone, therefore now ſend him, ſend him, ſend him: the Father promiſed the Son, and he ſent him; the Son hath promiſed the Spirit, and will he not ſend him? Yea, he hath ſent him already many a time ſince he went away: but hath he not promiſed to ſend him to the end of time, when he ſaid, Lo, I am with you to the end of the world? Yea, he hath promiſed, and therefore rely on the promiſe. Thou haſt gone, Lord Jeſus; therefore ſend the Spirit, according to thy word. O bleſſed power of our Lord Jeſus!—He hath power to ſend the Spirit of power, as he did on the day of Pentecoſt, Acts ii. 33. And, O! here is the great reaſon why he can give us power to preach, and power to hear, power to believe, and power to repent, and power to love, and power to pray, and power to praiſe, and power to communicate, becauſe he hath power to ſend the Spirit of power, by whoſe power alone we can do all things. What ſhall I ſay? Surely I cannot give any more glorious inſtance of his power than what I have done.—He hath power to looſe all bonds, to liberate captives, and bring them to the glorious liberty of the children of God; If the Son make you free, you ſhall be free indeed, John viii. 36. A freedom from the curſe of the law, freedom from the wrath of God, freedom from the power of ſin, and from the ſlavery of Satan. Let the bonds of ſin and corruption be never ſo ſtrong about you, man, woman; let the bonds of death and deſpair be never ſo powerful, he can, in a moment, looſe them, and let you go free, ſaying, Come forth ye priſoners of hope.——But, paſſing many particulars that might here be mentioned, I ſhall proceed,

4*thly*, To touch at ſome of the properties of this power that is given to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. I might here ſhew you that his power is not only a legiſlative power, a power to give laws to, and write his laws in the hearts of his ſubjects, Jer. xxxi. 33. which no king could ever do but himſelf; but alſo an executive power, for executing his royal acts and orders, whether they be acts of grace and mercy promiſed towards his willing ſubjects, whom he makes ſo in the day of his power, or acts of juſtice and vengeance threatened againſt his rebellious enemies; of both which we read, Pſal. lxxxix. 21, 22. compared with ver. 28, 29. and downward, and alſo with what is ſpoken of him both in the ſecond and hundred and tenth pſalm. Some have power to make laws and acts, but no power to execute them: it is not ſo with him, that hath all power in heaven and in earth. But more particularly, there are theſe few properties of his power I would mention.

1. It is an irreſiſtible power: if all power is given to him, then, what can reſiſt him? His power is invincible, and who but he can ſpeak in that language, Rev. i. 8. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty? Hence, when his day of power for drawing ſinners to him comes, there is no ſtanding before it; why, it is the power of an irreſiſtible will; For, who hath reſiſted his will? Rom. ix. 19.; and the power of an irreſiſtible arm; The right-hand of the Lord being exalted, the right-hand of the Lord does valiantly, Pſal. cxviii. 15, 16.

2. It is a ſerviceable power: though it be not communicable to any, in the manner that it is in him, yet it is ſerviceable to many, and communicable in the effects and outgoings thereof, to impower and ſtrengthen them, and to perfect ſtrength in their weakneſs. Yea, as his power is omnipotent, ſo it is omnipatent; it is laid open and expoſed for the uſe and ſervice of ſinners, who are therefore called to lay hold on his ſtrength, that they may make peace with him, Iſa. xxvii. 5. Our ſtock of ſtrength, in the firſt Adam, was loſt; and now all ſhops are cloſed, but Chriſt's ſhop ſtands open: and whoſoever will, may come and take ſupply freely, and get a better ſtock in a better hand, even that of Jeſus, who is Jehovah our righteouſneſs and ſtrength; therefore, Truſt ye in the Lord for ever, ſays the prophet, Iſa. xxvi. 4.; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlaſting ſtrength. Which leads to another property,

3. It is everlaſting power, everlaſting ſtrength: his power is, like himſelf, unchangeable; the ſame yeſterday, to-day, and for ever: his kingdom is an everlaſting kingdom. It is true, the time is coming when it is ſaid, He will deliver up the kingdom to the Father, 1 Cor. xv. 24. But this reſpects the different adminiſtration of it at the end of time, when he ſhall have no more ſubjects to bring in, nor enemies to bring down, and when all his mediatorial power will be ſeen to have been given him for glorious deſigns, and God will appear to have been, and to be all in all in this wonderful buſineſs of redemption. Chriſt will give an honeſt and honourable account of the whole work put into his hand, when he ſhall ſay, Behold I, and the children which thou haſt given me, Heb. ii. 13. And, Of all that thou haſt given me, I have loſt nothing, but managed all according to thy will, John vi. 39. But the God-man will never ceaſe to be King, and his kingdom, power, and authority will will be everlasting and unchangeable: for it is to him the Father says, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, Heb. i. 3. The believer may be sometimes weak and sometimes strong, as well as empty by turns; but, O the power that is in this glorious Head is everlasting power! This is the ground of his peoples everlasting peace, everlasting pardon, everlasting consolation, and everlasting glory.

4. It is a suitable power; suitable to the royal dignity of the person to whom it is given, suitable to his station and quality as God-man, Mediator; it well becomes him to have all the power that is given him: it is suitable to the great end that God proposed, namely, his highest glory and honour in the salvation and redemption of his people: it is suitable to the trust that God repose in him; and suitable to the honour that God would confer upon him: it is suitable to the delight the Father hath in him; and suitable to the agreement the Father made with him: it is suitable to his office that had so much ado with God: and suitable to his people that had so much ado with him. In a word, it is suitable for his work that he be thus qualified; and suitable for his reward that he be thus glorified: All power is given unto me. Hence,

5. It is a glorious power; Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most Mighty, even thy glory and thy majesty, Psal. xlv. 3. His powerful sword is glorious majesty, Psal. lxiii. 2. Why is the sight of his power and of his glory in the sanctuary put together, but because his glory is a powerful glory, and his power a glorious power? It is a glorious divine power. Christ crucified is the wisdom of God, and the power of God, and the glory of the power of God; for, he is the brightness of the Father's glory: and the power of God being the glory of God, Christ is the brightness of the glory of the power of God, in whom his power shines more than in all the works of creation and providence: for in his powerful saving of sinners out of the hands of sin, guilt, Satan, death and the law, and out of the hand of all the powers of earth and hell, and out of the hand of infinite justice and incensed wrath, the glory of God's power shines so much, that if God had made ten thousand worlds more and greater than this, he could not thereby have given such a discovery of the glory of his power as he hath done in the face of Jesus Christ. O! hath the God, who commanded light to shine out of darkness, shined into our hearts, to give us the light of the knowledge of his glory, in the face of Jesus Christ, and among the rest the glory of his power!

6. It is an universal and extensive power; ALL power is given unto me. As it hath pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell, so all fulness imports all power; yea, in him dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and so all the power of the Godhead. Creatures may have some power by communication from him; but where is there another beside him that hath all power, and that both in heaven and in earth? But this leads me,

III. To the third head proposed in the general method, which was, To speak a little of the extent of this power, as it is declared in the text to be all power in heaven and in earth; which I consider under a distinct head, because it is so particularly mentioned, as extending to heaven above, and earth below. Let us consider then, 1. What lies in this, All power in heaven. 2. What lies in this, All power in earth.

1st, All power in heaven is given to Christ; What is that? O! who can declare this but the God of heaven? We shall only touch a little at what he hath said in his word concerning it. I think it imports these two things.

1. All power in heaven, imports, a power reaching over heaven, even all the principalities and powers, in heavenly places, as they are called, Eph. i. 20, 21. He appointed them to serve his saints upon earth; Are they not all ministring spirits, sent forth to minister unto the heirs of salvation? Heb. i. 14. Even when Christ was upon earth in his lowest state, as they were apprehending him, he could have ordered twelve legions of angels for his assistance, Mat. xxvi. 53.; but that this was not agreeable to the glorious work of redemption that he was pursuing, according to the scripture: and now, in his exalted state, he hath the ordering of the heavenly hosts as he pleases, and to what errand he will. See how all the saints and angels about the throne are employed, Rev. v. 9,—12.: and this in a suitableness to the orders given, Heb. i. 6. When he brings the First-begotten into the world, he says, Let all the angels of God worship him. In a word, The chariots of our Lord are twenty thousand, Psal. lxviii. 17.: he drives these heavenly chariots where he will.

2. All power in heaven, imports, a power reaching above heaven: not only a power over heaven, and all the heavenly inhabitants, whether angels or saints; but a power above heaven; I mean, with God, that is infinitely above heaven: a power with his eternal Father, and a power with his eternal Spirit. Such a power of intercession with the Father, that nothing he demands can be denied; for, the Father hears him always; for he always intercedes in the virtue of the sacrifice and atonement that he made, which is infinitely well-pleasing unto God. Such a power of mission, with respect to the Holy Ghost, that when he will he can send him, as I was shewing already; it is a power and authority to pour out the Spirit, Isa. xliv. 3. I will pour water on him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground. What is that? even my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing on thine offspring. Such a power with God hath the Lord Jesus, that his will is a law to his Father; Father, I will, that these whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory that thou hast given me; for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world, John xvii. 24. Father, I will; there is a power infinitely above the heavens. Such a power hath Christ, with respect to the Holy Ghost, that the Spirit's descending from heaven to earth, depended, in a manner, upon his ascending from earth to heaven; I tell you the truth, it is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come, John xvi. 17. And according to the stated œconomy of the glorious work of redemption, the Holy Ghost comes not down without a mission from heaven; therefore he adds, If I depart, I will send him: Whence will he send him? Is it only from heaven? nay, there is more, I will send him from the Father, John xv. 26. There is a power above the heaven of heavens, a power to send the eternal Spirit from the eternal Father!——See then what it is to have all power in heaven; it is a power reaching over heaven, and a power reaching above heaven. O what a powerful Saviour have we to look unto! All power in heaven is given unto me.

2*dly*, All power in earth is given unto Chriſt: What is that? This to be ſure, follows of conſequence; for, he that hath all power in heaven, cannot but have all power in earth: and, I think, this imports two things alſo, namly, a power over the earth, and a power under the earth.

1. A power over the earth. Though his kingdom be not of this world, but diſtinct from all earthly kingdoms, yet he hath a power over the earth; a general power over all things and all perſons on earth, from the greateſt to the moſt minute: for, he being King of kings, and Lord of lords, his kingdom ruleth over all. His providential power and government extend from the king upon the throne, to the ſparrow upon the buſh; from the diſpoſing of kingdoms and ſceptres on the earth, to the numbering of the hairs on our head. But there is a particular power and authority that he hath over his church on earth; this I have touched at already: and therefore ſhall only ſay, He hath power over all gifts in the earth; to beſtow all gifts and graces, and all ſpiritual bleſſings: for, Pſal. lxviii. 18. He hath aſcended on high, and led captivity captive, and received gifts for men, even for the rebellious, that the Lord God might dwell among them.—He hath power over all ſouls in the earth, both to ſave and to damn them. Power to ſave; and therefore ſays, Look unto me, and be ſaved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none elſe. Power to damn; and therefore ſays, He that looketh not, he that believeth not, ſhall be damned.—He hath power over all things on earth, ſo as to make all things work together for good to them that love him, and are the called according to his purpoſe.—He hath power over all enemies of his church upon earth; when the floods lift up their voice, the Lord on high is mightier than the noiſe of many waters.—He hath power over all caſes of ſinners on earth, and can ſave in the moſt deſperate caſes; from the utmoſt point of ſin and miſery, to the utmoſt point of happineſs and glory; He is able to ſave to the uttermoſt all that come to him, becauſe he ever liveth to make interceſſion, Heb. vii. 25. The Son quickenth who he will, John v. 21. His voice will raiſe the dead at the laſt day, when he comes to judge the world; and his voice can raiſe the dead ſinner out of the grave of ſin and ſecurity.

2. A power under the earth belongs to him alſo, and is imported in this all power in earth, that is given to him: for, if there be any under the earth that attempts to undermine and oppoſe his power and authority in it, that muſt alſo be under his check and controul, and his power muſt extend thereunto; otherwiſe he could not be ſaid to have all power in earth. His power then extends not only to things of and in the earth, but to things under the earth, Phil. ii. 10. That at [or IN] the name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things UNDER the earth: that is, a power over all the devils in hell. Chriſt could not have run through his kingly office, if he had not had this power over devils; he could not have been able to bind the ſtrong man, if he had not been ſtronger: nay, he came for this very end to the earth, to bruiſe the head of the ſerpent; and by death to deſtroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and accordingly, having ſpoiled principalities and powers, he made a ſhow of them openly, triumphing over them in his croſs, Col. ii. 15. And if he triumphed above them, when the croſs was on his back, how does he now triumph and exert his power above them when the crown is on his head? His having all power in heaven and earth, then, imports alſo, that he hath all power in hell, and under the earth, which that word perhaps relates unto, Rev. i. 18. I am he that lives and was dead; and, behold, I live for evermore; AMEN: I have the keys of hell and death. The keys argue power; for it is metaphor from conquerors, when they take a city, they have the keys delivered to them, in token that the city is now under their command. Chriſt hath the keys of hell, and can ſend whom he will to it. In a word, the power of the keys is only his; He hath the key of David, that opens and none ſhuts, and ſhuts and none opens, Rev. iii. 7. All the keys of power and authority hang at his girdle; theſe four keys particularly. (1.) The keys of heaven, to open heaven, and let in whom he will to glory: and he muſt needs have ſupremacy of power, that can ſet a crown of glory on the head of all his ranſomed ones, who ſhall return and come to Zion with ſongs, and everlaſting joy upon their heads. (2.) He hath the key of hell, to ſhut up whom he will into the pit. (3.) He hath the key of the word, to open it, and diſcover the myſteries of the kingdom to whom he will. (4.) He hath the key of the heart, to open it, as he did the heart of Lydia, when he pleaſes: and, indeed, no leſs power than that of his, who hath all power in heaven and earth, can open the heart of man upon earth, to let in this King of glory, this mighty King.

Let us then view the extent of this power that is given him, even all power in heaven, over heaven, and above the heavens; and all power in earth, over the earth, and under the earth. His power then extends from the battlement of heaven to the bottom of hell: it is a power over all the angels in heaven, and power over all the devils in hell; power to pacify the God of heaven, and power to deſtroy the god of this world. All power in heaven and earth is given unto me.

IV. The fourth general head propoſed, was, To touch at the divine donation of this power, by ſhewing when and how this power was given to the Lord Jeſus. And,

1*ſt*, When was all power in heaven and earth given unto him? There are four periods we may caſt our eye upon, in anſwering this queſtion.

The firſt period is from all eternity, before the foundation of the world was laid, in the counſel of peace. Upon his undertaking the work of redemption, all power was given him decretively and federally, according to that glorious tranſaction betwixt the Father and him: and hence the goſpel is ſaid to be but the declaration of the decree concerning him; I will declare the decree, Pſal. ii. 7. What decree is it? even of giving Chriſt all power in heaven and earth, of giving him a throne in Zion, and giving him the heathen for his heritage, and the uttermoſt ends of the earth for his poſſeſſion: and hence alſo he is ſaid to be ſet up from everlaſting, ere ever the earth was, when, in the proſpect of this great work now declared unto us, he was his Father's delight; and his delights were with the ſons of men, Prov. viii. 23, 30.

The

The second period is from the beginning of the world; or rather, when, upon the back of the fall, the first promise was proclaimed in Paradise, The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent, all power was given to him virtually, insomuch, that it was not only promised he should have all power to destroy the old serpent's devices, but his parole and word of honour, in the counsel of peace, was so much regarded, and the Father put so much trust and confidence in him, that he intrusted him with all power and authority, even before his incarnation, and before ever he paid the debt of obedience and satisfaction: and upon this ground it was, that by virtue of this power lodged in him he bestowed the Spirit, and many spiritual blessings upon his people, under the Old Testament, before he took on our nature; yea, upon this ground, all that were appointed to life, from the beginning of the world, and during the time of the Old-Testament dispensation before Christ assumed our flesh, were saved by this Mediatorial power and grace that was given him upon trust: hence says the apostle, Acts xv. 11. We believe we shall be saved by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, even as they.

The third period wherein all power was actually given to him, and initially, was even in the days of his humiliation; for therein he was, as God in our nature, clothed with all this power for performing the work that belonged to his humbled state. The New-Testament history, therefore, is full of the account of his power that he exerted in working miracles, healing diseases, opening the eyes of the blind, and the like. When the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, says the apostle, even then, We beheld his glory, full of grace and truth: and even when he was riding to Jerusalem on an ass; yea, when he was hanging on a cross, and lying in a grave, he was clothed with the same royal power and glory that was manifested to the wisemen of the east, when he was lying in a manger. There were, indeed, some remarkable times wherein his glory was discovered in a more special manner, witness at his baptism and transfiguration. But then,

The fourth period wherein all power in heaven and earth was most eminently given to him, was immediately upon his resurrection; then he was more signally and solemnly invested with all power.—The first step of his exaltation, namely, his rising again from the dead, was the first step of his solemn investiture with universal power and authority: for clearing of this, compare Psal. ii. 6, 7. with Acts xiii. 33. When is it that God says, I have set my King upon my holy hill of Zion, and declared the decree, saying, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? God hath fulfilled the same unto us, says the apostle, in that he hath raised up Jesus again, as it is written in the second psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; why, his resurrection was the great proof and declaration of his being the Son of God; for then, He was declared to be the Son of God with power, by his resurrection from the dead, Rom. i. 4. And though it would not be improper to apply that word, This day have I begotten thee, to his eternal generation; for, From everlasting to everlasting he is God, as it were, one and the same eternal day: yet we see it is accommodate to his resurrection in point of declaration; I will declare the decree; this day have I made it appear that I have begotten thee. His resurrection was the declaration of his being the Son of God with power.—The other steps of Christ's exaltation, his ascending up into heaven, and sitting at the right-hand of God, were so many other steps up to the glorious throne of universal power and supreme authority, Phil. ii. 9. When God highly exalted him, then he gave him a name above every name; a throne above every throne: when he ascended up on high, then he received gifts for men; and here is the sum of his gifts, All power in heaven and earth is given unto me.——You see the time when it was that all power was given to him.

2*dly*, As to the manner how all power was given to him. Here it might be shown by whose pleasure and by what means and acts this power was given to him.

[1.] As to the first, by whose pleasure was it, or who could give him this power? I answer, in a word, it pleased the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, one God in three persons, that in him, the second person, as God-man, Mediator, should all fullness dwell, even all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, Col. i. 19. and ii. 9. It pleased the Father, that all the fulness of his Godhead; it pleased the Son, that all the fulness of his Godhead; it pleased the Holy Ghost, that all the fulness of his Godhead; or, it was the pleasure of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, that all the fulness of the Godhead should centre and reside in the Man, the God-man, Christ Jesus. And, because God the Father is the first in the order, or manner, of the subsistence of the three persons of the glorious Trinity, therefore it is especially ascribed to the Father, It pleased the Father; and again, All things are delivered to me of my Father: yet here the Father is to be considered essentially, including the eternal Son, and the eternal Spirit, in the unity of the same essence; for, though Christ is God, yet being somewhat else beside God, and acting in this glorious dispensation not as God absolutely, nor as the offended majesty, but as one interposing in favours of his offending creatures, he is said to have this power given him; which, therefore, must be by the pleasure of the offended Trinity; the pleasure of the great God, in pursuance of this grand device for averting his just displeasure from us. Christ then derived his Mediatorial and œconomical power in our behalf from the united infinite power of the glorious Trinity, and thus delegated to him, with infinite pleasure and satisfaction; God having a rapturous delight in that method of man's salvation.

[2.] By what means or acts was all power in heaven and earth given to him? We reply; It was given him by the following acts, or with the following solemnity: as all power is originally in him by nature, as God; so all power is delegated to him, by office, as Mediator, in this manner:

1. All power was given to him by solemn election, Isa. xlii. 1. compared with Mat. xii. 18. Behold my Servant, whom I uphold; mine Elect, in whom my soul delighteth.—He was chosen of God to be joint Emperor with himself: and as David set up his son Solomon to reign, and gave all the dominion to him; so God hath given all to Christ, as if he would meddle with nothing; For, the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son, John v. 22. This was done then by an antient statute of heaven, insomuch, that that the exhibition of Chriſt, upon his throne, is called, a declaring the decree. He was choſen of God to the univerſal government; and there was more of God in the election of that one Man, Chriſt, than in the election of all the angels and ſaints in heaven.—He was choſen to be the Lord of angels, and alſo to be the King of ſaints; and they were choſen in him before the foundation of the world, Eph. i. 4.

2. All power was given to him by ſolemn tranſaction; Pſal. lxxxix. 3. I have made a covenant with my Choſen. The Father tranſacted with him to this effect, that, upon condition he ſhould pour out his ſoul unto death, he ſhould divide the ſpoil with the ſtrong, Iſa. liii. 12. And, becauſe it was a bargain betwixt them, therefore,

3. All power was given to him by ſolemn promiſe; Pſal. lxxxix. 19,—27. where God having ſaid, I have laid help upon One that is mighty, and exalted One choſen out of the people, it follows, With him my hand ſhall be eſtabliſhed, and mine arm ſhall ſtrengthen him: in my name ſhall his horn be exalted; I will ſet his hand in the ſea, and his right-hand in the rivers; that is, he ſhall be Lord of the iſles in the ſea, as well as King of nations. ver. 17. I will make him my firſt-born, higher than the kings of the earth.

4. All power was given him by ſolemn oath; Pſal. lxxx. 3, 4. I have ſworn unto David my ſervant; Thy ſeed will I eſtabliſh for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations, SELAH. With Pſal. cx. 4. The Lord hath ſworn, and will not repent, Thou art a Prieſt for ever: a Prieſt upon a throne, with a ſovereign ſceptre in his hand; even the rod of his ſtrength, Rule thou in the midſt of thine enemies.

5. All power was given to him by ſolemn inauguration and legal inſtalment into the government of his church; Pſal. ii. 6. I have ſet my King upon my holy hill of Zion: and accordingly, the government is put upon his ſhoulders, and of the increaſe of his government and peace there ſhall be no end.

6. All power was given to him by ſolemn obſignation and ſupereminent unction; Pſal. ii. 6. I have ANOINTED my King, as the word ſignifies; and, Pſal. lxxxix. 20. With my holy oil have I anointed him: Pſal. xlv. 6, 7. Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; the ſceptre of thy kingdom is a right ſceptre. Thou loveſt righteouſneſs, and hateſt wickedneſs; therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladneſs above thy fellows. Chriſt himſelf ſpeaks of this, ſaying, The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, for he hath anointed me; and again, Him hath God the Father ſealed.

7. All power was given to him by ſolemn proclamation, and that by a voice from the moſt excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleaſed, 2 Pet. i. 17. Yea, with many great Oyes, with many a ſweet Behold he hath been proclaimed King ſince the beginning of the world. His royal power and authority was proclaimed in the firſt promiſe: he was proclaimed in all the after-promiſes, prophecies, types and ſacrifices, whereof the voice of all was, Behold, O Zion, thy ſalvation cometh; behold, thy King comes: he was proclaimed by his harbinger, John the Baptiſt, who was the voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, Prepare ye the way of the Lord: he was proclaimed by an heavenly hoſt, when he made his entrance into this world on the ſtage of time in our fleſh, when the angels of heaven, in the hearing of the ſhepherds, cried out, ſinging and ſaying, Glory to God in the higheſt, on earth peace, and good-will towards men; for, behold the good tidings of great joy that ſhall be unto all people; for unto you is born, this day, a Saviour, which is Chriſt the Lord; even Chriſt the Lord of lords, the Lord of angels and men: he was proclaimed again at his baptiſm, and tranſfiguration, with a voice from heaven: he proclaimed himſelf alſo by his own authoritative preaching and miraculous works; and afterwards he ordered his ambaſſadors to go and proclaim him to the world, even to teach all nations, and preach the goſpel of his kingdom to every creature. And then, laſt of all,

8. All power was given to him by ſolemn coronation, being crowned univerſal Monarch on the right-hand of power; We ſee Jeſus, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the ſuffering of death, crowned with glory and honour, Heb. ii. 6. For the crown of thorns he hath the crown of glory, power, and authority put upon his head. There are two coronation-days of our Lord Jeſus; one is, the day when he aſcended into heaven in perſon, and ſat down at the right-hand of the throne of God; where the twenty-four elders fall down before the Lamb that ſits upon the throne, and lay down their crowns at his feet! another is, the day when he deſcends down to the earth in the power of his Spirit among his people, enabling them, by faith, to put the crown upon his head, and to put honour upon him, by counting all but loſs and dung, for the excellency of the knowledge of his glory: and, O what a happy day would this be, were I preaching the coronation-ſermon of our glorious Lord Jeſus upon his coronation-day! O behold his glory! behold his crown! Behold king Solomon, with the crown wherewith his mother crowned him, in the day of his eſpouſals, in the day of the gladneſs of his heart; yea, behold King Jeſus, with the crown wherewith his Father crowned him! All power in heaven and earth is given unto me. I proceed now,

V. To the fifth head, namely, To offer ſome reaſons why it is that all power is thus given to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: why it is delegated to and reſides in his perſon? There is the greateſt reaſon for it, and that in theſe following reſpects:

1. All power in heaven and earth is given to him, to REWARD him for the work that he hath done; and particularly for his obedience unto death, even the death of the croſs, according to the eternal purpoſe and concert wherein all this buſineſs was laid down and agreed to: Chriſt having finiſhed the work of his humiliation, he was to be advanced to a ſtate of exaltation: Phil. ii. 6, 9. He, who was in the form of God, took upon him the form of a ſervant, and humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs; wherefore God hath given him a name above every name: hence it is ſaid, that for the joy that was ſet before him, he endured the croſs, deſpiſed the ſhame, and now is ſet down at the right-hand of the throne of God, Heb. xii. 2.: having drunk of the brook in the way, he was to lift up his head, Pſal. cx. 7. The prophecy of Iſaiah is full of this; yea, all the prophets treat ſo much of it, that our Lord reproves his diſciples going to Emmaus, in theſe terms, Luke xxiv. 25, 26. O fools, and ſlow of heart to believe all that the prophets have ſpoken; ought not Chriſt to ſuffer all theſe things, and then to enter into his glory? All power then is given to him in recompence of his work of doing and suffering, and as the reward of that death of his, which we celebrate the memorials of this day: that sacrifice Christ offered was of such a sweet smelling savour unto God, that he cannot reward him too highly for it; nor for his assuming our nature, that therein he might offer it to the eternal satisfaction of his justice, and the vindication of the honour of all his excellencies. Hence it is said, John v. 27. that authority to execute judgment is given him, because he is the Son of man; that is, All power in heaven and earth is given him, and universal government. But why is it said, Because he is the Son of MAN, and not rather, because he is the Son of GOD? Why, as he is the Son of God absolutely, he hath no need of this gift of power and authority; it belongs to him naturally and essentially: but it is given him because he is the Son of man; because he condescended to assume our nature and become man; he became a true man; having a true body and a reasonable soul: a poor man; that had no where to lay his head: a distressed man; a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief: a mortal man; that actually died the cursed death of the cross: and now, all power is given to him, because he was the Son of Man, the true promised Messias, that, in our nature, humbled himself to the lowest, therefore he is exalted to the highest throne of power and glory.

2. All power in heaven and earth is given to him, not only to reward him for the work he hath done, but also to FURNISH him for the work he hath to do; namely, to carry on and finish the work of redemption by power; as he hath done by price; to apply what he hath purchased, and give out the blessings he hath bought; John xvii. 2. Thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him: How many is that? Even as many as he will, John v. 21. Even as the Son quickens whom he will. Here is a great work, that, indeed, requires great power, namely, to give eternal life to whom he pleases, in all nations under heaven: and therefore, immediately after, he shows the power given him, he gives a commission to his servants here, saying, Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations; lo, I am with you to the end of the world; go ye and preach the gospel to every creature; intimating, that the great end of his getting all power in heaven and earth, was, that he might exert his power by a preached gospel, in the conviction, conversion, and eternal salvation of all whom he pleases to save. This gift then is for our behoof given to him: when he ascended up on high he received gifts for men, even for the rebellious, Psal. lxviii. 18.: and the sum of all these gifts is here, that all power in heaven and earth is given him. But what he received for men, he will not keep up from men; nay, what he gets for men, he gives to them: therefore, what the psalmist calls receiving gifts for men, the apostle calls his giving gifts to men, Eph. iv. 8. When he ascended up on high, he gave gifts unto men: and thereupon a description of a gospel-ministry follows in the main principal ends thereof, namely, The perfecting of the saints, the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith and knowlege of the Son of God to a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, ver. 12, 13. What! might the disciples say, Can any great thing be expected by our preaching? What can a company of poor fisher-men do to the subduing of rebellious sinners, and the spreading of the gospel with any success among all nations? Never fear that, says Christ, All power is given unto me; and, lo, I am with you. We that are ministers, being also poor frail sinful men, might faint and give over, if it were not for this, that the work is his; and all power is given to him: because all the work is committed to him, he is well furnished for it.

3. All power is given to him, because all his enemies are to be SUBJECTED by him, and subdued, either in mercy or in wrath: some in mercy, Psal. cx. 3. Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power: thus his arrows are said to be sharp in the hearts of his enemies; whereby the people fall under him, Psal. xlv. 5. —Some in wrath, Psal. cx. 1. Sit thou at my right-hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. And, ver. 5. The Lord at thy right-hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath. Psal. ii. 9. Thou shalt break them in pieces with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. His church's enemies, his peoples enemies, whether outward or inward, are to be subdued, the devil, the world, and the flesh; and it requires all power in heaven and earth to break the power of sin, and destroy the works of the devil in them.

4. All power is given to him, because all GLORY comes to God thereby; for, when Christ is exalted and glorified, God is glorified in him; God hath highly exalted him, that the world may see and own that Jesus is the Lord, to the glory of God the Father, Phil. ii. 9, 11. Father, glorify thy name; says Christ: yes, I will, says the Father; I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again: and, how does he it? Even by exalting Christ to the highest, he gets glory in the highest ascribed to him. Christ, who is said to be set up from everlasting, was in time set up first upon a cross, that the glory of God's love and grace might be seen in him; therefore, says Christ, before he was lifted up on the cross, Now is the Son of man glorified, and God is glorified in him. Next, He was set up on a throne of power and majesty, where a crucified Christ appears more eminently to be the wisdom of God, and the power of God: and, Now, is the Son of man glorified, and God is glorified in him.

5. All power is given to Christ, that all HONOUR may be given to him; John v. 22, 23. The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son; that all men may honour the Son even as they honour the Father: for he that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father that sent him. How can they honour the God of heaven, who do not honour him that is invested with all the power and authority of the God of heaven?

6. All power is given to Christ, and resides in his person, because of the PERPETUITY of his priesthood and mediation; Heb. vii. 25. He is able to save to the uttermost, all that come to God by him, because he ever lives to make intercession. He intercedes upon the ground of the full satisfactory atonement that he hath made; and, being a Priest for ever, his everlasting priesthood is the foundation of his everlasting power, whereby he is able to save to the uttermost.

7. All power is given to Christ, for the SECURITY of the new covenant, that stands fast in him: Why? because he is higher than the kings of the earth, and his throne as the days of heaven, Psal. lxxxix. 27, 28, 29.: Christ is the great guarantee of the new covenant; all the promises are YEA and AMEN in him; and therefore must be be the ſure mercies of David. Our ſtock is better ſecured than it was in the hands of the firſt Adam; nay, all the power and policy of hell cannot rob us of it, becauſe it is in his hand that hath all power in heaven and earth.

8. All power is given to him, that all BLESSINGS may be given out by him to his church; Acts v. 31. Him hath God exalted with his right-hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance unto Iſrael, and forgiveneſs of ſin. Repentance here, implies faith, and all the other graces of the Spirit; and forgiveneſs of ſin here, implies juſtification, and all the other bleſſings and benefits of the covenant: and Chriſt being exalted by and to the right-hand of God, as a Prince and a Saviour, to give theſe things to ſinners; to impenitent ſinners, for only ſuch need repentance; to guilty ſinners, for only ſuch need forgiveneſs of ſin: it ſays, that all power is given to Chriſt, that he may be in caſe to give all bleſſings to ſinners like us. Therefore,

9. All power is given to him in heaven and in earth, that all SINNERS under heaven and upon the earth, may flee to him alone for righteouſneſs and ſtrength, and glory only in him; Iſa. xlv. 22, — 25. Look to me, and be ſaved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none elſe: They are to look to him by faith, ſaying, Surely in the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength: To him ſhall men come, &c. And again, In the Lord ſhall all the ſeed of Iſrael be juſtified, and ſhall glory. All power is given to him, that all fleſh may look to him, and that no fleſh may glory in his preſence, but that he that glories may glory in the Lord, 1 Cor. i. 29, 30, 31. If any power were in us, there would be matter of boaſting.

10. All power in heaven and earth is given to Chriſt, becauſe he is the FITTEST perſon for receiving ſuch a gift: ſhould we ſearch heaven and earth, there is none ſo fit as he: why? there is none ſo capable of it among angels or creatures; there is none able to bear the weight of it: therefore, in Zech. vi. 13. it is ſaid, He ſhall build the temple of the Lord, and he ſhall bear the glory. No cherubim or ſeraphim in heaven is able to bear the glory of all the power in heaven and earth, but Chriſt can well bear it; he that bore the greateſt weight of wrath, does bear the greateſt weight of glory. — Again, as there is none ſo capable to bear it, ſo there is none ſo creditable to poſſeſs it; for he, being in the form of God, counts it no robbery to be equal with God. God cannot have a more honourable repreſentative; God does not diſcredit himſelf by making Chriſt the repoſitory of all fulneſs, the ſtorehouſe of all power. — Again, as there is none ſo capable, none ſo creditable; ſo there is none ſo reſponſible as he, ſo as to improve that great ſtock to the greateſt glory of God, and to the beſt advantage of his people: he was found to be reſponſible enough in his humbled ſtate. If God had exacted the payment of the infinite debt that we owed to juſtice from the hands of any beſides Chriſt, all the creatures would have ſaid, We are not ſolvendo, we are not in caſe to pay: but, behold, our help was laid upon One that is mighty; mighty to ſave, mighty to ſatisfy, mighty to give the law and juſtice all their due. And now in his exalted ſtate, being intruſted with the buſineſs of ſaving, by the power of his Spirit, all whom he hath ſaved by the price of his blood, he is no leſs reſponſible, being able to ſave to the uttermoſt, and to bring in all the rent and revenue of praiſe and glory to God in the higheſt by ſo doing. — Again, as there is none ſo capable of all power, none ſo creditable to poſſeſs it, none ſo reſponſible to make a good account of ſuch a truſt, ſo there is none ſo acceptable to God; and, therefore, it is that all power is given unto him; The Father loveth the Son, and hath put all things into his hand, John iii. 35. He takes infinite delight in him, even as he is Mediator; Behold my Servant whom I uphold, mine Elect in whom my ſoul delighteth. And what can he withhold from his darling? Hence he glories in him as his righteous Servant; By his knowledge ſhall my righteous Servant juſtify many, Iſa. liii. 11.; and as his prudent Servant; Behold my Servant ſhall deal prudently, Iſa. lii. 13. O what a faithful and prudent ſteward is he, to diſtribute of this fulneſs that is in him to needy ſinners! — Again, as there is none ſo acceptable to God, ſo there is none ſo acceſſible by man, he being God-man; there is no ſufficient helper ſo nearly related to man, he being bone of our bone, and fleſh of our fleſh, to whom the right of redemption belongs, as the neareſt of kin; and we may go to him as a relation of our own: he is full of compaſſion toward mankind ſinners, and full of condeſcenſion. Never was a king ſo humble as he, riding upon an aſs, upon a colt the ſole of an aſs: although he was rich, yet for our ſakes he became poor; yea, poorer than the pooreſt, and lower than the loweſt; and it behoved him, in all things, to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful High-prieſt, Heb. ii. 17. And, chap. iv. 15. We have not, therefore, an High-prieſt that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without ſin. Therefore, though he be upon the throne of power and glory, yet it is alſo a throne of grace and mercy to which we have acceſs: Let us come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need, Heb. iv. 19. Though he be now exalted to the higheſt, yet he ſtoops down to the loweſt; he that hath all power, hath all pity: and, O! is he not then the fitteſt perſon for receiving ſuch a gift? All power in heaven and earth is given unto me.

In a word, he hath all right to the univerſal government, and to all power: a right by nature, for he is God over all bleſſed for ever; a right by purchaſe, for he hath bought the kingdom with his blood; a right of heritage, being the heir of all things; a right of primogeniture, being the firſtborn from the dead, that in all things he might have the pre-eminence. Ought he not to have all power in heaven and earth, who, by the blood of his croſs, hath reconciled all things in heaven and in earth? Col. i. 20. —— So much ſhall ſuffice for the reaſons of the doctrine.

VI. The ſixth thing propoſed, was, To draw ſome inferences from the whole, for the application. A vaſt many uſes might be made of this great doctrine, but I ſhall confine myſelf within as narrow bounds as ſuch a ſubject can well allow. Is it ſo, That all ſovereignty and ſupremacy of power is delegated to, and reſides in the perſon of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; or, that all power in heaven and earth is thus given to him? Then,

1. Hence we may ſee the fountain of all miniſterial authority to preach this goſpel, and adminiſter the ſacraments of the New Teſtament, and this of the ſacramental ſupper that we have in hand. Chriſt, having all authority himſelf, is the only

ly hand that can give authority to whom he will: therefore Christ opens up his own commission from the Father, and so gives commission to his servants; accordingly, says Christ, John xx. 21. As my Father hath sent me, so send I you. And as Christ had his commission from his Father to show and open, so they may preach most warrantably who can show their commission most clearly: How shall we preach, except we be sent? Gospel-ministers have need to keep their commission clear for their encouragement, because the world is ready to question their authority, and despise their message, as it was with Christ himself. Luther said once, "That to preach the gospel was to draw "the hatred of the whole world upon a man; "yea, the hatred of earth and hell;" for, as the gospel of the kingdom of Christ is opposite and destructive to the kingdom of Satan, so it is cross to the natural inclinations, corrupt humours, and legal bias of men and women in the world. However, every faithful minister, being confident that his cause is good, his crown better, and his captain best of all, may, notwithstanding whatever dirt of calumny, or dart of cruelty may be thrown at him, rejoice in his being treated as his glorious master was. Mean time, however weak and sinful the poor mortals are whom he employs, yet let the word and ordinances be entertained with due reverence and holy fear; because they are dispensed by us, in his name, who hath all power in heaven and earth.

2. Hence see on whom it is that the virtue and efficacy of the gospel, and gospel ordinances, does depend; not upon the minister, not upon the ordinance itself, but upon HIM who hath all power in heaven and earth. What can make a sermon and sacrament powerful and efficacious? Nothing but this powerful presence, according to his word here, Lo, I am with you. Heaven would be but darkness, if the Lamb were not the light of the place; and surely all ordinances on earth, without Christ, would be sapless, feeble, empty, insignificant, and ineffectual things. The scripture, without Christ, is but a dead letter, a letter of death; sermons, without Christ, are dead words and empty sounds; the sacrament here, without Christ, will be but a dead work, an empty table; yea, God himself, without Christ, is nothing but fire, and fury, and flames of wrath. Oh! powerless praying, powerless praising, powerless preaching, powerless hearing, powerless communicating, without Christ, who is the substance, the life, the soul, the all of his ordinances; yea, All in all! O Sirs, look for power from him, who is the store-house of all power.

3. Hence see the glorious dignity and everlasting excellency of our Lord Jesus Christ, the second Adam. The first Adam had a natural power given to him, and he lost it; but the second Adam hath all power given to him, and he keeps it for ever, and it is inamissible; it cannot be lost: The gifts and callings of God are without repentance; and surely the gift of all power in heaven and earth, that Christ hath received, is what God will never repent of; nay, he hath sworn, and will not repent, saying, Thou art a Priest for ever: and again, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever. O what a well-qualified Saviour is Christ! having all power given him, and all power to give what is necessary to us, and all power to heal the most desperate diseases: none so qualified as he is for sinners to come to. If any of you were taken with a dangerous distemper, that were like to prove mortal, if there be a physician in all the country better qualified, or more able to help than another, you will have recourse to him: well, should not this be a spur to us, and a powerful argument to come unto Christ and employ him? Never any had such qualifications as he, even all power in heaven and earth, and that for our use and behoof, he having received this gift for men, even for the rebellious, to subdue them to him, that God the Lord might dwell among them: he is the magazine of all power; the repository of all divine fulness.

4. Hence see, how much the salvation of a company of poor sinners hath been upon the heart of God and of Christ from all eternity, and how much it appears in time, by the great work he hath wrought for that end, namely, in Christ's being humbled to the lowest, and then exalted to the highest pitch, and all for accomplishing this business. See the vast difference of times, in the condition of our Lord Jesus: for thirty years, or thereby, he was greatly humbled, wounded, bruised, lived such a poor life in this earth, that he had no place where to lay his head, nor a penny to pay his tribute, and then died a shameful and accursed death; but now exalted to the greatest honour, having all power in heaven and earth, and all gifts in his hand, to bestow upon poor needy creatures; and, the more honour and dignity he is advanced unto, the more advantage do sinners get by him, he being exalted a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance and remission of sins. He is not exalted to heaven, to neglect the earth, and leave us hopeless; nay, but, on the contrary, exalted to heaven, that he may send down heaven's blessings upon earth; and exalted to all power in heaven, that he may show the more pity on earth: therefore, If I go, says he, I will send the Spirit. The light of the sun is not designed for itself, but for the world: so the mediatorial fulness and power of Christ is not designed for himself, but for his church and people in all nations of the earth. O wonder at this contrivance, which the infinite wisdom of God spent an eternity upon. The shallow capacity of man, by studying twenty or thirty years, will fall upon great inventions; but, O Sirs, what must be the product of the heart of God! what must be the production of his infinitely wise mind from eternity! Behold, here it is, a CHRIST, in whom dwells all his fulness, all his power; his heart was set upon the great work of first giving Christ to us, and then giving all power to him for our behoof. O what encouragement to look for a day of power!

5. Hence see, that since all power is given to Christ, then all honour and pre-eminence should be given to him: Thus should it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honour: thus should it be done to the God-man whom the Father delighteth to honour; For it pleased the Father, that in him should all fulness dwell: It pleased the glorious Trinity, that in him, as Mediator, all power in heaven and earth should reside. God's great design, all along, hath been to glorify and exalt Christ: all his promises were for exalting Christ; to him they were all made before the world began, Tit. i. 2.; and in him they were all Yea and Amen. — All his dispensations and remarkable providences were for exalting Christ:

Isaac

Isaac was not killed, why? because Christ was to come of him.—All his commands are for exalting Christ; they are all summed up in, and reduced to, a looking to Christ and a believing in him: This is his commandment, that ye believe in the name of his Son.—All his ordinances are for exalting Christ: what is the great subject of preaching? It is Christ; We preach Christ crucified. What is the matter of the sacrament? It is a crucified Christ.—All the services he requires of his church and people are esteemed only according as they have this engraven and written upon them, JEHOVAH-SHAMMAH, The Lord is there.—All the work of the church triumphant is to exalt Christ: the great task of heaven is to sing everlasting Halelujahs to him that sits upon the throne, and to the Lamb for ever and ever.—And, in a word, all God's dispensations towards Christ are still to set him on high, and put honour upon him. The Father puts Christ amongst all relations, offices, and conditions, and then brings him out with the most ample testimonial that ever was. He classes him amongst the number of lords, and then brings him out with this testimonial, LORD OF LORDS: He puts him amongst kings, and then brings him forth KING OF KINGS: He names him amongst princes, and then calls him, The Prince of the kings of the earth: He ranks him amongst prophets and priests, and then declares him to be the great Prophet, the great High-priest: He places him amongst lights and luminaries, such as the sun and the stars, and then he proclaims him to be the Light of the world, the Sun of righteousness, the bright and morning Star: He names him amongst servants, and then calls him his faithful Servant, his righteous Servant: He puts him amongst the dead, and then he is the First-born from the dead, who runs away with the keys of hell and death, and goes forth with this name, The resurrection and the life. But, what needs more to be said of the honour that God puts upon him than this, All power in heaven and earth is given to him? And should not we give all honour and pre-eminence to him? We should honour him in the divinity of his person, as the Son of God: in the divinity of his office, as he is the Sent of God: in the divinity of his suffering, for his blood is the blood of God, and his sufferings of infinite value: in the divinity of his resurrection, being declared to be the Son of God with power, by his resurrection from the dead; he laid down his life of himself, and took it up again, which none but a God could do: and in the divinity of his power and strength, as being able to save to the uttermost, and having all power in heaven and in earth. And in all this we may read the necessity and excellency of faith, by which alone we can put honour upon him whom the Father honours: being strong in the faith, we ought to give glory to God, and that by putting honour upon Christ; for, he that honours not the Son, honours not the Father. To pretend to honour God out of Christ, is to dishonour him, and destroy ourselves; but to put honour upon Christ is to put honour upon God in him; for, God is in him, and all the fulness of God is in him, and all the power of God is in him: All power in heaven and earth is given unto me.

6. Hence see, that the followers of Christ have no reason to be ashamed of a crucified Christ, that is now such a glorified Christ, having all power in heaven and in earth. How ought we to glory in his cross when we see him advanced to the crown? God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom the world is crucified to me, and I to the world, Gal. vi. 14. As Christ is well qualified to be the Judge of the world, having all power in heaven and earth; so they that are ashamed of him now, may expect he will be ashamed of them when he comes in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. Oh! who would be ashamed of the very reproach of Christ, or the worst thing about him! If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth on you. Who would be ashamed of his truths, though called to bear witness thereunto, over the belly of cruel calumny and bitter opposition from earth and hell? Who would be ashamed of his cause and interest, though civil and ecclesiastical power were combined against him; though court, and council, and judicatories, were against him; though princes and parliaments were against him and his royal prerogative and headship over his church, as the only King in Zion? This was the cause that our worthy Forefathers and covenanted Reformers were not ashamed to own, even upon bloody scaffolds, and to seal it with their blood: Woe's us that any of their degenerate race are ashamed of that which was their glory! ashamed, I mean, of the glorious Reformation, as it was carried on by Solemn National Covenants from time to time. I shall not enlarge upon this; I know some are reproached for singularity on the one hand, when they make honourable mention of our Covenants; and for neutrality on the other, when they do it not; and so, if we should study to please men, we would neither speak nor hold our peace, which is impossible. But, as it is our duty to glorify Christ, and speak honourably of his cause; so I shall only say, on this subject, that if once he that is the glorious Head of the church, and King of Zion, who hath all power in heaven and earth, would exert and put forth that power, that took place in our reforming and covenanting days, that glorious work would be again revived to advantage, and these that oppose and impugn it would be ashamed. I speak not in resentment of any trivial calumny; it is below my present work: neither do I go aside from my purpose in hand, nor make an extraneous digression. Why should our natural solemn Covenants with God be reviled under this notion, among others, as if there could not be such a thing as a national church on earth, and as if the seat of our Lord's kingdom were in heaven only, and not upon the earth? But though his kingdom be not of this world, or an earthly kingdom; yet it is a kingdom in earth, as well as in heaven: Rule thou in the midst of thine enemies. All power is given to him, not only in heaven, but in earth.

7. Hence see the excellency and acceptableness of that everlasting righteousness of Christ, which he hath brought in for our justification before God: for, why is all power given to him, but because all righteousness was fulfilled by him? Therefore, when he sent the Spirit, he says, He shall convince the world of righteousness; why? because I ascend to my Father, John xvi. 10. He had not been admitted to this supreme dignity, nor ascended to the throne of all power, if he had not fulfilled all righteousness, and finished his work, to the Father's infinite satisfaction. But now, when all power in heaven and earth is given to him, him, we may be ſure that the Lord is well-pleaſed for his righteouſneſs ſake, that it is acceptable to God; and we may, with the utmoſt ſafety, and with the full aſſurance of faith, build our acceptance with God upon it. There are two conſiderations, by which our faith may be confirmed in this matter, namely, That the power given to Chriſt was partly in point of qualification, to fit for his work on earth, when he was fulfilling it; partly in point of remuneration, to reward them for it in heaven, when it was perfected.—In point of qualification, all power was given him to work out that righteouſneſs; he was upheld therein by the power of omnipotency: Behold, my Servant, whom I uphold. Hence, wonder not that God exacted ſo much of Chriſt, as both a perfect obedience to his law, and a condign ſatisfaction to his juſtice; why? he knew he was well-furniſhed and able for paying the debt that he had undertaken as our Surety to pay: he exacted of him all the debt of active obedience, that we owed to the precept of the law; and all the debt of paſſive obedience, that we owed to the threatening of the law: all the debt was required of him, becauſe all power was given to him.—And now, in point of remuneration and reward for his work, all power is given to him both in heaven and in earth: O then, what can a God do more to make the excellency and ſufficiency of Chriſt's righteouſneſs to appear? Is there any more ground left to doubt of its being ſatisfactory and acceptable to him? Yea, may not the divine glory of it fill us with ſweet amazement! Oh! what poor, low, periſhing things do we ſpend our contemplations upon! Were we to have no advantage by theſe things, yet the excellency thereof deſerves the flower of our enquiry, the vigour of our ſpirits, and the ſubſtance of our time; but when our life, peace, joy, and happy eternity, and all, ly herein, ſhall not the thoughts thereof always dwell in our hearts? And ſhall we not build upon this ſure foundation that God hath laid in Zion?—Alſo, let the world ſee here, our Lord Jeſus is the true Meſſias, and no impoſtor: Would God ſet a deceiver at his right-hand of power?

8. Hence ſee the nature of Chriſt's kingdom, together with the nature of unbelief that oppoſes it, and the nature of faith that advances it.

As to the nature of Chriſt's kingdom, you ſee, as the apoſtle ſays, 1 Cor. iv. 20. It is not in word, but in power: hence the efficacy of a preached goſpel lies not in the inticing words of man's wiſdom, but in the demonſtration of the Spirit and of power: this is what overcomes enemies. A member of the council of Nice encountered with a great philoſopher, and it was feared, becauſe he was but a poor ſimple kind of a man, leſt the cauſe ſhould ſuffer through his weakneſs; but he, being full of the Spirit of Chriſt, oppoſed ſo much power to what the philoſopher ſaid, that he profeſſed plainly, "While arguments, ſays he, were oppoſed a-"gainſt arguments, ſyllogiſm againſt ſyllo-"giſm, and reaſon againſt reaſon, I was hard "enough for them all; but here comes a man "that ſpeaks in the power of the Spirit of "Chriſt, and I am not able to reſiſt him." The kingdom of Chriſt is not in word, but in power.

As to the nature of unbelief, that oppoſes this kingdom of Chriſt, we ſee alſo from this doctrine what an evil thing it is, either in ſinners or ſaints, in regard, it will not truſt him whom God hath entruſted with all power in heaven and earth; it will not truſt God's Truſtee; it will not confide in the Father's Confident. O Sirs, Take heed, leſt there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, when you are making a ſolemn profeſſion of faith in Chriſt: unbelief caſts the moſt ſolemn affront and indignity upon the Father and the Son; and, in effect, charges God with folly in putting this truſt in his hand; or rather, it charges the God of truth with a lye, and ſays, in effect, that Chriſt hath not received it, or that he is unfaithful to his truſt; that either he hath not received gifts for men, even for the rebellious, or that he embezels them, and keeps them to himſelf. Can there be a greater affront or indignity caſt upon a man of any candor or credit? Yet this is the treatment that the ſin of unbelief gives unto Chriſt. It ſays, in plain terms, though ſecretly, Either he hath not that ſaving power he is ſaid to have, or he hath not prudence to manage it, or pity to exert it in their behalf.

On the other hand, as to the nature of faith, this doctrine ſhows us, that as it is a fruit of this power, ſo it lies in our particular improvement thereof, by truſting him whom God hath intruſted, and crediting him whom God credits with all power for our help and ſalvation, according to his word, I have laid help upon One that is mighty: and there lies my help alſo, ſays faith; it is ſafe truſting to God's Truſtee, it is ſafe leaving the care of our ſalvation where God leaves it, and putting all our confidence in him to whom all power is given. Faith is a powerleſs ſinner's looking to a powerful Saviour, and ſaying, Though I have neither righteouſneſs nor ſtrength of my own, yet, Surely in the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength. There are two things concerning this faith that I would here notice. 1. That it is the exceeding greatneſs of divine power that is the cauſe of it; true faith is of God's operation. 2. Chriſt, in the word, is the ground and object of it: faith is no enthuſiaſtical notion of a powerful Chriſt, but it is a receiving of his teſtimony, or himſelf, in the teſtimony that he gives of himſelf in the word; as when he ſays here, All power is given to me in heaven and in earth.

Some in our day, to avoid the neceſſary doctrine of particular perſuaſion of ſalvation, through Chriſt, in the nature of faith, are like to turn the notion of faith into mere enthuſiaſm, as if it were a receiving of Chriſt, but not in a word of promiſe; whereas there is no receiving of Chriſt, or cloſing with the perſon of Chriſt, but as he is offered, or exhibited to us in a word of grace. To receive and reſt upon Chriſt for ſalvation, is not faith, if you take away the other part or branch of the definition, namely, as he is offered to us in the goſpel: Take away the goſpel-offer, or goſpel-promiſe, and to receive and reſt upon Chriſt without that, is mere fancy, mere deluſion, mere enthuſiaſm: You may ſee your picture or image, in a glaſs or mirror; but take away the glaſs, and you ſee no more of it: the goſpel is the glaſs wherein we behold the glory of the Lord, and ſee Chriſt the image of the inviſible God; but take away the goſpel, or the promiſe, and you will ſee no more, except it be an image of your own brain. If you ſay, Are we not to take Chriſt, and then we have all the promiſes in him? Very true, but how will you take Chriſt, if not as he lays himſelf out in the word? Will you aſcend to heaven, to take him there? Though you could, it would not be faith, but vision; Or, will you descend to the deep, to seek him in the grave? that is a fancy; he is not there, he is risen: But, what says the Holy Ghost? The word is near, even the word of faith which we preach, Rom. x. 8.: there you may see him; there you may take hold of him. And to take him in his word, is to take him at his word; to receive his testimony by believing and being persuaded of it, and giving a cordial assent unto it, and so trusting in him that thus speaks in his word to you, and continuing to hope in his word.

But what is the glass, the word, the promise, wherein I may see, and eye, and receive Christ? Why, my text is as clear a glass as any: there is not only a promise in the context, Lo, I am with you; not only with you ministers, but with you for the sake of my people, that I may exert my power on them by you as my instruments: but there is more than a promise in the text, All power is given to me in heaven and in earth. If any thing can be better than a promise of God to build faith upon, here it is; for it is not a promise made to Christ, but all the promises fulfilled in him, that he may fulfil them on whom he will. God promised to Christ, that if once he had given himself a sacrifice for sin, then he would give him all power to save whom he pleased; and now the sacrifice is offered, and God's promise is performed; All power is given to me in heaven and in earth. Well, but what am I concerned? say you; and how does it yield a ground of faith to me, that God's promise to Christ is performed? Why, his promise to Christ includes all the promises; they are reductively all in this one, and the accomplishment of this is the radical accomplishment of all. Now, since there is a promise left for sinners to build their faith and hope upon, Heb. iv. 1. and a word of reconciliation for you to confide in, 2 Cor. v. 19; here is the surest ground for faith imaginable, that whatever promise of God you take hold upon, it is fulfilled already in Christ, by his having all power given him to fulfil it in you. And here you see, that all the promises are not only sealed by his precious blood, according to that word, that they are Yea and Amen in him; but they are all like so many sparkling jewels set upon his golden crown, according to this word, All power in heaven and earth is given unto me. He hath not only fulfilled the condition of them, by his obedience unto death; but received the accomplishment of them, by his receiving all power to make them out to whom he will: and when a man, by the power of his grace, takes hold of a promise, he may believe it to be as sure as the blood of Christ upon the cross, and the power of Christ upon the throne can make it. Now, all the promises that we are called to build our faith upon, are included in, and depend upon this promise that is already performed to Christ; so that here our faith may have a footing, not only upon a promise made, but a promise fulfilled in Christ; not only a promise sealed by his precious blood, as a Priest upon the cross, but a promise put in his powerful hand, as a Priest upon a throne; a promise that hath both the sign of the cross and the sign of the crown engraven upon it; that, looking to the cross, we may see and believe that the condition of it is fulfilled, and the price of it is paid; and, looking to the crown, we may see and believe that the effectual application and powerful accomplishment thereof is secured.

9. Hence see, if all power is delegated to, and resides in the person of Christ; here is matter of terror to the enemies, and comfort to the friends and followers of our Lord Jesus Christ. And,

(1.) On the one hand, what matter of TERROR to his enemies, and all these that oppose him! The power of Christ hath a black side full of amazement to all his enemies; he is the chief corner-stone to some, but to others a rock of offence.

QUEST. Who are the enemies of Christ, to whom the doctrine may be terrible?

Alas! how terrible may it be to all ignorant persons, that live content without the saving knowledge of God in Christ! For he that hath all power in heaven and in earth, is to be revealed from heaven, in flaming fire, to take vengeance on them that know not God, 2 Thess. i. 8.—How terrible may it be to all profane persons, that say, in effect, they will not have this man, this God-man, to reign over them; but, let us break his bands asunder, and cast his cords from us! For he will break them in pieces as with a rod of iron, and dash them like a potter's vessel, Psal. ii. 9.—How terrible may it be to all hypocrites, that profess to know God, and have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof! The Lamb that is in the midst of the throne, is said to have seven eyes and seven horns: He hath omniscient eyes to find out all the corners of hypocritical hearts; yea, and he hath omnipotent horns to push and destroy them.—How terrible may it be to all proud boasters of their own power and strength, that boast of the power of nature; the power of free-will, and think to spin somewhat out of their own bowels to be a robe of righteousness to themselves! But, as all power is given to the Lord Jesus Christ, so he will not give his glory to another.—How terrible may it be to all the despisers of Christ, that with Herod, and his men of war, set him at nought, and pour contempt upon all his ordinances and institutions, by slighting and casting them behind their backs? Whom are you despising? even him that can grind you to pouder; for all power in heaven and earth is given to him: therefore, behold, ye despisers, wonder and perish. Whom do ye mock and revile? Hath he not power that will reach you? What will you do when he comes in the clouds, with power and great glory?—In a word, How terrible may it be to all unbelievers who sit under the gospel, and yet sit his call therein, and slight his invitations? How will he send forth his armies and destroy these murderers? The Son of God is said to sit upon a red horse, and that there was given to him a great sword, Rev. vi. 14. He rides on a terrible red horse, with the sword of power in his hand, to take vengeance on his enemies; for, If he whet his glittering sword, and his right-hand take hold of judgment, he will render vengeance to his enemies, and a recompence to them that hate him, Deut. xxxii. 41. Who but these that are clean distracted would remain in a state of enmity and rebellion against him that hath all power in heaven and earth? it was a good counsel that Gamaliel gave to his followers, Take heed that ye be not fighters against God. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

(2.) On the other hand, what matter of COMFORT

FORT does this doctrine afford to the friends and followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, seeing he hath all power in heaven and earth given unto him? for, as they shall be kept by his power, through faith to salvation, so their enemies may fight with fury against them, but they shall never be able to prevail; for their Lord and Captain is said, Rev. vi. 2. to ride upon a white horse, with a bow in his hand, and a crown upon his head, and to go forth conquering and to conquer. We read of a cup of consolation, Jer. xvi. 7.; and this doctrine holds it to the mouth of all the friends and followers of Christ.—What comfort is here to the broken-hearted sinner that is under the pangs of the new birth, that the power of the Spirit rests upon Christ for healing of such? Luke iv. 18. The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, for he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor, and to heal the broken-hearted. Yea, what comfort is here to these that complain they are hard-hearted? For he hath all power to take away the heart of stone, and to give the heart of flesh. But here I especially speak of these that are in a state of friendship with this glorious and powerful Lord; surely such may encourage themselves in the Lord their God.—Here is encouragement against the want and weakness of grace, that he, having all power, is able to make all grace abound, 2 Cor. ix. 8.; and to make the feeble as David, and David as the angel of the Lord, Zech. xii. 8.—Here is encouragement against apostacy and fear of falling away totally, in that he, who hath all power, hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee, and is able to make us stand, Heb. xiii. 5.—Here is encouragement against unbelief, and doubting of the promise of God; for, having all power, we may be fully persuaded that he that hath promised is able to perform, Rom. iv. 21. To doubt of his promise, is to doubt of his power; to discredit his promise, is to deny that he hath all power in heaven and earth.—Here is encouragement against enemies without and within; the devil, the world, and the flesh: though thou art weak, and hast no power against them, yet he having all power, you may receive the comfort that Hezekiah gives to his subjects, 2 Chron. xxxii. 7, 8. Be strong and courageous, be not afraid nor dismayed for the king of Assyria, nor for all the multitude that is with him; for there be more with us, than with him. With him is an arm of flesh, but with us is the Lord our God, to help us, and to fight our battles. So here, 1 John iv. 4. Greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world. Wicked men and devils, their will is larger than their power; their will is to do many things that they cannot do: but it is not so with Christ; his power is as large as his will, if not vastly larger in certain respects; for, though he will not do all that he can, yet he can do all that he will; for, All power in heaven and earth is given unto him. You see, believer, the might of your enemies; but see also that your Redeemer is the mighty God, as well as the everlasting Father, and the Prince of peace; and because he is the God of peace, he will bruise Satan under your feet, and destroy your enemies that disturb your peace.—Here is encouragement against the danger and difficulties, the crosses and losses, reproaches and trials you may meet with in following the Lord Jesus; he, having all power, can easily make up what you seem to loss in his service: hence Moses refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; and chused rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. It is said, He had respect unto the recompence of reward. Therefore, whatever loss you sustain in the Lord's service, we may say to you, as the man of God said to Amaziah, 2 Chron. xxv. 9. The Lord is able to give thee much more than this. Is thy cleaving to his way seemingly prejudicial to thy credit, wealth, or gain? Yet fear not; for he whose name you profess hath all power in heaven and in earth.—Here is encouragement against the seeming hardness and difficulty of the duty or work the Lord may call you to; for he having all power, is there any thing too hard for him, who, at the same time promises, that his grace shall be sufficient for thee, and his strength perfected in thy weakness, and to work in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure? Therefore, says Paul, I am able to do all things through Christ strengthening me. How can I deny myself, take up my cross, and follow the Lord? Why, though we are not sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves, yet our sufficiency is of God.—Here is encouragement to pray without ceasing: if you prayed to one that had no power to give what you ask, you might have little courage, comfort, or confidence in prayer; but he, having all power, is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think, according to the power that works in us, Eph. iii. 20. The conclusion of what we call, The Lord's prayer, teaches us to pray in the faith of his power; for, after we have prayed for these things contained there, the conclusion is, For thine is the kingdom and the power: hereupon we ground our assurance to be heard, that he who hath the kingdom, hath also all power in heaven and in earth.—Here is encouragement against all the confusions and commotions in the church of Christ upon earth, when the floods lift up their waves; and when floods of division and defection, floods of profanity and impiety, and floods of error and heresy are like to overflow the church of Christ; yet he who hath all power in heaven and earth, as Head of his church, and King of Zion, hath the command of the floods, and is mightier than the noise of many waters; therefore, Upon all the glory there shall be a defence; the gates of hell shall not prevail. It is not in the power of all the devils in hell, and wicked men on earth, to thrust our Lord out of the earth; for, he hath all power in heaven and in earth; and when he exerts his power, a covenant-reformation will revive, in spite of earth and hell: When the Lord shall build up Zion, he will appear in his glory.—Here is encouragement against powerful lusts, powerful corruptions, powerful temptations, that you may be harrassed with: he that hath all power hath said, I will subdue your iniquities, and that sin shall not have dominion. He it is who once suffered, being tempted, that he might be able to succour them that are tempted, Heb. ii. 18.; where you see his ability, as Mediator, to succour the tempted, is founded on his once suffering, being tempted; which bespeaks power, joined with pity and sympathy.—Here is the encouragement against the most desperate case: when soul-matters are at the lowest pass with you, and when you are brought to the utmost distress, to the utmost confusion, to the utmost perplexity, and, as it were, to the belly of hell, with Jonah; yet here is a present relief, All power in heaven and in earth is given unto him, whereby he is able to save to the uttermost: his power reaches from the lowest hell to the highest heaven.—Here is encouragement against the fears of death: he that hath all hath ſaid, O death, I will be thy plague; O grave, I will be thy deſtruction: for I am he that lives, and was dead; and, behold, I live for evermore; I have the keys of hell and death. When death begins to ſtare you in the face, believer, you may ſay, O death, where is thy ſting? Where is thy power to hurt or harm me? All power is taken from you, and all power is given to Chriſt, the power of the keys is in his hand; and though death may tumble my body into the grave, and crumble my fleſh and bones into duſt, yet you have no power over a pile of my duſt, nor ſhall one pickle of it be detained in the earth any longer than he pleaſes; for he that hath all power in earth, as well as in heaven, will command the earth and the ſea to give up their dead, Rev. xx. 13. He that is declared to be the Son of God with power, by his own reſurrection from the dead, will raiſe the dead, with the ſame power by which he made the world out of nothing, and raiſed himſelf out of the grave: For the Lord himſelf will deſcend from heaven with a ſhout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe firſt, 1 Theſ. iv. 16. Therefore, O death, may the believer ſay, Let Sadducees and Atheiſts doubt and debate the reſurrection of the body as they will, Not knowing the ſcriptures, nor the power of God, nor believing that all power in heaven and earth is given unto Chriſt; yet, as for me, I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he ſhall ſtand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my ſkin worms deſtroy this body, yet in my fleſh ſhall I ſee God: whom I ſhall ſee for myſelf, and mine eyes ſhall behold, and not another, though my reins be conſumed within me, Job xix. 25, 26, 27.—Finally, here is encouragement O believer, againſt the fears of ſafe landing in heaven: when your body is to be laid in the duſt for a while, fear not but your ſoul ſhall be led ſafely to heaven; for he hath all power in heaven, as well as in earth; he hath the keys of heaven and life, as well as the keys of hell and death; he hath all the keys of his Father's houſe, and many a million of chambers are there; In my Father's houſe are many manſions, and I go to prepare a place for you, John xiv. 2. Immediately after Chriſt had ſpoken the words of this text to his diſciples, ſaying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth, he aſcended up into heaven in their view, as they were all gazing up after him; and ſo he took them to witneſs that he had the keys of heaven in his hand, by which he opened the gate, and ſat down with his Father upon his throne: and by the ſame key of omnipotency will he open the way to the heavenly manſion for you, believer, that where he is there you may be alſo. There is no power in heaven to oppoſe him, and there is no power in heaven but what is given to him: the King of glory hath power to ſet the crown of glory upon your head; he hath ſuch power in heaven, that it will coſt him no more to bring you there, but to ſay, Father, I will, and it ſhall be done; Father, I will, that theſe whom thou haſt given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory which thou haſt given me: for thou lovedſt me before the foundation of the world, John xvii. 14. ——Take home then to you all the encouragement that this great truth imports. If you live in the faith of this power that is given to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, you may live in the joy of the Lord as your ſtrength, and enjoy all theſe encouragements that his power carries in the boſom of it.

10. Hence ſee, in the laſt place, the duty of all that hear this goſpel. If all power in heaven and earth be given to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, then ſurely it is the duty of all that hear me, 1. To try what intereſt they have in this power, that is delegated to, and reſides in the perſon of Chriſt. 2. To truſt him with their ſouls and their eternal ſalvation, as their powerful Saviour and Redeemer, to whom all power in heaven and earth belongs. Let me, therefore, exhort you to both theſe duties.

[1.] Let me exhort you to try and examine what intereſt you have in this power, or rather in this crucified Jeſus, as he is the power of God, as well as the wiſdom of God: I mean not here that common intereſt in him that all the baptized members of the viſible church have in Chriſt, whereby they have a ſealed warrant to come to him, and take poſſeſſion of him and his ſaving power as their ſanctuary; but I mean that ſpecial intereſt in him, whereby they are actually, as believers in Chriſt, poſſeſſed of that power in your begun ſalvation. How ſhall that be known? Say you. I ſhall, for gaining of time, only ſay, There is a twofold mark by which it will appear whether you have an intereſt in this power, namely, his laying out his power for you, and your laying out your power for him: for if you have an intereſt in his power, then it is betwixt Chriſt and you, in ſome reſpect, as it is betwixt God and Chriſt as Mediator; God lays up all his power in Chriſt, and then Chriſt lays out all his power for God, and for his Father's glory: ſo they that are ſpecially intereſted in this powerful Saviour, he exerts his power, and lays it out for them and their happineſs; and they exert their power, and lays it out for him and for his honour. Try then by theſe two things:

(1.) Hath he exerted his power for you, and exerciſed his power in you? Hath the goſpel come to you, not in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance? 1 Theſ. i. 5. I might here, if time allowed, ſpeak particularly of the convincing power of the Spirit of Chriſt upon the conſcience, giving the ſoul to ſee the natural power of death and darkneſs it is under; his enlightening power upon the mind and underſtanding, how the God, who commanded light to ſhine out of darkneſs, ſhineth into the heart, to give the light of the knowledge of his glory in the face of Chriſt; his reigning power upon the will, by making the ſoul willing in the day of his power; and thereby his drawing power, and converting power upon the whole ſoul, in perſuading and enabling to embrace this powerful Jeſus, as he is offered to it in the goſpel. What power did he ever give you to believe in him? You that ſay you believe in Chriſt, and yet never got power from Chriſt to believe in him, you may ſcore out your name from the number of believers; for your faith is a powerleſs faith, it cannot ſave you; nay, it hath power to hurt you, but no power to help you. Faith that never had power to keep you from ſin, will never have power to keep you from hell; the faith that had never power to lead you to duty, will never have power to land you in glory; the faith that never had power to bring you from ſelf to Chriſt, will never have power to bring you from earth to heaven: that which makes true faith powerful, is, that it hath a powerful original; the power and acts of true believing are from God, Phil. ii. 13.

All the activity of the will, before the conversion, lies in an oppoſition to the work of grace; till the power of God be put forth, no man is made willing to believe or receive Chriſt; the power that raiſes the ſoul to faith, is the ſame power that raiſed Chriſt from the dead, Eph. i. 19.; yet it is the act of the believer, in the day of power, as well as it is the work of the Spirit: it is an act of the ſoul put forth contrary to, and above the natural ability of the ſoul; and yet, in the mean time, this power, in making a man believe, is exerted ſo wonderfully, by the Spirit of faith, that the man ſees nothing but weakneſs, inability, and utter inſufficiency in himſelf; and, perhaps, hath no ſenſe or feeling of power at all, but, in the ſenſe of weakneſs, looks greedily and gladly to him that hath all power. It is the powerleſs ſinner rolling itſelf ever upon a powerful Saviour, ſaying, Surely in me there is no righteouſneſs nor ſtrength; I have no righteouſneſs in me, but the righteouſneſs of guilt, which is the righteous demerit of eternal death; I have no ſtrength in me, but the ſtrength of ſin, which is like to pull me down to hell; and yet I am venturing to ſay, Surely in the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength, Iſa. xlv. 24. There I ſee it, there I ſeek it, there I ſettle my guilty ſoul upon it; and though I have it not in myſelf, yet I reſt myſelf content that I have it there, and am well-pleaſed that God hath put it in ſuch a good hand. I aſk then, Have ye ever thus got power to believe in him that hath all power? Was you ever, by the power of Chriſt, raiſed up from the place of dragons, when you was ſore broken and covered with the ſhadow of death? Pſal. xliv. 19. Was you ever brought, by this means, from blindneſs to ſight, from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, from bondage to liberty, and from death to life; that is, in ſhort, from a graceleſs to a gracious ſtate, and from legal fetters to goſpel-freedom? In a word, let me here aſk, if ye would know that his power hath been exerciſed in you, Whether or not he that hath all power in heaven and earth given to him, hath communicate and given to you, at any time, ſome power both in heaven and in earth?

1. Hath he ever given you any power in heaven, or influence there, by virtue of his own power and interceſſion at the right-hand of God? It is ſaid of Jacob, Hoſ. xii. 4. That he had power over the Angel, and prevailed, while he wept and made ſupplication to him: it was that Angel of the covenant, CHRIST, who hath all power in heaven and in earth. Now, tell me, got you ever any power with the angel in wreſtling with him? Got you ever, as it were, ſuch a grip of him in your arms, as to ſay to him, Now, Lord, ſince I have got hold of thee, I will not let thee go, no; I will not let thee go, except thou bleſs me? And, perhaps, he indeed bleſſed you with ſuch a glad heart, that, with Hannah, your countenance was no more ſad, your heart was no more heavy, you could then fly on the wings of love to do him ſervice. What, man! it ſeems you got ſome power in heaven, and power with the God of heaven: what other thing could it be than power in heaven, when you got power with him that hath all power in heaven?

2. Have you ever got any power in earth given to you from him that hath all power in heaven and earth given to him? Surely, if you have got any power in heaven, you have alſo got ſome power in earth; I mean, power to overcome the world by faith in him that hath all power in heaven and earth, 1 John v. 4. Got you ever power to triumph over the devil, the god of this world, ſaying, O bleſſed be God that ever Chriſt bruiſed the head of the ſerpent? Got you ever power to triumph and tread upon your luſts and corruptions, in the faith of his power that hath ſaid, Sin ſhall not have dominion; and in the faith of complete victory through him, whoſe name is JESUS, becauſe he ſaves his people from their ſins? And have you not ſome time a day got power over all things on earth, ſo as you could tread upon all the glory and grandeur of this world, and trample upon all the crowns and diadems, thrones and ſceptres, in the earth, with a holy, humble, generous contempt and diſdain, ſaying, Behold, I count all theſe but loſs and dung for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt? And have you not got power to tread ſelf to the ground, and to trample upon your own credit, your own name, your own righteouſneſs, your own ſtrength, while you have apprehended the glory of Chriſt as the Lord your righteouſneſs and ſtrength; and got power to become nothing, and a thouſand times leſs and worſe than nothing, in your own ſight, while he, that hath all power in heaven and earth, was all in all to you? No man can call Jeſus Lord, but by the Spirit of God. Can you ſay, I got power to call Jeſus LORD, and to call myſelf a devil? I got power to ſay, Truth, Lord, I am a dog, and yet to creep below his table for a crumb: yea, the time hath been, when I got power to purſue all my enemies with ſword in hand; yea, to drown them in the Red-ſea of the blood of Jeſus, and to overcome by the blood of the Lamb; I was more than a conqueror through him that loved me. Why, here is power in earth; what know you of that? Can you ſay, Whatever I be at preſent, yet, I think, you are telling me what I have known; I mind the time, I mind the place, I mind the occaſion, when I got ſuch power as you ſpeak of? Why, then, it ſeems he hath been exerting his power towards you, and exerciſing it in you; he that hath all power in heaven and in earth, hath given you ſome ſhare of his power in heaven, and of his power in earth both; this evidenceth you have an intereſt in his power. But then, as they that are intereſted in his power are perſons in whom he exerts his power, and lays it out for them and their happineſs: So likewiſe,

(2.) They exert their power, and lay it out for him, and for his honour: if they have any power on earth, they deſire and endeavour, through grace, to lay out their power for his glory who hath all power in heaven and in earth, even as he lays out his power for his Father's glory and honour. What power have you? none, indeed, but what he gives you, either in a way of common or ſpecial bounty. There is a natural power of eating and drinking; if you have intereſt in Chriſt's power, you will not dare to ſquander away that power, by eating to gluttony, or drinking to drunkenneſs; but, whether ye eat or drink, or whatever you do, do all to the glory of God and Chriſt: this will be your habitual deſire, even in ſitting down to your meals, to ſet the Lord before you, and to eat and drink that you may be fitted for the work wherein he calls you to ſerve him. There is an acquired power that you have leſs or more of; the Lord hath beſtowed upon you ſome gifts, ſome parts, ſome talents, of which he ſays, Occupy till I come. Some have a ſecular power and authority in the ſtate, as rulers, magiſtrates, judges, juſtices: ſome a ſpiritual power in the church, as miniſters, elders, and other officers in the houſe of God: ſome have, though not a magiſtratical, yet a magiſterial power, as maſters of ſchools, over children; maſters of houſes and lands, over tenants and cottars; maſters of families, over their children and ſervants: ſome have a providential power and ſuperiority over their neighbours, by God's putting them in a more eminent ſtation in reſpect of outward wealth and honour. Whatever power you have, if you be intereſted in Chriſt's power, or a true ſubject of his who hath all power in heaven and earth, you will endeavour to employ that power of yours for his honour and glory, and to advance his kingdom and intereſt. I know none but have ſome power or other, if they had a heart to employ it for the Lord. If you have no power of authority over your friends and neighbours, becauſe of your inferior ſtation; yet, have you no power of influences? May be you have had power to harm them by your ill words, your ill ways, your ill example; and, Oh! if the channel of your power and influence were turned to another airth, you might have power to do good to others, inſtead of doing them ill; and power to commend Chriſt to them by your good advice and good example. O Sirs, what ſhould you do with that little power of yours, but improve it for advancing the great power of our Lord Jeſus, for glorifying him, raiſing his honour and dignity, and ſtudying to bring in ſome revenue to his crown? Your power muſt be employed either for or againſt him; if againſt him, then wo to you that will fight againſt him that hath all power in heaven and earth! But if you have any intereſt in his power, you will employ your power for him, ſaying, As for me and my houſe, we will ſerve the Lord. I know Abraham, ſays God, that he will command his children to fear me. If a true ſubject of Chriſt could command a thouſand to come to Chriſt, and ſubmit to his government, he would do it. No doubt the beſt believer here will be conſcious to himſelf of a multitude of failures in this reſpect; yet, ſure I am, according to the meaſure of power he receives from Chriſt, his heart will be engaged to employ all the power he hath for his honour.

[2.] Let me exhort you to come to this great and glorious Lord, who hath all power in heaven and in earth, and to truſt him with your ſouls, and your eternal ſalvation. You that never truſted him before, it is time to begin now; now is the accepted time: and you that have truly done it formerly, it is a fit time for renewed acts of faith upon him before you go to a communion-table. If you would have power to communicate worthily, then come to, and truſt in him that hath all power in heaven and earth given to him, and given to him for the behoof of weak, powerleſs, needy, guilty ſinners. Here is a mighty Saviour, a complete Redeemer: there is none like him in heaven or earth; for he hath all power of authority, and power of ability, both in heaven and earth, for the ſalvation of ſinners: It pleaſed the Father that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell, and that to him ſhould all power be given; and, therefore, there can be nothing more pleaſing to God, than that we give all truſt and obedience to him. What can be more acceptable to God, than that we give all honour, all reverence, all love, all truſt, all confidence, all ſubmiſſion to him, to whom he gives all power in heaven and earth? Yea, this is his commandment, that we believe in him; and he himſelf cries from heaven to the earth, ſaying, Look to me, all the ends of the earth, and be ſaved; for I am God, and there is none elſe; inſomuch, that it is treaſon, rebellion, and diſloyalty, to diſobey him that hath all power and authority in heaven and in earth. By virtue of his ſupreme power and authority, he hath given us ground to hope that our miniſterial adminiſtrations in his name ſhall not be altogether in vain, and without fruit or ſucceſs. We might be hopeleſs, conſidering the holineſs of the God of heaven, and the ſinfulneſs of men on earth, if it were not that he who hath all power both in heaven and earth is here ſaying, Go ye therefore, and teach all nations; and, lo, I am with you to the end of the world: giving us to know, that by this goſpel-miniſtry of his appointment, he will gather in his people from the four winds. Come then, let us ſow in hope, in hope of a ſeed-time and harveſt, in hope of a ſeed to ſerve our glorious Lord; for his Father's promiſe to him ſhall be accompliſhed, namely, that he ſhall ſee his ſeed to his ſatisfaction: and who knows but it may be a ſeed-time in Dunfermline, or a ſeed to be created at this occaſion? Let me then, in his glorious name, that hath all power in heaven and earth, who can put a creating power in his own ordinances, intreat and invite all the ſinners within theſe walls to come to this powerful Saviour, and to believe in him, as ſuch, for your own ſalvation: and this I do, by virtue of the commiſſion that here he gives, Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations. And what leſſon means he ſhall we teach? Why, the ſum of all is in his own commiſſion, and there is nothing more neceſſary for us to teach, or you to believe, than this, That all power is given to him in heaven and in earth. In this word the powerful Saviour offers himſelf to you, man, to you, woman; to you that are before me, and you that are behind me, and round about me: and if all the nations of the earth were within hearing of me, I would have allowance to teach them the ſame, and to call them to come to this powerful Jeſus, by believing, that he hath all power in heaven and earth, whereby he is able to ſave them.

To come to Chriſt, is to believe in him, and to receive his teſtimony; and the teſtimony he here gives of himſelf in this word is, That he, as Mediator, hath all power in heaven and earth: and his call and command to each of you in particular is, that you believe in his name, by believing that he hath all power to ſave you in particular. Why, may you ſay, I do not doubt of his power, but I doubt of his commiſſion to ſave me; for his power is moſt extenſive, but I find his commiſſion from the Father is limited to a certain number, John xvii. 2. Thou haſt given him power over all fleſh, that he may give eternal life to as many as thou haſt given him; and it may be I was not given to him among the elect; and therefore, though I believe his ability, yet I doubt of his commiſſion to ſave me in particular. out out of your way, over which there is no occasion for you to stumble; consider, that in the volume of the book, wherein Christ's commission is written and recorded, there are two remarkable golden leaves, a folded leaf and an open leaf; and of both these you read in that one text, John vi. 39., All that the Father hath given me shall come unto me; there is a folded leaf: but then it follows, Him that cometh, I will in nowise cast out; there is the open leaf: and in this open leaf it is written, Whosoever will let him come, Rev. xxii. 17.

Now, if the question be, Who are they that are written within the folded leaf?

I must say, It is presumption for you to enquire into that; what God hath folded, no man, no angel, no devil, no creature can unfold, till God himself do it. If an angel in heaven should come to you, before you come to Christ, and say, You are an elect; you ought not to believe him; for it is a lie to tell you what he does not know. If the devil from hell should come and tell you that you are no elect, you ought as little to credit him, but tell him he is a liar for telling you what he does not know; for that is the folded leaf, that no creature can unfold. It is like the book you read of, Rev. v. 1. 5.; and it is not lawful for you to pry within the folded leaf. It is not the first object of your faith, to believe your election; Secret things belong unto God, but to us the things that are revealed; the things that are written within the open leaf: and, till you read and subscribe what is written there, it is not possible for you to know if your name be written within the folded leaf, nor are you concerned to know. If it were possible for you to know your election before you come to Christ, it would do you no service, but real hurt; it would make you secure in your natural state: and therefore it is, in infinite wisdom and mercy both, that it is hid from your eyes. Some are hardened with the very fancy of it, saying, If I be elected, I will win to heaven; and so neglect God's call: but now the open leaf of Christ's commission is before your eyes.

But, is my name there? say you: Yes; if you be a sinner, your name is there, 1 Tim. i. 15. Jesus Christ came to save sinners: he hath a commission to save sinners: and all sinners in every corner of the earth are called to look and read here, and then salvation will follow; Look to me, and be saved, all the ends of the earth; for as I am God, and there is none else, Isa. xlv. 22.; so all power in heaven and earth is given to me as Mediator. And therefore, in this open leaf of Christ's vast commission, write you down your name as a poor sinner, beside his name as a powerful Saviour, and that by believing: set down your name, I say, by believing, not what he hath folded, but what he hath unfolded to you, namely, that he hath all power in heaven and in earth; and then you are safe and secure: you are won gear if you believe what he hath revealed; your salvation lies in believing of this, that he hath all power in heaven and earth given to him. It is our believing of this, that makes us preach to you with any hope of success; and it is your believing this, with application, that will bring in life to your souls. The matter comes to this therefore, Do you believe that he, as Mediator, hath all power to save you? Why, may you say, since I dare not pry within the folded leaf, but only am required to believe what is revealed to me in the open leaf of Christ's commission, that extends to all the ends of the earth; and if this be all that I am to believe, that he hath all power in heaven and earth to save whom he will; really, Sir, say you, I believe that he is able to save all the world. Nay, but, man, woman, the Lord is now dealing with you in particular, for it is not his absolute power, as God, that is the object of saving faith; but his relative œconomical power, as Mediator: therefore I ask again, Do you believe that he, as Mediator, hath power to save you in particular?

OBJECT. Why, say you, I think that is not my difficulty; I believe he hath a POWER, but I doubt if he hath a WILL to save me?

ANSW. Here is a grand objection of unbelief which I must endeavour to remove; and, in order thereto, I must tell you, that where faith is lively acted upon the power of Christ, the soul will have little doubt of his will: if you savingly believe his power to save you, you will certainly credit his will to save you; if you doubt of his will to save you, it is because you question his power to save you. We read, Num. xi. 18, 19, 20. God promised Israel flesh in the wilderness for a whole month: What, says Moses, ver. 21. The people among whom I am, are six hundred thousand footmen; and thou hast said, I will give them flesh that they may eat a whole month. Where we may gather, that Moses doubts if God had power to perform this. He doubted whether God had not out-promised his own power: and therefore the Lord says to him, ver. 23. Is the Lord's hand waxed short? See also, Psal. lxxviii. 19, 20. If it be not a doubting of God's power, why do we believe most when there is least danger, and believe least when there is most danger, that God is willing to help? Why, we believe his will least when the danger is greatest, because then greater power is required; so that the great obstacle is at the power of God, though his will is pretended. When Abraham overcame this difficulty, that God was able, nothing stood in his way; He considered not his own dead body, nor the deadness of Sarah's womb, but was fully persuaded, that he that had promised was able to perform, Rom. iv. 20. It is not said, that he was fully persuaded that God was willing to perfom what he had promised; but, so soon as he believed the power of a promising God, his faith had no more stop. And if we search our hearts to the bottom, we will find our doubting reflects most upon the power of Christ: we shorten his hand, though we commonly say we are uncertain of his will. Though we cannot directly affirm, that God will do a thing, because he hath power to do it; yet here is a mighty argument to help faith, when we are assured that he can: when power is at an end, faith is at an end; but, seeing the power of Christ is never at an end, our faith needs never be at an end, nor at a loss. Yea, in the matter of salvation, God hath expressed himself in scripture as much; nay, more for his willingness, than for his power: Our God says in his word, that he hath all power; but we have not only his word, but his oath concerning his willingness; Ezek. xxxiii. 11. As I live, saith the Lord, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked. Yea, I may say, God hath manifested his will to help and save people, when his power hath not concurred; O Jerusalem, how oft would I have gathered thee! But he never manifested nifeſted his power, where his will did not concur.

The queſtion therefore is ſtill this, Do you believe that he hath power to ſave you? Or, are you willing to believe that, and to be ſaved accordingly? Chriſt's willingneſs prevents our willingneſs; none are truly willing till a day of his power, which is the day of his grace and good-will. And therefore, in the very nature of the thing itſelf, if you be willing to be ſaved by his power from ſin and wrath, and to believe that he hath power to ſave you, and to take hold of it for that end, his good-will hath prevented you. Say not then, you doubt of his will, but not of his power: but, do you believe he hath all power to ſave you? O Sirs, it is a great faith, and the fruit of his great power, if you can believe that he hath all power in heaven and earth given him for your eternal ſalvation: and this is the faith I call you to in his name. O that power would come from him, whohath power to give the Spirit of power, to cauſe you lay hold on this power of his!

Behold, O ſinner, he that hath power to damn you for ever, as you juſtly deſerve, is offering his power to ſave you for ever: and if you can believe his Mediatorial power to ſave you, your ſalvation is begun: Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? Here is the arm of the Lord revealed to you, even Chriſt, and all power in heaven and earth in him: but, is he ſo revealed to you, that you believe this report of him; yea, this report and teſtimony that he gives of himſelf, All power is given unto me? A cordial aſſent to this divine teſtimony, with particular application to yourſelf, is a true ſaving faith, ſuch as no devil in hell, nor hypocrite on earth ever had: this is the very ſoul of "receiving and "reſting on Chriſt, for ſalvation, as offered to "us in the goſpel." The goſpel-offer and revelation is the ground of faith; and Chriſt is received and reſted on no other ways but by believing his teſtimony, and taking and truſting him at his word.

But, Oh! what hinders your coming to this powerful Saviour by this faith of his power? What power on earth can withſtand his power who hath all power in heaven and earth given unto him?—Tell me, is it a power of darkneſs and ſpiritual blindneſs that you are under? Behold, here is a powerful Prophet, that is able to open your blind eyes with the eye-ſalve of the Spirit's efficacious teaching and illumination; and this he is concerned to do by virtue of his prophetical office. Let me, therefore, aſk you, in the words of this glorious Prophet, who is the light of the world, his words to the two blind men that came crying to him, ſaying, Thou Son of David have mercy on us, Mat. ix. 28. Chriſt ſays to them, Believe ye that I am able to do this? Yea, Lord, ſay they: Then Jeſus, touching their eyes, ſaid, According to your faith, ſo be it unto you; and their eyes were opened. Well, ſinner, though this were the very hour and power of darkneſs with you; yet, do you believe that he hath power to give you light and ſight? do you believe that he is able to do this? do you believe that all power in heaven and earth is given to him? When Chriſt is ſaying to you, Do you believe that I am able? Can you anſwer, Yea, Lord? Then, I hope, he is touching your eyes; and, according to your faith, ſo be it unto you.

Is there a power of guilt that you are under? Is the guilt of great ſins, and the fear of God's great wrath lying like a heavy mountain upon your conſcience? Behold, here is a powerful Prieſt, that was able, on earth, to forgive ſins, and now he is exalted to heaven? Do you believe that he is able to forgive your ſins, by virtue of his prieſtly office? If you have the faith of his power; yea, but a grain of it, like a grain of muſtard-ſeed, you may ſay to this great mountain of guilt, Be thou removed, and be thou caſt into the ſea of the Lamb's blood: Who art thou, O great mountain, before Zerubabel? Thou ſhalt become a plain. Have you the particular faith of his prieſtly power? Do you believe that he is able to forgive thy ſin, man; thy ſin, woman? Then, Son, daughter, be of good chear, thy ſins are forgiven thee. What mountain can ſtand before him that hath all power in heaven and earth? The particular faith of his prieſtly office is true juſtifying faith; for it lays the ſtreſs of remiſſion of ſin upon the power of his blood, the power of his righteouſneſs, and ſo gives it the glory and honour of its divinity, as it is the blood of God, and the righteouſneſs of God: therefore, if you could ſay in his ſtrength, you believe he is able to forgive your ſin; then I could ſay, in his name, Your ſins are forgiven you.

Is there a power of rebellious luſts and corruptions that you are under, that hath been conquering, and captivating you all your days? Behold, here is a powerful King and Captain of ſalvation, that hath all power in heaven and earth: and believe that he hath power to ſubdue the enmity of your nature, and the rebellion of your nature, and the rebellion of your luſts; and that this he is able to do, by virtue of his royal kingly office. To act faith the more ſucceſsfully here, you are to deal with your rebellious luſts, as the man was to deal with his rebellious ſon under the law, Deut. xxi. 18,—21. He was to bring him out before the magiſtrate of the place, ſaying, This our ſon is ſtubborn and rebellious;—he is a drunkard and a glutton; and then orders were given to ſtone him with ſtones that he die: ſo, bring forth your rebellious luſts before the ſupreme Magiſtrate of heaven and earth, that hath all power and authority both above and below, ſaying, Lord, it is a ſtubborn luſt, a rebellious luſt; whatever baſe kind of luſt it be, it is a rebel I cannot get maſtered or commanded; yea, it is a rebel againſt thy crown and government: Behold, this great Magiſtrate, this glorious King, will give orders to ſtone it to death; yea, he will order ſo many words of power, at this occaſion, and perhaps ſo many words and exertions of power at another occaſion, like ſo many mighty ſtones thrown by his powerful arm at the rebel, till at laſt it be ſtoned to death. O Sirs, are you coming to this powerful King, by believing that he hath power to cruſh all your rebellious luſts? If you be truly believing his power, ſurely the power of ſin will fall before the faith of his power, like Dagon before the ark; for no Dagon luſt can ſtand before the ark of his ſtrength. The more you believe his power, the leſs power will ſin have; and little power may it have this day.

Are you under the power of pollution and filthineſs; heart or hand-pollution, and filthineſs of the fleſh or of the ſpirit, and can hardly believe his will to ſave and cleanſe you? yet, is there any grain of faith in you with reſpect to his power, ſaying with the leper, Matth. viii. 2. Lord, if thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean: Jeſus anſwered, I

WILL, be thou clean: q. d. If you truly believe my power, you have no reaſon to doubt of my will: I had never given you grace to believe that I have power to make you clean, if I had no will to make you clean: therefore, doſt thou believe my power? then you poſſeſs my good-will; I will, be thou clean. Let your faith, then, act more ſtrongly than to ſay, If he will, he can: but if you believe he can, you may be ſure he will cleanſe you; for, though he will not do all that he can do, yet he will do all that he enables you to believe he can do unto your ſoul, when your faith is founded upon his promiſe, ſuch as that, Ezek. xxxvi. 25. I will ſprinkle you with clean water; from all your filthineſs, and from all your idols will I cleanſe you. Are you ſaying, Lord, I believe, help my unbelief; I believe thou caſt make me clean, even ME? According to that promiſe, then he is ſaying, I will, be thou clean, even THOU. There is a particular ME in faith's actings towards a powerful Jeſus; and a particular THOU in God's dealing with that ſoul. It comes to cloſs reaſoning betwixt the poor ſinner and the powerful Saviour, as if there were none but theſe two ſpeaking together face to face, and mouth to mouth; yea, and heart to heart; thou and me. It comes to cloſs reaſoning; and this ME in faith makes it the hardeſt thing in the world, and yet the ſweeteſt thing in the world, to believe that Chriſt hath all power in heaven and earth, and that for me, for me, for me, and my everlaſting ſalvation; for juſtifying, ſanctifying, and cleanſing of me. Do you believe that he hath power to ſave and cleanſe you in particular? Why, man, according to your faith, ſo ſhall it be unto you.

What ſhall I ſay, O ſinner, O enemy, O rebel! will you ſubmit to him, by believing that he hath all power in heaven and earth? Who can harden himſelf againſt God, and proſper? As it is a dangerous thing to ſtand out againſt ſuch a powerful prince; ſo, I am ſure, you could not ſtand out a moment longer, if you cordially believed that he hath all power in heaven and earth given unto him. O Sirs, if you believed this doctrine, with application, namely, "That all power is delegated to, and reſides in "the perſon of Chriſt," and that ſo as he hath power to ſave THEE in particular, then ſalvation were begun. O then, put honour upon this powerful King of kings, and Prince of princes, by believing his power for your good and benefit.—Art thou under the power of heart-hardneſs and ſtupidity? Yet, O will you put honour upon his power, by believing that he can break the rock in pieces, by taking away the heart of ſtone, and giving the heart of fleſh to THEE, to THEE in particular, and it ſhall be done?—Art thou under the power of a backſliding heart, that turns aſide like a deceitful bow, and makes you guilty of many fearful apoſtaſies from him? Yet, O will you come to him, and put honour upon his power, by believing that he hath power to heal thy backſliding, even THINE, and it ſhall be done?—Art thou under the power of innumerable heart-plagues, inſomuch, that none in the world hath ſuch a plagued heart, and that no power under heaven can heal you? O will you come to this powerful One, and put honour upon his power, by believing that he is an able phyſician, to heal you, and YOU in particular. If there be any faith here preſent, to glorify his power, then, I can aſſure you, the power of the Lord is preſent to heal.—Art thou under the power of the devil, and his temptations and fiery darts? What is the matter? Here is relief; only look to a powerful Lord, that came to bruiſe the head of the ſerpent, and deſtroy the works of the devil. Put honour upon his power, by believing that he is able to ſuccour them that are tempted, and to ſuccour YOU, and you are ſafe; for, the God of peace, and the God of power, will bruiſe Satan under your feet ſhortly.—Are you under the power of unbelief and impenitency, and the want of all grace and good? O come to him, and glorify his power, by believing that he is able to make you believe; by believing that he is the powerful author of faith, and that he is exalted, by the right-hand of God, to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance unto Iſrael, and remiſſion of ſins; and that when he aſcended up on high, he received gifts for men, even for the rebellious, that God the Lord might dwell among them: gifts for men, even for you, and YOU in particular. If thou couldſt believe, thou ſhouldſt ſee the glory of God; and if you believe his power, you ſee his power and glory in the ſanctuary.—Are you under the power of inability to believe his power, and inability to help yourſelf, and credit his power with application to yourſelf? Yet ſtill, however ſtrange the call may ſeem, it is not I but HE who hath all power in heaven and earth, that calls and commands you to believe in his name, and to glorify his power, by believing that God hath laid help upon One that is mighty. Though the hand of faith be not only weak, but withered; yet it is he that hath all power that ſays, Stretch forth the withered hand, and take hold of his ſtrength: for his power and ſtrength is laid to your hand in the promiſe; My grace ſhall be ſufficient for thee; and my ſtrength ſhall be made perfect in thy weakneſs. His power is laid to your hand in this word of faith that we preach; ſo that you need not aſcend to heaven for it, or deſcend to the deep; nay, the word is nigh, and Chriſt in the word: there his power is offered to your faith.—Again, Are you under the power of unwillingneſs to believe his power for your ſalvation, under the power of enmity and unwillingneſs to be ſaved by his power? Let me aſk you, Whether this power of unwillingneſs and enmity be eaſy or uneaſy and weighty to you? If you be eaſy, and living eaſily under the power of enmity againſt Chriſt, then it ſeems you are eaſy and content though he put forth his power in your everlaſting ruin: for one of the two muſt take place, the power of Chriſt is to be put forth either in the converſion and ſalvation, or in the everlaſting deſtruction and confuſion of every one that hears this goſpel. Why, ſay you, If he be ſo powerful, able, and willing to ſave, then let him exert his power; I am eaſy whatever he do. What! are you content to want this powerful Jeſus to ſave you from ſin now, and from hell hereafter! Then I take witneſs againſt you, that if he put not forth his ſaving power upon you before you go into eternity, you ſhall be inexcuſable at the great day, when you ſtand before his awful tribunal: he will be juſt in pronouncing that dreadful doom againſt you, Depart from me, ye curſed! and you ſhall have nothing to ſay for your defence, but that your ruin is of yourſelf; and his damning power ſhall be juſt and righteouſly exerted againſt you, becauſe you did not care for his ſaving power. But, if your enmity and unwilline ſs to believe his ſaving power, and lay hold upon it, be uneasy and weighty to you, then there is hope in Israel concerning you; for his power to destroy the power of enmity, is put in a promise for you to believe and grip unto; Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, Psal. cx. 3. Therefore, O glorify his power, by believing that he hath power to bow your will, and break your enmity; and if you believe this with any pleasure and contentment, I can tell you, the day of power is partly come already, the day of believing is the day of power. — In a word, are you under the power of death, dead really, under the power of spiritual death; dead legally, under the power of the condemning sentence of God's law, that binds you over to eternal death? Yet, so long as you have yet a natural life, a life of common sense and reason, though you cannot believe by the power of natural reason, no more than Lazarus could come forth out of the grave by his own natural power, when he was dead and stinking there; yet, because the power of God works upon the natural faculties, in the day of power, therefore, may I speak to the dead, in the name of him that hath all power in heaven and earth, over the dead and the living both, and who says, The hour cometh, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live: O dead sinner, hear and believe what he says, John xi. 25. I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. O sinner, though you be dead, not only in a dead frame, but in a dead state, say not, What need you enjoin me to believe? what can I do, who am dead? Why the question is not what you can do, but what he can do that calls you; and it is not I that call you to believe, but he that hath all power in heaven and earth, and that can make you believe. Therefore, though you be dead and rotten in the grave of sin and security, yet he that is the resurrection and the life says, Lazarus, come forth, come forth; Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light, Eph. v. 14. Oh! is there none here who are hearing the voice of the Son of God? The voice of a mortal man hath no quickening power to make you believe, but if the voice of the Son of God be heard, faith comes by hearing of it: hearing him, and believing in him, go together; Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that hears my words, and believes on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not enter into condemnation, John v. 24. If you have heard his voice, then you believe his power; and if you truly believe that all power is delegated to, and resides in the person of Chirst, and that as Mediator he hath power to save you, then your salvation is begun: He that believeth shall be saved.

Now, my friends, a powerful Prince and Saviour hath been offered to you in the word, to be received by believing; hath there been no power here to make you believe his power? Where there is no power, there is no faith. People may fancy they believe that Christ is able to save them; the preaching of the word may work a strong imagination that way: but, hath the power of the Spirit, accompanying the word, made you believe that Christ is sealed and authorized of the Father, so as all power of ability and authority is given to him, and that with reference to your salvation, so as you have put your everlasting salvation over upon that power that resides in the person of Christ, as Mediator, and made you to rest and rely upon this powerful Prince and mighty Saviour for eternal life? Now, that you may not be mistaken about the faith of his power, you may try it further by these following particulars.

1. If you have believed his power unto salvation, then the faith of his power and ability to save you hath been acted in the sense of utter weakness and inability to save or help yourselves; in the sense of inability to believe, inability to do, inability to think; Not that we are sufficient of ourselves, to think any thing as of ourselves, but our sufficiency is of God, 1 Cor. iii. 5. All power was lost in the first Adam, insomuch, that we are by nature without strength, and only under the strength of sin, which is the law, 1 Cor. xv. 56. Therefore the faith of the gospel, and of strength in Christ, the second Adam, by virtue of the covenant of grace, presupposes the faith of the law, and of our being without strength of grace, and under the strength of sin.

2. If you have believed Christ's power unto salvation, then the faith of his power to save you hath begotten hope, 1 Pet. i. 3.; insomuch that you are begotten again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Christ from the dead; that is, by the faith of his rising and reigning in heaven. If he had not risen and received the crown, and been set down upon the throne, the right-hand of power, we had been left hopeless, 1 Cor. xv. 17. But his resurrection and exaltation is the ground of hope, 1 Pet. i. 12. Have you been begotten to a lively hope by this means, even to a hope of life, a hope of salvation, a hope of rising and reigning in heaven with him?

3. If you have believed, unto salvation, this power of Christ to save you, then the faith of his power, whereby he is able to save your soul, will be found standing upon his Priesthood, whereby he was able to satisfy God's justice. As Christ is a King upon the throne, because he was a Priest upon the cross, and able to save to the uttermost, because he was able to satisfy to the uttermost, or because he ever lives to make intercession, upon the ground of the attonement and satisfaction he made; so the true faith of his strength to save, stands upon his righteousness, whereby he was able to fulfil God's law, and satisfy God's justice. The faith of his ability then to save you, is well-founded, if it be built upon the faith of his ability to please God, and pacify his wrath on your behalf.

4. If you have believed unto salvation this saving power of Christ, then the faith of this power hath made you weak in yourself, emptied you of all strength and righteousness of your own, and made you see all your strength, as well as righteousness, to be only in the Lord, and to close with him as the Lord your strength, because he is the Lord your righteousness. Surely, shall one say, in the Lord have I righteousness and strength; first righteousness, and then strength. It is remarkable, that, according to the tenor of the new covenant, Christ's being our righteousness, is the very reason of his being our strength; Heb. viii. 10, 11, 12. For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people. And they shall not teach every man his neighbour, and every every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. Why will he give all these blessings? For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, namely, through the righteousness of Christ. Hence the faith of Christ's power and strength, founded upon his righteousness, makes a man truly weak and empty in himself; for he sees his stock lies only in Christ's hand. And hence,

5. If you have believed Christ's power unto salvation, then your faith of his power hath made you strong; Strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might; or, in the POWER OF HIS POWER, Eph. vi. 10. And hence, when you are weak, then you are strong; the faith of his power brings in power to the soul, and strengthens the heart. Hence says the psalmist, Psal. xxvii. 13, 14. I had fainted, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living; and it follows, Wait on the Lord, and be of good courage, and he will strengthen thy heart; wait, I say, on the Lord. According to the measure of faith in the power of Christ, such will be the measure of spiritual strength, power, and courage. And hence,

6. If you have believed his power unto salvation, then the faith of his power hath begotten joy in the Lord, and spiritual consolation; or, at least, some real relief from heart-trouble; Let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me, John xiv. 1.; intimating, that the more faith, the more freedom there is from heart-fears and fetters: and surely the faith of Christ's power, as Mediator, must, according to its measure, free the heart from all fears of hurt or harm, either from heaven above, or from earth beneath, because all power in heaven and earth is given unto him.

SERMON LII.

The FEMALE PREACHER; or, the Woman of Samaria's Sermon to the Men of the City: or, the Self-humbling and Christ-exalting Influences of Divine Discoveries. *

JOHN iv. 29. Come see a man which told me all things that ever I did; Is not this the Christ?

IF our glorious Lord Jesus has been here present this day, conversing with us as he did with the woman of Samaria, discovering us to ourselves, and discovering himself to us; if he hath been telling us what vile sinners we are, and what a glorious Saviour he is, so as the entrance of his word hath given light to us, to see our blackness on the one side, and his beauty on the other: surely it cannot but lead us to some such self-condemnation and Christ commending exercise, as here this woman is employed in: Come see a man that told me all things that ever I did; is not this the Christ?

In the preceeding part of this chapter, there stands recorded a very notable conversation betwixt Christ and this woman, the particulars whereof are too many to be considered at this time, though some of them may fall in our way when we speak of the circumstances of her conversion: only, in the general, our Lord Jesus, as a wearied traveller sitting down by Jacob's well, and this woman coming to draw water, he seeks a drink from her, both to quench his thirst, and to take occasion of conferring with her, with a design of mercy to her soul. She apprehending him to be a Jew, refuses to give him a drink, upon an old quarrel that was between the Jews and the Samaritans; whereupon Christ shews her how she mistook her own mercy, and that he had better water to give her than that which she refused to give him, ver. 10.; and that if she knew what a valuable mercy were at her hand, she would have turned a supplicant to him, and not suffer him to be so to her. But she still reasoning against his offer, he points out further the excellency of what he offered, ver. 13, 14.; this raised some natural desire in her: but our Lord resolving to take hold of her heart, and knowing that the richest offer of his grace in the world, will work no desire in the heart of sinners, further than what is natural and carnal, unless he effectively convince them of their sin and misery, and savingly manifest himself to them; therefore he takes this method with her.

1*st*, He convinces her of her sin and misery, and lets her understand that he knew all the lewdness and wickedness she was guilty of, by shewing her how many adulteries she was chargeable with, ver. 18. Whereupon she begins to conceive some high opinion of him as a Prophet, and to seek further light from him with reference to the right way of worshipping God, there being controversies about religious matters, and particularly about the place of public worship, betwixt the Jews and the Samaritans: and, indeed, the woman's discourse here shews, that though she was a profane Samaritan, yet she was no Ignoramus. She had knowledge of the controversy of the day she lived in, and the grounds thereof; and knew that the Messias was to come: yet her knowledge was no sanctified knowledge. But now her conscience being awakened with a sense of sin, she is solicitous to have her mind informed; and accordingly is instructed at large by our blessed Lord Jesus, both concerning the place and the right manner of worshipping God. And thus from one thing to another, he leads her on, until,

2*dly*, He manifests himself to her, ver. 26. Christ's discourse about the change of religion

* This subject was handled in one sermon, preached July 13th, 1729. immediately after the celebration of the sacrament of the Lord's supper at Dunfermline. It hath undergone four editions.

that

that was to take place, brought the woman to mind of the Meſſias's coming; I know, ſays ſhe, that Meſſias cometh, which is called Chriſt; when he is come, he will tell us all things. And while ſhe is expreſſing her high eſtimation of, and great deſire after this coming Meſſias, Jeſus ſaith unto her, I that ſpeak unto thee, am he. Chriſt may be preſent with people, and ſpeaking to them, and yet they cannot know, or take him up till he reveals himſelf, as here he did to this woman; I that ſpeak unto thee, am he.

No ſooner did Chriſt thus kindly diſcover himſelf to her, than immediately this ſweet conference is broken up, by the return of the diſciples, who had gone to the city to buy meat, ver. 8. The ſweeteſt fellowſhip with Chriſt on earth is but of ſhort duration; and the moſt pleaſant manifeſtations may meet with very ſudden interruptions; and poor ſinners may have ſuch a ſweet time in Chriſt's company, that even the company of diſciples may be an interruption to it.

But now, how ſhe was affected with this diſcovery is evident from two things.

1. She forgets her errand that ſhe came upon; She left her water-pot, and went her way: having got a taſte of the excellency of Chriſt, and a drink of the living water which he gave her, ſhe minds no other water now; nay, ſhe forgets all other things that before were in great eſteem with her.

2. She ſpreads the name and fame of Chriſt in the place where ſhe dwelt; Come ſee a man, ſays ſhe, that told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Chriſt? Wherein we may notice,

(1.) An invitation; Come ſee a man: having got a taſte of his goodneſs, ſhe would have the men in the city to taſte and ſee with her.
